Mr. Lowder. No, my Lord; for it seems he had not then delivered in his Information, but only a Writing of his to Mr. Tindal.

Bar. Greg. You took no Examination then?

Mr. Lowder. No, my Lord, not at that Time; but afterwards he came and gave in his Information to us, and I think we were about two

Vol. III.

Hours about it; and then he did not charge any Person but Rushton and Sir Thomas Gascoigne; but said, he had more to recollect: Well, said I, if you recollect any more, you may come again.

Bar. Gregory. Pray who did he name?

Mr. Lowder. He named Father Rushton and Sir Thomas Gascoigne; he named my Lady Tempest, but spoke that as from another. And when he came again, he said he would trouble us with no more, but would go to the King and Council to deliver in the rest.

Mr. Just. Dolb. He said then he should recollect more.

Mr. Lowder. Yes, my Lord, he did, and when he came again, he said he would not trouble us with it, but would inform the Council of it: When we saw him so positive, he had a Letter of Recommendation from Mr. Tindal to the Council; and he lost that Letter at Ware; but he went on, and delivered his Information to the Council.

Mr. Just. Dolb. Do you know it?

Mr. Lowder. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Just. Dolb. You cannot know it, were you there then?

Mr. Lowder. No, my Lord, but I do know it.

Mr. Just. Dolb. How do you know it?

Mr. Lowder. I have a Copy of the Order under several of the Council's Hands.

Mr. Just. Dolb. That is not Evidence, you are not to speak what another Man knows. But that is not the Matter; it seems he went to give in his Information to the Council, for indeed he could not otherwise have been safe.

Mr. Lowder. After this, he goes up to London again, and comes down and brings me another Order of Council to examine Mr. Mowbray and one Hickeringil; and I asked him if he knew any thing about Sir Miles Stapleton's being concerned in the Plot, and he said no, he believed he was very clear.

Mr. Just. Dolb. You say that Bolron brought you another Order of Council to examine Mowbray.

Mr. Lowder. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Just. Dolb. Did Bolron bring you in Writing what Mowbray could say?

Mr. Lowder. My Lord, I know not whether it was by Writing, or by Word of Mouth.

Mr. Just. Dolb. What was it he told you Mowbray could say?

Mr. Lowder. He told me, he could say he saw Sir Miles Stapleton at Barmbow when the Consult was; but, said he, there will others come against Sir Miles.

Mr. Just. Dolb. Pray let us ask Bolron that: Did you say to Mr. Lowder, you knew nothing against Sir Miles Stapleton, but there were others would do it?

Mr. Bol. No, my Lord, not that I remember.

Mr. Lowder. Bolron himself had never said any thing against Sir Miles.

Bar. Greg. Did you ask Bolron if he knew whether Sir Miles was concerned in the Plot, or no?

Mr. Lowder. Yes, my Lord, I did, and he answered, he knew nothing against him.

Mr. Just. Dolb. He was not then upon his Oath?

Mr. Lowder. No, not then; but after this he delivered his Information, and did swear, to the Effect that Mowbray did swear, that Sir Miles was at Barmbow, and that they all did conspire the killing of the King, and introducing the Romish Religion; and he said, my Lady Tempest came to him, when he was in the Passage, and said to him, Mr. Mowbray, it is fitter for you to be treating of Sir Miles Stapleton's Servants in the Larder: And he asked me whether he had best go and apprehend Sir Miles or Mr. Ingleby first?

Mr. Just. Dolb. This was your Discourse with Bolron.

Mr. Lowder. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Bol. May it please your Lordship, I did not know then that Mr. Mowbray was at all concerned in the Plot.

Mr. Just. Dolb. He tells you, how you told him what Mowbray would say before he came to him, and what he would say against Sir Miles Stapleton.

Mr. Bol. No, my Lord, I never said any such thing.

Mr. Just. Dolb. You say, you did not know what Mowbray would say, Mr. Lowder saith otherwise.

Mr. Bol. My Lord, I did not know what it was before he brought it himself, and he brought it in Writing.

Bar. Greg. Mr. Lowder, did he tell you the Particulars, or only said he was to depose things against Sir Miles Stapleton?

Mr. Lowder. My Lord, he told me he could swear Sir Miles was at the Consult at Barmbow, and did there conspire the Death of the King, and introducing the Romish Religion.

Mr. Just. Dolb. How long was this, Mr. Lowder, you had that Discourse with Bolron before Mowbray came to give in his Information?

Mr. Lowder. It was, my Lord, two or three Days before, and I ordered him to come again, when Mr. Tindal was to be at my House.

Mr. Just. Dolb. Were you ever with Mr. Lowder, and knew when he and Mr. Tindal ordered him to come to him?

Mr. Bol. I went to Mr. Mowbray, and we came to Esquire Lowder's, and there Mr. Tindal was; but I knew nothing of what he had to say; my Lord, Mr. Mowbray was there at that Time he doth affirm.

Mr. Just. Dolb. Mowbray, before you came to Mr. Lowder's, had you acquainted Bolron with what you had to say?

Mr. Mowb. I might acquaint him I had something to say, but did not tell him the Particulars.

Mr. Just. Dolb. Did you tell him you had any thing against Sir Miles Stapleton?

Mr. Mowb. 'Tis possible, my Lord, I might; but I am not positive in that.

Bar. Greg. Did he tell you, Mr. Lowder, what Mr. Mowbray could swear against Sir Miles, and was it not the Day which he tells here of?

Mr. Lowder. No, my Lord, it was not.

Bar. Greg. It was not the same Day?

Mr. Lowder. No, my Lord, I shall be positive in it, if I be brought to my Oath.

Mr. Just. Dolb. Come, another Witness, Sir Miles.

Sir Thomas Yarbrough called and examined.

Sir Miles. I desire Sir Thomas to speak what he heard Bolron declare what he knew of the Plot after Sir Tho. Gascoigne was taken.

Sir Tho. Yarbrough. The 10th of August 79, Mr. Bolron came to my House about 10 or 11 o'Clock at Night, and knocked at my Door; I thought him very unseasonable; but my Servants looking out at the Window, asked who was there; he said a Friend that would speak with Sir Thomas: My Servant came and told me, and I ordered my Servant to go down and bring him into my Chamber; in the Interim I put on a Morning-Gown: As soon as he came in, he told me he had an Order of Council to search all suspicious Places for Popish Priests, and I have great Cause to believe that there is one Rushton a Priest now at Sir Miles Stapleton's. What would you have me to do, said I, would you have me go with you myself? He said no, but a Servant. Said I, Mr. Bolton will you shew me the Order; and finding his Name in the Warrant, I ask him, Was that the Person that inform'd against Sir Thomas Gascoigne? His Answer was this, that if I pleased he would shew me the Article against Sir Thomas Gascoigne; when I observed the Article, I asked him, if he knew any Thing of Sir Miles Stapleton's being concerned in the Plot: No, I protest, faith he, I know nothing of Sir Miles Stapleton's being concerned in it, for he is a very honest Gentleman: Only this I must say, that I know he hath made a collusive Conveyance of his Estate, and I believe most of the Roman Catholics in England have done it for the securing of their Estates.

Mr. Just. Dolben. What do you say to this, Bolton?

Mr. Bol. My Lord, when I delivered in my Information to the Council I did accuse Sir Miles Stapleton.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Did you say this to Sir Thomas?

Mr. Bol. No, I did not, if it was not in the Information I gave to the Council, believe not one Word that I have said.

Mr. Just. Dolben. 'Tis possible it might be in the second Information to the Council that you accused Sir Miles: Was Sir Miles Stapleton's Name in the Paper you gave to him?

Mr. Bol. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Just. Dolben. This was the 10th Day of August 79. Had you then informed the Council of any Thing before that Time against Sir Miles Stapleton's being at Barmbow-Hall at the Consult?

Mr. Bol. May it please your Lordship, I was called out when I was before the King and Council, and there was something I did not deliver in.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Then you did not do it at that Time?

Mr. Bol. No, my Lord, I did not.

Mr. Just. Dolben. I ask you again, before the 10th of August 79, had you informed the Council of any Thing against Sir Miles?

Mr. Bol. No, my Lord, I had not.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Then it could not be in the Information that you shewed him.

Mr. Bol. No, my Lord, it was at the second Time.

Bar. Greg. Was it before you had this discourse with Sir Thomas Yarbrough?

Mr. Bol. No, my Lord, it was not before that: I shall not speak one Word of a Lie.

Sir Miles. Every Word you speak is a Lie.

Mr. Bol. It is no Lie, before this honourable Court.

Mr. Just. Dolb. Were these Informations inclosed in the Letter from the Council?

Mr. Lowd. Yes, my Lord, your Lordship may see the Letter mentions it, (holding the Letter forth in his Hand with the Informations) which Mr. Justice Dolben took and silently read them over, after which he made his Report thereof to the Court.

Mr. Just. Dolb. Mr. Lowder, I have read all these Things over, and there is nothing of any Consult in them: How should then the Accusation of Sir Miles be mentioned in them?

Bar. Greg. I do believe, Sir Thomas, you mistake Times.

Sir Tho. Yarb. No, my Lord, I do not.

Mr. Just. Dolb. In the bringing of this Order of Council to you, did you ask Mr. Bolton if he knew any Thing against Sir Miles Stapleton?

Sir Tho. Yarb. Yes, my Lord, I did, and he said he believed he was innocent.

Sir Tho. String. Pray, Sir Thomas, why did you ask him that about Sir Miles?

Sir Tho. Yarb. Because I knew Sir Miles was related to Sir Thomas Gascoigne, and was often there.

Sir Tho. String. It seemed, Sir Thomas, you feared it.

The Lady Yarbrough called and examined.

Sir Miles. Madam, pray acquaint the Court what you heard Bolton say when he discoursed your Husband.

Lady Yarb. All I can say is, that I was in Bed then, and heard him say all these Things, and I heard the Order read, and there was mention of several at the Consult, among whom there was no mention of Sir Miles Stapleton.

Mr. Just. Dolb. Does your Ladyship very well remember that Sir Thomas Yarbrough asked him if Sir Miles was concerned, and he said, not that he knew of?

Lady Yarb. Yes, my Lord, and he said more than that; for when he returned from taking Priests in the Afternoon, there was a great deal of Company in the House, and when he came, he brought one of the Sons along with him, and they came into the Hall, there Mr. Bolton was with him, and among the rest there was one Mr. Anby, who being a little merry, he takes him by the Arm, and comes and brings him to us as we were sitting in the Porch, and said, Heark you, Mr. Bolton, I hear you are a Discoverer of the Plot? Yes, I am, said he: Then I pray you, who are they that are concerned? But he would not tell him. So said he, is Sir Miles Stapleton in it? He answered, he had nothing to say against Sir Miles, but he was an honest Gentleman for ought he knew, excepting that he had made a collusive Conveyance of his Estate.

Mr. Normanton called and examined.

Mr. Norm. In June 79, came Rob. Bolton to me, and said, that Sir Tho. Gascoigne would give 1000*l.* for killing the King, and the Lady Tempest would have hanged him for breaking a Trunk, but now he would be even with her; and that Sir Miles Stapleton kept Priests in his House, but he would apprehend them presently, for he might have twenty Pound a-piece for taking of them.

Bar. Greg. You say Bolton told you this?

Mr. Norm. Yes, my Lord, he told me this in my own House; and I told him he might go to Esquire Tindal, and I lent him eighteen Pence, and borrowed him a Horse in the Town.

Rich. Pears, Sir Miles's Man, call'd and examin'd.

Rich. Pears. My Lord, Bolton came to Carleton.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Carleton, what is that?

Rich. Pears. To my Master's House.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Who is thy Master?

Pears. Sir Miles Stapleton.

Mr. Justice Dolb. What then?

Pears. I go in to an Ale-house where Bolton was, he asked me how I did, I thanked him.

Mr. Justice Dolben. Did you know him?

Pears. Yes, my Lord, and he called for a Pot of Ale, and wished me to drink with him, and he asked me if they did not blame him for accusing my Master Sir Miles? And I said I did not hear him named; he said it was not him, but he might not tell who it was.

Mr. Just. Dolben. When was this?

Pears. Three or four Days after my Master was taken into Custody; and he said he would have gone to have seen Sir Miles; but I think (says he) he does not know me: And he asked me, if Mr. Legget would be at our House, and he desired me to give him a Letter; and I said I should not see him; then he said I might burn it, and I did burn it, my Lord.

Sir Tho. String. How came you acquainted with Bolton?

Pears. At the Coal-Pits, my Lord.

Sir Tho. String. Did you never see him at Sir Thomas Gascoigne's?

Pears. No, my Lord.

Stephen Thompson called and examined.

Mr. Just. Dolb. Have a care you speak nothing but Truth, though you are not sworn, yet we can punish you, and God Almighty will punish you if you speak false.

Steph. Thompson. An't like your Honour, Robert Bolton was Servant to Sir Thomas Gascoigne, as Steward of his Coal-Pits; Sir Thomas put him out of his Coal-Pits, and there was a great deal of Money due, and he knew not how to get it, and therefore he would take threescore Pounds for it, because he knew not how to get it, and he would take thirty-two Pounds at one Time, and twenty-eight at another, and came to me to be bound with him, which I was unwilling to; faith he, here is thirty-eight Pounds good Debt, and I shall take care to get the other, and if Sir Thomas be not kind, I shall do him an ill Turn.

Mr. Just. Dolb. What is this to Sir Miles Stapleton?

Thomp. He did swear, this Plot being discovered, they thought he knew something of Sir Tho. Gascoigne, and he said before the Plot broke out, there was never a Catholick in Yorkshire was concerned in it; if there were any, it was above.

Bar. Greg. This was before his Information, I'll lay a Wager.

Mr. Just. Dolben. How could he do him an ill Turn?

Thomp. My Lord, this is the ill Turn, Mr. Legget said he did it not for Need: O Rob. Bolton, said I, do you thus requite Sir Tho. Gascoigne's Kindnesses?

Bar. Greg. Did he speak any Thing to you concerning Sir Miles?

Sir Miles. I conceive when they reflect upon Sir Thomas, they reflect upon me.

Mr. J. Dolb. No, not so, you might be guilty, and Sir Thomas innocent, or you might be innocent and Sir Thomas guilty.

Sir Miles. My Lord, I think that as there was a Consult at Sir Tho. Gascoigne's, certainly if any one was guilty, we were all guilty.

Bar. Greg. There are some that conceive, and I think not without Grounds, that there are no considerable Catholics in England, but they are concerned in the Plot.

Mr. J. Dolb. There was one Dixon came at Sir Tho. Gascoigne's Trial, and said he heard Bolton and Mowbray down a pair of Stairs, speaking of Revenge against Sir Tho. Gascoigne and my Lady Tempest, and thinking these Witnesses might now be produced, we called at Leeds to view the Stairs, and I am sure neither my Brother nor I could see any Probability in it.

Bar. Greg. For Satisfaction we made two go up into the Chamber and stand where the Witnesses were, and they spoke as loud as People do usually when they discourse, and I am sure I could neither perceive what they said, nor see them, unless I went three or four Steps up.

Mr. J. Dolb. This is but occasioned by your jesting upon the Matter.

Nathaniel Wilson called.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Sir Miles, I would put you in mind of one Thing; produce those two Witnesses that were produced at Sir Tho. Gascoigne's Trial.

Sir Miles. I have none of these Witnesses.

Mr. J. Dolben. Certainly these Witnesses would be as material as any you can have to do it.

Sir Miles. I have them not here, my Lord.

Mr. J. Dolb. Nay, that is because you dare not; the King's Council will prove that what they spoke they were hired to, and had Money from Sir Tho. Gascoigne, which they confessed.

Sir Miles. My Lord, they made Affidavit of it.

Mr. Just. Dolb. Though they did, yet they confessed they were hired to it.

The Lady Vavasour called and examined.

Sir Miles. My Lord, I call my Lady Vavasour to tell, whether Sir Walter was there at the Consult they tell us of at Barmbow.

Mr. J. Dolb. That will be hard for her to do; but call her in. (When she was called:) But speaking so low she could not be heard by the Court, and standing beside Mr. Justice Dolben, he repeated her Words to the Court. My Lady, faith this Gentleman, she believes her Husband was not there in any Part of the Year, because he was infirm at York. Now, Gentlemen, I would only know, whether that be conclusive Evidence when it is only possible.

Mr. Legget called and examined.

Sir Miles. Mr. Legget, pray, what Money would Mr. Bolton have given you when I was taken?

Legget. Mr. Bolton desired me to lend his Wife some Money to go to Marble with, and I did: The same Day between Tadcaster and York, Mr. Bolton asked me what Allowance Dr. Oates had; I told him, I heard he had five hundred Pounds a Year: and he answered, I deserve as much; for I have done more than he.

done as much good as he: As I was going for York, I met with Mr. Mowbray, and it raining, I put in at Tadcaster; when the Rain was over, we set forward for York; said Mr. Mowbray, Mr. Bolron hath sent for me; so I went to Mr. Bolron to the George, and he sent for Mr. Mowbray, and he pulls out his Information, and after he had read it, he asked him if he knew any thing of that, and he said, he did not know of it.

Mr. Just. Dolb. Well, what is this to the Purpose? Did you hear him say any thing against Sir Miles?

Legget. I have heard Mr. Bolron say, that he had nothing to say against Sir Miles Stapleton, but only he had made over his Estate to Sir John Daney.

Mr. Just. Dolb. How came he to name Sir Miles to you?

Mr. Leg. He voluntarily told me of it, when we went to Allerton to apprehend some Priests; and when I returned I told him, I took but one of these Persons, old Mr. Metcalf; and he said, he cared not if I had but taken one Addy.

Mr. Just. Dolb. You must not talk of this Fashion.

Sir Miles. It shews but what a kind of a Man he is.

Mr. Just. Dolb. So may we examine to the end of the Chapter. Do you say Bolron read over his Information to Mowbray, and he said he knew nothing of it as to Sir Miles Stapleton?

Leg. No, my Lord, but of Sir Tho. Gascoigne; he asked him nothing, my Lord, but against Sir Tho. Gascoigne; after they went out and had been together, Mr. Bolron told me, Sir Miles Stapleton was it to be taken into Custody; and he said, you may as well have it as another, but I'll go half Snips with you: At last he told me, if I have an hundred Pounds of Sir Miles, you shall have twenty of it.

Mr. Just. Dolb. Had you any Warrant at that Time to take Sir Miles?

Leg. No, my Lord.

Bol. I know nothing of any such thing.

Mrs. Eliz. Holmes called and examined.

Mrs. Holmes. An't please you, my Lord, at Sir Tho. Gascoigne's Trial, Mr. Bolron and his Wife they were at our House at Dinner; after Dinner, they asked me, if I would go to Sir Thomas's Trial. I answered, yes; so Mrs. Mowbray came and called her Husband out of Door, and I asked her about Sir Thomas Gascoigne, and she said—

Mr. Just. Dolb. Tell us what she said.

Holmes. She said, they were hard People; but she thought they were innocent to the Plot, and she had nothing to say against them, as God shall judge her Soul. Then another Time, my Lord, after Bolron came from York, he met me. How now, Sister, I understand you are to be a Witness against me at York, but if you'll be kind to me, I'll be kind to you, and speak as favourably as I can; and he said, if he had known he should have been no better rewarded, he would never have been a Witness; the Devil should have been a Witness as soon as he.

Mr. Just. Dolb. Against whom?

Holmes. Against Sir Thomas Gascoigne and Sir Miles, my Lord, and he bid me be careful what I swore; for if we did swear false, he would have us at the Pillory, and unless I would unsay what I had said in my Lady's Trial, he would punish me sufficiently.

Mr. Just. Dolb. Who said this, know you?

Holmes. Mr. Bolron, my Lord.

Bar. Greg. Where do you live?

Holmes. I live, my Lord, in Baldwin's Garden.

Sir Tho. Stringer. Did you ever tell any that if they would come and swear against the Evidence against Sir Miles Stapleton, they should be sufficiently rewarded?

Holmes. No, never in my Life.

Sir Miles. When did you see me last, Bolron?

Bol. I have seen you in 78 several times.

Mr. Just. Dolb. He hath seen you in Prison.

Bol. My Lord, I have seen him at Barmbow-Hall in 78.

Sir Thomas Stringer. Yow know Sir Miles Stapleton?

Mr. Bol. Yes, very well; and I have several times talked with him.

Sir Miles. I desire to know whether he hath seen Sir Tho. Gascoigne and he discourse about any thing?

Mr. Bol. No, not since the Plot broke out.

Sir Miles. He swore in Sir Tho. Gascoigne's Trial, he heard me and Sir Thomas discourse about Oates and Bedloe.

Mr. Just. Dolb. Well, how material will that be?

Sir Miles. I shall prove that he swore false; for Sir Thomas and I were ever together since the Plot broke forth.

Mr. Just. Dolb. That is hard to do.

Mr. Bar. Greg. You have an excellent Witness that can swear that.

Sir Miles. In all Probability I can do it.

Mr. Just. Dolb. But that must not go before a positive. Well, have you any more?

Sir Miles. There is another Witness or two, if it be not too tedious.

Mr. Just. Dolb. No, we will stay here all Day, if you please.

Edward Cooper called and examined.

Cooper. My Lord, all that I can say is, we having been at Authertons, we met with Mr. Mowbray; knowing him, and being acquainted with him, pray said I, whether is there any thing of a Truth in this that Bolron swears against Sir Thomas Gascoigne, or no? No, faith he, he might well have sworn it against you, or any other Person; for I have been in his House as long as he, and I never knew any such thing.

Mr. Just. Dolb. This was before Mowbray had discovered any thing; for Mowbray was then a Papist, and had taken the Oath of Secrecy: Besides, he did not much what Mowbray said, he was going on a high-way: If it had been before a Justice of Peace, or if he had been upon his Oath, then it might have been more material.

Madam Shereburn called and examined.

Sir Miles. Madam Shereburn, pray declare what Bolron said at your House.

Madam Shereburn. Mr. Bolron and Mowbray came to our House under Pretence of searching for Priests, and Bolron took several Parcels of away with him.

Judge Dolb. Away, away, if you have any thing against him on the behalf of this Gentleman, Madam, speak it; but you would prove him a Thief, and say, he went to seek for Priests, and he stole Money from them.

Mowbray. We went to seek for Priests, and we took some Chalices and other Popish Trinkets away.

Mr. Just. Dolb. Do not spend your's and our Time in saying that Bolron and Mowbray were knavish Boys; we, it may be, are guilty of Extravagances in that particular.

Mr. Bar. Greg. They themselves confess they have been very bad; they took the Oath of Secrecy, and it is as ill as ever was spoke or writ in so few Words.

Mr. Just. Dolb. I know they have been very bad Men. Well, have you any more Witnesses?

Sir Miles. I can produce my Neighbours and those of the Church of England, that can say no otherwise than that I have been of good Behaviour.

Sir Tho. Stringer. It is generally concluded by all, that Sir Miles hath been a very good Man until he fell into this great Action.

Mr. Just. Dolb. Brother, have you any thing more to say? if not, I'll proceed.

Sir Tho. Stringer. Only I desire that Dixon and Wilson may be called in to swear that they were hired at Sir Thomas Gascoigne's trial.

Mr. Just. Dolb. Call them, then.

Dixon called and sworn.

Sir Tho. Stringer. Pray tell my Lord and the Jury what Witnesses were hired, and whether you were hired to testify for Sir Thomas Gascoigne or no?

Dixon. My Lord, in November 79, John Bailly sent John Wilkinson for me, and when I came there, Batley was there; and they desired me to go and there called me into the Garden, and asked me, if I would be a Witness for Sir Thomas Gascoigne, and would give me forty Shillings.

Wilson called and sworn.

Sir Tho. Stringer. Were you offered any thing by Mr. Babbington, to be a Witness for Sir Miles?

Wilson. I was, my Lord.

Sir Tho. Stringer. Pray, tell my Lord what you were offered, and what he would have you to say.

Dixon. Batley would have him to be a Witness.

Mr. Just. Dolb. Well, but what was he to say?

Dixon. He was to say, he never see Bolron nor Mowbray at his House. Saith Batley, I saw them at the Door. Thou never didst see them in my House. Yes, saith he, I see them once, and my Lord, the third Time before they departed he might say, that in 79 he came in and found them there. This he pressed on me, telling me, it was but telling a lie, for no Oath was required in this Case.

Mr. Bar. Greg. Did Mr. Babbington offer you Money? What would he have you to testify for it?

Mr. Just. Dolb. What Money would he have given you?

Wilson. He would have given me 10 l. and Hickering proffered me 10 l.

Mr. Just. Dolb. Is Babbington a Solicitor for Sir Miles?

Bol. Yes, my Lord, here he is.

Dixon. Batley did press me to say again, that he never did see Mr. Bolron and Mowbray in his House, and he made a Contrivance of that.

Christopher Langley and Richard Cocker called and sworn.

Sir Tho. Stringer. Pray tell my Lords and the Jury what you have been proffered, and by whom, to give Evidence for Sir Miles.

Chr. Langley. My Lord, an't please you, I kept a publick House; so William Batley and John Ross came and called for a quart of Ale, and this Richard Cocker was with us, and he said, if you'll go and be a Witness for Sir Miles in those Things we shall direct you, you shall have a couple of Oxen and half a score of Sheep.

Sir Tho. Stringer. Who proffer'd you this?

Langley. Will. Batley and John Gross.

Cocker. Well, it is the same, my Lord, I went with him into his House, and he proffer'd him a couple of Oxen, and half a score of Sheep, if he would be a Witness for Sir Miles.

Mr. Bayns called and sworn.

Sir Tho. Stringer. Speak whether Mrs. Holmes would have had you to have recanted any thing against Sir Miles.

Mr. Bayns. She proffer'd me since I came into the Kingdom of England threescore Pound a Year to have holden my Tongue, if I had any thing to say against Sir Miles: I told her not whether I had any thing or no, and she proffer'd me 60 l. per Annum. Mrs. Hewit said, she would give me more if I would say nothing against Sir Miles.

Mr. Just. Dolb. Did they make an Assurance?

Bayns. I asked them, do you know another Gentleman's Purse? They said, they knew it very well, that he would give it.

Sir Miles. Pray let Mrs. Holmes be called again.

Mr. Just. Dolb. Well, she denies it. What is that Hewit?

Bayns. He married another of my Daughters, my Lord.

Mr. Just. Dolb. She only appeared zealous for Sir Tho. Gascoigne, and she would be the same for Sir Miles Stapleton. Have you any thing more, Sir Miles?

Sir Miles. No, my Lord; only Mrs. Holmes denies.

Mr. Just. Dolb. She does so.

Sir Miles. I have not so much to say against Mr. Bayns.

Mr. Just. Dolb. I do not hear he saith much against you.

Mr. Bar. Greg. He had got his Money pretty easily if he said nothing more against you; he had scarce earned his Money.

Sir Miles. I desire the Jury may consider what Credit was given to their Evidence formerly in the former Trials; for I speak seriously, I never spoke any such thing, nor was ever at any Consult about any such thing; I believe there is none that knows me will believe it.

Mr. Just. Dolb. Is that all?

Sir Miles. The Evidence is very improper; I never thought ill against the King in my life; what Reason was there for it?

Mr. Just. Dolben. No Reason at all that either you or any Papist should do it, but only through the mad fiery Zeal of the Jesuits; for ever since the Reformation you have enjoyed your Estates and Religion without any Molestation; but you could not endure we should quietly enjoy ours. But if you have any Matter on Record against them, we will hear it. It may be you will say he is an idle Fellow and the like; there will be no end of such Reflections.

Bar. Greg. You see what is produced on your Behalf, Sir Miles, though not by your Direction, yet on your Behalf, and they said it was but telling a Lie.

Sir Miles. No, my Lord, not I; I never gave any such Directions.

Mr. J. Dolben. Gentlemen of the Jury, Sir Miles Stapleton stands indicted for a very foul Treason, for endeavouring to subvert the Government, change the Religion, and to bring in Superstition and Idolatry; which he could never do, without compassing the Death of the King, he being the only Obstacle in the way. This is his Charge. The Proof of this depends upon Bolton and Mowbray; Mr. Smith, the first Witness, he only relates he hath been in Rome and France, and among all the Priests he conversed with there was such a Design on Foot; but against Sir Miles he knows nothing, but Things told him by Mr. Thwing, which I must tell you is no Evidence against Sir Miles Stapleton. Bolton and Mowbray do positively swear the Thing as plain as any Thing can be; they both swear they were present at several Consults, where it was resolved the King should be killed, and that Sir Miles did agree to it, and did agree to contribute 200*l* to carry on this Design. Captain Bayne, being examined, he saith, he did really see Sir Miles at Barnbow-Hall at that Time, but he doth not know whether it was about that or no.

Against this, Sir Miles saith it cannot be; but this is an Invention of Bolton and Mowbray; and to prove this, he produceth several Witnesses, that Bolton should deny, and that he should sometimes say that Sir Thomas Gascoigne knew nothing of it; sometimes that Sir Miles knew nothing of it: I must tell you at this Time, that they were then discoursed withal, they at that Time were Papists themselves, and lay under the Oath of Secrecy. But now here are three Witnesses, Sir Thomas Yarbrough, my Lady Yarbrough, and Mr. Lowder; and they do speak as much as any of the other doth concerning Bolton and Mowbray, and they speak it when it was a Time pertinent; for what they spoke to a Justice of Peace at that Time seems somewhat probable: You heard what Mr. Lowder saith, they came to him to accuse them the 25th Day of January 79, and he put them off for that Time, and he gives you Reasons why he did it; and then he brings an Order of Council to examine Mowbray, and he tells him what Mowbray would swear, and he tells him he would swear against Sir Miles Stapleton, that he was at the Consult at Barnbow-Hall; you have heard him often deliver this, and because it was somewhat material we desired him to speak it again and again: Bolton denies it, he never told what Mowbray could swear; so that depends upon the Credit of the Witnesses.

Sir Thomas Yarbrough tells us that Bolton came to him, and knocked him up out of Bed, for his Warrant to search for Rushton a Priest, who he said was at Sir Miles's, and thereupon he asked him if he could tell any Thing of Sir Miles Stapleton, and he said no, with many Asseverations; now if that Information were the same that was sent to Mr. Lowder, then 'tis of no such Weight, and it hath been presupposed by the King's Counsel, that Sir Thomas might forget himself, neither was there any Thing in these Papers relating to Sir Miles.

And my Lady Yarbrough being in Bed in the same Chamber, she saith she heard the Papers read, and her husband asked him of Sir Miles Stapleton, but he denied that he was concerned in the Plot: And she saith further, in the Afternoon, a Gentleman brought him into the Porch where they were sitting, and the Gentleman asked him who were Plotters, but he would not tell him; then he asked him if Sir Miles Stapleton was concerned, and he positively denied it. These Things hang not well together, I know not how to make any Observations upon it; he denies that he said so, they say he did. The rest of the Witnesses are not very much material; only, as I told you before, what Talk they would have talked before they changed their Religion: There is nothing proved against them, but they are good Witnesses in the Law; there is no Records, nor Perjuries, nor any Thing else that takes off their Evidence, they have sworn it several Times, and stand to it. Now you have heard and taken Notice what Objections have been made against it.

Mr. Baron Greg. My Brother has opened it so fully, I shall trouble you with very little, only to let you see that my Observations were the same, and that I concur in the Evidence with my Brother; for there is full Evidence against the Prisoner at the Bar. The Matter they swear is Treason of the highest Nature imaginable: There are but two that swear positively, but they swear of several Consults, and of the Particulars that were agreed on by Sir Miles Stapleton for the carrying it on; and there is no material Witnesses against them. For the latter Witnesses of their denying of it, it must be before they were of the Protestant Religion; when they were concerned as much to conceal it, as any Persons that were guilty of it: Besides, in a Discourse a Man is not bound to tell a Neighbour all Things that he doth know, he cannot be safe to tell it to a private Person at that Time. It is very true, as my Brother hath told you, they were resolved when they discovered it they would have Security for themselves: I suppose they needed not have feared Sir Miles flying from being apprehended; but if Sir Miles was at large they might have feared it. But when they came to be examined upon their Oaths before Mr. Lowder and Mr. Tindal, there could not be any Thing to excuse them; It is true, to my Apprehension, there was no probable Reasons why these two Gentlemen should ask them if Sir Miles were concerned in the Plot; for in the Information they saw his Name was not mentioned; thus they were as much afraid as Sir Miles was, it may be; it was their care of him, knowing what Religion he was of, and knowing him to be related to Sir T. Gascoigne. Now it doth depend upon the Credit of what they have sworn; they deny what is charged upon them by these Gentlemen; by Sir Thomas Yarbrough and by my Lady; and 'tis true, Mr. Lowder was as a Magistrate too, and Sir Thomas was as a Magistrate too; it is true, he was not upon the Examination of them upon Oath at that Time, therefore that was not as before a Magistrate; but Mr. Lowder, they came to him as a Magistrate; therefore it must be for you to consider whether or no there might be a Forgetfulness of them in their speaking, or a misunderstanding of them; there is nothing else that I know can tend to the reconciling of it: For if there were a Mistake by the one, or a Forgetfulness in the other, then it might alter the understanding; but if they heard well and remembered true, then it will be, as I have said before, more difficult to be reconciled. But, Gentlemen, upon the whole Matter, it will depend upon the Construction and Reputation of what they swear, and these Gentlemen speak, which you are to consider.

Having sworn a Bailiff, the Jury withdrew for about half an Hour's Consultation together, and then returned into Court, and gave in their Verdict NOT GUILTY.

CVI. The Trial of GEORGE BUSBY, at Derby Assizes, for High-Treason, being a Romish Priest, July 25, 1681, 33 Car. II.

THE Court being sat, and the usual Formalities preceding Business over, the Pannel of the Grand Jury was called over, and nineteen of them sworn. The Names of which Gentlemen of the Grand Jury, which found the Bill of Indictment, &c. against George Busby, were as follow.

1. Sir Henry Every of Egginton, Baronet.
2. Sir Robert Coke of Langford, Baronet.
3. Sir William Boothby of Ashborn, Kt. and Bar.
4. Sir Robert Clark of Chilcote, Knight.
5. William Fitz-Herbert of Tiffington, Esq;
6. Henry Cavendish of Dovebridge, Esq;
7. William Mundy of Darley, Esq;
8. John Lowe of Denby, Esq;
9. William Berrisford of Bentley, Esq;
10. John Allen of Gresely, Esq;
11. William Hopkinson of Bonjall, Esq;
12. William Lee, Gent.
13. Lionel Parslow of Dionfield, Gent.
14. Joseph Harpur of Yeavely, Gent.
15. John Stiffin of Hopton, Gent.
16. Matthew Smith of Denby, Gent.
17. John Whigly of Cromford, Gent.
18. Paul Jenkinson, Gent.
19. George Birds of Stanton, Gent.

The Indictment being brought into Court, Billa vera.

Clerk of the Assizes. Goaler, set George Busby to the Bar. (Which was done.)

Clerk of the Arraignments. George Busby, hold up thy Hand. (Which he delayed to do.)

Clerk again. George Busby, hold up thy Hand.

Which he did not do, but instead thereof, presented a Petition to the Court to this Effect, That he was committed to the Goal in March last, for being a Popish Priest, and that great Industry had been used to procure Witnesses to swear against him, and that having obtained his Habeas Corpus to be removed to London, the Under-Sheriff falling sick, and being since Dead, the Habeas Corpus was not executed; he prays he may be removed to the King's Bench, that he may have Time to make his Defence, he depending upon his Habeas Corpus, his most material Evidence to clear him, and to prove his being an Alien, being then in London, &c.

Baron Street. Mr. Busby, notwithstanding I must proceed to try you, the Grand Jury having found the Bill Billa vera; you say you are an Alien; if that be so, then you are without this Law of the 27th of Elizabeth.

Busby. I had not my Habeas Corpus, and so am deprived of my Witnesses to prove that I am an Alien born.

Baron Street. If they prove you not a Native, then the Indictment falls.

Then the Clerk of Arraignments proceeded to arraign the Prisoner.

Clerk. George Busby, hold up thy Hand, (which he did.) 'Thou standest indicted by the Name of George Busby, late of West-Hallam in the County of Derby, Clerk, for that thou, being a Subject of our Sovereign Lord the King that now is, and being likewise born within this Kingdom of England, was made and ordained a Priest by the Authority derived and pretended from the See of Rome, after the Death of the Nativity of St. John Baptist, in the first Year of the Reign of our Lady Elizabeth, late Queen of England, &c. and before the 16th Day of March, in the 33d Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord Charles the second, of England, Scotland, France and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith, &c. the Laws and Statutes of this Kingdom of England little weighing, nor the Punishments in the same contained nor all regarding; with Force and Arms, &c. at the Parish of West-Hallam aforesaid, in the County of Derby aforesaid, being within this Kingdom of England, voluntarily, freely and treasonably, the 16th Day of March, in the 33d Year of the Reign aforesaid, hath been and remained, contrary to the Form of the Statute in that Case made and provided and against the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, &c.

Baron Street. How sayest thou, George Busby, art thou guilty of this Felony and Treason whereof thou standest indicted, or Not Guilty?

Busby. This Indictment, my Lord, is not full; it recites not the particular Case in the Statute of Queen Elizabeth, viz. that I took Orders beyond Sea, and another Point, that I am a Native of the King's Dominions.

Baron Street. You may be made a Priest in England by the Authority of the Bishop of Rome, as well as at Rome.

Busby. How can I be made a Priest in England by the Authority of the Bishop of Rome, where there is no such Authority?

Baron Street. You must plead to your Indictment as it stands.

Busby. Then, my Lord, I humbly beg I may be allowed Council.

Baron Street. If any Point in Law arise, you shall be allowed Council.

Busby. The Time and Place is not specified in the Indictment.

Baron Street. If that be so, 'tis material. But upon View of the Indictment, 'twas found right.

Clerk of Arraignments. George Busby, hold up thy Hand; art thou Guilty of this Indictment, or Not Guilty?

Busby. (then holding up his Hand) said, Not Guilty.

Clerk of Arraign. Culprit, How wilt thou be tried?

Busby. By God and my Country.

Clerk. God send thee a good Deliverance.

Baron Street. Now we will see if your Objections be of any Weight; you hear the Indictment read, which was ut ante, being a Subject of the King's, born within this Realm; you may be made a Priest by the Authority of Rome, in England, Ireland, or Germany, or any where else, and that will make you a Priest within this Law.

Busby. I am no Native, I was born beyond the Sea.

Baron Street. Your being a Native, is Matter of Fact, and must be proved.

Busby. My Lord, I move I may have right of challenging the Jury.

Baron Street. Sure we must have the Jury before us first, before you can challenge any of them.

So the Jury being called, Busby challenged peremptorily near the Number allowed by the Law, viz.

John Burrows , Gent.	John Agan , Gent.	Robert Rowland .
Henry Goodyer , Gent.	Henry Wild , Gent.	Robert Cooper .
John Hawksworth , Gt.	Thomas Coxon .	Edward Ridge .
Thomas Cockayne , Gent.	James Dawson .	William Alsop .
Cornelius Dale , Gent.	John Rose .	James Cooper .
Thomas Wetton , Gent.	William Salt .	John Wallat .
Thomas Wingfield , Gt.	John Hurd .	Gregory Seale .
William Kirkland , Gt.	John Stone .

The King's Council did except against two Persons only, viz. Robert Dorey, Christopher Holmes.

Bar. Street. Have a Care, Mr. Busby, at your Peril, if you challenge peremptorily above the Number of 35.

The Names of the Petty-Jury sworn.

1. Samuel Ward , Gent.	5. Ed. Wolmestly , Gent.	9. John Roper .
2. Tho. Wilson , Gent.	6. William Horn , Gent.	10. John Creswell , Gent.
3. John Steer .	7. George Tricket , Gent.	11. Edmund Woodhead .
4. John Ratcliff .	8. Jeremiah Ward .	12. Anthony Bowne .

Then Mr. Bridges, Council for the King, opened the Indictment.

Mr. Bridges. May it please your Lordship, and the Gentlemen of the Jury, the Prisoner at the Bar, George Busby, stands indicted for High-Treason, as it is alleged in the Indictment, that he being born within the King's Dominions, and made a Priest, and having received Orders by pretended Authority from the See of Rome, did the 16th Day of March last come into the Realm of England, as 'tis laid in the Indictment, to West-Hallam, in the County of Derby, and there he did abide, contrary to the Form of the Statute; and this is laid to be traiterously done. To this he hath pleaded Not Guilty; and we are to prove it upon him, by the King's Evidence, whom we are now to call.

Mr. Coombes. Gentlemen of the Jury, you have heard the Indictment read and opened, you will presently have it fully proved, and highly aggravated by our Evidence; for, Gentlemen, we shall prove that the Prisoner at the Bar is not only a Popish Priest, but a Jesuit, and this by his own Confession; and that his Name was inserted in Sir William Waller's Warrant, when he came down into this Country to search for Jesuits: That he has held a secret and dangerous Correspondence with Harcourt, Ireland, and other Popish Traitors: That he has been their Procurator, and disbursed and received great Sums of Money for them.

Gentlemen, the Prisoner hath been a Person highly suspected, as well as dangerous to the Government, for some Years; for treasonable Matters of another Nature than he stands indicted of, have been deposed against him upon Oath at the Council Board, and thereupon a strict Warrant to apprehend him was directed to Mr. Gilbert (a worthy Gentleman and Justice of Peace of this County.) Mr. Gilbert, Gentlemen, will presently tell you the Manner of his taking him in an obscure Place in the Roof of one Mr. Powtrel's House at West-Hallam, in this County. But here I must beg Leave to digress; for I cannot but take Notice of the malicious Temper and base Practices of this Sort of Men; for though Mr. Gilbert acted by Virtue of a Warrant from the Lords of the Council, and has since received an Approbation from his Majesty of what he did, under the Hand of a Secretary of State, yet could not those People forbear to raise false and scandalous Reports of, and make false Accusations against him, upon this very Account: But what is it they will not do to discourage Protestant Magistrates from doing their Duty against them? I confess, nothing is to be wondered at since the barbarous Murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey. But to proceed, Gentlemen, we shall also prove to you, that the Prisoner is so little a Friend even to the Civil Government of this Nation, that he would not suffer his Nephew, Mr. Powtrel, to take so much as the Oath of Allegiance, which is scrupled only by the Jesuits; for I think their secular Priests will generally take it. Gentlemen, the Things I have already opened, are Matters of high Aggravation, and come in by Way of Indictment. But that which in this Case we rely upon is this, that the Prisoner has baptized, married, confessed, and absolved, in the Popish Way, that he has given the Sacrament, and said Mass very frequently in his Popish Vestments; and for Proof of this we have a Cloud of Witnesses.

Gentlemen, you hear the Prisoner is indicted upon a Statute made in the 27th Eliz. which makes it Treason for any Subject born to take Orders from the See of Rome, and afterwards to remain in England; which Law I conceive was not only made for the Security of the Government, but also in Favour of the Lay Papists themselves; for though several Statutes were made to keep them within the Bounds of their Allegiance, and to secure the Government from their villainous Designs; yet it was experimentally found true, that no Dangers or Penalties whatsoever could deter or hinder them from plotting against the State, in order to bring us back again to the Slavery of Rome; whilst those juggling Managers of their Consciences were suffered to come amongst us; and therefore I may well call this Statute, upon which the Prisoner stands indicted, an Act of Charity to the common Papists; for it was made to prevent the Dangers they would otherwise run themselves into, as well as the Nation. 'Tis true, indeed, Gentlemen, that the lively Execution of this Law has (by the Clemency of our Princes, and good Nature of the Government) been many times suspended, and might yet have continued in the Shade, had not the Popish Priests and Jesuits roused up this sleeping Lion against themselves, by a damnable and hellish Plot against his Majesty's Life, the true Religion and well established Government of this Nation; the Reality of which has been confirmed to us, not only by the unanswerable Evidence of Coleman's Papers, and other loyal Proofs, but also by frequent Proclamations, and the uniform Votes and Resolutions of several Parliaments. I may therefore very well borrow the Words of a great Man upon the like Occasion, and say, That at this time of the Day 'tis much better to be rid of one Priest than many Felons: and therefore, Gentlemen, if our Evidence shall make good the Indictment, I hope you will do your King, your Country, and yourselves the Right to find the Prisoner Guilty.

Mr. Coombes. We shall call our Evidence.

Call Mr. Gilbert. (who was sworn.)

Pray tell my Lord and the Jury, what you can say concerning the Prisoner at the Bar.

Mr. Gilbert. My Lord, I dwell within two Miles of Mr. Powtrel's House at West-Hallam, the Place where the Prisoner was taken, and have heard that he hath been a Priest in that Family six or seven Years, though I did never know him personally, nor, to the best of my Knowledge, ever saw him till I apprehended him, which was the sixteenth of March last, the very Day on which the Judges went out of Derby the last Assizes; the first Enquiry I made after him, was occasioned by a Letter and a Messenger from Sir Simon Degg, about November 1678, at which time I sent a Warrant to the Constable at West-Hallam, to search for the said George Busby, but he could not then be found; at that Time it was reported, that he was a Jesuit, and concerned in the Plot; which I had Reason to believe, because when Mr. Gray came to search Mr. Powtrel's House for some Jesuits the January following, by Order from the Lords of the Council (in which Service he commanded me to attend him), we perceived Mrs. Powtrel (who is Busby's Niece) to be much troubled, and in a great Passion, the Cause whereof Mr. Powtrel declared to be for Fear the said Search was made for her Uncle Busby, who, as I heard afterwards, was then in the House, though at that Time he was reported to be fled.

However, the Government had a jealous Eye on this Busby about two Years ago, as may appear by a Warrant from the Lords of the Council, which Warrant I have ready, and humbly pray your Lordship it may be read openly in Court.

Baron Street. Let it be read.

Clerk. "Whereas information hath been given to his Majesty in Council upon Oath, That George Busby, late of West-Hallam, in the County of Derby, is a reputed Priest and Jesuit, and has had a considerable Part in the late Conspiracy against the Life of his sacred Majesty, and the Peace of the Government; these are therefore to will and require you to repair to the Place aforesaid, or where-ever else the said George Busby shall be found, and him to seize and apprehend, and convey to the next County-Goal, there to remain in close Custody, until he shall be delivered by the due Course of Law. And all Mayors, Sheriffs, Justices of the Peace, Constables, and other his Majesty's Officers and loving Subjects are to be assisting unto you in the Execution hereof, as they will answer the contrary; for which this shall be your Warrant. Dated at the Council-Chamber in White-Hall, the 19th Day of March, 1678.

Indorsed to Henry Gilbert , Esq; at Locko , in the County of Derby .	Worcester , Clarendon , Alysbury , H. London ,	Sunderland , Essex , Falconbridge .

(Then Mr. Gilbert proceeded.)

Mr. Gilbert. My Lord, I received this Order on Saturday the 22d Day of March, 1678. And on Sunday Afternoon I sent to Mr. John Bagnall of Derby, who was then Under-Sheriff, requiring him to meet me early on Monday the 24th, at Mr. Powtrel's House at West-Hallam, about some earnest Business lately sent down from the Lords of the Council, where-with I would acquaint him at our Meeting: As soon as he came, I shewed him the Warrant; after which we searched very diligently in every Place we could see, but could not find him; though afterwards I was informed he was in the House at that Time also.

About August, 1679, Mr. Powtrel obtained a Licence from his Majesty to travel beyond Sea, and it was confidently reported by the Papists, that that this Mr. Busby was gone over too, infomuch, that when Sir William Waller came into these Parts in January 1679, with Warrants to search for Jesuits (in one whereof I saw Busby's Name) and would have searched at Hallam, I dissuaded him, and did assure him I believed he was gone beyond Sea, and told him how often I had searched for him in vain; whereupon Sir William Waller diverted to another Place, though I have been informed since, that Busby was never out of England, since the Discovery of the Plot.

But about Christmas last, and since, I having had Notice that Busby was in England, and particularly at West-Hallam, and had been seen last Corn-Harvest to walk in Mr. Powtrel's Garden with one Anne Smalley, a Widow, I thought it my Duty to make it my further Enquiry after him, which I did on the first Day of March last, and came to the House to buy some Wood for my Coal-pits, and then brought five or six Persons with me, and sent for the Constable to help me to search for him, which we did most part of the Afternoon, but could not find him, though he was seen to be walking in the Garden with the said Anne Smalley when I came first into the House, as I was afterwards informed; but when I asked the said Anne Smalley for him, she affirmed with many Protestations, that he was in Flanders, and not in England, and that if I had any Business with him, I must go beyond Sea to him, for she had not seen him for above two Years; though she had helped to convey him out of the Garden into his hiding-hole, but a few Minutes before: However, I proceeded in my Search, and found in the Chamber where Busby lodged, a Crimson Damask Vestment, wherein was packed up a Stole a Maniple of the same (as the Popists call them) an Altar, Stone, Surplice, and a Box of Wafers, Mass-Books, and divers other Popish Things: Then I told Mrs. Braylsford (a Kinswoman of Mr. Powtrel's) and the said Anne Smalley, those Things did signify that a Priest belonged to the House; for the Book had been lately used, as was apparent by the String which was put betwixt two Leaves, whereof Festa Februarii was on the one Side, and Festa Martii was on the other side; but they stiffly affirmed, that no Priest had been there of above two Years before, and jeered me when I could not find him, and said, if there was a Priest in the House, why did I not take him?

When I had done searching, and could not find him, I took away the Vestment, and other Things, which I brought to the Assizes, a Fortnight after, and did ask Mr. Justice Charlton (who came that Circuit) his Opinion, what I should do with them; he told me they must be burnt, according to Law; I entreated his Favour, that I might send them again to the same Place, for two or three Days, to make the Priest more confident, that I might better apprehend him; he told me, he could give no such Permission; but insisted, that they ought to be destroyed.

When all the Business was done at the Assizes on the Crown-side (where I was obliged to attend) on March the 15th Day at Night, I went to the Judge again, and craved his Lordship's Pardon for presuming to send back the Popish Things, contrary to his Opinion; but acquainted him that I intended to go after them to West-Hallam that Night, and if I could not catch the Priest, I resolved to bring the same Things again; and after I had asked his Lordship some Questions, and received his Directions, I came to my own House, and went about eleven of the Clock at Night (with some Company to assist me) to Hallam, and set two Men to watch in the Garden, and one in the Church yard (joining to another side of the House) to see if they could spy any Light, or hear any Walking, in the Lofts or false Floors, when I made a Noise on the other Side of the House. I sent a Man before to call up the Constable, and when he and two or three more came, I knocked at Mrs. Anne Smalley's Window, about twelve of the Clock in the Night, and said aloud, Mrs. Smalley, open the Doors, I am come to search for a Popish Priest. She started up, and said, Who was there? I told her, It was I, she knew me well enough, I dwelt at Locko. Then I staid a pretty Space of Time, and called aloud to her again, and spoke the like Words: but by that Time, I suppose she and her Bedfellow, Mrs. Braylsford, were gone to give the Priest Notice, and to help him to his hiding-hole, for no body answered me; then, after a pretty Space, I called to her a third time, and required her, in the King's Name, to open the Doors, for I was come to search for Busby, the Jesuit, who was a Traitor by Law, and if she would not open the Doors, I would cause the Constable to force them open; and when I could have no Answer from her, I went to Joseph Dudley's Chamber-Window, and called there, charging him in the King's Name to open the Doors, but no Answer at all was returned; for he also was gone into the Priest's Chamber, and found Anne Smalley busy in helping Busby to secure himself, as the said Joseph Dudley did afterwards inform me.

After I had staid about a quarter of an Hour, I commanded the Constable, in the King's Name, to break the Doors open, which was done; and when we came into the Priest's Chamber, I found the Fire had been lately extinguished, the Counterpane and the Blankets laid in confused Heaps on the Bed, and some part of them warm, and some part cold; the upper part of the Feather-bed was cold; which I wondred at, then I put my Hand underneath, and the Bed was warm; for they had turned it. I looked for the Pillow, Sheets, Cap, &c. but Anne Smalley (as I was afterwards informed) had taken them into the Chamber where she lay. I asked her divers Questions about the Person that had lain in that Bed that Night, and particularly, whether or no it was not Busby? She told me, no body had lain in that Bed that Night; I told her, I was sure some Person had lain there; for the Feather-Bed was warm on the under-side: She took many Protestations, that no body had lain there of divers Nights before: I replied, if she would discover the Person who had lain there, it would save her and me much Trouble: But when all I could say would not prevail, I told her, I must search, for I was confident, that Busby was in the House, because she would not declare who it was that lay there.

I began to search about one of the Clock, and continued till after ten next Morning before I could find him: And though the Watchers in the Garden told me, they heard his Paces and Steps very plainly amongst the Lofts and false Floors, and described on the out-side of the House the Place where they last heard him, within the Space of nine or ten Foot-where he was hid; yet were we almost so many Hours before we could find him.

At last when the Searchers were almost all tired, Anne Smalley, and others of the Family, scoffed at us, and asked, What have you not found him yet? You said there was a Priest in the House, why do you not find him then? Why do you not take him? I said, All in good Time? I was resolved to find him, or starve him out: Nay, the Foot-Boy of the House, seeing my Servant look within the Kitchen-Chimney, where there hung a Port-Mantle, said, jeering to my Man, Look if he be not in the Port-Mantle.

After those Persons had pleased themselves a good while with mocking us for our Disappointment, I persuaded two or three of the Searchers once again to climb upon the Lofts (which I could not do myself, by reason of a Lameness in my Shoulder), and look well near the Place where Busby's last Steps were heard. Which when they had done some while, and found nothing, I took my Sword and Scabbard, (being in the Room underneath) and knocked on the Plaster-Floors over my Head, and caused them to answer me with the like Knocking as near the same Place as they could, and when we had examined the Floors in this Manner, I knocked near unto a Stack of three Chimneys, but they could not answer within a Yard; I knocked again in two or three Places near the Chimneys; yet still they could not answer near those Places, but told me there was nothing but Tiles and Roofing; I bid them break open those Tiles, which they did, and espied under them a wooden Door, and a little iron Hinge; I bid them break the Door; then one of the Searchers put in his Hand into a little Hole that was broken in the Door, and felt a Hat; then he told me some Body was in that Place, for a Man had thrown his Hand off the Hat; then I caused them to break open the Entrance, which when they had done, Busby spoke to them, and desired them to be civil; when they told me what he said to them, I charged them to be civil to him, and bring him to me, which they did. Then I arrested him in his Majesty's Name for High-Treason, and after he had refreshed himself a little, I told him he must get on his Boots, and prepare himself to go to Derby.

Soon after his Apprehension, (I perceiving him to be a little dismayed) I encouraged him, and said, he should have all the Favour a Person in his Circumstances could expect; for I told him, I understood he was a Gentleman of a good Family in Buckinghamshire or Oxfordshire, and that his Brother lived at Coddington in Oxfordshire, which he acknowledged and thanked me for my Civility.

I was so well satisfied that we had apprehended him, after much tedious watching and searching, that I never thought of sending any Man to look what was in the hiding Hole with him; but after an Hour's stay, or thereabouts, I took him away from Hallam between eleven and twelve o'Clock on the 16th of March last, and brought him to Derby between one and two of the Clock; where, after I had taken his Examination, I made a Mittimus, and committed him to Derby-Goal.

On Saturday following, I writ a Letter to Oxford to the Right Honourable the Earl of Conway, one of his Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, informing his Lordship of the apprehending and Commitment of Busby, and inclosed a Copy of his Examination, to which his Lordship writ me a Letter in Answer, that he had acquainted his Majesty with my Proceedings, who did very well approve of what I had done.

Busby. My Lord, I am an Alien, born at Brussels.

Bar. Street. Was your Father of that Place? It is a very good Family.

Busby. My Father lived at Coddington, my Mother was an Heiress, and here is an Affidavit ready to be produced of what Children my Father had before he went beyond Sea, born at Coddington, out of the Register of that Place; I have had no Time to bring a particular Certificate where I was born, and what other Children my Father had beyond Sea; my Father went over about the beginning of the Troubles, and I am about forty Years of Age.

After the Judge had told Busby of the Act for Naturalization.

Mr. Busby. I suppose (my Lord) that Act may stand good as to Privileges of the Subject, but not as to Penalties.

Bar. Street. Yes, as to all Intents and Purposes: Read the Act 29 Car. II. cap. 6.

An Act for the Naturalizing of Children of his Majesty's English Subjects, born in foreign Countries during the late Troubles.

WHEREAS during the late unhappy Troubles in England, which began in the Year of our Lord, one Thousand six Hundred forty One, and continued until the Time of his Majesty's most happy Restoration, divers of his Majesty's English Subjects, as well of the Nobility as others, did either by reason of their Attendance upon his Majesty, or for fear of the then usurped Powers, reside in Parts beyond the Seas out of his Majesty's Dominions, and it may hereafter become difficult to make Proof of the Occasion of such their Residence: Now for preventing of all Disputes and Questions that may arise, whether the Children of such his Majesty's Subjects of this Realm are Natural-born Subjects of our Sovereign Lord the King, and to express a due Sense of the Merit of all such Loyal Persons as out of their Duty and Fidelity to his Majesty and his Father of blessed Memory, did forego, or were driven from their native Country;

Be it declared and enacted by the King's most excellent Majesty, by and with the Consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and the Commons in this present Parliament assembled, and by the Authority of the same, That Charles Gerard, and Elizabeth Gerard, Children of the Right Honourable Charles Lord Gerard of Brandon, Trever Wheler, and Dorothy-Elizabeth Wheler Children of Sir Charles Wheler, Baronet, Anne Ravenscroft the Wife of Edward Ravenscroft of Bretton in the County of Flint, Esq; one of the Daughters of Sir Richard Lloyd, Knight, deceased, born at Calais in France, and all other Persons who at any Time between the fourteenth Day of June in the said Year of our Lord one Thousand six Hundred forty-one, and the four-and twentieth Day of March in the Year of our Lord one Thousand six Hundred and sixty, were born out of his Majesty's Dominions, and whose Fathers and Mothers were Natural-born Subjects of this Realm, are hereby declared and shall for ever be esteemed and taken to all Intents and Purposes, to be and to have been the Natural-born Subjects of this Kingdom; and that the said Children, and all other Persons born as aforesaid, and every of them, are and shall be adjudged, reputed, and taken to be and to have been, in every respect and degree, Natural-born Subjects, and free to all Intents, Purposes, and Constructions, as if they and every of them had been born in England.

And be it further enacted and declared by the Authority aforesaid, That the Children, and other Persons as aforesaid, and every of them, shall be, and are hereby enabled and adjudged able, to all Intents, Constructions, and Purposes whatsoever, as well to demand, as to have and enjoy any Titles of Honour, Manors, Lands, Tenements, and Hereditaments, and all other Privileges and Immunities belonging to the Liege People and natural Subjects of this Kingdom, and to make his or their Resort or Pedigree, as Heir to his, their, or any of their Ancestors, lineal or collateral, by Reason of any Descent, Remainder, Reverter, Right, or other Title, Conveyance, Legacy, or Bequest whatsoever, which hath, may, or shall descend, remain, revert, accrue, come or grow unto the said Children, or Persons born as aforesaid, or any of them; as also to have and enjoy all Manors, Lands, and Tenements, or other Hereditaments, by way of Purchase or Gift of any Person or Persons whatsoever; as also to prosecute, pursue, maintain, avow and justify all and all manner of Actions, Suits and Causes, and all other Things to do as lawfully, liberally, freely and fully, as if the said Children, and the Persons born as aforesaid, and every of them had been born of English Parents within this Kingdom, or as any other Person or Persons born within this Kingdom may lawfully in any wise do; any Law, Act, Statute, Provision, Custom, or other Thing whatsoever, had, made, done, promulged, proclaimed, or provided, to the contrary thereof in any wise notwithstanding; provided always, that no Person, other than the Persons expressly named in this Act, shall have any Benefit thereby, except such Person shall within seven Years next ensuing, receive the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, and within one Month next after such receiving the Sacrament, take the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy in some of his Majesty's Courts at Westminster, and deliver into the Court, at the same Time, a Certificate of such his receiving the said Sacrament, and then make Proof thereof by Witnesses to be examined viva voce upon Oath.

And be it further enacted, That no Person or Persons, other than the Persons expressly named in this Act, shall have any Benefit thereby, until he or they shall have received the Sacrament, and made Proof thereof by Certificate and Witnesses, and taken the said Oath in Manner aforesaid.

And for the better Manifestation and Proof of such Qualifications as may entitle any Person to the Benefit of this Act, which in process of Time may be very hard to be proved; Be it further enacted, That any Person having received the Sacrament, and made Proof thereof by Certificate and Witnesses, and taken the said Oaths within the Time aforesaid, in any of his Majesty's Courts, in manner aforesaid, shall and may be admitted to make Proof of such his Qualification in the said Court by Witnesses viva voce to be examined upon Oath; and if he shall make Proof thereof to the Satisfaction of the said Court, he shall thereupon have a Certificate thereof under the Seal of the said Court, to be likewise enrolled in the said Court, and for ever after upon shewing such Certificate or Enrollment thereof, every such Person shall have full Benefit of this Law, as if he had been therein expressly named.

Bar. Street. Then you are a Natural-born Subject by the late Act of Parliament; whereby it appears that all Persons born abroad in the late Troubles, who went out of this Kingdom by reason of their Sufferings for the King, are made Natural-born Subjects, as if born here.

[Then Joseph Dudley was called and sworn.]

Bar. Street. Joseph Dudley, do you know the Prisoner at the Bar? Look upon him.

Joseph Dudley. I have known him these six Years and more, to belong to Mr. Powtrel's at West-Hallam to whom I was at that Time a Servant, where he officiated as a Priest, and was kept to do that Office; where I have heard him say Mass, preach, pray, and have seen ten, twenty, or thirty or more at a Time before him in the Chappel there, when he hath officiated with his Priestly Robes upon him; and likewise seen Children brought to be christened by him, others to be catechized; which he frequently did, as if he had been a Parish-Priest, but with what Privacy he could: And I myself have taken care of the Doors at such Times, which care they left to me, though I was not of their Opinion; yet upon my promising to be so, they did repose that Trust and Confidence in me.

Bar. Street. Tell us what you know concerning Mr. Busby's being an Alien, as he pretends, which I cannot believe.

Joseph Dudley. He tells you, that when the Civil Wars were here in England, his Father and Mother, with their Family, went beyond Sea, where he was born; but, my Lord, in discoursing with my Master and others of the late Wars, I have heard Mr. Busby relate what happened to their Family in those Times, and that their House was often plundered, and his Father and Mother living at Coddington in Oxfordshire (as he tells you) the first Time the Soldiers came to plunder the House, he was about two Years old or more, and being frightened at the Soldiers, he hid himself behind the Bed in the Curtains, so that while they were there, none of the House knew where to find him, which made them believe that the Soldiers had taken him, or made him away; but when the Soldiers were gone, his Mother and some of the Family lamenting for him in her Chamber, he hearing them, appeared; so that with great Joy they received him. My Lord, I think the Place was Coddington, where he tells you his Mother lived, and that it was her's, she being an Heiress. At least, I am very certain I have heard him speak of the Place where he was born, to be in or about Oxfordshire, I think it was Coddington; for it is the Place where Mr. Charles Busby his eldest Brother now liveth, and he saith, that from thence his Father and Mother went beyond Sea.

Busby. When did you hear me discourse any such thing as you have related, and with whom; you speak this by hear-say, do you not?

Jos. Dudley. Several times with my Master and others, as I said before, when they have been talking how some Families have been ruined by the great Oppressions of those Times, some being plundered, others sequestered, and forced to leave their Estates and Friends, which you have said was your Mother's Case; for their great Sufferings forced them to go from their own House: And, my Lord, when he was about five Years old, he did also say, that he could remember Soldiers coming again to plunder, and he being at that Time in the Garden or Orchard, he did hide himself in the Hedge, where he did continue till they were gone, and then he came forth when it was late in the Evening; but his Mother nor any of the Family knowing where he was, did very much fear they had lost him; but when he came to them, they were not a little joy'd; but after this they went immediately beyond Sea, and took him with them, where his Mother continued several Years, and had several Children there, the which I have heard him say of himself, and of her being at Brussels.

Bar. Street. Mr. Busby, the Evidence says, that you told a Story of your Mother's House being plundered, and how you hid yourself in the Curtains when you was two Years old, and in the Garden-Hedge, when five Years old, for fear of the Soldiers, and that soon after your Mother went beyond Sea, where she had several Children, which yourself told from your own Mouth, and he had it not from other People.

Bar. Street. But, Mr. Dudley, What can you say as to his being a Priest or Jesuit?

Jos. Dudley. My Lord, my Master and his Family, and all Papists that were acquainted with him, ever owned him to be a Jesuit; and several of them have many times told me so: Besides he himself has owned that he was of the Society of JESUS, particularly one time, when I should have been his Convert; telling me, While I was out of the True Faith, I could not be saved; and there was no way to be saved, but by believing the Catholick Church, which was the Roman Catholick, as Tradition makes appear; for God help me, I was a poor Heretick, and led by weak and blind Pastors; for they had their Religion only from Calvin and Luther, and every silly Fellow was made now a Preacher of the Gospel, before he understood it; but that he and all Jesuits were fifteen Years labouring in their Studies and Degrees, before they came to be ordained.

Busby. I pray you, where and when was it I said all this to you?

Jos. Dudley. In the Gardens at West-Hallam, where my Master Mr. William Powtrel and Mrs. Anne Smalley, after great Persuasions, sent me to you; and told me they had sent you before; and that I should find you there, where I did. And your first Discourse was of the Gardens, withal giving me a Description of the Jesuit's College in Liege, where you did (as I remember) own your receiving Orders. Besides, I have heard my Master, Mrs. Smalley, Mrs. Winifrid Attwood, and George Harrison (who lived in the Colleges beyond Sea) own it. And yourself said, That Mr. Evers, my Lord Aston's Priest (who had been with you at West-Hallam) was your Master and Tutor, when, as I think, you were a Scholar at St. Omer's.

Busby. How long do you say you have lived at West-Hallam?

Jos. Dudley. Betwixt six and seven Years.

Busby. When was that I talked of the Gardens at the College of Liege? And whether I told you I was a Jesuit when I spoke of Liege Gardens? What Time was it, what Year?

Jos. Dudley. I cannot say the Time, but 'twas since I lived at Hallam, and 'twas when you persuaded me to be a Catholick.

Busby. You take a Compass of six Years, this is a mere Story. Pray, what were my Arguments?

Bar. Street. You were about to convert him, and then you told him this; 'tis enough you have endeavoured to make him change his Religion; but it seems your Arguments were not of so much weight as to be remembered.

Busby. I pray you, was I ever with you alone to tell you I was a Jesuit? Let me know the Year and Time, and what induced me to say so?

Jos. Dudley. I cannot satisfy you when the Discourse was; but I have been alone with you in the Garden a hundred Times and more; when you did satisfy me that you was a Jesuit, was the Time when you did move me to be of your Persuasion; the which I did so far condescend to, that ever since there was none of the Family more trusted than I; for, my Lord, I did give them all the Assurance that might be of being of your Religion; but the Times being troublesome, and the fear of disobliging my Friends, particularly one or two, who had the Care and Management of a House of mine (which was then in Trouble) then I durst not consent, yet my seeming Inclination did ever much please them, and they did so far credit me that my Master did intend (as he told me) to take me beyond Sea with him; nor did I know the contrary, till I was upon the Road for Dover, and then he told me that his Uncle Busby was inserted in the Pass (by the Name of Thomas Jackson) which he shewed me; but he having no Mind to go, stayed in England, (and for the most part at Hallam) so that my Master commanded me back, to look after his Affairs there: And for some Time before he was to return, he said he would send for me over. Ever since he left Hallam Mr. Busby hath continued privately there, for none besides Mr. George Brent and myself, and the Women of the House, were suffered to know of him; nay, some of his Relations who have lain in the House, have not known but that he was beyond Sea, though they were Papists, yet he would not suffer them, but concealed himself.

Busby. I pray, will you tell me what Day, Month, or Year it was, you and I had this Discourse you speak of; and tell me how it came that I was so familiar with you?

Bar. Street. What need you impose it upon him, when he saith he hath lived with you six Years and more? He cannot remember it; but he tells you you, that it was in the Garden, where he has been with you a Hundred Times and more, not thinking further of it; 'tis impossible to satisfy you the particular Time: Therefore why do you ask him such a foolish Question?

Busby. I desire you will let me know how you (as you pretend) come to know I was a Jesuit.

Jos. Dudley. Sir, it is what you know to be Truth, and I am sure you cannot but remember, it was in the Walk at the Head of the Orchard, where you was before me expecting my coming to you, and did then use all the persuading Means that might be to confirm me in your Opinion; in which I seemed so well satisfied, that you told me you would leave me to consider of it; but that I ought to forsake my Friends, and whatever else, to come to God Almighty, of which you did not doubt; but bid me be careful, for Delays are dangerous: And, my Lord, as to his being a Jesuit, he did own it when my Master was committed to Prison for refusing the Oaths of Supremacy and Allegiance; (for he was then private at West-Hallam), withal saying, in his Conscience he ought not to take them, for their Church would not allow it, but on the contrary did expressly forbid it: Nevertheless Mrs. Powtrel, Mr. William Powtrel, and divers of the Family, did argue for his so doing, especially after Mr. Thomas Cannynge came from St. Thomas, in Staffordshire, and said, that his Uncle Fowler, he, and all belonging to him, had taken the Oath of Allegiance: And that it was the Opinion, and with the Consent of Mr. Fitter, their Priest, that they might do it; and for that Reason Mr. Cannynge came to advise my Master the like: But Mr. Busby did reject the Motion, and said, no secular Priest could give Leave so to do, and for his Part he was absolutely against it, and so was all the Society: But if Seculars gave too much Liberty, he would not be guilty of their Fault; so when all would not prevail with him, then Mrs. Powtrel and I went to Mr. William Brent, at Fox-Coat, in Warwickshire, her Grandfather, and Mr. Busby's Father-in-Law, a Counsellor, to have his Advice; and upon his writing several Letters to my Master, and Mr. Busby, that it was proper for my Master so to do, nor could he avoid it; then in Compliance to Mr. Brent, he did not much oppose the taking of the Oath of Allegiance: And those Letters, the next Night after Mr. Gilbert had taken Mr. Busby, Mrs. Smalley (for Fear he should find them) did burn, but shewed them to me as she was looking over many Papers more, the most of which she did likewise burn.

Mr. Gilbert. For your Lordships and the Juries further Confirmation, that the Prisoner is a Jesuit as well as a Priest, and that he held a dangerous Correspondence with some of his Order, which have been executed for their Treasons in Relation to the Plot, I must acquaint your Lordship, that this Busby was Procurator for the Jesuits, and that he received the Rents of their Lands, from 1673 till 1677, and that he disbursed and returned several great Sums of Money to divers Jesuits, as may appear by Letters, and his Account-Book, which I took, where may be seen what Dealings and Transactions he had with Gawen, Harcourt, Turner, Ireland, Pool, Bennet, Heaton, Tomson, and others of his Tribe: He could not deny it to be his own Hand-writing.

My Lord, here is the Book.

(Which was presented to the Judge, and perused by him.) Then Mr. Gilbert proceeded.)

My Lord, I did also search at West-Hallam House for popish priestly Garments (being well informed that there were such in the House), and found divers Suits of Vestments, and other popish Trinkets, which I brought away, together with those I formerly sent back from the last Assizes; all which I have ready in Court to be produced, and have also a Minister here (who has formerly been a popish Priest himself), to inform your Lordship the Names and Use of all the Particulars; here are also (my Lord) a Box of Wafers, which I suppose they use for the Sacrament at the Mass; the larger Sort, I am told, are for the Priests Use, the lesser for the People; and here are the Wafer-Irons which made them.

Mr. Sheppey, pray tell my Lord and the Jury the Names of all those things, and how the Priest used them at Mass.

Mr. Sheppey taking up the Things, said, My Lord, this is a Vestment, used when the Mass is said; this is a Stole, and this is a Maniple, and this an Antependiana: And so gave an Account of the rest of the Trinkets.

[Then Thomas Houis was called and sworn.]

Bar. Street. What can you say, Friend, of the Prisoner? See if you know him, look upon him.

Thomas Houis. I know him well enough, he persuaded me to be a Roman Catholic, when I was about to marry a Man's Daughter that was a Papist; whom I could not have, until I turned to their Religion. Mr. Busby persuaded me, and when he had converted me, bound me to believe that Matrimony was a Sacrament; he gave me Absolution, and made me do Penance; the Words of the Absolution I cannot pronounce, but I have been several Times at Mass when he said it, when I had Absolution from him; after Confession I was to say these Words:

'For all which, and whatever else I cannot at this present call to Mind, I am heartily sorry for, for the Love of God; and purpose by God's Grace to amend, beseeching you, my Ghostly Father, to pray to God for me, and to give me Absolution and Penance.'

Afterward you know you married me, and I was cited to Lichfield-Court for being married privately by you. My Lord, I have been present when Mr. Busby said Mass at West-Hallam, and have heard and seen him say Mass several Days in his priestly Robes: I never knew any other Priest but him at West-Hallam; most Sundays and Holydays he said Mass, where were present most of the Roman Catholics in those Parts; I have heard him preach three Times, and no more.

Busby. Did I come to you, or you to me?

Tho. Houis. I came to you.

Busby. Then I did not persuade you to turn Catholic, you was satisfied upon the first Persuasion before you came to me, and declared you would turn Catholic.

Tho. Houis. I was persuaded by Mr. Shirburn of Stanly-Grange, yet not fully convinced but by you.

Mr. Gilbert. My Lord, this Shirburn he speaks of, was one Captain Shirburn a great Papist, who lived near me, a Letter-Carrier (as was reported) and one that sold them Books and Trinkets.

Tho. Houis. For I was fully satisfied then in all Things by your Instructions, and hearing your Sermons; as for Mass, I did not understand it; but you said it was Mass; besides, others called it so.

Busby. How can you swear to a Thing you do not understand?

Tho. Houis. If I did not, you told me so, and I believed you, because you did the Office of a Priest.

Bar. Street. It seems this is the Matter, you courted a Papist for your Wife, and Busby told you the Way to have her was to be a Papist, and you did hearken to Busby to persuade you; he told you, Matrimony was a Sacrament, and before you were married, you must be confessed, and have Absolution; and Mr. Busby, you put Words into his Mouth to desire Absolution; but gave it in such Language as he understood not: He says, he has heard you say Mass frequently; but preach only three times.

Busby. It is an easy Matter for him to say such Things, but how does he prove it to be Absolution or Mass, when he says he understands not the Language?

Tho. Houis. My Lord, I have not only been present at that which they call their Mass, but I have also received the Sacrament from Mr. Busby then, and have seen him give the Sacrament to divers other Persons too; and besides, my Lord, I did send my eldest Child to the Chapel at Standly-Grange, to have it christened by Mr. Busby: This Woman (pointing to Sarah Clark, who stood by) carried it: When we came there, Dr. Richard Needham (who lived there) said to me, Are you the Father of this Child? I answered, Yes: Then, says Dr. Needham, You ought not to be present when your Child is christened: Whereupon, my Lord, I went into a Corner of the Room, but could perceive well enough what was done, and Mr. Busby did christen my Child, and gave her the Name of Anne, Mr. Peter Waldron was Godfather, and Mrs. Anne Smalley Godmother.

King's Council. We shall now call Elizabeth Evans, for further Proof of Mr. Busby's exercising his priestly Office: (Who was also sworn.)

Bar. Street. Come, good Woman, what can you say of the Prisoner at the Bar, do you know him?

Eliz. Evans. Yes, I know the Prisoner at the Bar, it's Mr. Busby, my Lord, and have seen him in his priestly Habit say Mass in the Chapel at Mr. Powtrel's House at West-Hallam; I saw him christen Henry Avery's Child of Stanton, I was Godmother to the Child: He has confessed me several Times; and I have received Absolution from him: I have received the Sacrament from him.

Bar. Street. What was it he gave you, when you received the Sacrament from him?

Eliz. Evans. I know not what it was Mr. Busby gave me.

(Then the Wafers were called for; they were of several Sizes in the Box.)

And being shewed to her, she said, yes, my Lord, these are what he gave us at Mass for the Sacrament; I remember them, they were just such.

Busby. Wafers are things usually put under Biskets and Macaroons; therefore how can she say those are the Sacrament, for they are what I have seen given to Children to eat and play withal.

Bar. Street. They are Things indeed to give to Children.

King's Council. Pray call Dorothy Saunders.

(Who appeared, and was sworn.)

Bar. Street. Well, Dorothy Saunders, what say you?

Dor. Saunders. He has several Times absolved me, and given me the Sacrament, and has said Mass, where the Company were sometimes more, and sometimes less; (and having a Wafer given her into her Hand) and he held up the Wafer thus (and shewed the Court and the Jury the Manner of his Elevation of the Host.) And being asked by the Judge, whether she knew priestly Vestments? (answered)

Dor. Saunders. Yes; I know priestly Vestments when I see them; (which being shewed to her) she said, she had seen Busby in some of them; but for his christening of Children, I know nothing of that.

Busby. Is that the Sacrament? Those Wafers in the Box is that the Sacrament?

Dor. Saunders. We took it at your Hands for the Sacrament.

Bar. Street. Mr. Busby, you are so impertinent in your Questions, you think you have weak Persons to deal with; I hope the Jury will take Notice of it.

King's Council. Call Sarah Clark. (Who appeared, and was sworn.)

Bar. Street. Sarah Clark, have you heard Mr. Busby say Mass?

Sa. Clark. Yes, my Lord, that which he told us was Mass, but I did not understand it, for it was in another Tongue, which they said was Latin.

Bar. Street. But had he his Vestments on, or how was it, tell us, good Woman?

Sa. Clark. Yes, my Lord, he had Vestments on, and he did then give us the Sacrament, as he called it, which was a Wafer, and that he put into our Mouths after that he had elevated the Host: And he himself told me it was the Sacrament.

Bar. Street. Well, and have you made Confession to him, and has he absolved you after you have done so?

Sa. Clark. I have been at Confession before him upon my Knees, and when I had done, he spoke something to me in Latin (as I think) which he said was Absolution, and I did take to be so; and I have sometimes, my Lord, heard him preach; and that I understood, because it was in English. He told me what Absolution was, and the Mass, and the same was to be read in English, and those that could read, at those Times, said the same.

Bar. Street. Several Witnesses have spoken closely, that he has exercised his Office in all Things as a Priest: Have you known him marry any Body, and christen Children; if you have, speak?

Sa. Clark. My Lord, he did not marry me, one Mr. Gavan married me, but I have heard that he did marry Thomas Houis, and I am sure he did christen christen Thomas Hunt his first Child, for I carried it to him, and Mr. Waldron, and Mrs. Anne Smalley were Godfather and Godmother, and he did name it Anne; it was christened at Standly Grange, at Dr. Needham's House, and several others were there at the same Time, and afterwards I brought it home.

Busby. How do you know it to be Mafs and Absolution, when you say you do not understand the Language I spoke in?

Sa. Clark. Though I did not understand what you said, you told me what every thing meant, and I did believe you, because others told me so too; besides, all Papists thought it their Duty (as you told us) to be there Holy-days and Sundays, to prevent a venal Sin, which if we omitted we were liable to Penance.

Mr. Gilbert. My Lord, we have three or four more Witnesses, but we are loth to trouble your Lordship and the Court with any further Testimony of this Nature; hoping the Matter of the Indictment has been fully proved against the Prisoner; and if your Lordship please we will rest here.

Bar. Street. I suppose the Jury will believe there has been sufficient Evidence given to convict him; but Mr. Busby, what can you say for yourself?

Busby. Joseph Dudley tells your Lordship how I should tell a childish Story of hiding myself in the Curtains, when I was two Years old; pray, my Lord, consider how I could remember what I did at two Years old; I know not how I could. I have told your Lordship I was born beyond Sea, I am sure I was bred there; I hope your Lordship will not take notice of an Hear-say; my Mother went beyond Sea at the beginning of the Troubles, not after, 'twas before Edge-Hill Fight. As to what Houis says, he himself does acknowledge, that he does not understand what Language I absolved him in, nor the Language of the Mafs, and therefore he cannot swear to it; and for ought I know, as to his being married, it was in a privileged Place, and could not be cited to Litchfield-Court; and for what the other witnesses say, their Evidence is only that they heard something read in an unknown Language, usually Women pray in an unknown Language, and those publick Prayers were only Family-Duties; they swear not what it was, because they understand it not.

Bar. Street. I believe not one in a hundred understands your Prayers that hear them; else they would not be so juggled by you.

Busby. There are Vespers and Mattins, and Even-song; he does not distinguish what it was that was said, by reason it was in an unknown Language to him; it was only Family-Duty. I can produce a Witness to prove it, that Women do Family-Duty in an unknown Language.

Bar. Street. I know Women do not officiate in your Church.

Busby. He swears, my Lord, to what he does not understand. As for Elizabeth Evans, she swears concerning saying Mafs, and understands not one Service from another, and this proves not particularly my priestly Office.

Bar. Street. Mr. Busby, you forget christening Avery's Child, and Houis's Child, confessing and absolving divers Persons, the material Evidence: You only offer some little Diversions.

Busby. Dorothy Saunders knows not what she swears, nor Sarah Clark; none of the Witnesses can distinguish one Service from another; they cannot therefore swear what was, and what was not; giving of Bread is not the priestly Office, they do not swear positively to my exercising the priestly Office, other Persons wear those Garments as well as Priests: Those Things are Monuments and Heyre-Loomes to the Family, they were taken out of Churches in former Times at the Reformation: There are now to be seen in the Cathedral at York, Church-Stuff and Vestments, which are kept for Antiquity, and so were these.

Bar. Street. Mr. Sheppy has been a Priest, and he knows the Use of those Things as well as you.

Busby. My Lord, those Things Laymen do wear as well as Priests, I desire to call a Witness to prove it.

Bar. Street. You may if you will, but to what Purpose?

Busby. Pray call Robert Needham. (Who was called and appeared.)

Bar. Street. Well, Needham, do you know these Things?

(The Vestments being shewed unto him.)

Rob. Needham. I have had these Things on my self, my Lord, and have said my Prayers in them, and have thought my Prayers more acceptable when I had them on; and I have seen them used by others several Times.

Busby. More wear them that are Laymen, than such as are Priests.

Bar. Street. Needham, it seems you wore them whilst you said your Prayers, that they might be more acceptable?

Rob. Needham. Such like Vestments are worn by Laymen in several Places.

Busby. I desire one Mr. Charles Umphrevill may be called, to speak to my being an Alien born.

(Who being called for the Prisoner, was not sworn.)

Char. Umphrevill. To Mr. Busby's being an Alien, I have known Mr. Busby several Years, and I have heard his Mother and Brother affirm he was born at Brussels: And I have an Affidavit from the Register at Coddington of all their Children born in England, and we do not find Mr. George Busby's Name in the Register.

Bar. Street. How can you be sure of that? You ought to have brought the Man along with you to testify it.

Char. Umphrevill. My Lord, the Sexton is an old Man, above sixty Years of Age, and could not come; but he made Affidavit of it, which is here.

Bar. Street. That does not signify any Thing at all; that Affidavit cannot be allowed, for he might be born there, and yet not registered; but what makes you say we? What makes you concern'd?

Char. Umphrevill. I say we, because I was one of those employed to get Mr. Busby's Habeas Corpus.

Upon Mr. Umphrevill's being at a stand, and Busby directing him to tell what he had seen beyond Sea, the Judge taking notice thereof said,

Bar. Street. What would you have him say, Mr. Busby? Tell him.

VOL. III.

Char. Umphrevill. I have seen Canons beyond Sea wear such Vestments that are not in Orders; I have seen Children wear them, and they, I am sure, are not in Orders.

Busby. I call Mr. Mays to prove that I am not a natural-born Subject of the King's.

Bar. Street. (Come, Sir, though you are not upon your Oath, yet you must tell us the Truth, as faithfully as if you were.)

Edw. Mays. I have searched the Register at Coddington, and I do not find George Busby's Name, the Prisoner, registered; I have searched all the Books, and I find no Register of him.

Bar. Street. An hundred Children may be born in that Parish within these 20 Years, and not registered; all that are baptized, are registered only.

Busby. Mr. Mays, satisfy my Lord of the Disappointment I had of my Habeas Corpus, which you got for me.

Bar. Street. To what Purpose? But Mr. Busby you shall not say but I will hear him: What say you, Mays?

Edw. Mays. My Lord, I was employed about an Habeas Corpus for Mr. Busby in Easter Term last, and did obtain one for him then, but by reason of some Slackness it was presently out of date, and so became ineffectual. Also in Trinity-Term, I procured another Habeas Corpus for him, which was delivered to the Under-Sheriff of this County of Derby, who was then very Sick at London, of which Sickness he died there at last, and that Habeas Corpus, for that reason, did likewise fall short; by which Disappointments Mr. Busby is not so prepared for his Trial at this Time as otherwise he might, if he had not really depended upon his being removed to London by Habeas Corpus.

Bar. Street. All this is too little to the Purpose; for if he expected to have had his Trial there, and was prepared for it a Term or two ago, how comes it to pass he is not prepared now? Come, come, Mr. Busby, what can you say more?

Busby. I could not be born at Coddington, I was born beyond Sea, out of the Kingdom. My Lord, here is not one Word proved of the Substance of the Indictment, not a Word proved that I took Orders beyond Sea, nor here, from any Person that saw me take Orders; not a Word of that proved; nor not a Word of the Substance of that Statute of Queen Elizabeth, which I am indicted upon; only some few Women say they heard me pray in an unknown Language, which was no more than Family-Duty; and I can produce a Witness that Women say their Prayers publicly in an unknown Tongue, and all answer; and by these Circumstances I am accused for being a Priest.

Bar. Street. I find, Mr. Busby, you understand the Law. But pray you, is the Sacrament given by Women? And is Absolution given by Women?

Busby. If they understand not the Language, they understand not the Thing: Treason may be spoke in French, and I not know it to be so.

Bar. Street. Then it seems no Man can prove a Priest that does not understand the Latin Tongue.

Busby. None of the Witnesses has sworn that I gave Absolution, nor that I said Mafs, but in an unknown Tongue. What they have said are only Circumstances, and do not prove the Indictment; and what they say I did, are Things that are performed by those who are not Priests. I offer it again to your Lordship's Consideration, that I have not been proved a born Subject of the King's. I was deprived of my Habeas Corpus, which was detained in the Sheriff's Hand, and so lost the Benefit of it; (these Things are material;) and have not had Time to produce Witnesses that I was not born in England, but beyond Sea: At London I could have got Evidence to prove that; and here has been no Proof made of that, but a Story told of me when I was a Child: I have proved that my Name cannot be found in the Register at Coddington. For the rest I have not had time; if I had had the Benefit of my Habeas Corpus, to have been tried at London, I had Friends there that could have proved me born beyond Sea: This Dudley that appears an Evidence against me, was a Servant of Mr. Powtrel's, who was gone away upon Disgust; he sent away several Loads of Goods, and now he comes to swear against me; I am verily confident that he carried away above three Horse-load of Goods, that he carried privately out of the Garden, of Plants and such Things, and sent them all away.

Mr. Gilbert. My Lord, they were his Clothes, and other Things of his own, which he took with him when he went away.

Bar. Street. All this signifies nothing, if it be proved; but bring what Witnesses you will to prove it.

Busby. I hope your Lordship will consider that I am an Alien born, and that by the Loss of my Habeas Corpus I had not Time to bring my Witnesses; and that the Prayers I said were only Family-Duties: I hope that will be considered; and that those People that have sworn I said Mafs and Absolved, do not know what Mafs is, nor Absolution. My Lord, here is nothing proved of the Indictment against me.

Bar. Street. You have said all this six Times over, if you have nothing farther to say in your Defence, I must sum up the Evidence to the Jury.

Bar. Street. You of the Jury, the Prisoner at the Bar, George Busby, stands indicted of Treason upon the Statute of 27 Eliz. Cap. 2. the principal Branch whereof is this:

'And be it further enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That it shall not be lawful to or for any Jesuit, Seminary Priest, or other such Priest, Deacon, or religious or ecclesiastical Person whatsoever, being born within this Realm, or any other of her Highness's Dominions, and heretofore, since the said Feast of the Nativity of St. John Baptist, in the first year of her Majesty's Reign, made, ordained, or professed, or hereafter to be made, ordained, or professed, by any Authority or Jurisdiction, derived, challenged, or pretended from the See of Rome; by or of what Name, Title or Degree soever the same shall be called or known, to come into, be or remain in any Part of this Realm, or any other her Highness's Dominions, after the end of the same forty Days, other than in such special Cases, and upon such special Occasions only, and for such Times only, as is expressed in this Act: And if he do, That then every such Offence shall be taken and adjudged to be High-Treason: And every Person so offending, shall for his Offence be adjudged a Traitor, and shall suffer, lose, and forfeit, as in Case of High-Treason.'

This

This makes every Offender against this Statute a capital Offender, and guilty of High-Treason: Now whether he is within this Law, you are to consider. Mr. Gilbert has told you that he is a reputed Priest and Jesuit in the Neighbourhood, and that as such he had an Order from his Majesty to apprehend him. He used his Endeavours to take him for some Time, but could not apprehend him till the sixteenth of March last, and then he found him; but in such an obscure Hole, that no Body would hide himself in, but such an extraordinary Offender. Innocent People do not obscure themselves in that Manner. Joseph Dudley, to prove him a Native and not an Alien, tells you, that when Soldiers, in the Time of the late Wars, came to plunder his Father's House, he heard him say, that at two Years old he hid himself in the Curtains in his Mother's Chamber for fear of the Soldiers. But (says the Prisoner) my Memory could not serve me at two Years old to retain what I did then. But our Parents tell us what we did then. If a man be asked, What Age are you of? No Man can tell but as his Parents tell him. My Father told me I was six years old, and from thence I remember it. His Father and Mother were not out of England (as appears) till about 1646, and then the War was ended; and the Prisoner confessed himself to be about forty Years of Age, which shews him born in England. He that but observes his Language, will find that the Tone of the English Language remains with him. One born in Wales (though he came young from thence) he will have a Welsh Tone as long as he lives. The Prisoner tells you, that no Man has proved his being in Orders of the Church of Rome, nor where, when, or by whom made a Priest: But if all that were to be proved, it would make the Law idle and insignificant. If he be made a Priest in England, 'tis as much as if made at St. Omer's or Rome. He did own to Joseph Dudley, that he was made a Jesuit, and laboured to make a Convert of him in the Garden, when he was alone with him. The next was Thomas Houis, who courted a Woman, and must not have her, unless he turned Roman Catholick. Busby must discourse him, and make a Convert of him. He hears Busby preach three Times, and heard him say Mass several Times; and was not only married by him, but has been confessed and absolved by him divers Times. But Busby's fallacious Argument has no Weight in it, that because he understood not Latin, therefore he proves it not Mass nor other Services of the Church of Rome. Dorothy Saunders speaks to the same Purpose, that he confessed and absolved her. And she tells you, that she has seen him elevate the Host, and has shewed you the Manner how; and he gave her the Sacrament, which she and the rest took from him as the Sacrament: And that she has seen him officiate in some of the Robes produced in Court. Sarah Clark speaks to the same Purpose, and so did Elizabeth Ewins. But Busby says, because this was done in an unknown Tongue, they cannot swear it; and that he is no Priest, because they do not swear where, and when, he received his Orders. Whoever does exercise that Profession, we do believe him of that Church. When a Minister of our Church preaches or officiates, we do not say, Pray let us see your Orders first; but if he officiate usually as a Priest, 'tis taken for granted that he is one. He can tell where he received his Orders, but it may be cannot produce them upon all Occasions. Must he therefore be no Priest? Upon the Whole, if you believe the Witnesses, or any two of them, you are to find the Prisoner guilty; I believe you have had full Evidence; go together, and consider of it.

(The Jury went forth, and after a short stay came back into the Court.) And then,

Clerk. Gentlemen of the Jury, have you agreed on your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Clerk. Who shall say for you?

Jury. The Foreman.

Clerk. George Busby, hold up thy Hand: Look upon the Prisoner.

Clerk. Do you find George Busby Guilty of the High-Treason and Felony he hath been arraigned of, or not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Clerk. And so you say all?

Jury. Yes.

Clerk. Look to him Jailor.

Bar. Street. Though I must pass Sentence upon you of course, the Jury having found you guilty; yet I must tell you, that his Majesty hath commanded me to reprieve you from Execution.

Then Mr. Baron Street passed Sentence.

That you the Prisoner, now at the Bar, be conveyed hence to the Place from whence you came, and that you be conveyed thence on a Hurdle to the Place of Execution; where you are to be hanged by the Neck; that you be cut down alive, that your Privy Members be cut off, your Bowels taken out and burnt in your View; that your Head be severed from your Body; that your Body be divided into four Quarters; which are to be disposed of at the King's Pleasure: And God of his infinite Mercy have Mercy upon your Soul.

The Petitions of STEPHEN COLLEDGE, precedent to his Trial, with the Orders made thereon. 33 Car. II. 1681.

To the King's most excellent Majesty.

The humble Petition of STEPHEN COLLEDGE, now Prisoner in your Majesty's Tower of London,

Most humbly sheweth,

THAT whereas your Petitioner being charged with High-Treason, is under strait Confinement, that he hath not Liberty to see or speak with any of his Friends or his Children, and being lately informed, that it is ordered your Petitioner shall come to his Trial at the City of Oxon about the Middle of the next Month;

Your Petitioner therefore most humbly prays your sacred Majesty, That Leave may be given for Mr. Aaron Smith and Mr. Robert West to come to him; and also to have the use of Pen, Ink, and Paper, in order only to make his legal and just Defence, and also to have the Comfort of seeing his two Children.

And your Petitioner as in Duty bound shall ever pray, &c.

A true Copy,

Francis Gwyn.

At Hampton-Court, July 28, 1681.

UPON reading this Day at the Board the Petition of Stephen Colledge, Prisoner in the Tower, praying that in order to the making his Defence at his Trial, which he hears is to be the Middle of the next Month, he may be permitted to see his two Children, to have the Liberty of Pen, Ink, and Paper, and that Mr. Aaron Smith, and Mr. Robert West may come to him; his Majesty was pleased to order, That the Lieutenant of the said Tower of London do permit the said Stephen Colledge to have Pen, Ink, and Paper, and to see his two Children, and the said Mr. Aaron Smith, and Mr. Robert West, and to converse with them as often as he shall desire in Prefence and Hearing of the Wardour who attends him.

A true Copy,

Francis Gwyn.

To the King's most excellent Majesty, and to the Right Honourable the Lords of his Majesty's most honourable Privy Council.

The humble Petition of STEPHEN COLLEDGE, now a Prisoner in the Tower of London,

Humbly sheweth,

THAT your Petitioner having been a close Prisoner ever since his first Commitment, is altogether ignorant of the particular Matters charged against him, and of the Names of the Witnesses who are to prove the same; upon his Knowledge of both which, as well the Nature as the Manner of his Defence must depend; and because upon the Consideration of his Case, several Matters of Law may arise as well before as at the Time of his Trial, in which Council will be necessary to assist him, and several Matters of Fact preparatory to his Trial, with which, under his Confinement he cannot be furnished without the help of a Solicitor, and he is like to be wholly incapable of receiving any Benefit from the Privilege allowed by Law of peremptory Challenge to several Jurors, especially in a Country where he is absolutely a Stranger, unless he may have some Knowledge of them before his Trial.

In full Assurance therefore of the great Justice and Clemency of your Majesty and this honourable Board, which he hath lately had some Experience of, and doth with all Humility and Thankfulness acknowledge, your Petitioner doth humbly beseech your Majesty and this honourable Board, that he may have a Copy of the Indictment against him, or the particular Charges of it, that his Council and Solicitor may have free Access to, and private Conference with him; and because their own private Affairs or other Accidents may call away some of his Council from his Assistance, that Mr. Wallop, Mr. Smith, Mr. Thompson, Mr. Darnel, Mr. West of the Middle-Temple, Mr. Hawles of Lincoln's-Inn, Mr. Rotherham, Mr. Lovell, Mr. Rowny of Gray's-Inn, Mr. Pallesfen, Mr. Ward of the Inner-Temple, may be assigned him for Council, and Aaron Smith for his Solicitor, and that he may have a Copy of the Jurors to be returned upon his Trial some Days before the Trial.

And your Petitioner shall ever pray, &c.

A true Copy,

Francis Gwyn.

At Hampton-Court, August 11, 1681.

IT is ordered by his Majesty in Council, That the Friends and Relations of Stephen Colledge, a Prisoner in the Tower, shall have Liberty of visiting and freely conversing with him; and the Lieutenant of the Tower having first caused their Names to be taken in writing, is to suffer such Friends and Relations to have Access to the said Stephen Colledge, without any interruption from Time to Time accordingly.

Francis Gwyn.

CVII. The

CIVIL. The Trial of STEPHEN COLLEDGE*, at Oxford, for High-Treason, August 17, 1681, 33 Car. II.

ON Wednesday the 17th of August, 1681, the Lord Norreys, Lord Chief Justice North, Mr. Justice Jones, Mr. Justice Raymond, Mr. Justice Levinz, Commissioners of Oyer and Terminer and Goal-Delivery, met at the Court-House in the City of Oxford; and after Proclamation for Silence, the Commission of Goal-Delivery was read, and then the Commission of Oyer and Terminer. Proclamation was made for the Sheriff to return the Precepts to him directly: The Justices of the Peace of the County of Oxford were called over; and the Appearance of the Grand Jury summoned to attend this Commission was taken.

L. C. J. North. Gentlemen, you that are returned of the Grand Inquest, there has been a Sessions so lately that in all Probability there will be no great Matter to trouble you with at this Time. And so I shall not trouble myself nor you to give you any Charge, because we know of no Business yet that we shall need you for. The Court hath recorded your Appearance. You will do well to be in the way either in the Town or here about the Court, that you may be ready if any Thing should happen. 'Tis necessary for us to have your Attendance, but we know not of any Thing that we have in particular to trouble you with. We have an Indictment before us, let us proceed upon that.

C. of Crown. Goaler, have you your Prisoner?
Goaler. We will fetch him presently.

[Then the Prisoner was brought to the Bar.]

Cl. of Cr. Stephen Colledge, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.)

'Thou art here indicted by the Name of Stephen Colledge late of Oxford, in the County of Oxford, Carpenter; for that thou as a false Traitor against the most illustrious, most serene, and most excellent Prince, our Sovereign Lord Charles the Second, by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. thy supreme and natural Lord, the Fear of God in thy Heart not having, nor weighing the Duty of thy Allegiance; but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, the cordial Love, and true, due and natural Obedience which true and faithful Subjects of our said Sovereign Lord the King towards him our said Sovereign Lord the King, should, and of right ought to bear, wholly withdrawing and machinating, and with all thy Strength intending the Peace and common Tranquillity of our said sovereign Lord the King of this Kingdom of England to disturb, and Sedition and Rebellion, and War against our Sovereign Lord the King, within the Kingdom of England to move, stir up and procure; and the cordial Love, and true and due Obedience which true and faithful Subjects of our said Sovereign Lord the King, towards him our said Sovereign Lord the King should, and of right ought to bear, wholly to withdraw; put out and extinguish, and him our said Sovereign Lord the King to Death and final Destruction to bring and put, the tenth Day of March, in the three-and-thirtieth Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord Charles the Second, by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. at Oxford, in the County of Oxford, falsely, maliciously, subtilly, and traiterously, did purpose, compass, imagine, and intend Sedition and Rebellion within this Kingdom of England, to move, stir up, and procure, and a miserable Slaughter among the Subjects of our said Sovereign Lord the King to procure and cause, and our said Sovereign Lord the King from his Regal State, Title, Power, and Government of his Kingdom of England, to deprive, depose, cast down and disinheret; and him our said Sovereign Lord the King to Death and final Destruction to bring and put, and the Government of the said Kingdom at thy Will and Pleasure to change and alter, and the State of all this Kingdom of England, in all its Parts well instituted and ordained, wholly to subvert and destroy, and War against our said Sovereign Lord the King, within this Kingdom of England to levy; and thy said most wicked Treasons and traiterous Imaginations and Purposes aforesaid to fulfil and perfect, thou the said Stephen Colledge the said tenth Day of March, in the three-and-thirtieth Year of the Reign of our said Sovereign Lord the King, with Force and Arms, &c. at Oxford aforesaid, in the County of Oxford aforesaid, falsely, maliciously, subtilly, advisedly, devilishly and traiterously didst prepare Arms, and Warlike offensive Habiliments to wage War against our said Sovereign Lord the King. And thyself, in War-like Manner, for the Purposes aforesaid, then and there falsely, maliciously, subtilly, advisedly, devilishly and traiterously didst arm, and one Edward Turberville, and other Subjects of our said Sovereign Lord the King, to arm themselves, to perfect thy traiterous Purposes aforesaid, then and there advisedly, maliciously and traiterously didst incite and advise. And further, then and there falsely, maliciously, subtilly, advisedly, devilishly and traiterously didst say and declare, That it was purposely designed to seize the Person of our said Sovereign Lord the King at Oxford aforesaid, in the County of Oxford aforesaid. And that thou the said Stephen Colledge, in Prosecution of thy traiterous Purpose aforesaid, would be one of them who should seize our said Sovereign Lord the King at Oxford aforesaid, in the County aforesaid. And that thou the said Stephen Colledge, thy said most wicked Treasons and traiterous Imaginations, Compassings and Purposes aforesaid the sooner to fulfil and perfect, and Discords between our said Sovereign Lord the King, and his People to move, cause and procure, then and diverse Times and Days, as well before as after, in Oxford aforesaid, in the County of Oxford aforesaid, in the Presence and Hearing of diverse liege Subjects of our said Sovereign Lord the King, then and there being present, falsely, maliciously, subtilly, advisedly, devilishly and traiterously didst say and declare, That nothing of good was to be expected from our said Sovereign Lord the King, and that our said Sovereign Lord the King did mind nothing but Beastliness and the Destruction of his People: And that our said Sovereign Lord the King did endeavour to establish arbitrary Government and Popery, against the Duty of thy Allegiance, against the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, and against the Form of the Statutes in this Case made and provided.'

How say'st thou, Stephen Colledge, art thou Guilty of this High-Treason, whereof thou standest indicted, and hast now been arraign'd, or Not Guilty?

Colledge. My Lord, I do desire, if it please your Lordship, to be heard a few Words.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Colledge, the Matter that hath been here read unto you is a plain Matter, and it hath been read to you in English, that you may understand it. 'Tis an Indictment of High-Treason; now you must know, that no Plea can be received to it, but either Guilty, or Not Guilty, as to the Fact; if you can assign any Matter in Law, do it.

Colledge. Will you please to spare me, that I may be heard a few Words? I have been kept a close Prisoner in the Tower ever since I was taken: I was all along unacquainted with what was charged upon me. I knew not what was sworn against me, nor the Persons that did swear it against me, and therefore I am wholly ignorant of the Matter: I do humbly desire, I may have a Copy of the Indictment, and a Copy of the Jury that is to pass upon me, and that I may have Council assigned me, to advise me, whether I have not something in Law pleadable in Bar of this Indictment.

L. C. J. These are the things you ask, you would have a Copy of the Indictment, you would have Council assigned to you, to advise you in matter of Law, and a Copy of the Jury.

Colledge. One Word more, my Lord, I desire to know upon what Statute I am indicted?

L. C. J. I will tell you for that. Is it not contra formam Statut. with an Abbreviation?

Cl. of Cr. Yes.

L. C. J. That refers to all manner of Statutes that have any Relation to the Thing in the Indictment that is High-Treason. For it may be meant contra formam Statut. which are all the several Statutes that are in force concerning High-Treason. Now for those things that you demand, you cannot have them by Law. No Man can have a Copy of the Indictment by Law; for Council you cannot have it, unless matter of Law arises, and that must be propounded by you; and then if it be a Matter debatable, the Court will assign you Council, but it must be upon a matter fit to be argued: For I must tell you, a Defence in Case of High-Treason ought not to be made by Artificial Cavils, but by plain Fact. If you propose any matter of Law, the Court will consider of it, and assign you Council, if it be reasonable. For a Copy of the Jury, that you cannot have neither, for there is no such thing as yet; there is no Issue joined whereupon such a Jury should be impannelled. When you have pleaded to Issue, then we must award the Sheriff to impanel a Jury to try that Issue. So as to what you say as to want of Preparation for your Trial, we cannot enquire what Notice you have had; and yet if you had never so little Time, there is no Cause why you should not plead, though you were but just now taken and brought to the Bar to answer it, and never heard of any thing of it before. So that I think you ought to plead presently.

Colledge. My Lord, I am wholly ignorant of the Law, I may ruin myself by mistaking the Law; I desire Council, not to delay my Trial, but only to advise me, whether there is not something in Law proper for me to plead to this Indictment, and those things I alledged were not at all to delay the Trial, but only that I may not be wanting to myself in what I may by Law have.

L. C. J. I tell you, Council cannot be assigned you, till the Court be possessed of some Matter to grant it upon.

Colledge. I had some Papers, my Lord, that were taken from me, which I desire may be restored to me. I only plead, that I may have my Birth-right, and that which the Law gives me; if I may have Justice, I desire no more. Those Papers were taken from me in the House over the way since I was brought from the Prison; they were Papers that concerned my Defence; some Directions and Instructions how to manage myself in that Defence. If you please to let me have those Papers, I will not take up much of your Time; I desire to have but common Justice, and that which is my right by Law.

† See his Character, Ibid. 665.

L. C. J. That which you demand, Justice, you shall have by the Grace of God to the best of our Skill, without any Partiality in the World. But you must trust the publick Justice of the Kingdom. We are to be of Council for you, so far as to see that all Things proceed fairly on all Sides. And when Things come before us that are fit for you to have Council upon, you shall have Council assigned you; for we are tender of the Life of a Man, as well as of the Life of the King, and of the publick Justice of the Kingdom. But this is no Reason why you should not now plead. For the Papers you speak of, we will take an Examination of them afterwards. If they were Papers that are necessary for your Defence upon your Trial, in God's Name you must have them restored to you; but we know not which way you came by them, nor what they are.

Colledge. They were taken from me just now, under Pretence of bringing them to your Lordship.

L. C. J. How comes any body to give you Papers? No body can solicit for one that is under an Accusation of High-Treason, unless he be assigned so to do by the Court.

Colledge. God have Mercy upon any Man that is so accused then; for 'tis not possible for him to make his Defence, if he cannot be at Liberty to look after it himself, nor any of his Friends permitted to do it for him.

L. C. J. You can say, whether you are Not Guilty without any Papers.

Colledge. My Lord, I know not but there may be something in Law for me to plead to this Indictment, which I shall lose the Benefit of, if I plead. I humbly conceive, you are to be my Council; and as you are Judges, are to proceed according to the Law. You are upon your Oaths do me right according to the Law.

Mr. Just. Jones. But till you have proposed a Matter of Law fit for Council to argue, there is no Council to be assigned you.

Colledge. If I had those Papers I could tell what I should plead. My Lord, this is one Thing, I am a Freeman of London, and I am not impleadable by the Charter of London any where out of the Liberties of the City in Pleas of the Crown.

L. C. J. You are indicted in Oxfordshire for High-Treason committed here. If there be not any thing of High-Treason proved, done in Oxfordshire, you will be acquitted. But a Free-man of London cannot have a Privilege to commit Treason in Oxfordshire, but must be tried for it there.

Colledge. Will you please to order me my Papers back that were taken from me?

Mr. Just. Jones. You ought first to plead. You have a right to demand Council in Matters of Law, but then it must be upon such Matters of Law as you yourself propose to the Court, and the Court shall judge to be Matters of Law fit to be debated: Till then we cannot assign you Council.

Colledge. It was so in the Trial of Lilburne, and in the Trial of my Lord Stafford, there was Council assigned to them.

Mr. Just. Jones. Not before they pleaded to the Indictment.

Colledge. Did not your Lordships, some of you, that are Judges of the King's-Bench say, that it was the Right of the Prisoner, to have a Copy of the Pannel and of the Jury before the Trial?

Mr. Just. Jones. No sure: Here are two of us that are of the Court, and we never heard of any such thing.

Colledge. Pray, my Lord, do me Right, I am ignorant of the Law, and through my Ignorance may mistake.

L. C. J. God forbid we should not do you Right; you may expect it from us; we are upon our Oaths to do all the King's Subjects Right.

Colledge. I am ignorant in the Law, and 'tis impossible for me to make my Defence without the Assistance of my Papers.

L. C. J. Cannot you tell, whether you be Guilty or Not Guilty of this Treason?

Colledge. I can so; but I know not what Error I may run myself into, if I should plead presently, and lose the Benefit that the Law may give me.

L. C. J. All Matters of Law are saved to you after you have pleaded.

Colledge. Pray, my Lord, let me have my Papers again that were taken from me.

Cl. of Cr. You must plead to the Court, Guilty or Not Guilty.

Colledge. Shall I not have my Papers after I have pleaded?

L. C. J. We will not capitulate with you. Move what you will then; but till you have pleaded, we can enter into no other Business.

Colledge. I know not but I might plead some other thing to the Indictment.

Mr. Just. Jones. Propose what you will, if it be a Matter in Law fit to be argued, you shall have Council assigned you.

Colledge. Pray, my Lord, let me have my Papers again. If it were not my Right to have them, or to have Council, I would not ask it; but if it be, I would not lose what is my Right.

L. C. J. You must plead first. I know not but he may be a Criminal that brought you those Papers; for we allow no Solicitors in Cafes of Treason.

Colledge. Some of those Papers were received from me in the Tower, and were brought back to me, and taken away but to Day, I desire they may be returned.

Cl. of Cr. Are you Guilty or Not Guilty?

Colledge. Those Papers tell me I have a Plea in Law, but what it is, I cannot directly tell without my Papers.

L. C. J. You must mention it and propose it, and then we will do what is fitting for us to do in it.

Colledge. I have not that Method about me, nor can I directly tell it without my Papers; but 'tis something of Law about the Indictment.

L. C. J. You are not bound up to Forms of Law. For if you propose the Matter never so loosely, yet if it be a Matter of Avail, and that which the Law is not clearly against you in, you shall have Council, and Time to draw it up in Form.

Colledge. I cannot propose the Matter so regularly as if I had my Papers.

Mr. Just. Jones. You are not bound to propose it in Formality of Law, my Lord tells you; only let us know what it is.

Colledge. If I have a Privilege in Law, I hope you will give me the Benefit of it.

L. C. J. We will deny you nothing that the Law gives you; but we cannot give you Council. It is not one particular Case, but the common Course of Justice is concerned. Without a Matter of Law arises, we cannot assign you Council; if we would, we cannot in Justice till you have proposed the Matter which the Court thinks fit to be argued.

Colledge. My Lord Coke says, it is the Birth-right of every Englishman to have Council in Matters of Law, and Lilburne had it. Trial 45.

Mr. Just. Jones. What Times were those? That was before the High Court of Justice.

Mr. Att. Gen. If there be Matter in Law, it must be proposed to the Court, and they are to judge, whether it be a Point fit to be argued, and then Council is to be assigned you, and not till then.

Colledge. My Lord, I know not but there may be somewhat in Law for me to plead to this indictment, till I have my Papers I can't tell what it is.

L. C. J. We know nothing of your Papers what they are: you must answer whether you be Guilty or Not Guilty.

Colledge. If I had my Papers, I would answer to it immediately; but I hope I shall not be murdered.

Mr. Just. Jones. Have a care of aspersing the Court. Pray who intends to murder you?

Mr. Serj. Jeffries. I remember in Lilburne's Trial, that he speaks of, such words were used indeed.

Colledge. My Lord, I hope I shall not be denied what is necessary for my Defence. This Design is not only against me, but against all the Protestants.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long have you been a Protestant, Mr. Colledge?

Colledge. Ever since I knew what Religion was, Sir; I never was any thing else. For God's sake, my Lord, let me have the Justice of the Nation, and what by Law an Englishman ought to have.

L. C. J. You must plead Guilty or Not Guilty, or you must shew some Matter that you will plead, that is proper for us to assign you Council. If we should record your Refusal, you would be judged to stand Mute, and Sentence would pass upon you.

Colledge. If I have a Privilege in Law as an Englishman, I will not forfeit it, if I can help it, for any thing in the World. Therefore I desire I may have my Papers again, that I may see if I can plead any thing in Law, for if I have a Privilege by the Law, before I will forfeit it, you shall do what you please with me.

L. C. J. You'll have the Advantage of all that Matter that is in your Papers after you have pleaded, if there be any Advantage.

Colledge. Pray, my Lord, order me my Papers that were taken away from me.

L. C. J. They were not taken away by me.

Colledge. They were taken away by the Keeper, under Pretence to bring them to your Lordship.

L. C. J. I know not how you came by them. There came one to me last Night that is a common Solicitor, one Aaron Smith, and desired he might have Liberty to go and speak with the Prisoner; I told him, I did not understand till he were assigned by the Court, that any could justify soliciting for a Man that is accused of High-Treason, nor could any be of Council till they were assigned: For a Defence against Treason ought to be by plain Matters of Proof and Fact, and not by artificial Cavils. But if you will propose any thing of Substance as a Matter in Law which the Court shall think fit to be argued, propose it, and then we will assign you Council.

Colledge. Is it not my Right, that I ought to have a Copy of the Jury?

L. C. J. Look you for that now, you cited the Opinion of the Judges of the King's-Bench. My Brothers two of them that are here who are Judges in that Court, say, they know nothing of any such Matter: But I tell you, you have Liberty by Law to challenge 35, by your Sight peremptorily without shewing Cause. They are bound to look upon you when they come to be sworn, and if you have just Cause, you may except against as many more as you will. But now we that proceed upon a Commission of Goal-delivery, are to proceed with Expedition; there are no particular Men designed for a Jury that I know of. But when you have pleaded, we shall award the Sheriff to impanel a Jury.

Colledge. If the Law allows me the Liberty of Challenging, it does intend it me, that I may challenge those Persons that I think will not do me Justice; but where they are strangers unto me, if I can have no Information about any of them by my own Inquiry or my Friends, I may challenge my Friends as well as my Foes: And should there be any Person that has a Prejudice against me, and I not know it, he may chance to be one.

L. C. J. I hope they will be neither Friends nor Foes, but true Men.

Colledge. I know not that, my Lord.

Mr. Just. Jones. This that you say as to a Copy of the Jury is unreasonable. There is no Jury, nor can be awarded till you have pleaded. There must be first Issue joined; and that cannot be but upon your Plea of Not Guilty. Therefore you must plead first, and then say all you will.

Cl. of Cr. Are you Guilty or Not Guilty?

Colledge. My Lord, may not I have a Pannel of the Jury?

Mr. Just. Jones. There is no such thing in being.

Colledge. I know not what to say to it; pray, my Lord, let me have my Papers.

Cl. of Cr. You have heard the Opinion of the Court, you must first plead.

* This was very strange Treatment of the Prisoner, who had an Order of King and Council appointing him a Council and Solicitor, which is printed before the Trial.

he before
p. 339. But the order was not for council or solicitor.

Colledge

Vol. III.

Colledge. I cannot plead first: I must lose my Life, if I must; I neither know who accuses me, nor what it is they accuse me of; 'tis impossible I could defend myself if I have not my Papers.

L. C. J. We know not what Papers you mean.

Colledge. The Goaler took them from me, and one of the King's Messengers. Pray, my Lord, will you order them to be returned to me again? Let me but see whether I have any Right or no, and whether I have any Thing to plead or no: When I have perused my Papers, I will propose it as well as I can to you. Pray, my Lord let me have a fair Trial.

L. C. J. We promised you a fair Trial, but you must put yourself upon that Trial by your pleading.

Colledge. I cannot do that without my Papers, my Lord. Let me but have them again, and I will not delay your Time at all.

L. C. J. You can tell whether you are Guilty, or Not Guilty, can't you.

Colledge. If I have a Plea in Law against the Indictment, I hope you will not hinder me of that which is my Right. It is possible the Indictment does not lay it right, either as to the Matter of Treason, or as to the Place.

Mr. Just. Jones. That is upon the Issue of Not Guilty upon your Trial. If there be not Matter of Fact, or Words proved that are Treason in this Place, you will have the Advantage of it upon your Trial.

Colledge. I know not, my Lord, but that the Indictment does mention something of Treason, and something of Misdemeanour.

Mr. Just. Jones. That which is Misdemeanour, won't amount to a Proof of the Treason upon the Trial.

L. C. J. If they prove no Treason against you here, but only Misdemeanour, I do not understand that the Jury can find you Guilty of that Misdemeanour, for 'tis another Crime, and there is another sort of Proceedings for it. In Misdemeanour, there are no peremptory Challenges; in Misdemeanour Council is to be allowed for the Prisoner, but not in Treason.

Colledge. Pray, my Lord, be pleased to order me my Papers again: I know not what to say without I have the Assistance of my Papers; when I have them, I shall be ready to plead presently according as I shall find I may by Law. This I am sure, I have done nothing, nor said nothing of Treason, and I pray for nothing but Justice, and that which is my right. This is a most horrid Conspiracy to take away my Life; and it will not stop here, for it is against all the Protestants in England.

L. C. J. Mr. Colledge, you do not only trifle, but run out into very great Extravagancies. Who has any Conspiracy against your Life? You shall be allowed to give in Evidence any thing of any Conspiracy against you, or Contrivance against you when you are upon your Trial. Now the Question is, Are you Guilty, or not Guilty? I see no Use of Papers that you can have as to the Plea.

Mr. Just. Jones. You will run into Danger by spending of Time.

Colledge. Pray, my Lord, order me my Papers, they are in the Hands of Mr. Murrell the Goaler, and Sewell the King's Messenger.

L. C. J. When you have pleaded, we will take it into Consideration.

Colledge. It may be too late then.

L. C. J. 'Tis a plain Matter before you, whether you be Guilty or no. You know what to answer.

Colledge. I will give a direct Answer, after I have my Papers again.

Mr. Just. Jones. You can give an Answer to that without Papers.

L. C. J. Consult with your own Heart, and there you may receive an Answer to that Question.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Colledge, can any body tell whether you be guilty, or no, better than your self?

Mr. Just. Jones. If you expect any Papers, they ought to be framed by yourself; for by Law, none can advise you what to plead.

Colledge. I don't expect it in Matter of Fact, but if Matter of Law arise.

Mr. Just. Jones. But this is a Matter of Fact, and therefore you may plead Not Guilty, as well without your Papers, as if you had them.

Colledge. But if there be any Matter of Law, that I ought to have the Advantage of.

Mr. Just. Jones. Then you ought to have no Advice, till they be assigned by the Court: For by the Law, neither Council nor Advice are allowable to you, till the Matter has been proposed, and the Court think fit to assign you Council.

Mr. Just. Levinz. You talk of the Privilege of an Englishman; you have all the Privileges of an Englishman: You are here brought to an open Trial, according to the Law, and by that Law you must plead. Now if a Man be indicted for High-Treason, he is bound to plead either Guilty, or Not Guilty, unless he has a Matter in Law to excuse him from that Plea, which must be proposed to the Court, and then Council will be assigned; and if so be Matter of Law arises upon any Evidence that is given against you at the Trial, you may demur upon that Evidence, and pray Council of the Court to argue that Demurrer, and they will not deny you; but I think you must plead presently.

Colledge. I suppose other Persons that have been tried, have had Council before they have pleaded.

Mr. Just. Jones. But never before the Matter was proposed to the Court.

L. C. J. It was so in the Case of my Lord Stafford. The Court made him propose his Matters in Law, and so it was in Lilburne's Case. He did insist upon a great many Matters in Law, and had the Books there himself.

Colledge. I am wholly ignorant of the Law, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Your Lordships are the Judges of the Law in this Case. The Question here in short is, whether the Prisoner be Guilty or Not Guilty, and that being demanded of him by the Court, if he refuses, let him take the Consequence of it.

Colledge. What is that, pray, Sir George?

Mr. Att. Gen. Judgment of High-Treason. For if a Person stand mute, and will not plead to an Indictment of High-Treason, the common Judgment of pressing to Death must not pass upon him, but an Attainder of High-Treason.

Colledge. Well, if it be so, I cannot help it. I thank God, I am innocent of any Treason, or any such thing.

L. C. J. Why don't you plead Not Guilty, then?

VOL. III.

Colledge. I do not refuse to plead, I am willing to plead with all my Heart, if I may have my Right.

Mr. Just. Jones. If you do not plead, you refuse to plead.

Colledge. Pray, my Lord, let me have my Papers.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray give the Court an Account, where had you those Papers.

L. C. J. Nay, we will not enter into any Examination of that Matter now, Mr. Attorney; he can have no Use of Papers to see whether he should plead Guilty, or Not Guilty.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. We know nothing of those Papers, we desire that he may answer to the Question shortly, whether he be Guilty or Not Guilty; if not, we pray your Lordship's Judgment.

Colledge. I had them not all from one Person, they were received from my own Hands, some of them in the Tower; and being brought back to me, they were taken from me to Day; let me have but one of them: The Paper of Instructions in Point of Law, that I may know what is my Right: I would not throw away my Life, if I have any thing that is my Right that can preserve it.

L. C. J. You are to give a plain Answer, whether you are Guilty or Not Guilty, now for that you have no Use of Papers: For you can best tell whether you be Guilty or Not. If you can propose any Matter of Law that you can have to plead, do it.

Colledge. If I have any Plea; that I may plead besides Not Guilty, I desire I may have my Papers to consider of it, and that I may have Council assigned me.

L. C. J. If you have any such Plea; tell us the Matter and Substance of it.

Colledge. I do not know what really are Matters of Law; if I had those Instructions that are in my Papers, I could give you a direct Answer presently.

L. C. J. You ought not to have any Advice to decline your Trial: When you propose Matter of Law yourself, you may have advice upon it. But you ought not to have Advice to decline your Trial before-hand.

Cl. of Cr. Are you Guilty, or Not Guilty?

Colledge. Mr. Attorney, pray let me have a Copy of the Indictment.

Mr. Att. Gen. Apply yourself to the Court for it, we must receive our Directions from thence.

L. C. J. You have had the Opinion of the Court, you can't have it.

Mr. J. Levinz. You have been told nothing can be received from you; but a Plea of Guilty, or Not Guilty, and the Court have given you their Opinion, and that you cannot have a Copy of the Indictment, nor Council assigned you, till you offer something for them to be assigned upon.

L. C. J. And that was it which was done in the King's-Bench in the Case of Fitz-Harris, which I suppose you meant when you speak of the Judges Opinions.

Mr. Just. Jones. Nothing was done there till he himself assigned the Matter in Law that he would plead, and then Council was assigned him.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Mr. Colledge was in the Court at that Time, and can tell what was done.

L. C. J. If you desire the Indictment read over again distinctly, that you may have.

Mr. Att. Gen. Ay, with all my Heart.

Colledge. Pray let me hear it again, my Lord, if you please.

L. C. J. Read it over again to him, and read it distinctly.

Cl. of Cr. Thou art indicted by the Name of Stephen Colledge, late of Oxon, in the County of Oxon, Carpenter, as a false Traitor.

Colledge. I have observed one Thing already, my Lord, I pray I may have Pen and Ink.

L. C. J. Ay, give him Pen and Ink, let him make what Observations he can.

Then the Clerk read the Indictment through.

Clerk of Crown. Art thou Guilty of this High-Treason, or Not Guilty?

Colledge. This Indictment, if I understand it, says, there was a Plot and Conspiracy by me and others; now I know when my Lord Stafford was tried, they did proceed to prove, first, that there was such a Plot, and then that my Lord was guilty of it; first, that there was such a Conspiracy by the Papists, is it not requisite they should first prove such a Plot and Conspiracy there was, before they go to prove me guilty of it?

Mr. Just. Jones. What before you have pleaded?

L. C. J. When you have pleaded, the next thing is to try you, and to give the Evidence; but what Way the King's Council will take to manage your Trial, that we can't tell.

Mr. Just. Jones. But they are not to be directed by you, Mr. Colledge.

Colledge. It was so done, I say, in my Lord Stafford's Case.

L. C. J. He pleaded first, however, you have not yet pleaded.

Cl. of Cr. Are you Guilty or Not Guilty?

L. C. J. Do not trifle any longer, 'tis a plain Matter, and requires a very short and plain Answer.

Colledge. Your Lordships are my Council, as well as my Judges, and I do desire if I have any Right to plead any other Matter, you will be pleased to declare it to me, for I am ignorant in the Law.

Mr. Just. Jones. We have declared our Opinion already, that you have no Right to have any Solicitor or Council, till Matter of Law do arise.

Colledge. Is it your Lordships Opinion, that I have no Plea in Law?

Mr. Just. Jones. Have you no Plea in Law?

L. C. J. He would have our Judgment, whether there be any or no.

Mr. Just. Jones. You yourself know best; we know nothing you have to plead.

Colledge. I cannot, unless I have Council, and my Papers.

L. C. J. There does nothing appear to us.

Colledge. I know nothing of the Law.

L. C. J. Then plead Not Guilty, that is a ready Plea.

Mr. Just. Jones. You have had our Opinion over and over again. You have as much Council as is allowed in these Cases, for every Man is best Judge of his own Case, what to plead, whether Guilty or Not Guilty: You have had as fair Play as ever any Man had.

Mr. Att. Gen.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Colledge has said, he knows of no Plea in Law he has, and therefore there is none; for de non apparentibus & non existentibus, the Reason is the same.

L. C. J. In Matter of Fact, there is no Plea, but Not Guilty.

Coll. The Court are Judges in Matter of Law, and they are my Council. Mr. Just. Jones. And the Court have all of them declared, they know of nothing in Law that you have to plead.

Coll. Is not Council to be allowed to one under my Circumstances?

L. C. J. If you have any thing for Council to be assigned upon, you shall have them.

Coll. If I am ignorant of that, and cannot propose it, shall I not have the Assistance of Council?

Mr. Just. Jones. No, we have told you the Law plainly, and that which is frequent in Practice in like Cases, and you must be contented with the same Measure.

Coll. My Lord, I am ignorant of the Law.

L. C. J. Then rely upon the Fact, and plead Not Guilty.

Coll. But if I have a Right to any Point in Law let me have it.

Mr. Just. Jones. You have a Right if you will propose any Matter of Law, but we cannot propose it for you.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Colledge, no Man ought to propose your Plea for you; Ignorantia juris non excusat.

Coll. Shall my Ignorance destroy me, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Sol. Gen. You have heard the Opinion of the Court, you have a Right to propose any other Plea that you can yourself; but you have no Right to ask Council before you have pleaded.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. If Mr. Colledge have such a thing as a Solicitor, I shall crave leave to put that Solicitor in mind of the Case of one that was indicted of High-Treason.

Mr. Att. Gen. We shall talk of that by-and-by.

L. C. J. The same Methods are used in our Case, as are in all Cases of the like Nature, as far as my Knowledge reacheth.

Coll. If I have a Right to the Law, I must not lose it for my own Ignorance of the Law; but if you deny me both my Council and my Papers, you take away the Means of my coming to that Right, and make me incapable of making my Defence.

L. C. J. You have been told you must plead before you do any thing.

Coll. This is the Person (pointing to a Person by him) that had the Papers. Be pleased to command him, that I may have them again: He said, he had Orders to take them from me, and bring them to your Lordship.

L. C. J. I know of no Use you could have of any Papers, to plead Guilty or Not Guilty.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If there be in those Papers Advice in Matters of Law, that you have been told you ought not to have, till the Court has assigned you Council to give you Advice.

Coll. Then if there be a Right in Law, and a Privilege which I ought to have, I must lose it by my being ignorant of it, and have no one to advise me about it neither.

L. C. J. You may propose it, if you have any, if not, you must plead to the Indictment.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. My Lord, it has not been usual for us, that are of the King's Council, to enter into Dialogues with Prisoners at the Bar. The first thing that is to be done in such Cases, is for the Prisoner to plead Guilty or Not Guilty, or to offer something to the Court that may be a matter in Law fit to be debated; and this we pray may be done in this Case, and that the Prisoner may plead presently, or else we desire your Judgment.

Coll. Pray let me have my Papers again, my Lord.

L. C. J. You go in a Circle, and run round from one thing to another, and will receive no Answer. We have told you our Opinion, and we must tell you, though you hold long Discourses, yet you will be judged lost and mute, if you plead not a legal Plea: Therefore you must plead Guilty or not Guilty, or offer something that may be a Plea in Law, and then you shall have the Assistance of Council, but you must have none till then.

Coll. But shall I not have my Papers, my Lord?

L. C. J. We know nothing of them.

Coll. Pray, my Lord, order the Man to give them to me, that took them from me.

L. C. J. We will order no such thing. He may be a Criminal perhaps that did give them you at first; but when you have pleaded, we will hear any Motion you will make about them.

Coll. It may be I ought to plead, that Words were spoken in another Place than the Place laid in the Indictment.

L. C. J. You will not need to plead any such thing; for if there be nothing proved of Treason that you said or did in Oxfordshire, you must be found Not Guilty.

Coll. Here is another thing, my Lord, I am indicted by the Name of Colledge, Carpenter.

L. C. J. What then?

Coll. I am not a Carpenter, but a Joiner; is that any Bar to it?

L. C. J. The Addition signifies nothing, I do not know any Difference betwixt a Carpenter and a Joiner in Law.

Mr. Just. Jones. They might have indicted you by the Name of Labourer, and it had been good.

Coll. Pray, my Lord, either give me my Papers or assign me Council, or else I may throw away my Life, for I am wholly ignorant of the Law.

L. C. J. When you have pleaded, we will hear any Motion you will make, and do that which is just upon it; but I see no Use you can have of Papers to plead Guilty or Not Guilty, which is the only Question is asked you.

Cl. of Cr. Are you Guilty or Not Guilty?

Coll. Will you promise me, my Lord, there shall no Advantage be taken against me, if I do plead so?

L. C. J. We will make no Bargains with you. Plead as you ought by Law to do.

Coll. If Matters of Law arise, shall I have Council to speak to them?

Mr. Just. Jones. Yes, you shall, you need not doubt it. Propose any Matter now fit to be argued, and you shall have Council to it.

Coll. I am not capable of doing it. I know not when I have any Right.

Mr. Just. Jones. The Court is of Council to you.

Coll. If you are my Council, then have I any Plea in Law to make?

Mr. Just. Jones. You have heard the Indictment read, what say you? For you must propose the Matter.

L. C. J. We know of none but Guilty or Not Guilty; if you can tell any, do.

Coll. I pray I may have my Papers again; if there be no other Plea for me, pray let me have my Papers again.

L. C. J. You have heard the Opinion of the Court, you must plead.

Mr. Att. Gen. Certainly, Mr. Colledge, you can't be guilty of these things, you need not to scruple it, to plead Not Guilty, sure.

Coll. My Lord, having been kept a Prisoner, as I have been, without Pen, Ink, or Paper, no Conversation with my Friends, or Knowledge of the Fact, and being ignorant of the Law, not knowing where I have a Right, nor when I have a Right, if you do force me upon this Plea, and it cost me my Life, at your Doors lie it.

Mr. Just. Jones. You will lose your Life if you do not plead; if you plead Not Guilty, and are not proved Guilty, you will save your Life by this Plea.

Coll. I am willing to plead what the Law requires of me to plead, and if I have a Right in Law, I would not lose it.

Cl. of Cr. Are you Guilty or Not Guilty?

Coll. Why then as they have laid it in that Indictment, in Manner and Form as 'tis there laid, I am not Guilty.

Cl. of Cr. Culprit, by whom wilt thou be tried?

Coll. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Cr. God send thee a good Deliverance.

Mr. Just. Jones. Not Guilty is his Plea.

L. C. J. Now he has pleaded, Mr. Attorney; he speaks of some Papers, if there be any Memorandums, or any Thing that must assist him, that is necessary for his Defence in his Trial in those Papers, it will be hard to deny him them.

Mr. Att. Gen. If your Lordships please to give me Leave, I will give you an Account of them. The Messenger just now did deliver these Papers to be delivered to the Court.

Coll. Pray speak out, Mr. Attorney, and let me hear.

Mr. Att. Gen. When he came to Prison he had none, but Mr. Aaron Smith, the Messenger informed me, did deliver them to him.

L. C. J. Whose Hand-writing are the Papers in?

Coll. He received them from me in the Tower.

Mr. Just. Jones. You received them from him first.

Coll. No.

Mr. Att. Gen. What were the Papers you delivered to him in the Tower.

Coll. The three Pieces joined together that contains Directions how to govern myself; there is another to the same Purpose, which instructs me to demand a Copy of the Indictment, and of the Pannel of the Jury, and those were Instructions to tell me what the Law allows me.

Mr. Att. Gen. Here is a Speech made for you that begins thus; Before you speak, speak to this Purpose. Pray, my Lord, I desire that may be examined, and Mr. Smith may be called to give an account how he came to give the Prisoner those Papers; for here are Abundance of Niceties proposed for him to move, and there will be a strange Sort of Proceedings at this rate, if Men go about to espouse the Cause of Traitors.

Coll. I am no Traitor, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Att. Gen. You stand indicted of High-Treason.

Coll. That is by a Grand Jury made up that Morning, as I am informed.

Mr. Att. Gen. Here is a List of the Names of several Men of the County returned to be of the Jury, and particular Marks set upon them, who are good Men, and who bad Men, and who moderate Men.

Coll. Ought I not to have that Paper, my Lord?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, I hope not.

L. C. J. Whether they are material, or not material, if we should judge them not material for his Defence, yet it would look like an hard Point upon the Prisoner; and to deliver them into an Hand that they may be carried away or stifled, in case there were a Crime in the delivering of them, that would not do well on the other Side: Therefore I would have these Papers put into some safe Hands, that what may be for the Prisoner's Use he may not want, and yet they may not be taken away, if there be Occasion to use them upon another Account.

Mr. Att. Gen. But if it please your Lordship, I desire you would enter into the Examination of this Matter; for I have an Account from London by a special Messenger, that there are several Persons go up and down to procure Witnesses against the King's Evidence, making it a publick Cause; and here, my Lord, is another Paper which is a List of Men as Witnesses picked up together against the King's Witnesses.

L. C. J. He must have that, deliver him that presently.

Mr. Att. Gen. But, my Lords, others have gone about and framed Witnesses for him.

L. C. J. You must give him the List of his Witnesses, for I see not what Use you can make of it.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. This no Man will oppose sure, if any Thing that is delivered to him be fit to be delivered, the Person that delivers it must count and own it; but before any Person delivers any Papers to the Prisoner, let him make use of against the King's Evidence, we desire to know what those Papers mean, and who gave them.

L. C. J. Look you, Brother, we will have nothing of Heat till the Trial be over, when that is over, if there be any Thing that requires our Examination, it will be proper for us to enter into the Consideration of it. But in the mean while what hurt is there, if the Papers be put into some trusty Hands, that the Prisoner may make the best Use of them he can, and yet they remain ready to be produced upon Occasion: If a Man be speaking for his Life, though he speak that which is not material, or nothing to the Purpose, there will be no harm to permit that.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. With Submission, my Lord, that is assigning him Council with a Witness.

Mr. Att. Gen.

Chief Just

Mr. Att. Gen. If People are permitted to go up and down and ask Council of Persons, and bring it in Papers to the Prisoner, 'tis the same Thing as if Council came to him. Here is a busy Solicitor, and he gets Advice from Council, and then he delivers it to the Prisoner; 'tis the first of that Kind certainly that ever was allowed; and if this be not to assign him Council, I know not what is.

L. C. J. What think you of our perusing the Papers?

Mr. Att. Gen. With all my Heart, my Lord.

Coll. If you take away all Helps from me, you had as good condemn me without a Trial.

Mr. Att. Gen. You ought not to have Helps to plead Dilatories.

Coll. Not to help me to my right in Law?

Mr. Att. Gen. We are to go upon the Fact now: And, my Lord, I pray your Judgment about them, when you have perused them.

Then the Judges looked upon that Paper that was called the Speech.

L. C. J. We have read enough of this to suppress it, and to examine how this came to his Hands.

Mr. Just. Jones. Where is Aaron Smith?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, here is another that is worse than that, charging the Justice of the Nation. Pray call Mr. Aaron Smith, and Mr. Henry Starkey.

Mr. Smith appeared.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Smith, did you deliver these two Papers to the Prisoner?

Mr. Smith. Does any Body accuse me that I did?

Mr. Att. Gen. You are accused of it.

Mr. Smith. I desire Proof may be made against me.

Mr. Att. Gen. That will be done.

L. C. J. Look you, we will not interrupt the Trial with it. Mr. Smith must be taken into safe Custody, only to secure him till we can examine it, not as charged with any Crime, but only that he may be forth-coming to be examined.

Mr. Att. Gen. You do not make a direct Answer, Mr. Smith, in the Case, it will be proved upon you.

Mr. Smith. Mr. Attorney, I know not what Answer to make better than I have given; our Law says no Man is bound to accuse himself.

Mr. Att. Gen. But our Law says, you shall be examined.

Mr. Smith. I come to give no Informations here, Mr. Attorney; if I did I should be then examined.

Mr. Att. Gen. Here are Instructions given to the Prisoner, they say you gave them.

Mr. Smith. I desire to have it proved.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, you will take a Recognizance of Mr. Smith, to be forth-coming during this Sessions.

Mr. Smith. I will not depart, my Lord, I assure you; and I hope Mr. Attorney will take my Word.

Mr. Att. Gen. Indeed I will not, Mr. Smith, because you have broken it with me already; when I gave you leave to go to the Prison, I did not think you would have abused that Kindness, to give him Papers.

L. C. J. Well, take His Recognizance.

Mr. Smith. 'Tis high Time to have a care, when our Lives and Estates, and all are beset here.

L. C. J. What do you mean by that, Mr. Smith?

Mr. Smith. I said it not, meaning by it the Court, for I declare I abhor that Expression to be so interpreted, that I reflected upon the Court.

L. C. J. Why do you use such loose Expressions then, Mr. Smith?

Mr. Smith. Because I have been threatened since I came to Town, though I have not spoke one Word in any publick Company since I came.

Mr. Just. Jones. It seems you will reflect here in the Face of the Court, and in the Face of the Country, upon the Government, upon the Justice of the Kingdom.

Mr. Smith. No, my Lord, I have told you what I meant by it; I neither reflected upon the Court, nor upon the Government, nor upon the Justice of the Kingdom.

L. C. J. You should have done well to have forborn such Expressions as those were.

Coll. Shall I not have the Use of my Papers, my Lord: Will you not please to deliver them back to me now you have perused them?

Mr. Just. Jones. One of them is a Speech, and a most seditious libellous Speech, to spit Venom upon the Government in the Face of the Country. We cannot tell who made it, but it seems to be beyond your Capacity; and therefore we must enquire into it: But we do not think fit to let you have the use of that Paper.

L. C. J. For that which contains the Names of the Witnesses, that you have again: For the other Matters, the Instructions in Point of Law, if they had been written in the first Person, in your own Name, that we might believe it was your writing, it would have been something; but when it is written in the second Person, you should do so and so, by which it appears to be written by another Person, it is an ill Precedent to permit such Things; that were to give you Council in an indirect Way, which the Law gives you not directly.

Coll. If I am ignorant what Questions to ask of the Witnesses, shall not my Friends help me, my Lord?

L. C. J. We will sift out the Truth as well as we can, you need not fear it.

Coll. Some of those Things I took out of the Books myself: And if you are resolved to take away all my Helps, I cannot help it; I know not that Mr. Smith wrote one of those Papers.

Mr. Att. Gen. But Mr. Smith would have given four Guineas, it seems, as a Bribe, to the Goaler, and he offered four more to let him have the Liberty to come to him.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. 'Tis Time indeed for Mr. Smith to have a care.

Keeper. It was Mr. Starkey that offered me the four Guineas.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray call Mr. Henry Starkey.

(But he did not appear)

Then the Court took a Recognizance of 100l. of Mr. Smith to attend the Court during the Session.

Coll. Pray, my Lord, let me have my Papers delivered to me, I cannot make my Defence else.

L. C. J. We are your Council in Matter of Fact, and to give you your Papers were to assign you Council against Law, they being not your own Papers, but coming from a third Hand.

Coll. Will you please to give me the Paper that has the Questions in it, to ask the Witnesses?

L. C. J. There are no Papers with any particular Questions to any one Witness, but only Instructions how to carry yourself in this Case.

Coll. A great deal of it is my own, my Lord.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, truly I think, that which does not contain Matter of Scandal, may be transcribed and given to the Prisoner.

Coll. My Lord, I desire I may have that, that has in the Margin of it, the Cases of Lilburne and Stafford.

Mr. Just. Jones. You shall not have the Instructions to scandalize the Government, all that is necessary for your Defence, you shall have.

L. C. J. If he had writ it himself I cannot well see how you could take it from him; and truly as 'tis, I had rather let him have too much than too little.

Coll. My Lord, I thought I might have had Council to have assisted me, but if I may have Council neither before my Plea nor after, I that am an Ignorant may be lost by it, but can't help it.

L. C. J. If Matter of Law arise, you shall have Council to it.

Coll. I know not but it might have admitted of an Argument, that which, if I had had my Papers, I should have offered to you.

L. C. J. Mr. Colledge, we shall not go any farther now, I know not how many Witnesses will be produced either of one Side or another, but 'tis too late to go on this Morning, and because we attend here only upon this occasion, we shall go on with the Trial at two o'Clock in the Afternoon.

Coll. My Lord, will you be pleased to order the Papers for me to peruse in the mean Time.

L. C. J. We have ordered that you shall have a Transcript of the Paper of Instructions, leaving out that which is scandalous.

Coll. I desire I may have a Copy of the Whole.

Mr. Just. Jones. No, we do not think fit to do that.

Coll. Pray let me know which you do except against.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Attorney, I think we may let him have a Copy of the Whole.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, before you rise, I desire you would be pleased to take the Examination of Mr. Gregory about Mr. Starkey.

L. C. J. Swear him. (Which was done.)

Mr. Att. Gen. What do you know concerning Mr. Starkey, and what did he offer you?

Gregory. When they came by your Lordship's Permission to Mr. Colledge, they brought some Papers which they delivered to him: And afterwards Mr. Starkey took me aside, and told me, it was hard Usage that the Prisoner could not have his Council permitted to come to him: Do him what Favour you can, and I shall not be ungrateful; so he clapped four Guineas in my Hand, but I immediately laid them down upon the Table, and would not take them.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I desire you would please to send for Mr. Starkey.

L. C. J. Let him be sent for.

Cl. of Cr. You must go and take up Mr. Starkey.

Messenger. Must I keep him in Custody? I don't know him.

Cl. of Cr. No, you must order him from the Court to attend here.

Mr. Just. Jones. These Papers Colledge shall not be debarred of for his Defence, nor you Mr. Attorney from prosecuting upon them.

L. C. J. No, we will put them into such Hands as shall take care of that.

Coll. Very few, my Lord, have appeared to do me any Kindness, some have been frightened and imprisoned, others are now in Trouble for it.

L. C. J. Well, you shall have the use of your Papers.

Coll. May I have any Friends come to see me in the mean Time?

L. C. J. They must not come to you in the Prison, to give you Advice; but I'll tell you, since you move it, if my Brothers think it convenient, whilst the Court does withdraw, any Body of your Friends may come to you, in the Presence of your Keeper.

Mr. Just. Jones. Certainly you cannot think you can give a Privilege to any Friends of your's, to commit any Misdemeanor to offer Bribes to any Person.

Coll. I know not of any such Thing.

Mr. Just. Jones. We do not charge you with it, but Mr. Starkey did.

Coll. I have been kept a strict close Prisoner, and if my Friends are so kind to me, as to help me in order to my Defence, I hope you will not be against it. Pray, my Lord, let me have my Papers.

L. C. J. You shall have them, but they shall be put into such Hands as the Court may have command over; they shall be in the Sheriff's Son's Hands, and you shall have the immediate use of them.

Coll. If there be any Thing else in those Papers necessary for my Defence, I pray I may have it.

L. C. J. The Speech is not fit for you; what other Papers would you have?

Coll. Another Paper there is, that is something of Law.

Mr. Just. Jones. Nothing but libellous, and what is a Scandal to the Government.

Mr. Att. Gen. You are to have nothing of Matter of Law, but what you are to propose yourself.

Coll. If you take away all my Helps, I cannot propose any Thing.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. To allow you those Papers, is to allow you Council by a side Wind.

L. C. J. Look you, the Papers of Instructions shall be delivered to the Sheriff's Son, who shall let you peruse it in this Interval, and make use of it in your Trial; but it must be in safe Custody to be used upon further Occasion, as the King's Attorney shall think fit.

Then the Court adjourned till two in the Afternoon.

Post meridiem, At two o'Clock the Court returned, and Proclamation was made for Attendance, and for the Under-Sheriff to return his Jury.

Coll. My Lord, ought not I to have a Copy of this Jury?

L. C. J. No. * They are to look upon you as they come to be sworn, and then you are to challenge them.

* Chief Justice Pemberton said in Lord Russell's Case, p. 630. it was never denied in Case of Life, that he knew of, it was allowed to Count Coningsmark, Vol. III. p. 465.

Cl. of Cr. Stephen Colledge, hold up thy Hand, and hearken to the Court; those good Men that you shall hear called, and personally appear, are to pass, &c.

Coll. Pray Sir, let the Way be clear, that I may see them.

Cl. of Cr. Ay, ay.

Coll. Pray Sir, how many are there of the Jury that appear?

Mr. Att. Gen. There are enough.

Cl. of Cr. Make Proclamation for Information, (which was done.)

Cl. of Cr. Henry Standard, (who was sworn,) Richard Croke, (who was challenged by the Prisoner,) William Bigg, (challenged.)

Mr. J. Jones. Do you challenge him Peremptorily, or with Cause?

L. C. J. If he do not shew Cause, it must be supposed it is Peremptory.

Coll. I suppose he was upon the Grand Jury.

L. C. J. That would be a Challenge with Cause.

Mr. Bigg. No, I was not.

Coll. Then I do not challenge him; I know him not. (He was sworn.)

Cl. of Cr. Thomas Marsh, (challenged,) Thomas Martin, (did not appear,) Gabriel Merry, (being almost an hundred Years of Age, was excused,) Robert Bird, (sworn,) John Shorter, (sworn,) William Windlow, (sworn,) Edward Ayres, (challenged,) William Ayres, (challenged,) and Richard Ayres, (challenged,) Charles Hobbs, (sworn,) Roger Browne, (sworn,) Timothy Doyley, (sworn,) Richard Dutton, (challenged,) Ralph Wallis, (sworn,) John Nash, (challenged,) John Benson, (sworn,) John Piercy, (sworn,) William Web, (challenged,) and John Lawrence, (sworn.)

They were counted, and their Names in Order thus.

Henry Standard ,	William Windlow ,	Ralph Wallis ,
William Bigg ,	Charles Hobbs ,	John Benson ,
Robert Bird ,	Roger Browne ,	John Piercy ,
John Shorter ,	Timothy Doyley ,	John Lawrence .

L. C. J. Mr. Sheriff, there are a great many of the Jury that are not sworn, they are discharged, let them go out of the Court, and so you will make room for the Witnesses.

Cl. of Cr. Gentlemen, you of the Jury, look upon the Prisoner, and hearken to his Charge. He stands indicted by the Name of Stephen Colledge, late of Oxford, in the County of Oxford, Carpenter; for that he as a false Traitor, &c. prout in the Indictment, Mutatis Mutandis, and upon this Indictment he hath been arraigned, &c.

Mr. North. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen, that are sworn, this is an Indictment against Stephen Colledge, the Prisoner at the Bar, for an Endeavour to raise a Rebellion within this Kingdom, wherein he is accused, and the Jury find that he as a false Traitor, against the King's Majesty, contrary to the Duty of his Allegiance, on the 10th of March, in the 33d Year of the King's Reign, at Oxon here did traiterously conspire, and compass the Death of the King, and the Subversion of the Government, and to raise a Rebellion in the Kingdom, and to slaughter his Majesty's Subjects, to put the King to Death, to levy War against him, and to deprive him of his Royal State and Government, and to alter the Government at his own Will and Pleasure; and to accomplish this, he did at Oxon here prepare Arms for the carrying on the War, and excited one Edward Turberville and others, to arm themselves against the Accomplishment of this Design (and did declare his Purpose was to seize the King's Person at Oxon, and that he was one of those that was to do it; and to bring the said Turberville and other Subjects to his Purpose, did falsely, maliciously, and traiterously declare in their hearing, That there was no good to be expected from the King, that he minded nothing but the Destruction of his People, and arbitrary Government, and to introduce Popery. And this is laid to be against the Duty of his Allegiance, against the King's Peace, and against the Form of the Statutes in those Cases made and provided. The Prisoner, you hear, upon his Arraignment hath pleaded Not Guilty, which Issue you are to try, and if the Evidence for the King, which are ready to be produced, prove that which is laid to his Charge, you are to find it accordingly.

Mr. Att. Gen. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; The Prisoner at the Bar stands indicted of a very high Crime, no less than High-Treason, and that too of the deepest Dye; it is for an Endeavour to destroy the King, to subvert the Government, to raise a Rebellion among the King's Subjects. And, Gentlemen, these Instances that we shall give you, and produce our Evidence to, for the Proof of that, are these: He laid his Design to seize the King at Oxon; and he did not want his Accomplices to do it; but they were not Men, Gentlemen, that were Protestants, but Men that were Rebels in the late war, they were Men of such a Kidney, that he associated himself with, and these were the Persons that were to assist in this Attempt. In Order to this he had prepared Arms in an extraordinary Manner, Arms of a great Value, for one of his Condition, who is by Trade a Joiner; for if a true Estimate were taken of the value of the Arms, I believe they were worth twice his whole Estate; he prepared a good Horse, extraordinary Pistols, a Carbine, a Coat of Mail, an Head-piece; and so being armed Cap-a-pee, with that Design he came hither to Oxon. And you will judge whether these be fit Tools for a Joiner.

Coll. I beseech you, Sir, have you any body to prove this? If you have not, you do hurt to the Jury as well as me, to speak it.

L. C. J. Be patient, Mr. Colledge, and let Mr. Attorney go on to open the Charge. I will tell you and the Jury too, that what he says further than he makes good by Proof and Witnesses, will serve for nothing.

Coll. 'Tis hard the Council should plead against me, and open Things that he cannot prove.

L. C. J. I will do you all the Right imaginable, and therefore I do tell you again, if they do not prove it, all he says is nothing.

Coll. But I beseech you, my Lord, since there hath been such extraordinary Means and Methods used to contrive my Death, that the Witnesses may be examined apart, and far from the hearing of one another.

L. C. J. That we will take care of by and by.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Colledge, this shews your Temper, you are inordinate in your way of expressing yourself.

Coll. Mr. Attorney, I should not interrupt you, if I were not afraid this was spoken to prepossess the Jury.

Mr. Att. Gen. I hope to prove what I have said; or every Word of it shall pass for nothing.

Coll. 'Tis impossible for all the Men on Earth to prove it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Gentlemen, These were the Particulars I was opening to you, in what manner he was armed, and how accoutred he came hither. We shall likewise shew you that he made it his Business to persuade others to undertake the Design, and join with him, as if open War was already declared; he gave out a Sign, which was a blue Ribbon, a wrought Ribbon with Letters in it, and this was the Mark and Sign they were to know one another by. This was given out by him frequently; and that it may not seem an extraordinary Thing, Gentlemen, though indeed it was a wild Attempt, yet you will cease to wonder when you have heard of the Exploits of Venner, who with a few Men raised such a Commotion, soon after the King's coming in, and the several Exploits that have of late in Scotland been carried on by a few discontented Persons. So that Men of the like Principles, as we shall give you an account of this Gentleman's Principles what they were, may well be thought to engage in such an extraordinary Exploit. And we shall prove what the Encouragement was he was to have; for he boasted of himself, that he should be in a little Time a Colonel.

Coll. What, Sir?

Mr. Att. Gen. A Colonel, a great Preferment for a Joiner.

Coll. Yes, it was so.

Mr. Att. Gen. We shall shew to you that this was not a sudden unpremeditated Thing; for we shall prove that he had entertained the horrid Malice against the King, that ever Subject entertained against his Sovereign: For we shall give this Evidence, and his Front will not oppose it, that he had made it his common Discourse in Coffee Houses, and Public-Houses, (and I believe I could bring you 40 and 40 Witnesses to it) to defame the King, and murder him in his Reputation, and was one of the Accomplices with Fitz-Harris, who was lately executed for that venomous Libel: We shall prove that he justified it, and maintained it to be as true as the Gospel. We shall give Evidence that he carried on the same Design with that Arch-Traitor who was a Papist; and I believe if this Gentleman were examined thoroughly, he would be found to be one of the same Stamp, and acted by the same Principle; for I think that no Protestant Subject would attempt such Things as we shall prove to you. I believe, Gentlemen, you have frequently heard, as none of us but have, that the King has been traduced as a Designer of arbitrary Government, and his Reputation blasted maliciously and falsely, as an Introducer of Popery: Whence comes all this generally, but out of the Popish Quiver; who make it their Business to set the King's good Subjects at Variance amongst themselves, and against their Prince, by styling the King a Papist, as this Prisoner hath done; nay, he hath been so impudent as to report that the King was in the Plot against his own Life. We shall prove to you, how here and at other Places he hath frequently done this; to go further, we shall produce to you the Evidence that he drew the King's Picture, and exposed him in all the reproachful Characters imaginable, and that the Picture might be the better understood, he adds a Ballad to it: and that he may not have the Confidence to say this is not true, we shall produce to you a whole Bundle of these Papers, among those which his Son made a Discovery of, when they were sent to his Uncle to be hid, and we shall prove him to be the Author of them; and yet this Man should have the Confidence to say he is a good Subject, and a good Protestant, when by all Ways imaginable he goes about to ruin the Government and defame the King? And Gentlemen, when we have given this Account by Witnesses, for I would have you believe me in nothing, but according as I prove it, you will not wonder then that he should say his Life was in Danger, (for so it is indeed?) And if any Man ever was Guilty of High-Treason, sure he is, and being Guilty of the greatest Treason, he deserves the greatest Punishment.

Coll. Pray, Gentlemen of the Jury, take Mr. Attorney General at his Word, and remember, Sir, you desire not to be believed yourself, but what you prove.

Mr. Serj. Holloway. May it please your Lordship, and Gentlemen, pursuant to what Mr. Attorney hath opened, we will call our Witnesses, and we will begin with Mr. Dugdale, who was a Witness against my Lord Stafford, at his Trial in Parliament, whose Credit Mr. Colledge did attest at that Trial, asserting him to be an honest good Man, and I believe his Evidence will go in a good Measure through all that Mr. Attorney hath opened, and when we have done with him, we hope to second him with other Witnesses of as good Credit, and that will say as much to the Purpose.

Then Mr. Dugdale was sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Dugdale, look upon the Prisoner, and tell the Court whether you know him.

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, I do know him, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Will you give us an Account of your Knowledge of him?

Coll. My Lord, I humbly desire they may be examined a-part, and not in the hearing of one another.

Mr. Att. Gen. That, with Submission, ought not to be in the King's Case, though we think there are none of them that will speak any more than the Truth.

Coll. Here are several of them, my Lord, they are all of a Gang.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Not of your Gang, Mr. Colledge.

Coll. I pray they may go out, my Lord, (which was ordered accordingly.)

Mr. Dugdale. If your Lordships, please, whether or no I may deliver in these Papers?

Mr. Att. Gen. By and by, Time enough, when we ask for them; speak your own Knowledge.

Mr. Dugdale. My Lord, I have been, I think, acquainted with Mr. Colledge two Years or thereabouts. I have been several Times in Mr. Colledge's Company, and truly sometimes he hath been mightily bent against Popery; he hath at some Times uttered himself, because the King did not prosecute the Papists according as he thought sufficiently, that the King was a Papist himself, that he was as deep in the Plot as any Papist of them.

them all, that he had an Hand in Sir Edmundbury Godfrey's Death. This, Mr. Colledge, I appeal to yourself, whether you have not said it; And in this Town of Oxford you have several times told me, that nothing was to be expected from him, he would do nothing.

Mr. Just. Levinz. Who did tell you so?

Mr. Dugdale. Mr. Colledge did tell me, that there was nothing to be expected from the King but the introducing of Popery and arbitrary Government; this I believe Mr. Colledge will acknowledge to be true.

Colledge. Where was this spoken?

Mr. Dugdale. This was spoken at a Coffee-House called Combe's Coffee-House in this Town, and at the Angel-Inn in this Town at a Barber's Shop; that Day the King went out of Town, we were in the same Shop.

Colledge. Who was there besides?

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Do not interrupt our Witnesses, let us have done with him, and you shall have your Time to ask him Questions after.

L. C. J. For your Instruction I will tell you, your Time is not yet come, if you chop in and interrupt the Witnesses, you will disturb any Man living; but your Way is this, When he hath delivered his Testimony, ask him any Questions then; and he shall be bound to answer you, and in the mean time you shall have Pen, Ink and Paper, to help your Memory.

Mr. Dugdale. That Day the King went out of Town, presently after he went, you and I went into the Angel-Inn; and we went into the Barber's Shop that is just within the Inn, and being charging your Pistols there, you said Rowley was gone, the Rogue was afraid of himself, he was shirked away, and here I appeal to your own Conscience, whether you did not speak of it.

Colledge. I know nothing of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Don't appeal to him, 'tis nothing for that.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who did he mean by Rowley?

Mr. Dugdale. The King.

Mr. Serj. Holloway. Was that his common Appellation for the King?

Mr. Dugdale. It was his common Word concerning the King. And at other Times speaking that the King did not do those Things that were fair, he hath given mighty great Words against him: He hath told me, that there was no Trust to be put in him; for it was the People we must trust to, and we must look to arm ourselves, and that he would arm himself, and be here at Oxford; and he told me here in the Town accordingly when I came out of the Country, and he said that he had several stout Men that would stand by him in it. Their Intention was, as he said, for the rooting out of Popery, by which Name he always termed the Church that is now established by Law, as to be of the same Nature the Papists were. This I believe Mr. Colledge will acknowledge.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, go on, Sir.

Mr. Dugdale. And at a Time when he had Dr. Tongue at his House, he told me, that as for Dr. Tongue, he had much ado with him, and he had been at a great Charge to keep him in Order, that he was forced to neglect his own Business to look after him; for if he had not done so, the Rogue, as he said, had a mind to sling all upon the Protestants, that is, the Dissenters, for he does not count the Church of England to be so; that he had much ado to keep him in Order; for he had said he had drawn Papers for that Purpose, but those Papers are secured, for where they are I can't tell.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who were they that were to be with him in that Design of his?

Mr. Dugdale. He told me, Captain Clinton, Captain Brown, and one Doctor Lewes, and he brought them into Town here, when he came with him.

Mr. Att. Gen. To what Purpose did he bring them?

Mr. Dugdale. Expecting there would be a Rising.

Mr. Just. Jones. Did he tell you that here?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, the Friday, I think it was, after the first Parliament sat.

Mr. Just. Jones. How did he express himself what they had to do?

Mr. Dugdale. They were to be here, in case there were any Rising, which he expected.

Mr. Just. Jones. What Use did he say he would make of them?

Mr. Dugdale. For the Defence of the Protestant Religion, against the King and all his Adherents.

Mr. Just. Jones. What did he say he would do to the King? I would not lead you.

Mr. Dugdale. He did not say what particularly.

Mr. Just. Jones. What did he say, if the King did not yield to the Parliament?

Mr. Dugdale. If the King did not yield to the Parliament, he should be forced to it.

Mr. Just. Jones. Where did you hear him say that?

Mr. Dugdale. At Oxford.

Mr. Serj. Holloway. Did you hear him declare this at London?

Mr. Dugdale. He did say at London, he expected there would be something done at Oxford, and that he would go thither with his Horse and Arms, and those Gentlemen I named before would go with him. And he said, let them begin when they would, he did not care how soon, his Party was the greatest Party.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was that Captain Brown? Did you know him?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, I knew him very well; he did much frequent Mr. Colledge's Company; he was in the late Army against the King.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did you see him have any Pistols?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, I have seen him carry Pistols about him.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Where, in his Pocket?

Mr. Dugdale. I saw them in the House.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. At Oxford?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Holloway. Did you see them in his Hand?

Mr. Dugdale. I cannot tell that, he had them in the House, I saw them there.

Mr. Serj. Holloway. Did you see him in his Silk Armour about the Parliament-House, the Lobby, or any Place?

Mr. Dugdale. I cannot say that.

VOL. III.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did you know of his delivering any Marks or Signs for Persons to be distinguished by?

Mr. Dugdale. I had as much Ribband from him as came to 40s. with No Popery, No Slavery, wrought in it; and he gave it me to distribute among my Friends in the Country, that they might be known by other Persons that would wear the same.

Mr. Just. Jones. Where had you it?

Mr. Dugdale. At London, from Mr. Colledge.

Mr. Just. Jones. Where was it to be distributed?

Mr. Dugdale. Among those that I knew to be Dissenters in the Country.

Mr. Just. Jones. Were you to come to Oxford, by Agreement, with Mr. Colledge?

Mr. Dugdale. I promised him to come to Oxford, and did so.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, go on. What more do you know?

Mr. Dugdale. At London, I was once at a Coffee-house with Mr. Colledge, and with some of the Members of the House of Commons; it was a little before they met; and they were earnestly talking of the Parliament at Oxford, and of some Disturbance that was likely to happen here. And it was then fully agreed, and Mr. Colledge was by, That it would be the best Way, out of every Country, where the Parliament had the best Interest in the People, to leave one in every County that might manage the People. This I appeal to Mr. Colledge, whether it be true.

Colledge. You appeal to me, shall I speak now, my Lord?

Mr. Just. Jones. No, you will remember it by and by.

Mr. Att. Gen. What do know of any Pictures?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray let him speak that over again which he mentioned last.

Mr. Dugdale. Being in a Coffee-house with Mr. Colledge, there were some of the Members of the House of Commons by; and speaking of a Disturbance that might happen here at Oxford, it was then agreed, That in every Quarter where the Parliament had the most Interest in the People, they should not all come up, but some remain there to manage the People.

Mr. Att. Gen. What do you know of any Pictures or Papers, have you any about you?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, I have one thing I received from Mr. Colledge, that is, the Letter pretended to be intercepted to Roger L'Estrange.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, what Account did he give you of it? Who made it?

Mr. Dugdale. He told me he was the Author of it himself, and he shewed me it in Manuscript before it was printed; and he told me, he got one Curtis, or his Wife, to print it; but he would never trust them again, for they cheated him of some of the Gain.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who was the Author, did he say?

Mr. Dugdale. He himself.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray produce it, Sir.

Mr. Dugdale. This and others he delivered to me to disperse.

L. C. J. What is it, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. It is a Letter, and a great Part of Fitz-Harris's Libel is taken out; it seems Colledge was the Author, and this is the Original of the Libel.

L. C. J. Did he tell you, this was of his own making?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he disperse them to any Body else?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, there was some given to one Mr. Boson, he had some at the same Time, and Mr. Baldwin had some.

Then the Paper was read.

Cl. of Crown. First Q. Whether they that talk—

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray give my Lord an Account what more Papers and Libels he delivered to you.

Mr. Dugdale. I received one like this, I cannot say it was the same, where all the Bishops were changing their Hats for Cardinals Caps.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Where is Rary Shew, for it seems he hath expounded the Meaning of that?

(Then it was produced.)

Mr. Serj. Jeff. I suppose 'tis his own cutting too.

Mr. Dugdale. I heard Mr. Colledge sing it.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Where?

Mr. Dugdale. In Oxfordshire, and in Oxford-Town, at my Lord Lovelace's?

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Where, at my Lord Lovelace's?

Mr. Dugdale. At his House in the Country.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Who were in the Company there?

Mr. Dugdale. Sir Robert Clayton, Sir Thomas Player, Mr. Rouse, Mr. Colledge.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. You say you heard him in Oxford, and in Oxfordshire, and at my Lord Lovelace's, where is that?

L. C. J. My Lord Lovelace is here himself, and hears what he says.

Mr. Dugdale. I might mistake the County, but I heard him sing it at Oxford Town, and at my Lord Lovelace's House again.

L. C. J. Where is that?

Mr. Dugdale. I cannot tell the Town.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. How came you there?

Mr. Dugdale. Sir Thomas Player did invite me thither.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Where is it in Oxfordshire?

Mr. Dugdale. I cannot tell, 'tis four Miles from Henley.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Was my Lord at home?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, he was.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Now for the Cut, then; Did he shew you this Cut?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, he told me he would get it printed.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Was it before it was printed then that he sung it?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, it was.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Who did he tell you did make it?

Mr. Dugdale. He told me he was the Author of this Cut, and he gave me one, and we sang it together presently after it was printed.

Mr. Att. Gen. How did he describe it to you when he shewed it to you?

Z z

Mr. Dugdale.

Mr. Dugdale. That which hath the Pack on the Back of it, he described to be the King; those that follow him were Topham, Cooper, Hugh, and Snow, and that Company of Men there is the House of Commons.

Mr. Serj. Holloway. What was meant by the Pack?

Mr. Dugdale. The Parliament and all his Retinue; and then here is the King in the Mire again, according as 'tis represented in the Song—

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Ay, he goes on well. And this here is the Bishops which they thrust into the Pack, when they have got him down in the Mire, and then they thrust them all away, as it is in the Song, to hoot them away.

L. C. J. Did he make this Explication to you?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Who were the All?

Mr. Dugdale. King, and Clergymen, and all.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Where was this that he explained it?

Mr. Dugdale. At London.

Mr. Serj. Holloway. Is there any Thing relating to White-Hall? What Name did he give that?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, he said, Louise-Hall was White-Hall, because of its Poverty.

Then the Ballad was read.

Cl. of Cr. Barn Sherr. To the Tune of, I am a Senseless Thing—

Mr. Att. Gen. This shews you what a Sort of Man he is.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Here you say he explained this with the Pack at the Back to be the King?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, he told me so.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What did he mean by the two Faces?

Mr. Dugdale. That he was half a Protestant, and half a Papist.

Mr. Just. Jones. Did he make any Comparison between his own Party and the King's Party?

Mr. Dugdale. He said, they were but a Handful to them.

Mr. Just. Jones. To whom?

Mr. Dugdale. To his Party, that was the Dissenters.

Mr. Att. Gen. Speak that out.

Mr. Dugdale. That their Party was but a Handful to their's.

Mr. Att. Gen. Their's and Their's, who did he mean?

Mr. Dugdale. He meant the Dissenters; for the Church of England he reckoned among the Papists.

L. C. J. Tell us the Words he said.

Mr. Dugdale. He said, his Party was the true Church of England, and that which is established by Law, were but Protestants in Masquerade.

Mr. Just. Jones. Tell us when he made the Comparison, what Words he did use, and upon what Occasion.

Mr. Dugdale. When he perceived the King at Oxford would not yield to the House of Commons, he said, Let him begin as soon as he would, he did not care how soon he did begin, for their Party, meaning the King and his Party, was but an Handful to him and his Party, calling them the true Protestants; the others were Protestants in Masquerade.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did he desire you to do? To be assisting in any Thing?

Mr. Dugdale. He always desired me to be true of that Side, he hoped I was, and to get good Arms for myself.

Mr. Serj. Holloway. Did he in Oxford desire this of you?

Mr. Dugdale. No, he did not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. For what Purpose did he desire you to arm yourself?

Mr. Dugdale. He said, the King had a Design on the People to introduce Popery and arbitrary Government, and he expected every Day when they would begin, and the sooner the better, he would be provided for them.

Mr. Just. Jones. Was that in Oxford?

Mr. Dugdale. He spoke it in Oxford, and in the City too.

Mr. Just. Jones. Did he tell you of any that were lifted?

Mr. Dugdale. He spoke of Captain Brown, and Captain Clinton, and Don Lewes, and Abundance more he said he had.

Mr. Just. Jones. Did he tell you he had them here?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, about forty of them were there, he said,

Mr. Serj. Holloway. Did he tell you of any that were lifted, in order to the coming down of the Parliament at Oxford?

Mr. Dugdale. Not lifted, but were intended to come down; and at Oxford he told me they were come down.

Mr. Just. Jones. Were you in their Company in Oxford here?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, I was.

Mr. Just. Jones. In the Company of whom? Name them.

Mr. Dugdale. Of Captain Brown, Don Lewes, and several others of that Gang; I know not their Names, but I know their Faces.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he take Notice to you that they were come down?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. To what Purpose?

Mr. Dugdale. He expected there would be a rising in Oxford, and to this Purpose; Mr. Colledge was one that debated it at Richard's Coffee-house, and it was to be carried from thence to the King's-Head Club, whether it were not best to leave a Parliament-man in every County?

Mr. Att. Gen. Where was this?

Mr. Dugdale. This was at Richard's Coffee-house in London, against they met here.

Mr. Att. Gen. We could give you an Account of a Volume of these Things, Abundance of scandalous Pamphlets, both Songs, Libels, and Ballads, that were made by this Gentleman, and all seized in his Custody.

Mr. Just. Jones. But he sung this Libel?

Mr. Att. Gen. All these, Gentlemen, (shewing a great Bundle) were to be dispersed over England.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. It was, it seems, expounded and sung by the Prisoner at the Bar; he gave you the Ballad at Oxford, you say, Mr. Dugdale.

Mr. Dugdale. No, I heard him sing it here.

Mr. Just. Jones. Pray, Mr. Dugdale, what was the Use was to be made of this Ballad?

Mr. Att. Gen. Come, go to the next, we call this Evidence to shew you the Malice of the Man.

Colledge. Pray, my Lord, let me ask some Questions of Mr. Dugdale.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Ay, now let the Prisoner ask his Questions (to do him right) before we go to another Witness.

Mr. Dugdale. My Lord, I have a Word or two more about a Libel in Manuscript, that very Day the Sheriffs were to be chosen, it was to be printed, and he told me the Printer durst not print it, it was so dangerous.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What was it, can you remember any Part of it?

Mr. Dugdale. No; but it was the worst I ever heard in my Life against the King and Government.

L. C. J. Now ask him what Questions you will.

Colledge. Pray, when was the first Time you gave this Evidence?

Mr. Dugdale. Truly, Mr. Colledge, I don't keep an Account of Time, I cannot give an Account of Time.

Mr. Att. Gen. As near as you can tell him.

Mr. Dugdale. I cannot tell whether it might be in June, I think it was.

Colledge. How long before I was taken?

Mr. Dugdale. It might be about the Time you were taken.

Colledge. Pray, who did you give it before?

Mr. Dugdale. I gave it to Sir Lionel Jenkins.

Colledge. Where did you swear these Things were done then?

Mr. Dugdale. What was done in the City, I swore to be done there.

Colledge. What City?

Mr. Dugdale. London; the same Words were said in the City of London, and over again here. I have repeated, for the most Part, only the Words you said here, but more was in the City than here.

Colledge. Did you swear then, that the Words you swore now were spoken at London?

Mr. Dugdale. It may be we might not name Oxford then.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. He says well, it might not be named then.

Colledge. Then you did give in your Information, that I spoke these Words at Oxford.

Mr. Dugdale. I was not examined about what was done at Oxford; I believe I have heard you speak the same Words to me at my Lord Lovelace's, but I do not know what County that is in.

Colledge. I ask you positively, Whether you did not swear that what you now say was spoken at Oxford, was spoken at London?

Mr. Dugdale. I did not name Oxford then.

Colledge. But did not you say that was done at London, that now you say was done here?

Mr. Dugdale. Truly, you said them both at London, and here.

Colledge. Pray, Mr. Dugdale, what had you to give this your Information?

Mr. Dugdale. Truly, I can't say I have received the worth of a Groat.

Colledge. Nor was ever promised any Thing?

Mr. Dugdale. No, I never received any Thing, nor ever was promised, but only what the King gave me for going down into the Country for my Charges.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was that the same Allowance you had when you were Witness for the popish Plot?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Have you any other Allowance than what you had before, when you gave Evidence at my Lord Stafford's Trial?

Mr. Dugdale. No, nor have got all that yet neither.

Colledge. But pray observe my Question, Mr. Dugdale, and answer it. Did you not swear at London that I spoke these Words there, which now you say I spoke here?

L. C. J. Pray observe, he says he did not then name Oxford; but in the giving of his Evidence now, he tells you a Series of what passed between London and Oxford; and I must tell you further, if a Treason be committed, and the Evidence prove it to be in two Counties, the King may choose which County he will prosecute and bring his Indictment in, and give in Evidence the Facts in both Counties. But you shall have your Objection to it afterwards, and we will take it into Consideration. I tell you this, that it may not seem to you that the Witnesses speak impertinently of what was done at London; but if nothing was done or said at Oxford, then it will be taken into Consideration, you shall have it said afterwards. I only hint it now, that you may not think it impertinent.

Colledge. I beseech your Lordship give me Leave to speak one Word. When he made his Affidavit before Sir Lionel Jenkins there about seizing the King, about the Party I had, and the Arms I had provided, ought not he at the same time to have said where I said those Words to him? But he did swear then it was in London that I said those Words to him, and coming before a Grand Jury of honest Gentlemen in London, they were so wise and honest as to do me Justice, and not find the Bill; in their Design failing there, then they changed it to Oxford.

L. C. J. You did not come to your Trial there; if you had so done then they would have asked him in particular what was said at Oxford, and what at London, as 'tis now, being done in both Counties. But you, if you will ask any particular Questions, do, for they have called Witnesses to produce.

Colledge. My Lord, I only ask this Question, Whether it be not rational to think, that when he swore before Sir Lionel Jenkins, he should have sworn the Words were spoken, and Things done?

Mr. Dugdale. He hath said the same Words to me at my Lord Lovelace's, as I lay in Bed with him, and this I never mentioned but now my Evidence.

Colledge. What Words did I say there?

Mr. Dugdale. If you must have them repeated, they were about the King.

Colledge. What were they?

Mr. Dugdale. That he was a Papist, and designed arbitrary Government.

Colledge. Did I say so to you at my Lord Lovelace's?

Mr. Serj.

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, as we lay a-Bed.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you lie together?

Mr. Serj. Jeffries. Yes, yes, they were Intimates.

Coll. I had not six Words with you when you went to Bed, for you said you were weary, and went asleep presently.

Mr. Dugdale. I say you said this in the Morning, for we had an Hour's Discourse when we were a-Bed, and all our Discourse was about the Parliament and the King.

Coll. Where was it I said these Words in Oxford?

Mr. Dugdale. At Comb's Coffee-House was one Place.

Coll. Was there no Body by?

Mr. Dugdale. No, but at the Angel-Inn there were several Persons standing by?

Coll. Surely then some of those heard the Words as well as you.

Mr. Dugdale. It may be so, I am sure many at London have been by, as Mr. Starkey by name, Mr. Bosam, Mr. Baldwin; they have rebuked you for it, and I have rebuked you too.

Coll. What Words have they and you heard, and rebuked me for?

Mr. Dugdale. When you have been railing against the King, and said, That the King designed nothing but the introducing of Popery and arbitrary Government, and that he was a Papist.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. He loves to hear it repeated.

Coll. What Arms did you see of mine in this Town?

Mr. Dugdale. I saw Pistols; you had some Pocket Pistols.

Coll. None but one I borrowed of you, and that you had again; had I? (Pray speak) did you see any more?

Mr. Dugdale. It may be there might not, but there were Pocket-Pistols in the Room, and you had them in your Hand.

Coll. He swore but now that he saw me have Pocket-Pistols, when it was but one, and that was his own.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Hark you now, you talk of Pistols, do you know, that he had any Pistols in his Holsters at Oxford?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, he had.

Coll. Yes, I know that, I don't deny it.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. I think a Chiffel might have been more proper for a Joiner.

Coll. You say I was confederated with Capt. Brown and other Men.

Mr. Dugdale. You have told me that Capt. Brown had a good Allowance, and it was pity he had not a better Allowance; and you would speak he might have a better Allowance, for he was able to do good Service when the Time came.

Coll. From whom?

Mr. Dugdale. Among you.

Coll. Among whom?

Mr. Dugdale. You know there were several Gatherings among you that I was privy to.

Coll. What do I know?

Mr. Sol. Gen. You know Money was gathered many Times.

Coll. For what Purpose?

Mr. Dugdale. You never told me Particulars; it was to distribute somewhere, I had none of it.

L. C. J. He does not say these Men were concerned with you, but you said so.

Mr. Dugdale. You know, Mr. Colledge, there were many Gatherings of Monies.

Coll. Did I tell you there were any Gatherings for Captain Brown?

Mr. Serj. Jeff. He says, you told him no Particulars; if you have a Mind to ask him any more Questions, do.

Coll. Pray Sir George, don't interrupt me I am here for my Life. Did I tell you there were any Gatherings for Captain Brown?

Mr. Dugdale. I do not say for him, nor whom you distributed it to; but you gathered Money one among another, and you have paid Money.

Coll. I have paid Money! When, and to whom?

Mr. Att. Gen. You will not deny that, you confessed, upon your Examination, that you gave a Guinea.

Coll. Sir, did you see me any more at Oxford, than in the Coffee-House, and at that Inn, when I went out of Town, and was going home with the City-Members?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes.

Coll. Were you in my Company any where but in those two Places?

Mr. Dugdale. I was with you at the Chequer.

Coll. Did you come a Purpose to speak with me, or had you any Business particularly with me?

Mr. Dugdale. Truly, Mr. Colledge, I have forgot whether I had or no; I was in the Room with you there.

Coll. Where is that Room?

Mr. Dugdale. I can't tell all the Rooms in that House.

Coll. Was it above Stairs, or below?

Mr. Dugdale. Both above and below, two Days I was there with you.

Coll. Was there any of this Discourse you speak of passed there between us?

Mr. Dugdale. I know I was with you in those two Places I mentioned before; you called me aside to drink a Glass of Mum, and there was none in the Room but us two at that Coffee-House.

Coll. Sir, you came to Town but on Friday, I think it must be Saturday, Sunday, or Monday, this was; for he stayed no longer in Oxford.

Mr. Dugdale. Nay, I came to Oxford either Wednesday Night, or Thursday Morning; and I saw you and Mr. Hunt together the same Day I came.

Coll. Did I explain any Pictures to you at London, or owned I was the Author of them?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, upon my Oath, you have explained Pictures to me, and there is one Picture that I have not shewed yet, which you have explained what the meaning was.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. 'Tis your common Trade it seems.

Mr. Dugdale. You told me you got them done.

Clerk reads, A Character of a Popish Successor, &c.

Mr. Serj. Holloway. How did he explain it to you, Mr. Dugdale?

Mr. Serj. Jeff. I would see what Opinion he had of the Church of England; there are some Church-men, what are they a doing?

Mr. Dugdale. They are a Parcel of Tantivy-men riding to Rome; and here's the Duke of York, half Man, half Devil, trumpeting before them.

Coll. You have got some body to explain these things to you, Mr. Dugdale.

Mr. Dugdale. You did it, upon my Oath.

Coll. Oh, fie upon you, Mr. Dugdale, consider what you say.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. All this you did explain, it seems.

Mr. Dugdale. And in one Place of the other Libel the King was termed a Rogue; but they put him in by another Name.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Where is it?

Mr. Dugdale. 'Tis in Rary Shew; in the Manuscript it was, Now, now the Rogue is down.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Let me see it; I took Notice of it, Now, now the Giant is down, here.

Coll. I ask you, Sir, whether the Song which you say was sung at my Lord Lovelace's, and other Places, was the same with this?

Mr. Dugdale. For the general it is, I can't tell for every Word: You sang it half a dozen times there, and the Musick play'd to you.

Coll. I ask you, whether it was the same with this?

Mr. Dugdale. I can't tell for every Word you sang.

Coll. Was there any Body by at my explaining of these Pictures?

Mr. Dugdale. Mr. Baldwin was by, and reproved and corrected you, that you would be so open.

Coll. Was there any body at Oxford, when you did hear me talk of arming myself?

Mr. Dugdale. They were walking up and down in the Barber's Shop, and I know not whether they did hear or no.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was that Gentleman sworn at my Lord Stafford's Trial, Mr. Dugdale?

Coll. Yes, I was sworn there, I acknowledge it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he swear any thing on your Behalf, for your Credit, Mr. Dugdale?

Coll. That was by hear-say, Mr. Attorney, at the Tower; I know nothing of my own Knowledge; but I did believe him another Man than I find him.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. No Question, or else you would not have trusted him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Swear Stevens. (Which was done.) Do you give my Lord and the Jury an Account where you found this precious Ballad.

Stevens. The first Draught I found in his Bed-chamber.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What of all of them? Which is it?

Stevens. The Rary Shew: We found the first Draught of it in his House, when we came to search his Papers, by Order of Council; and the Printer that printed the Ballad hath told me since, he had it from him—

Mr. Att. Gen. What say you yourself? speak your own Knowledge.

Stevens. And Mr. Atterbury was by when we searched the House.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, Mr. Atterbury will tell his own Story.

Stevens. I have seen you on Horseback, with Holsters before you, with some hundreds of Men after you, coming out of the Bell-savage-Inn; they said, you were going to chuse Parliament-men: I have known you three or four Years, you were joiner to our Hall.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. We call you to that Particular of the Papers, and you run in a Story of a Cock and a Bull, and I know not what.

L. C. J. Will you ask him any Questions?

Coll. No, only this; Do you swear, upon your Oath, that you found the Original in my House?

Stevens. Yes, Sir, you will see it with my Hand to it, and some more of them.

Mr. Att. Gen. And you found too those that were printed?

Stevens. Yes, both our Names are to them that were concerned in the searching of them.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. You found the Paper in the House?

Stevens. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. That is Towzer; but have you the Original of the Rary Shew?

(It was looked for, but could not be found.)

Coll. Pray, Gentlemen, observe, he swears that is an Original.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. No, no, he found the Paper in your House.

Coll. I ask about the Original of Rary Shew.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. He says, he saw a Paper drawn with a Pencil that was like the Original.

Atterbury. There was an Original drawn with a Pencil, upon Dutch Paper, 'tis long since, for we do not see it here now, which at the same Time we found upon Colledge's Table in his Bed-Chamber.

Coll. Did you find an Original in my Chamber?

Atterbury. Yes, we found a Paper drawn with Black Lead.

Coll. Pray, where is it?

Atterbury. I did see it, it was drawn in Black Lead, it was upon Dutch Paper, and lay upon the Table in your Chamber.

Stevens. Sure I am, it was taken when we searched the House.

Coll. I am sure you could never find the Original of any such thing in my House.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then where is Mr. Sewell? (Who was sworn.) Sir, did you see that Trumpery taken?

Sewell. I had a Warrant to seize Mr. Spur, and his Brother-in-Law, Mr. Colledge. So I went down to seize Mr. Spur, and search his House for such Papers as I should find. I could not find them in the House; but I enquired of him, after I had searched, and could not find them, where they were; because I saw him at Mr. Colledge's when we first searched; he denied them a pretty while, but at last he told me, they were in the Hay-mow in the Barn. When I came there, he was bawling, and told me, his Wife, Colledge's Sister had taken them down, and carried them into a Room where I had searched before, but could not find them; and the Man was angry then, so we run after his Wife, and found her with all these Papers in a Bag.

Mr. Att. Gen. Are these the same Papers?

Sewell. Yes; and there were two other Cuts, the Man himself is about the Place somewhere.

Mr.

Mr. Att. Gen. Swear Mr. John Smith.
(Which was done.)

Mr. Just. Jones. Come, Mr. Smith, do you know Mr. Colledge?

Mr. Smith. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Give us an Account what Dealings you have had with him, where, and when; what he hath said about the King; and tell us first, whether you be intimately acquainted?

Mr. Smith. We were intimately acquainted. The first Time I heard Mr. Colledge discoursing any Thing of this Nature, that is, concerning Treason, or any such Thing, was once at a Coffee-house by Temple-Bar; there I met Colledge, and he told me he was invited to Dinner, and he likewise invited me to it. I asked him, who provided the Dinner; he told me it was one Alderman Wilcox; I told him I was a Stranger, and did not care for going: he told me, I should be very welcome there; and at last prevailed upon me to go: And as I was going along, I asked him what the Alderman was; he told me, he was a Man that was as true as Steel, and a Man that would endeavour to root out Popery: Said I, That may be done easily, if you can but prevail with the King to pass the Bill against the Duke of York. No, no said he, you are mistaken, for Rowley is as great a Papist as the Duke of York is, (now he called the King Rowley) and every Way as dangerous to the Protestant Interest, as is too apparent by his arbitrary Ruling. This was the Discourse between the Coffee-House and the Tavern where he went to dine. When we came in I asked Colledge again whether the Alderman was there; he said he was not there at that Time: I asked him the second Time, what Kind of Man he was; he said, he was one that lived in his Country House, and gave freely to several People to buy Arms and Ammunition: And I asked him to what Purpose? And he said, it was to bring the King to Submission to his People: Adding thereto, that he wondered Old Rowley did not consider how easily his Father's Head came to the Block, which he doubted not would be the End of Rowley at the last. After this Discourse the Alderman came in; we dined, and every one went his own way about his own Business. Mr. Colledge then told me, if I would go with him to his own House, I should see how he was prepared with Arms and Provision. Soon after I met with him, and he desired me to go along and dine with him; and I did so, and there he did shew me his Pistols, his Blunderbuss, and his great Sword; and he shewed me his Armour, Back and Breast; and he shewed me his Head-piece, which, if I am not mistaken, was covered over with Camblet, it was a very fine Thing; and, said he, these are the Things which will destroy the pitiful Guards of Rowley, that are kept up contrary to Law and Justice, to set up arbitrary Power and Popery.

Coll. What did I say, Sir, about my Armour?

Mr. Smith. Thus you said; It was to destroy Rowley's Guards, (those were your Words) that were kept up contrary to Law and Justice, to set up arbitrary Power and Popery. After I had dined with him, I parted with him. A little before the Parliament was to meet at Oxford, I met him again; and we were discoursing of several Things, what Preparations the City were making, how they were provided with Powder and Bullets, and for his Part he would go down to Oxford, for he expected a little Sport there, upon the Divisions that were like to be between the King and Parliament. Then, said I to him, Why, what is the Matter there? Why, said he, we expect that the King will seize upon some of the Members, and we are as ready as he: And, says he, for my Part, I will be there, and be one that shall seize him if he secure any of the Members; (and I believe he did go down;) says he, you know how the City is provided: I told him, no, not so well as he; but he told me all was very well. After he came up again, I met him another Time, and he told me, he went down in Expectation of some Sport; but Old Rowley was afraid, like his Grandfather Jamy, and so ran away like to beslit himself.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did he say, if he had not run away he would have seized him?

Mr. Smith. He said nothing of that; but before, he said, he would be one of them should seize him, if he seized any of the Members. After this he told me, that Fitz-gerald and he had had a Quarrel at the Parliament-Door of the House of Lords at Oxford; that Fitz-gerald had called him Rogue; and, said he, Fitz-gerald made my Nose bleed; but before long, I hope to see a great deal more Blood shed for the Cause. After this again, when there was a Discourse of disarming the City, that my Lord Feverham was to come to do it, he told me, he was well provided, and if Feverham, or any Man, nay, Rowley himself should attempt any such Thing, he would be the Death of him, before any Man should seize upon his Arms.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did he discourse any Thing to you about Arms to provide for yourself?

Mr. Smith. Yes, he did, I had an Armour from him.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What did he say to you about it?

Mr. Smith. He did desire me to get me Arms, for I did not know how soon I might make use of them. I had an Armour from him upon Trial; he said it cost him 30 or 40s. I had it upon Trial, but it was too big for me, so I gave it him back, and bought a new one.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he tell you to what Purpose you should arm yourself?

Mr. Smith. No, he did not name any Purpose; but he told me, I did not know how soon I might make use of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did he say to you about any one's seizing the King?

Mr. Smith. He told me the Parliament were agreed to secure the King, and that in order to it, all the Parliament-men came very well armed, and accompanied with Arms and Men; and he told me of a great Man that had Notice from all the Gentlemen of England how well they came armed.

Mr. Just. Jones. What did he say of himself?

Mr. Smith. He would be one that should secure the King, if he seized any of the Members.

Mr. Just. Jones. When he had been there, what did he say?

Mr. Smith. If they had had any Work, he was ready provided for them.

Mr. Att. Gen. But pray, tell us again what he said of the King's running away?

Mr. Smith. He said, Rowley was afraid, like his Grandfather Jamy, and run away ready to beslit himself.

L. C. J. If you have done with him, Mr. Attorney, let the Prisoner ask him what Questions he will.

Coll. Mr. Smith, where was this Discourse I had with you?

Mr. Smith. Which do you mean, the former Part, or the latter?

Coll. The first Discourse you talk of, what I told you going to Mr. Wilcox's to Dinner; and when it was?

Mr. Smith. You know best when it was, I can't exactly remember the Time; but you know 'tis true.

Coll. Where was it?

Mr. Smith. As we went along thither we had the first Part of it, and when we came thither, you and I talked till Alderman Wilcox came in; and you and I were alone together, and several Persons that were there, were drawn into Cabals, two by two.

Coll. Where?

Mr. Smith. In the Room where we dined; and you know there was a little Room by, where some were drinking a Glass of Wine.

Coll. You say by two and two, the Company were drawn into Cabals.

Mr. Smith. I tell you, most of them were in Cabals, two and two together, only those two Gentlemen that belonged to the Alderman went up and down, and gave Wine.

Coll. What Religion are you of?

Mr. Smith. Is it for this Man, to ask me, my Lord, such a Question?

L. C. J. Yes, answer him.

Mr. Smith. I am a Protestant.

Coll. You were a Priest?

Mr. Smith. Yes, What then? and I am in Orders now.

Coll. That was from the Church of Rome.

Mr. Smith. Yes, and that is a good Ordination; I came in voluntarily to discover the Popish Plot, and was no Pensioner, nor received any Salary from the King. I have spent several Pounds, several scores of Pounds, but received no Recompence: And I was the Darling at one Time all over the City, when I did adhere to what they would have me to do.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did not you swear against my Lord Stafford?

Mr. Att. Gen. Were you not a Witness, Mr. Smith, at my Lord Stafford's Trial?

Mr. Smith. In that Case I did give a general Account of the Design of the Papists; they did not then question my Reputation, and I defy all the World to say any thing against it.

Coll. Pray hear me, Sir, if you please; the first Discourse that you speak of about Mr. Wilcox's being a good Man for the Cause, and contributing Money, this was when we were at Dinner.

Mr. Smith. This was that Day when we went to Dinner with him, you know it very well.

Coll. Where were the other Discourses I had with you?

Mr. Smith. Which part of them?

Coll. When I came from Oxford?

Mr. Smith. By the Ditch-side, by your own House, I have two or three to prove it, we were an Hour or two discoursing together about this Business?

Coll. What Business?

L. C. J. He tells you of two Discourses, one before you went to Oxford, and one after you came from thence.

Coll. He does say, that I did discourse him about our coming down hither to Oxford, that the Parliament would secure the King, and that I would be one of them that should seize him, and this was the Time when we dined with Alderman Wilcox.

L. C. J. Not so, he says, after that Time, and before you went to Oxford, he had such a Discourse with you.

Mr. Smith. Yes, my Lord, so it was.

Coll. And does he speak of another Time, when I shewed him the Back, Breast, and Arms?

Mr. Smith. Yes.

Coll. But he said, I discoursed then, that the City was provided with Arms, and that the Parliament were resolved to bring the King to Submission.

Mr. Smith. When I was in the House with him, he then said Mr. Wilcox gave Money to provide Arms: I asked, for what? he said, it was to bring the King to Submission to his People; and then he added, he admired that Rowley did not remember how easily his Father's Head came to the Block; and he doubted not but that would be the End of him too.

L. C. J. He spake of several Times, you know.

Coll. I do not know one Word of it, nor can I distinguish the Times: But, Mr. Smith, the last Discourse, you say about Oxford Business was by the Ditch-side.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. The Discourse about bringing the King to Submission, was in the Way as you went to Dinner.

Mr. Smith. The last Discourse, when you returned from Oxford, was by the Ditch-side; but both before and after you spake to me at that Place about this Design of bringing the King to Submission.

Coll. You said, it was at Wilcox's at Dinner.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. You mistook him then.

Coll. Nay, Sir George, you took him not right.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. I have taken him right, I assure you, and you shall see it by and by.

Coll. He is the falsest Man that ever spoke with a Tongue.

Mr. Att. Gen. Swear Bryan Haynes. (Which was done.) Tell my Lord and the Jury whether you know this Gentleman, what Converse you had with him, and what Discourse he hath had with you. Apply yourself to Mr. Colledge's Business only.

Haynes. I suppose he will not deny but that he knows me very well; I have been acquainted with him ever since March last, before the sitting of the Parliament at Oxford. My Lord, there was a Warrant against me for High-Treason, and I made my Application to Mr. Colledge, and desired him to go to a Person of Honour in England, and ask his Advice, whether I might supersede the Warrant by putting in Bail, and carry the Supersedeas in my Pocket: Mr. Colledge told me, he would go to this Person of Honour, for he would do nothing of his own Head; and he bid me come to him the next Day. My Lord, I came to Mr. Colledge the very next Day, and I met him at his House, and I asked him what was the Result, and what Advice he had from that Person of Quality: He bid me be of good cheer, that the Parliament would be, and sit at Oxford soon; that I should not value the King a Pin; for, said he, the King is in a worse Condition than you or I; for you shall see, said he, he shall be called to an Account for all his Actions.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Who should? The King; for all the World may see, says he, that he does resolve to bring in arbitrary Power, and Popery: And, said he, unless he will let the Parliament sit at Oxford, since he hath called them together, and put the People to charges in choosing of them, and them in coming down, we will seize him at Oxford, and bring him to the Block, as we did the Logger-head his Father: The Parliament shall sit at Guild-Hall, and adjust the Grievances of the Subject, and of the Nation: And you shall see, said he, that no King of his Race shall ever reign in England after him:

L. C. J. Where was this he said so?

Haynes. At his own House I met him; and he and I did walk all along from his own House, over the Bridge that is against Bridewell, and so went all along till we came to the Hercules Pillars, and we had some discourse there; we went up one Pair of Stairs and called for some Beef; and all this discourse was in that very Place of the Hercules Pillars.

Mr. Serj. Holloway. Do you know any thing of any Arms he had, and for what?

Haynes. But, Sir, said I to Mr. Colledge, how can this be done, 'tis a Thing impossible: You pretend, you say, to the Duke of Monmouth, that he is a fine Prince, and stands up for the Protestant Interest. Alas, said he, we make an Idol of him to adumbrate our Actions, for fear we should be discovered: Do you think the wise People of England shall ever make a Bastard upon Record King of England? No, said he, for though we praise his Actions, yet we cannot endure him, because he is against his own Father. But, said he, further, unless the King do expel from his Council the Earl of Clarendon, cunning Lory Hyde, the Earl of Halifax, that great Turn-coat Rogue, that was before so much against the Papists; a Rascal, we shall see him hanged, and all the Tory Counsellors, except the King do it, we will make England too hot for him.

Coll. Who did I say this to? To you?

Haynes. Yes, to me.

Coll. Pray, how could this be possible?

Haynes. Yes, you knew my Condition; and I intimated to you at that Time, that I was as much for Treason and Villainy as you: But then said I to him, how can this be done? Here you have neither Officers, nor Men of Experience, nor Men of Knowledge; nor you have no Ammunition, Sea-port Towns, nor any Ships. And besides, the King, said I, hath a great Party in the Land, and the Duke of York likewise; and for all the Men of Estates, and the ancient Gentlemen, they will not be disturbed, and quit their Ease for a Civil War. Oh, says he, you are mistaken, for we have in the City 1500 Barrels of Powder, and we have 100,000 Men ready at an Hour's Warning; and we have ordered every Thing in a due Method against the sitting of the Parliament at Oxford; and you shall see England the most glorious Nation in the World, when we have cut off that beastly Fellow Rowley; and speaking of the King, he said, he came of the Race of Buggerers, for his Grandfather King James buggered the old Duke of Buckingham; and he called him Captain, and sometimes the King, and sometimes Rowley.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. This was pure Protestant discourse, upon my Word.

Haynes. Then he railed at Judge Pemberton; and, said he, let him try Fitz-Harris if he dare; I shall see him go to Tyburn for it, I hope a Turn-coat Rogue; he was for the Plot whilst he was puisse Judge, but now he is Chief Justice, he is the greatest Rogue in the World. He is like one of the Pensioners in the Long Parliament. So one Day I went along with Mrs. Fitz-Harris, and Mr. Ivy, and he sent a Man to me, and desired me to come to the Hog in Armour; thither we came, and met him, and went to his Lodgings, and there we dined. Then they made some Persons of Honour believe, that I was a Person so and so qualified, and was brimful of the Plot; and he would put me upon charging the King with the firing of London, and the Murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey; and, said he, such and such Lords shall live and die by you; and besides, said he, you need not fear, England shall espouse your Cause. But, said I, the Law is like a Spider's Web; that catches the little Flies, but the great Flies run through the Net, and make their escape; so it is with these Lords, they put you and me on the danger of acting; and when they got off by Interest, a Jury of 12 Men will hang us by the Neck, and so I should perish, whilst others triumphed, and only be a Martyr for the Fanatics. So in discourse we were talking of the Libel of Fitz-Harris; the Devil take me, said he, every individual Word is as true as God is in Heaven; and, said he, if you do not join with Fitz-Harris in his Evidence, and charge the King home, you are the basest Fellow in the World, for he makes you Slaves and Beggars, and would make all the world so; and 'tis a Kind of Charity to charge him home, that we may be rid of such a Tyrant.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Mr. Colledge, if you will ask him any Questions, you may.

Coll. Certainly, my Lord, the thing speaks it; he is not to be talked withal; is it probable I should talk to an Irishman that does not understand Sense?

Haynes. 'Tis better to be an honest Irishman, than an English Rogue.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. He does it but to put you in a Heat, don't be passionate with him.

Haynes. No, I am not, I thank God, he hath not put me into a Heat.

Coll. Where was this discourse about superseding your Warrant?

Haynes. At London.

Coll. When?

Haynes. It was before the Parliament sat at Oxon.

Coll. How long?

Haynes. I can't tell positively to an Hour or a Day.

Coll. What Month, as near as you can?

Haynes. It was in the Month of March.

Coll. Had you ever seen me before?

Haynes. Can you deny that?

Coll. I ask you whether you have or no?

Haynes. Yes, I have seen you in the Coffee-Houses bawling against the government.

L. C. J. Were you an intimate Acquaintance of his before March last?

Haynes. No intimate Acquaintance.

Coll. Then this is the first Time you discoursed with me.

Haynes. Oh, no my Lord. One and I fell out at the Queen's-Head Tavern at Temple-Bar, and he set me upon the Business, and John Macnamarra and the others; and truly I did the Business for him: For we fell out and did Box, and our Swords were taken from us, and I went to John

VOL. III.

Macnamarra, and told him, yonder is such a Man at such a Place; now you may seize upon him.

Coll. What Man was that?

Haynes. One Richard Ponre.

Coll. He belonged to my Lord Tyrone, I think, there were Warrants to take him. Do you say I set you upon that?

Haynes. Yes, you were with me the Night before, and Capt. Brown, and they gave us a Signal, a blue Ribband, to distinguish that we were Protestants, from the Bishops Men.

L. C. J. When were you to make Use of it?

Haynes. When the King was seized.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Well, go on, have you any more?

Haynes. But, my Lord, further, after he came from Oxon I met him; and, said I, Where are now all your Cracks and Brags? Now you see the King hath made a Fool of you; now you know not what you would have done. Says he, What would you have us to do? We have not done with him yet; for, said he, no Servant, no Man living did know whether he would dissolve the Parliament that Day. I was that very nick of Time at the Lord's House, and there was a Man came in with a Gown under his Arm, and every one looked upon him to be a Taylor, and no Body did suspect, no, not his intimatest Friends, except it were Fitz-gerald, that he would dissolve the Parliament that Day; but presently he puts on his Robes, and sends away for the House of Commons; and when he had dissolved them, before ever the House could get down, he took Coach and went away, otherwise the Parliament had been too hard for him; for there was never a Parliament-Man but had divers armed Men to wait on him, and I had my Blunderbuss and my Man to wait upon me. But well, said he, there is a God above that will rule all.

Mr. Att. Gen. Call Mr. Turberville.

Coll. Hold, Sir, I desire to ask him some Questions. You say, the first Time that I saw you, you had this discourse with me?

Haynes. Do not use Tautologies; 'tis not the first Time I have been examined, I know how to speak as well as you.

Coll. Answer my Questions, Sir.

Haynes. You know it was after I had made Affidavit before the Recorder of London, a Copy of which was carried to that Nobleman; and you came from him and returned me his Thanks, and told me it was the best Service I could do him. I would not trouble the Court with circumstantial Things; and you told me I should be gratified not only in my own Property, but a Reward for me and my Heirs for ever.

Mr. Att. Gen. For what?

Haynes. I made Affidavit before the Recorder of London.

Coll. About what?

Haynes. Concerning one Fitz-gerald.

Mr. Att. Gen. Is this to this Matter?

Haynes. No, nothing at all.

L. C. J. Let him ask any Questions what he will.

Coll. I ask when it was the first Time you were acquainted with me, so much as to know me well?

Haynes. As to the first Time of Intimacy, here is Macnamarra will take has corporal Oath that I was as well acquainted with him as any one in the World.

Coll. Pray answer me, Sir, when was the first Time I talked to you?

Haynes. The first intimate Acquaintance we had, was when you put me upon the Design about Fitz-gerald.

Coll. Pray, Sir, you go too fast already, as you are still galloping; where was this discourse about his Majesty?

Haynes. I told you before.

Coll. Where was it?

Haynes. I went to you after the Affidavit was made, and told you there was a Warrant out after me, and desired you to go to that Nobleman and desire his Advice what I might do, or whether I might supersede the Warrant. You told me you could do nothing without Advice, and you would go and advise with that Nobleman.

Coll. My Lord, here is Mr. Turberville come in, they will over-hear one another; pray let me have fair play for my Life.

(Whereupon Turberville withdrew.)

L. C. J. Can't you answer him? When was the first Time you came acquainted with him?

Mr. Serj. Jeff. When was the first Discourse you had with him?

Haynes. In April last.

Coll. You say it was before the sitting of the Parliament, and that was in March?

Haynes. I meant in March.

Coll. So indeed you said at first.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. He never did say the Day of the Month, nor the Month neither.

Mr. Jones. How long was it before the sitting of the Parliament?

Haynes. Mr. Jones, Truly I do not remember precisely how long it was before the sitting of the Parliament; but I am sure it was before.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. I did take it that he said it was before the sitting of the Parliament, and now he says in the Month of March. Pray when he talked to you, did not he tell you of the sitting of the Parliament, and that they would stand by you?

Coll. He hath said it already, you need not direct him, Sir George, he goes fast enough. But you say, Sir, the first Time I was ever acquainted with you, was in March; then Gentlemen, consider, whether it be probable that at that Time I should discourse to him after this Manner.

L. C. J. No, I did tell you what he says; he said the first Time he was intimately acquainted with you, was in March; he said he had before seen you in Coffee-Houses, and he is sure it was before the sitting of the Parliament; for he tells you the Discourse you had, and by that Discourse it appears, it related to a Parliament that was afterwards to sit. And then to give you a more particular Circumstance, he says, that you put him upon the making the Affidavit about Fitz-gerald, and so you came acquainted.

Haynes. Ask Mr. Attorney. My Lord, that Day he was taken and carried to White-hall before the Secretary of State, he said, I do not know who it should be that should accuse me, I believe it is Ivy; as for Haynes, he was taken t'other Day, he was an honest Man.

Coll. You say I desired you to make an Affidavit; Was it after that, or before I had that Discourse with you?

Haynes. It was after: For I came and desired you to go to such a Person of Quality, and you went to him and advised with him; and then the next

next Morning such Discourse as I told your Lordship and the whole Court of, he told me.

Coll. Did I speak these treasonable Words after the Affidavit was made?

Haynes. You said I must make such an Affidavit concerning Fitz-gerald.

Coll. But was this treasonable Discourse before you made the Affidavit, or after?

Haynes. After the Affidavit made, you told me this: When I came to his House, and from thence we went to the Hercules Pillars.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Will you ask him any more Questions, Mr. Colledge?

Coll. Did you ever speak with me in your Life before Macnamarra did call me out of the Coffee-house to go along with you, where you would discover a design against my Lord Shaftesbury's Life?

Haynes. I told you I never had any intimate Acquaintance with you in my Life before, nor did I ever speak with you before.

Coll. When was that Discourse, I ask you once again?

Haynes. After the Affidavit made.

Coll. That Night?

Haynes. Within a Week or thereabouts after the Affidavit made.

Mr. Att. Gen. Call Mr. Edward Turberville. But Mr. Haynes, I would ask you one Question. Did he deliver you any Ribband as a Mark of Distinction?

Haynes. Yes, here it is. (And it was shewn to the Court.)

Then Mr. Turberville was sworn.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Pray Mr. Turberville, will you tell my Lord and the Jury what Discourse you had with Mr. Colledge; and where, and when?

Mr. Turberville. When the Parliament sat in Oxon about the middle of the Week, I can't be positive in the Day, but I think it was in the middle of the Week I dined with Mr. Colledge, Capt. Brown and Don Lewis, Clerk of Derby-House, at the Chequer-Inn. After Dinner Don Lewis went out about some Business, and Captain Brown went to sleep, Mr. Colledge and I fell to talking of the Times, and I was observing, I thought the Parliament was not a long-lived Parliament. Said he, There is no good to be expected from the King; for he and all his Family are Papists, and have ever been such, you know it, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Nay don't apply to him.

Mr. Turb. Said I, The King will offer something or other by way of Surprise to the Parliament. Said he, I would he would begin; but if he do not, we will begin with him, and seize him; for there are several brave Fellows about this Town, that will secure him till we have those Terms that we expect from him.

L. C. J. Where was this?

Mr. Turb. At the Chequer-Inn.

L. C. J. What said he further?

Mr. Turb. He said he had got a Case of Pistols, and a very good Sword, and a Velvet-Cap; and I can't be positive he had Armour on, but I believe he had.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he tell you he came down for that Purpose to seize the King?

Mr. Turb. Yes, and he gave me a piece of Blue Ribband to put in my Hat. He had a great Quantity of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was that for?

Mr. Turb. To be a Distinction if there should be any Disturbance when the Thing should be done.

Coll. What Thing done?

Mr. Turb. I know nothing but of your telling me of it.

Coll. Where was this?

Mr. Turb. At the Chequer-Inn in Oxon, Mr. Colledge. You talk much and can't remember all you say.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did he discourse to you about Arms and a Horse?

Mr. Turb. I told him I had never an Horse, and nothing but a Case of Pistols; he bid me I should not trouble my self, for he would get me an Horse.

Coll. What to do?

Mr. Turb. To carry on your Design, I know not what it was, but by your Words.

Mr. Att. Gen. Tell what he said of it at the Chequer-Inn.

Mr. Turb. He said, there was a Design to seize the King.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he desire you to be one of them?

Mr. Turb. He did desire me to be ready to assist.

Mr. Just. Jones. And how much of that Ribband had he, pray?

Mr. Turb. A very great Quantity, 40 or 50 Yards.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Mr. Turberville, will you give your Evidence over again, and let Mr. Colledge attend to it.

Mr. Turb. When the Parliament sat at Oxon, about the middle of the Week, I cannot be positive to a Day, I believe it was either Wednesday or Thursday, I dined with Mr. Colledge, Captain Brown and Don Lewis, who was formerly Clerk of Derby-house. Don Lewis after Dinner went out, and Captain Brown lay down on the Bed, and Mr. Colledge and I fell to talking of the Times, and I told him, I thought this Parliament would be no long-lived Parliament. Upon which Colledge told me, the King and all his Family were Papists, and there was no good to be expected from him. Then I replied, the King would perhaps surprize the Parliament, or use some Stratagem to bring them to his Terms. Said Mr. Colledge again, I would he would begin; but if he do not, we will secure him till he comes to those Terms we would have from him; for here are several brave Fellows, and many more are coming down that will join with it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he name any one?

Mr. Turb. No indeed, he did not; he himself had a Case of Pistols, a Sword, and I believe he might have his Armour on.

Coll. Did I discourse who were to join with me?

Mr. Turb. No, Mr. Colledge, you did not name any body to me, but Capt. Brown was with you.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were you examined in my Lord Stafford's Trial?

Mr. Turb. Yes, I was.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was this Gentleman sworn to your Reputation there?

Mr. Turb. No, not to mine.

Coll. Pray, how came we to talk of such things? What Occasion was there that I should talk Treason of the King to you? Was there any body besides us two there?

Mr. Turb. No, Capt. Brown was gone to sleep, and Lewis was gone out.

Mr. Att. Gen. It was not at Dinner that you talked so, Mr. Colledge, he says.

Coll. Had they been at Dinner with us there?

Mr. Turb. Yes, and we had a Leg of boiled Mutton to Dinner.

Coll. Did you stay after Dinner?

Mr. Turb. Yes, and I lay with you afterwards upon the Bed.

Coll. I thought you had said Capt. Brown went to sleep there.

Mr. Turb. Yes, but he was gone too, when we laid down together.

Coll. God forgive you, I can say no more, I never spoke one Word of any such Discourse in my Life.

Mr. Att. Gen. Will you ask him any more Questions?

Coll. Mr. Turberville, when did you give in this Information against me?

Mr. Turb. I gave it to the Grand Jury.

Coll. Not before?

Mr. Turb. Yes, I did.

Coll. When was it?

Mr. Turb. Truly I can't well tell, I believe it was a Day or two before I came to Oxon.

Coll. Why did you make it then, and not before?

Mr. Turb. I'll tell you the Occasion. Mr. Dugdale told me the Grand Jury of London would not find the Bill: I did admire at it extremely; for I thought every one that conversed with him might be an Evidence against him; he was always so very lavish against the King and the Government. So then Colonel Warcup came to me and took my Depositions, and then I came for Oxford.

Coll. What was the reason you did not discover this Treason before?

Mr. Turb. There was no reason for it, it was not necessary.

Coll. You were not agreed then.

Mr. Turb. There was no Agreement in the Cafe, there needs nothing of that, I think, but I am not obliged to give you an Account of it.

Coll. God forgive you, Mr. Turberville.

Mr. Turb. And you too, Mr. Colledge.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then call Sir William Jennings.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Mr. Attorney, if you please, till he comes, I will acquaint my Lord here is a Gentleman that hath not yet been taken notice of, one Mr. Masters, that is pretty well known to Mr. Colledge; now he is a Man, he must acknowledge, of an undoubted Reputation, and I desire he may give your Lordship and the Jury an account what he knows of the Prisoner; because he is so curious for Englishmen, we have brought him an Englishman of a very good Repute.

Coll. My Lord, I am charged with Treason in this Indictment; here are a great many Things made use of that serve only to amuse the Jury, I can conjecture nothing else they are brought for; I desire to know whether the Pictures produced are part of the Treason.

L. C. J. Stay till the Evidence is given, and we will hear what you can say at large when you come to sum up your Defence.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Pray, my Lord, will you be pleased to hear this Gentleman: He will tell you what discourse he hath had with the Prisoner at the Bar.

Then Mr. Masters was sworn.

Mr. Masters. Mr. Colledge and I have been acquainted for a great many Years; and we have often discoursed. I have told him of his being so violent as he hath been several Times. But a little before the Parliament at Oxford, about Christmas last, after the Parliament at Westminster, at Mr. Charlton's Shop the Woollen-Draper in Paul's Church-Yard, we were discoursing together about the Government, and he was justifying of the late long Parliament's Actions in 40; and he said, That Parliament was as good a Parliament as ever was chosen in the Nation. Said I, I wonder how you have the Impudence to justify their Proceedings that raised the Rebellion against the King, and cut off his Head. Said he, They did nothing but what they had just Cause for, and the Parliament that sat last at Westminster was of their Opinion, and so you would have seen it.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What did he say of the Parliament since?

Mr. Masters. He said the Parliament that sat last at Westminster was of the same Opinion that that Parliament was.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Pray afterwards what Discourse had you about his Colonelship?

Mr. Masters. We were talking at Guild-Hall that Day the Common-Council was, the 13th of May as near as I remember, so I came to him. How now, Colonel Colledge, said I, what do you make this Bustle for? You mistook me, and said, Cousin, how long have you and I been Cousins? Nay, prithee said I, 'tis not yet come to that, to own Kindred between us, I only called you Colonel in jest. Marry, mock not, said he, I may be one in a little Time.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Have you any Thing to ask Mr. Masters? You know he is your old Acquaintance, you know him well.

(Then Sir William Jennings was sworn.)

Mr. Just. Jones. What is that you know concerning Mr. Colledge at Oxford, Sir?

Sir W. Jennings. My Lord, the first Time that I heard any Thing of Mr. Colledge was, there was some Company looking upon a Picture, for I knew him not, nor never had any Word of discourse with him in my Life any more than seeing him in a publick Coffee-House. But there was a Picture looking on by 7, or 8, or 10 People, I believe more or less, and I coming and crowding in my Head among the rest, looked upon this Picture. After the Crowd was over, Mr. Colledge takes a Picture out of his Pocket, and said he, I will give you one of them if you will. So he gives me a Picture; which Picture if I could see, I could tell what it was; it was written Mac a Top, and there were several Figures in it.

(Then the Picture was shewed him.)

This is one of the same that I had of him, and I had not had it long in my Custody, but meeting with Justice Warcup, I shewed it him, who gave it me, and so I did. The next Thing that I did see Mr. Colledge do, was in the Coffee-House, not the same Day, but another Time. I saw him bring in a Parcel of blue Ribband which was wrought, and the Words eight Times wrought in it, twice wrought in every Quarter, a Yard, No Popery, No Slavery. I saw him sell to a Member of Parliament as I took him to be, a Yard of that Ribband for 2s. and truly I was thinking he would ask me to buy some too, and I saw that Gentleman take him to be a Parliament-Man take this Ribband and tie it upon his Sword. As to the other Thing I have to say of Mr. Colledge; that very Day the Parliament was dissolved, he had been in a Quarrel, as he told me, with Mr. Fitz-gerald; and I was standing in the School-House Yard, and he comes directly to me without my speaking to him or any thing; but he comes and tells me Mr. Fitz-gerald had spit in his Face; and, said he, I spit in his Face again; so we went to Loggerheads together, I think that was the Word, or Fifty-cuffs. So, said I, Mr. Colledge, your Nose bleeds; he takes his Handkerchief out of his Pocket and wipes his Nose, and said, I have lost the first Blood in the Cause, but it will not be long before more be lost.

L. C. J. Where was this?

Sir W. Jennings. In the School-House Yard at Oxon. I never discoursed with him afterwards till I met him at London in Fleet-Street one Sunday in Afternoon, and I remember Captain Crescett was along with me. And when he came up to me, How now, said I; honest Joiner? Says he, You call me honest Joiner, some call me Rogue and Rascal, and I have been beating some of them; so that I believe they will be aware of it. So I told Captain Crescett, I never met this Man but he was always in a Quarrel.

Coll. Was it on a Sunday that I told you I had been beating somebody?

Sir W. Jennings. You told me so, Capt. Crescett was by.

Coll. I do remember I met you, but I did not tell you I had then been beating any one. But pray, Sir William, when I met you after the Parliament was dissolved, and Fitz-gerald and I had quarrelled, did I say, That I had lost the first Blood in the Cause, but it would not be long e'er more were lost? Sir William, you are a Gentleman, as for the other Men, they don't care what they say, nor do I so much regard them; but you value your Word and Honour: These were my Words, and pray will you recollect yourself before you be positive in the Thing, whether I did not say, I have lost the first Blood for the Parliament, (for it was upon my vindicating of the Commons and Dr. Oates, whom Fitz-gerald had abused, and upon that the Quarrel began; so I said when you met me, and told me my Nose bled, I have lost the first Blood for the Parliament) I wish it may be the last.

Sir Will. Jennings. Mr. Colledge, if you please I will answer you as to that; I do assure you 'tis the first Time that ever I came upon this Occasion in my Days, and I have declared it before, and do declare it now, I would rather have served the King in three Engagements, than come in against you or any Man upon such an Occasion. But I declare to you upon the whole Memory of the Truth, the Words were as I spoke them at first, and no Parliament named or mentioned. And, my Lord, moreover, I will tell you, when I did tell this Story, because that Mr. Crescett is able to tell you whether I did not relate the Words within half an Hour, or a little Time after. Now I never had a Prejudice against you in my Days, nor other Concern; but having told Mr. Justice Warcup this Story, I am brought hither to testify it.

Coll. Sir William, I am very sorry you did not observe and remember my Words then.

Sir Will. Jennings. I must needs say, I could not imagine what the Words meant when they were spoken, nor do I understand them to this Day; but soon after they were spoken, I related them to Justice Warcup, he being a Justice of Peace.

Mr. Serj. Holloway. Gentlemen, we shall rest here, and conclude our Evidence for the King at present, to hear what the Prisoner says to it; only with my Lord's Leave, I shall explain the Words to you that are in the Indictment, and tell you what is meant by compassing and imagining the Death of the King. The seizing the Person of the King is in Law a compassing and intending his Death; and so it hath been adjudged in several Cases, as in Jacob's, my Lord Cobham, and my Lord Grey's Case, and several other Cases; and so you may fully apprehend what the Charge is, and may understand the Words in the Indictment, That if you are not satisfied with the general Words of compassing the King's Death, you may know, that the seizing his Person extends to it.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. My Lord, we have done with our Evidence, now let him go on with his.

L. C. J. Now, Mr. Colledge, you may say what you will for your Defence, and call your Witnesses that you have to produce.

Coll. My Lord, I have heard the Evidence that is against me, and I would desire your Lordship to resolve me some Questions upon it. I think the Indictment is for treasonable Practices, for a Conspiracy; now I desire your Lordship will be pleased that I may know from you and the Court, whether in all this Evidence given in Proof against me, a Conspiracy is proved; or if any Thing appears besides what they say I said.

L. C. J. For a Conspiracy in you, if the Witnesses speak Truth, there is a plain Proof, and of the Degrees of it: First of all, by your publishing Libels, and Pictures to make the King odious and contemptible in the Eyes of the People, and that you should be the Author of some of those Pictures, and they were found in your Custody.

Coll. I conceive that is not proved.

L. C. J. If the Witnesses say true, it is proved.

Coll. They do not produce that, they do but say it.

L. C. J. Mr. Dugdale swears, That at Oxford here, you shewed him the Picture, you sung the Song here, and expounded it at my Lord Lovelace's, and a great many of them are found in your Custody. Then that you prepared Arms, that you shewed Smith the Arms of your House, and having those Arms, you said, you would go to Oxford, and if there should be a Disturbance there, you would secure the King. And you did come to Oxford, where you hear what is said; for I observe Stephen Dugdale and Edward Turberville speak of what was done at Oxford. John Smith and Bryan Haynes speak of what you said at London before you went to Oxford, and after you came from Oxford. Now I say, if these Witnesses speak true, 'tis a strong Evidence against you, both upon the Statute of the 25th of Edw. the IIIrd, and that of this King too. For my Brother Holloway told you true, That whereas the imagining the Death of the King is High-Treason, by the 25th of Edw. the IIIrd. so a seizing of the King, and endeavour to do that, is a constructive Intention of the Death of the King; for Kings are never Prisoners, but in order to their Death. And therefore it hath been held in all Times, that by the Statute of Edw. the IIIrd that was Treason; but then the Statute of this King, in the 13th Year of his Reign, is more strong; for there it says, If any Man shall by any Words, or malicious speaking shew the Imagination of his Heart, that he hath any such Intention, that is Treason too.

Coll. My Lord, the Foundation of this Indictment is said to be laid here in Oxford, as I suppose; pray, my Lord, here is only Mr. Dugdale and Turberville that swear against me for what I should say in Oxon, all the rest speak to Things said and done at London. Now, my Lord, I desire to know whether they have proved any Treasonable Practices, Conspiracy or Design in me against the Government, I would fain know that, whether there be Matter here to ground an Indictment upon; for the one says in one Place, the other in the other, which may be distinct Matters, and none of them swear Facts against me, but only Words.

Mr. Just. Jones. Yes, providing Arms for your self, and offering others Arms.

Coll. That I shall make this Answer to, I had only a Case of Pistols and a Sword, which every Footman and Horseman had, that came from London, I think. But further, my Lord, I would ask your Lordship, whether there ought not to be two Witnesses distinct, to swear Words at one and the same Time.

Mr. Just. Jones. No, no, the Resolution of the Judges in my Lord Stafford's Case is quite contrary.

L. C. J. Look you, it hath been often resolved, That if there be one Witness that proves one Fact which is an Evidence of Treason; and another proves another Fact, which is an Evidence of the same Treason, though they be but single Witnesses to several Facts, yet they are two Witnesses to an Indictment of Treason, that hath been often publicly resolved, particularly in the Case of my Lord Stafford, mentioned by my Brother. And I'll tell you my Opinion further, If there be one Witness that proves here what you said at Oxford, and another that proves what was said in London, if they be in order to the same Treason, it is sufficient; for if you do conspire to commit such a Treason in London, and you come with such an Imagination in your Heart to Oxford to complete this Treason, though your Design was not first formed here, I think 'tis enough to maintain an Indictment of Treason, and they are two good Witnesses, though but one speak to what was done at Oxford; but I must tell you, in your Case, there are two full Witnesses, to that which was done at Oxford, besides Sir William Jennings.

Coll. That which Sir William Jennings speaks of I told you before what it was I said, It was the first Blood that was shed for the Parliament.

Mr. Just. Jones. The Parliament was dissolved before that which Sir William Jennings speaks of, therefore you could not say it was to defend the Parliament.

Coll. Mr. Dugdale did say that I spake such and such Words in the Barber's Shop in the Angel-Inn; there I was indeed at the Time that he does speak of, and the Barber was by, I do think indeed it were convenient to have him here; but I know not where he would charge me, or what it was he would charge me with, because I never said any thing in my Life that was like Treason.

L. C. J. Mr. Colledge, call what Witness you will.

Coll. But, my Lord, pray let me ask you one Question more; You take these Words distinct from any Matter of Fact, don't you?

L. C. J. No, complicated with the Fact, which was the Overt-Act, the coming to Oxon, with Pistols to make one, if there had been any Disturbance, and to seize the King.

Coll. Then, my Lord, I would ask you, Whether any Act of Treason done at London, shall be given in Evidence to prove the Treason for which I am now indicted, and which was given in Evidence before the Grand Jury, upon which the Trial was grounded.

L. C. J. Any Act of Treason that is of the same kind. And I'll tell you, That was resolved in Sir Henry Vane's Case; those that gave you that Paper understand it. But I speak now to your Capacity, and to satisfy your Question. He was indicted for levying War against the King, he conspired in Westminster, the War was levied in another County; the Conspiracy upon the Trial was proved in the County of Middlesex, and the War in another Place, and yet it was held sufficient to maintain the Indictment in the County of Middlesex.

Coll. There was a War really levied; but God be thanked, here are only bare Words.

Mr. Just. Jones. Yes, Actions too.

Coll. What Actions, my Lord?

Mr. Just. Jones. Arming yourself, and coming to Oxford.

L. C. J. Well, I have told you my Opinion; my Brothers will speak their's, if they think otherwise.

Mr. Just. Jones. That is not your Case neither, though I am of the same Opinion with my Lord; for here are two Witnesses have proved plain Matter of Fact at Oxford; the providing Arms yourself, and encouraging others to take Arms.

Coll. They name no Persons.

Mr. Just. Jones. You will have my Opinion, and yet you will give me no leave to speak; I had Patience to hear you: You are told there are two Witnesses, Turberville and Dugdale, that prove your providing and having of Arms at Oxon, and persuading others to take Arms, particularly Turberville. He told you, he had no Arms, or but a Case of Pistols, and he had no Horse; but you told him you would provide him an Horse. And then there are two other Witnesses, Smith and Bryan Haynes; they do not tell you of any thing done at Oxford, but they tell you what you said in their Hearing of what you had done in Oxon, and so I think, if the Witnesses are to be believed, there is a very full Proof against you.

Mr. Just. Raymond. I am of the same Opinion truly, and I cannot find, but that there is Proof enough by two Witnesses, Turberville and Dugdale, of what was done at Oxford. They swear Matter of Fact, not Words only, but Actions also.

Coll. No Fact, but that I had Pistols and a Sword, and that I should tell Mr. Turberville I would provide him an Horse, which is still but Words.

Mr. Just. Jones. But you shall hear anon for the full Conviction of you and all others, the Statute of the 13th of this King read to you, and you shall then see that such Words are made Treason.

Coll. But I beseech your Lordship to tell me, whether there must not be two Witnesses to the same Words at the same Time.

Mr.

Mr. Just. Jones. No, it was the Resolution of all the Judges in the Case of my Lord Stafford in the Presence of the Parliament, and the Parliament proceeded upon it.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. In the same Trial where Mr. Colledge was a Witness.

Mr. Att. Gen. All the whole House of Commons prayed Judgment upon my Lord Stafford, pursuant to that Resolution.

L. C. J. Come, will you call any Witnesses?

Coll. My Lord, I do not question but to prove this one of the hellishest Conspiracies that ever was upon the Face of the Earth, and these the most notorious wicked Men, an absolute Design to destroy all the Protestants of England, that have had the Courage to oppose the Popish Plot. In which no Man of my Condition hath done more than I have done. I was bred a Protestant, and continued so hitherto, and by the Grace of God I will die so. If that they had known of these Words that I should speak, and such a Design that I should have before the Parliament sat at Oxon, and be with me in Oxon when the Parliament sat, if they had been good Subjects, they ought to have had me apprehended. Turberville came several times indeed, and dined with me. I did not bid him go out of Doors, nor invited him thither; he was a Man I had no Disrespect for; nay, he was a Man I valued, thinking he had done the Nation Service against the Papists; that this Man should hear me speak such Words against his Majesty, who was then in this Town, and know of a dangerous Design to attempt the seizing his Person, or that I should discover a great Party that were ready to do it, I think there is scarce any Man of Reason, but will say, if this were really done and spoken by me, neither of them would or ought to have concealed it, but discover it; none of them has ever charged me with any such thing, they have been in my Company since. I never had any Correspondence with any of them but Dugdale; then pray consider how improbable it is, that I should talk of such things to Papists, Priests, and Irishmen, who have broke their Faith with their own Party, that Faith which they gave under the Penalty of Damnation; Men that have been concerned in Plots and Treasons, to murder and cut the Throats of Protestants, that I should be such a Madman to trust these People, when I could receive no manner of Obligation from them, nor could give any Trust to them, they having before broke their Faith; especially considering I could lay no such Oaths and Obligations upon them, who was a Protestant; then 'tis the greatest Nonsense, to believe that I would say these things before Persons whom I could never hope would conceal my Treasons, having discovered their own. If they speak Truth concerning the general Popish Plot, that could be no Obligation upon me to trust them with another; and they cannot say, that they ever obliged me in any respect. My Lord, I thank God, I have had some Acquaintance in the World, and have been concerned with some Persons of Honour, Noblemen, and Parliament-Men, that I know are as good Subjects as any his Majesty has; these never found me a Fool, nor a Rascal, so great a Knave as to have any such Thoughts in my Heart, nor so great a Madman, or so foolish, as to go to discover them to Papists, Priests and Irishmen, to Men of their Condition, that were ready to starve for Bread. As for Haynes and Smith that run so fast through all their Evidence, the first time that ever I set my Eyes on Haynes, was in the Coffee-House that he speaks of; Macnamarra comes in, and desires me to go out with him, and I should hear the greatest Discovery of a piece of Villainy against my Lord Shaftesbury's Life, that ever I heard in my Life. This Captain Brown, who is now dead, a Man that I had known but a Month before (for I think it was in March last when this was) could testify for me; for I came to him, Captain said I, here is a Discovery offered to be made to me, of a Design to take away my Lord Shaftesbury's Life. Macnamarra asks me to go to the Hercules-Pillars, I went along with him, and took Captain Brown with us. Afterwards he fell sick in April, and is now dead, so I lost a main Evidence in the case. He was the only Man that was by at the Time; God knows my Heart, I speak nothing but the Truth, I took him with me; Haynes began to discover to us, that Fitzgerald had employed him to fetch over Macnamarra, and if he would come in, and swear against my Lord of Shaftesbury, which was his Design, it would not be long ere his Head were taken off, and he said, he had given in a Paper of High-Treason against my Lord of Shaftesbury. I asked what it was? He told me, that my Lord should tell Fitzgerald, that he had a Design to bring this Kingdom to a Commonwealth, and to root out the Family of the Stuarts. This he said Fitzgerald had given in in a Paper, under his own Hand; and I think he said, he had sworn it, and sent Haynes to fetch Macnamarra to swear against my Lord the same things too. I writ down all the Heads of the Discourse, which Capt. Brown heard as well as I. After he had said it, he desired us to conceal it. Sir, said I, You are a Stranger to me, and these are great and strange things that you do tell us; Macnamarra, and Brown, and Ivy, and others were there, which (if they were honest Men) they would come and testify. I thought them honest Men, and that they had none of those wicked Designs in their Hearts, that now I find they have. So, says, Haynes, I do not know this Man, meaning me: Macnamarra told him, I was an honest Man, he might lay his Life in my Hands. After he had spoken all this, he desired us to conceal it: Said he, I will not only discover this, but a great deal more of their Rogueries, that I know very well. Said I to him again, I will not conceal it, nor do you no wrong; for if this be true, my Lord Shaftesbury shall know it to Night: for where there is a Design to take away a Peer of the Realm, I will not conceal it; but if it be false, and you have said more than comes to your share, recant it again, and we will take no notice of it, only say you are a Knave for speaking of it; he swore, Damn him, it was all true, that, and a great deal more, which he said he knew, about seizing and destroying the Parliament at Oxon, about an Army in the North that was to be raised about the Time of the Sitting of the Parliament at Oxon, of a French Army that was to land in Ireland at the same Time, that the Duke of York was to be at the Head of them, and the Intention was to destroy all the Protestants. Upon this, I was resolved, if I lived, to come along with the Parliament, and if there was any such Design, I was resolved to live and die with them; but I had no more than common Arms, a Sword and a Case of Pistols; my Cap was a Velvet-Cap, and nothing else. My Lord, I had the Honour to be sent for, when the Parliament sat last at Westminster, the Sessions in October, it was an honourable Occasion; and I thank those worthy Gentlemen that sent to me, for the Honour of it; there I began to be popular as to my Name; for from that Time they began to call me the Protestant Joiner, because the Parliament had entrusted me. My Lord Grey was pleased to send his Footman for me to the Crown-Tavern behind the Exchange, where there were several worthy Lords, Peers of the Realm, and one hundred of the Commons, that had dined there that Day, it was the Day before they sat, after they had dined I came to them, and the Duke of Monmouth told me, They had heard a good Report of me, that I was an honest Man, that understood Building, and they did confide in me to search under the Parliament-House; they did not really know of any Design, but they would not be secure, there might be some Tricks play'd them by the Papists; though we are not afraid of them, said the Duke, yet we think fit to employ you to search under the Houses, and thereabouts, whether you can find any such Practices. So accordingly, my Lord, I did go; my Lord Lovelace was one of the Honourable Lords and my Lord Herbert that went with me, and some of the Gentlemen of the House of Commons; and those worthy Protestant Lords were pleased to thank me for my Service, and did believe I was active and zealous to find out and discover the Bottom of the Popish Plot, so far as it came legally in my Way to do it. My Lord, upon this Occasion there was a great Kindness from them to me, and I had upon all Occasions Testimonies of it; and this very Man who swears Treasons against me (which God Almighty knows is all false) did swear in his Affidavit before Sir George Treby the Recorder of London (I did never see the Affidavit, indeed I was over-night at Sir George Treby's, but he was not then at leisure, but he drew it up next Day, and swore it) that there was a Design to destroy the Parliament at Oxon, and there was not only his Oath for it, but it was the general Belief, that some Evil was intended them. All Men had Cause to fear and to suspect, the Papists did bear them no Good-Will; and making use of their own Observations, they were generally armed with a Pistol, or a Sword, for themselves, in case they should be attacked by the Papists. In order to this, I did come down with my Lord Howard, my Lord of Clare, my Lord of Huntingdon, and my Lord Pagett, those four worthy Protestant Lords, and it was two Days after the Parliament was sat, that we came, and I went out of Town again with my Lord Lovelace, Sir Thomas Player, and Sir Robert Clayton; and I am sure they were in so great a Fear that London should be surprized and seized on by the Papists, but there was no mortal Man that ever heard of the King's being seized, or thought of it, till these Men come and tell me, that I had such a Design, and came hither with that Purpose; but, my Lord, I declare, as God is my Judge, I would not have it thought I speak it to save my Life, were it as certainly a Truth, as 'tis most wickedly a Falshood, that I had a Design to seize the King, I know not of one Man upon the Face of the Earth, that was to stand by me, Parliament-man or other Person whatsoever; and how is it possible for me to attempt that, being a single Person, with only a Sword and a Case of Pistols, let any Man judge. And I do declare, I know of no Conspiracy or Design against the King or Government, I never spoke one of the treasonable Words in my Life, that is laid against me, nor had ever any Thoughts of any such Thing. God, that is my eternal Judge, knows, that what I speak is true.

L. C. J. Well, Mr. Colledge, will you call your Witnesses, for I must tell the Jury as I did at your Request concerning Mr. Attorney, that as nothing he said, so nothing you say is to be believed upon your Allegation: for then no Man would ever be guilty, if his own Purgation by Words were to be believed.

Coll. My Lord, I thank God, I know my own Innocency, and hope to prove it. I have a Soul that must live to Eternity, either in Joy or Misery; I act according to those Principles, and I hope I have some Assurance of my own Salvation when I die, I would not call God to witness a Lie, to save a thousand Lives. My Lord, this is a villainous Conspiracy against me, and if it takes place against me, it may go a great way, God knows how far: This is the 17th or 18th Sham-Plot the Papists have made against the Protestants, to get over their own; but I hope, my Lord, God Almighty will never suffer it. If they can make me a Traitor, they will try it upon others, and so hope to sham off their own Treasons; but I say, I hope God Almighty will never suffer it. My Lord, I think the first Witness that swore against me was Mr. Dugdale; and I must call my Witnesses as I have them here; I know no Person of them hardly, and this that is done for my Defence was done abroad. My Lord I have been kept close Prisoner in the Tower, and none of them suffered to come to me, whilst the Popish Lords have had the Liberty and Privilege to talk with their Friends. Here are Witnesses, I hope, will prove that these are suborned Men; for Macnamarra did tell me presently after the Parliament broke up at Oxon, and whispered it to me in the Coffee-House, said he, there is a Design laid to make us retract our Evidence, and go over to Fitzgerald. Said I, I suppose they have been at that Sport a great while. Ay, said he, they make large Offers. Said I, by whom? Said he, Colonel Warcup hath been at me, and tells me—

Mr. Just. Jones. Macnamarra is not produced as a Witness at all.

Coll. No, but he told me this, that there was such a Design, and, said he, I will get you and some other honest men; and he desired me to be by when he had something more to tell which would do his Business for him, but the next News I heard of him was, he was put into Newgate.

L. C. J. Call your Witnesses, Mr. Colledge, and prove what you can.

Coll. Call Mr. Hickman.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I desire he may observe the same Rule he do fired about our Witnesses; that he may call but one at a time.

Coll. Yes, yes, I will call them one by one.

L. C. J. Are not your Witnesses together? send to them.

Coll. My Lord, I don't know, I have not seen one since I come. This is not the first Time, my Lord, the Papists have designed to take away my Life, though it is the first Time they went about to take it away by Law.

L. C. J. I know not one Papist that is a Witness against you.

Coll. There is never a Man of them, except Sir William Jennings, but what was a Papist.

Mr. Att. Gen. What say you to Mr. Masters?

Coll. Mr. Masters says nothing material, it was only a jocose Discourse.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. It was very pleasant Discourse, upon my Word; you were as merry as when you were singing of the Rary Shew.

Mr. Just. Jones. What do you make Mirth of the blackest Tragedy that ever was; that horrid Rebellion, and the Murther of the late King?

Coll. I never justified that Parliament in any such Thing that they did contrary to Law.

Mr. Just. Jones. He swears it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Hickman does not appear, call another.

Coll. Call William Shewin, (who appeared.)

L. C. J. Look you here Friend, you are not to be sworn; but when you speak in a Court of Justice, you must speak as in the Presence of God, and only speak what is true.

Coll. I would not have any Body speak any Thing for me, but what is Truth.

L. C. J. Now ask him what you will.

Coll. I don't know the Gentleman. But pray, Sir, will you tell what you know of these Witnesses?

Mr. Shewin. Name any of them that I know, pray, Sir, I'll tell you.

Coll. Do you know Bryan Haynes?

Mr. Shewin. I know there is such a Man, but I have nothing to say to him.

Coll. Do you know Turberville?—Mr. Shewin. Yes.

Coll. Pray tell what you know of him.

Mr. Shewin. My Lord, I was in Turberville's Company on Thursday Night last at the Golden Posts at Charing-Cross, and there I heard him say, that if I were at Oxford I should hear strange Things against Colledge, and he would lay ten to one that Mr. Bethel and Mr. Wilmore should be hanged at Christmas, and he would lead him by the Gold Chain along Fleet-Street, and down with his breeches in the middle of the Coffee-House, with a Band about his Neck and a Cloak.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did he say all these Things against Mr. Sheriff Bethel? I assure you he is a bold Man.

Coll. What do you know of Mr. Smith?

Mr. Shewin. I know him by Sight, but I have nothing in particular to say concerning him. I have something to say to Macnamarra, Sir, if he were here.

Coll. Do you know any Thing of this Conspiracy in general?

Mr. Just. Jones. What of your Conspiracy?

Mr. Shewin. I know they did lay who should be hanged at Candlemas, who at Christmas, and who at several other Times.

L. C. J. What did you hear Mr. Turberville say?

Mr. Shewin. Those Words I spake before about Sheriff Bethel, and about the Amsterdam Coffee-House.

Coll. Did they say what Time I should be hanged? For the Discourse rose about me.

Mr. Shewin. One told me that there was one that did design to be returned upon this Jury, that was resolved to hang him right or wrong.

Mr. High-Sheriff. My Lord, I did hear there was such a one, and I left him out of the Jury.

L. C. J. For Mr. Sheriff's Honour, we must take Notice of what he hath said. He says he heard of a Man that spoke something of that Nature, and therefore he left him out of the Jury.

Coll. Now 'tis possible these Witnesses were at the same Sport.

Mr. Shewin. Was Mr. Peacock, Mrs. Fitz-Harris's Maid's Father, or the here, either of them Witnesses against you?

Mr. Serj. Jeff. No, they were not, Sir.

Coll. They did swear against me at the finding of the Bill.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. We have only called these Witnesses, if you can say any Thing against them, do.

Coll. Call Henry Hickman, (who appeared.)

Mr. Serj. Holloway. Where do you live, Sir?

Mr. Hickman. At Holborn-Bridge.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Trade are you?—Mr. Hickman. A Cabinet-maker.

L. C. J. What do you ask him?

Coll. Do you know Haynes?

Hickman. Yes, very well; because he used to come to my House to a Popish Widow that was a Lodger in my House where I live now; and this Person was a Prisoner at Haynes's when he was a Prisoner in the Fleet. I always had a Suspicion he was a Priest, not that I could accuse him really of any Thing, but he several Times using to come to my House, I thought so of him, and discoursing with my Landlady.

L. C. J. Your Tenant you mean?

Mr. Hickman. Yes, my Tenant. I asked her, what this Fellow was; said she, he is a very dangerous Fellow, though he is a Papist, and I am one myself, yet he is a dangerous Person, and he does not much care what he swears against any one.

Mr. Just. Jones. This your Tenant told you, what do you know yourself?

Mr. Hickman. Another Time he came to speak with my Tenant Mrs. Scot, who is now gone into Ireland; when he came to the House, he asked me, is Mrs. Scot within? Yes, said I, Mr. Haynes, she is above; and up he goes and there they locked the Door, and plucked out the Key; so I went off my Shoes, for I thought there might be more Danger from such people than I could discover any other Way. So I went up Stairs, and stood at the Door, and hearkened, hearing my Landlady talk something to him, he raps out a great Oath, God damn me, said he, I care not what I swear, nor who I swear against; for 'tis my Trade to get Money by swearing. Whereupon, my Lord, I came down as fast as I could, and a little after saw him go out, and as soon as my Landlady came down, said I, Mrs. Scot, I desire you would provide yourself as soon as you can; I would be civil to you, and I would not put you to a Nonplus, because your Goods by the Law will be seized for not departing according to the King's Proclamation. So a while ago since this Business of Haynes's swearing against my Lord of Shaftesbury, I bethought myself of some other Businesses I had heard: To find out the Knavery I went to the Fleet, where he hath very ill Character as well amongst the Papists as the Protestants. Whereupon I asked one Fellow that was a Kind of a Porter, if he knew any Thing of him; said he, Go to such an one—

Mr. Serj. Jeff. We must not permit this for Example sake, to tell what others said.

L. C. J. Nothing is Evidence, but what you know of your own Knowledge; you must not tell what others said.

Hickman. This I do say, I heard him say; and there are those that can produce a Letter—

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Bring those People, but you must speak nothing, but upon your own Knowledge.

Hickman. I was at the Chamber-Door, and looked in at the Key-Hole, and he sat down at the Window.

L. C. J. How long ago was it, pray?—Hickman. A Year and a half.

Mr. Att. Gen. You are an Eves-dropper I perceive.

Hickman. I did not know what Danger he might bring Men into, because he was a Papist. I have taken an Oath to be true to the King, and I will as long as I live. For this Gentleman, I never beheld him till last Night, in all my Days; though he lived by me, I never saw him.

L. C. J. Well, call the next.

Coll. I never saw this Gentleman; but you see what Haynes hath declared.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. This Man says, he did say so.

Coll. And, for ought I perceive, he does accordingly. Call Elizabeth Oliver. (Who appeared.)

L. C. J. Mrs. Oliver, stand up. What do you ask her?

Coll. Do you know Haynes, pray? Bryan Haynes?—Mrs. Oliver. Yes.

Coll. Pray tell the Court what you know of him.

Mrs. Oliver. I know him very well.

L. C. J. What do you know of him?

Mrs. Oliver. He writ a Letter in my Father's Name, unknown to my Father.

L. C. J. Did you see him write it?—Mrs. Oliver. I saw him write it.

L. C. J. Read it. By whom is it subscribed?—Clerk. By no body.

L. C. J. Why, how is it written in your Father's Name, when it is not subscribed at all?—Mrs. Oliver. He writ it as from my Father.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Whither did he bring it?

Mrs. Oliver. He sent it into the Country.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Can you write and read, Mistress?

Mrs. Oliver. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Who did he send it by?—Mrs. Oliver. The Carrier.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. When is it dated?—Clerk. In 77.

L. C. J. Read the Letter, (Which was done.)

Clerk reads.

L. C. J. What is all this to the Purpose, unless your Father were here to prove it was done without his Knowledge?

Mrs. Oliver. My Father did not write it.

L. C. J. Was your Father in the Fleet then?

Mrs. Oliver. Yes, my Lord, he was a Prisoner then.

Coll. Mrs. Oliver, do you know any thing more of him?

Mrs. Oliver. I have known him a great while; I know him to be a very ill Man.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Must she tell you all she knows?

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ever know him forswear himself?

Mrs. Oliver. No, I don't know that.

L. C. J. Come, call another; this is nothing to the Purpose.

Coll. Call Mrs. Hall. (Who appeared.) Pray, do you know Mr. Bryan Haynes?—Mrs. Hall. Yes, if I see him I know him very well.

Coll. What do you know of him?

Mrs. Hall. He lodged at my House, and came there the Day before Fitz-Harris was tried, and there was a great Discourse about his Trial, and I was enquiring of him; and I told him, I must expose my Ignorance, I did not know what it was he was tried for: And said he, if you please to sit down, I will tell you: Madam Portsmouth came to him, and went upon her Knees, and begged of him, if he had any Kindness for his Majesty, that he would now shew it at this Juncture; and she told him she heard he had formerly Acquaintance with one Mr. Everard abroad, and therefore desired him to go now and renew it, and endeavour to get him over; and, if he could possibly, to get over some others to make a Presbyterian Plot of it. This is true, I very well know it; as for this Gentleman, I never saw his Face before; but those were the Words I am sure.

L. C. J. What were the Words?

Mrs. Hall. That they might make a Presbyterian Plot of it.

Coll. Did he say so?

Mrs. Hall. He said that the Duches of Portsmouth did so.

L. C. J. What a Story is this?

Coll. Did not he say, that the Duches of Portsmouth had employed him too?—Mrs. Hall. No, this was about Fitz-Harris.

Coll. What do you know more about Haynes?

Mrs. Hall. One Night he had been about some Business for me in Law with one Mr. Woodward, an Attorney at Law, and when he returned I was busy in the Kitchen with my Maid about the House, and he came up to me; Madam, said he, this Night I had a Message from the King; a Justice of Peace met me, one brought me Word, that the King had sent into Ireland to enquire into the Loyalty of my Family, and he hath heard, that my Father was a loyal Subject, but he understood strange Things of me; but if I would come in, he would grant me my Pardon. I told him, said he, I did not value his Majesty's Pardon a Pin, for I had done nothing that might make me stand in need of it; but I would do any thing that might tend to the Preservation of his Majesty's Person or Honour; but to do such base Things as are beneath a Man, I will never do it; and he whispered me in the Ear (as the accusing of several Persons) and since he sent me a Letter by his Mother-in-Law, Mrs. Wingfield, that I should not believe it, if I heard he should accuse any body; but I might be confident he had not, nor would accuse any body.

Coll. Was he to swear against the Protestants?

Mrs. Hall. I did not enquire any Questions; but he said, such base Things he would never do as the accusing several Persons.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Mistress, did you believe him when he told you he was so honest a Man?

Mrs. Hall. How do you mean, Sir?

Mr. Att. Gen. When he said he would not do those base things, did you believe him?

Mrs. Hall. I never saw his Face before he came there to lodge; but I saw him to be a Man that made but little Conscience of what he said or swore.—Mr. Att. Gen. Did you find him a bragging Man?

Mrs. Hall. I had little Discourse, but what he said of himself. But there is one thing more about an Intelligence: When Thompson had written something in his Intelligence concerning Bryan Haynes, he said, he would write an Answer to it; and accordingly he reads it to us: He said, he was going that Evening to get it put into one of the Intelligences: The Words were to this Purpose: 'Whereas one Nathaniel Thompson had falsely and maliciously accused one Bryan Haynes for speaking treasonable Words; he the said Bryan Haynes doth declare, that he challenges any Man to charge him with it; but he owned he had an Hand, or was employed to put the Plot upon the dissenting Protestants.'

L. C. J. Did he publish that in the Intelligence?

Mrs. Hall. I never read it published; but he had writ it, and read it to us several times.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you you go to Church, Mistress?

Mrs. Hall. I hope I do.

Sir Geo. Jeff. To what Church?

Coll. Call Mary Richards, Mrs. Hall's Maid. (Who stood up.)

L. C. J. What will you ask her?

Coll. Do you know this Bryan Haynes, pray?

Richards. Yes, he lodged there where I lived.

Coll. What do you know of him?

Richards. I know he writ that in the Intelligence my Mistress spoke of; Thompson, in his Intelligence, accusing him of having spoken Treason, he reads what he said he would put into the Intelligence, That he never spake one Word of Treason, and he writ it for his own Vindication; that whereas Nathaniel Thompson, in his Intelligence of the 18th of June, had maliciously accused one Bryan Haynes of treasonable Words; there was no such thing.

L. C. J. And that was to vindicate him, that he never did speak any treasonable Words.

Richards. Yes.

L. C. J. Will you ask her any thing else?

Coll. I cannot tell what she says.

L. C. J. She says, he writ something that was in Answer to Thompson's Intelligence, to vindicate himself that he never did speak any treasonable Words.

Coll. But did you hear him say any thing of these Words, that he was employed in a Plot against the Protestants?

Richards. I read that, in what he writ to put in the Intelligence, that he challenged any one to appear, and charge him with Treason; but, said he, I own that I was employed, or had a Hand in putting the Plot upon the dissenting Protestants; and he telling my Mistress he had a Message from the King, offering him his Pardon, I asked him why he did not accept the King's Pardon? Alas! said he, you do not understand what I was to do for it; I was to do such base Things, so beneath a Man, that I will never do them: I had five hundred Pounds offered me, besides the King's Pardon, to do such base Things as are beneath a Man to do.

Coll. What were the base things he said he was to do, and would not do?

Richards. I cannot tell, he did not say to me what they were.

Mr. Att. Gen. When was this?

Richards. It was a Week before he was taken.

Mr. Att. Gen. That is two Months ago.

Coll. It was since the Parliament sat at Oxford: But what was that he was employed to do, did he say?

Rich. Why, he said in his Answer to the Intelligence, he was one that had an Hand to put the Plot upon the dissenting Protestants.

Coll. Call Mrs. Wingfield. (Who appeared.)

L. C. J. What is your Christian Name?

Mrs. Wingfield. Mary.

L. C. J. What do you ask her?

Coll. Do you know this Bryan Haynes, pray?

Mrs. Wingfield. Yes, very well.

Coll. What do you know of him?

Mrs. Wingfield. I know nothing of him, but he is an honest Man; he married my Daughter, and always carried himself like a Gentleman; he scorns the Thing that is unhandsome, and never did any thing that is unhandsome in his Life.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Pray how came you by this Witness? Have you any more of them?

Coll. I never saw her before, but I believe she hath said something else in another Place. Did you ever say the contrary, pray?

Mrs. Wingfield. Nobody can say so; and I had done the Gentleman a great deal of Wrong, if I had.

Coll. Call Mr. Whaley. (Who appeared.)

L. C. J. What is your Name, Sir?

Mr. Whaley. John Whaley.

Coll. Did you know Bryan Haynes?

Mr. Att. Gen. Where do you dwell, Sir?

Mr. Whaley. At the Hermitage, beyond the Tower.

Coll. I don't know you, Sir; but what do you know of him?

Mr. Whaley. I never saw you, Sir, till To-day; but that which I think I am called for is this, though it was upon Sunday that I received this same Subpœna to come down hither; but about six Years ago, Bryan Haynes was a Prisoner in the King's Bench, and he came down to the Cellar which I had taken of the Marshal to sell Drink in; and coming down to drink in one of the Rooms of the Cellar that belonged to me, he took away a Tankard, and went up with it. One of the Men followed him up; so I went to the Marshal to complain, and told him of it; and the Marshal took him from the Master's Side, and put him into the common Side. That is all I know of him any Way, directly or indirectly.

L. C. J. Why did you not indict him of it?

Mr. Whaley. I acquainted the next Justice of the Peace, who was the Marshal; and he put him from the Master's Side, into the common Side.

L. C. J. He was no good Justice of the Peace in the mean time.

Coll. Call Mr. John Lun. (Who appeared.)

Do you know Bryan Haynes, Mr. Lun?

Mr. Lun. I have seen him twice; the first Time I ever saw him was, I went into the Derby Ale-House, to enquire for one Micklethwayte, a Kinsman of mine, and there this Bryan Haynes was, in a little Room next the Ditch, near the Door that goes out there, as if he were asleep, and he roused himself up; and, as I was walking there, Sir, said he, will you take Part of a Tankard with me (that was his Expression.) With that, said I, I do not care if I do. And the first thing he began was the King's Health, then the Queen's, then the Duke of York's; then he fell very foul against the Grand Jury, because they had not found the Bill against Colledge, who is a Gentleman that I never saw before in my Life but once, as I know of: And he said, my Lord Shaftesbury was a little Toad, but he would do his Business very suddenly. Then he railed upon the Parliament, and said they were a Company of Rogues, they would give the King no Money, but he would help him to Money enough out of the Fanaticks Estates. And he said, they would damn their Souls to the Devil before their Catholick Cause should sink.

Mr. Serj. Holl. When was this?

Mr. Lun. It was three or four Days after the Bill was brought in Interimus by the Grand Jury.

Mr. Just. Jones. Was he alone?

Mr. Lun. Yes, he was.

Coll. Is that all you have to say?

Mr. Lun. One Thing more, my Lord. On Monday last I was at Uxbridge, and a Gentleman sent his Man on Purpose to let me know I must go to Colebrook, and stay till they came thither. When I came there, I met Bryan Haynes at the Crown Kitchen-Window, and he was stirring a Glass of Brandy, and sweetning it with Sugar; said he, Sir, will you drink? Here is the King's Health to you: So I drank, and asked him how he did. Do you know me, Sir, said he? Yes, said I, I drank with you once. Says he, you have a good Memory: So then a Pint of Sack was called for, and after that another, and then came down Mrs. Peacock; and being very fine, all in her flowered Silks, I asked what Gentlewoman that was? Said he, it is Mrs. Fitz-Harris. No, says I, 'tis not; they say she is gone. But, said he, it is her Maid; and Sheriff Bethel is to marry her: As I have a Soul to save, I tell you nothing but what is Truth. Thereupon, said I, Sheriff Bethel is able to maintain her, he hath a good Estate: But, said he, it shall be the King's ere long.

Coll. So that here is a plain Design against all the Protestants.

Mr. Lun. So with that, my Lord, if it please your Honour, I clapped my Groat down at the Bar, and went out of the Room. Nay, said he, let us have one Health more; and so he had his Tankard, and I had mine.

Haynes. I humbly desire you to call for Mr. White, the King's Messenger, who was by. I never saw the Man before he was at Uxbridge; and asking Mr. White who he was? said he, his Name is Lun, he was my Prisoner two Years.

L. C. J. What say you to the Discourse he talks of at Fleet-Bridge?

Haynes. My Lord, I am upon my Oath, and I never saw him in my Life before I saw him at Uxbridge.

Mr. Lun. I will take my Sacrament upon it, that what I have averred is true.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. I suppose you are both known, and then your Credit will be left to the Jury.

Mr. Att. Gen. There is Mr. White; pray swear him. (Which was done.)

L. C. J. Do you remember that Haynes asked who Mr. Lun was?

Mr. White. It was at the Bar of the Crown-Inn at Uxbridge; and I being there, Mr. Lun came into the Yard, and I knowing Mr. Lun, asked him how he did; he said he was glad to see me, and he called for a Pint of Sack to make me drink. Haynes stood by, and he asked who he was, and I told him; and we drank the King's Health; but for any thing of those Words that were spoken there, Sir, I did not hear one Word of them; but he thanked me for my Civility when I summoned him up to the Court; and seeing Mr. Haynes by, he asked who he was?

Mr. Serj. Jeff. And you take it upon your Oath, that he asked who Haynes was?

Mr. White. Yes, I do.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Pray, did you hear any Discourse that Time, as if there had been a Meeting upon Fleet-Bridge?

Mr. White. Not one Word of that.

Mr. Lun. I will take the Sacrament upon it, what I say is true.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. We know you, Mr. Lun; we only ask Questions about you, that the Jury may know you too, as well as we. We remember what once you swore about an Army.

Coll. I don't know him.

Mr. Lun. I don't come here to give Evidence of any Thing but the Truth; I was never upon my Knees before the Parliament for any thing.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Nor I neither for much; but yet once you were, when you cried, Scatter them, good Lord.

Mr. Coll. Call Mr. Broadgate.

L. C. J. What is your Christian Name, Sir?

Mr. Broad. Jeremiah.

L. C. J. What do you ask him?

Mr. Broadg. My Lord, I am a Stranger to the Prisoner at the Bar, what I have to say is concerning Mr. Turberville, whom I met one Day, and he asked me how I did? Said he, I owe you a little Money, but I will pay you in a short Time; but if you will go to drink a Glass of Ale. No, said I, I am in haste, and do not care for going to drink. Said he, you shall go; so away we went, and when we were fat, said he, When did you see Turberville, that was my Lord Powis's Butler; said he, he was a great Rogue to me, and when I stood up for the Nation's good, he vilified my Evidence, and afterwards he came to me with Dr.

to beg my Pardon; but I would not forgive him for the whole World. And, speaking of the King's Evidence, said he, the King's Evidence are looked upon as nothing, as poor inconsiderable mean Fellows, and their Salaries are lessened; and, said he, I have had the greatest Professions from Court of Preferment and Rewards, if I would go from what I have said, and come upon the contrary; and he repeated it, yes, upon the Faith of a Man, and from the highest: But, said he, I have a Soul and a Body for a Time, but my Soul for Eternity, and I cannot go from what I have said; I might have what I would, if I would go from what I have said, and come upon the contrary.

Mr. Att. Gen. But he does not go from any thing of what he hath said.

Coll. Did he say what he was offered, and by whom?

Mr. Broadg. He said, he had very great Offers from the Court if he would disown the Plot, and go upon the contrary.

L. C. J. But he does not disown it?

Mr. Just. Jones. Nay, he had a Soul to save, and could not go from what he said.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. You talk of the contrary, and the contrary; What do you mean by that? What Plot should he disown?

Mr. Broadg. The popish Plot.

L. C. J. He does not disown it, nor never did disown it.

Coll. He would make a Presbyterian Plot of it now, for he cannot go from what I have said. Sir, do you know any thing more of him? Or that he was to swear against me, or any Protestant?

Mr. Broadg.

Mr. Broadg. No, only he said the King's Evidence were vilified, and looked upon as poor inconsiderable Fellows; but it seemed, if he would go on the other Side, he might have great Preferments and Rewards.

L. C. J. You make a wrong Comment upon it, Mr. Colledge; it was if he would retract his Evidence, and disown the Plot.

Coll. I leave it to your Lordship and the Jury, to make the Sense of it.

Mr. Broadg. I saw Mr. Turberville since I came hither, and he asked, Are you come, Mr. Broadgate, to give Evidence against me? Says I, I am come to declare the Truth, and nothing but the Truth.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. You might have staid at home for any Thing material that you do evidence.

Coll. Call Mr. Zeal. (Who appeared.)

L. C. J. What is your Christian Name, Sir?

Mr. Zeal. John.

L. C. J. What would you ask him?

Mr. Serj. Holl. Where do you dwell, Sir?

Mr. Zeal. In London.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Whereabouts?

Mr. Zeal. In Fetter-Lane.

Mr. Serj. Holl. What Countryman are you, Sir?

Mr. Zeal. Somersetshire.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whereabouts in Somersetshire were you born?

Mr. Zeal. By Sir William Portman's, within six Miles of him.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What Trade, Sir?

Mr. Zeal. No Trade.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Have you any Estate?

Mr. Zeal. My Father has. I was bred to wait upon a Person of Quality.

Coll. Do you know Turberville, Sir?

Mr. Zeal. Yes, Sir, I do.

Coll. What do you know of him?

Mr. Zeal. Sir, I know nothing but what Mr. Ivy told me with his own Mouth.

L. C. J. Do you know any Thing of your own Knowledge?

Mr. Att. Gen. Has Mr. Turberville told you any Thing?

Mr. Zeal. Not concerning Mr. Colledge he has not.

Coll. Ivy was amongst them.

Mr. Zeal. Yes, my Lord, he was the first that swore this Presbyterian Plot.

L. C. J. We know of no Presbyterian Plot.

Coll. Can you say any thing of your own Knowledge concerning Turberville?

Mr. Zeal. Nothing but what Mr. Ivy told me.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. That is not of your own Knowledge, and so it is nothing, for he is not produced in this Cause.

Coll. Pray, my Lord, give me Leave to call Mr. Ivy.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Do, if you will. (He stood up.)

Coll. What was that you heard Turberville say of me, or of any Presbyterian Plot?

Ivy. I never heard him say any thing concerning a Presbyterian Plot in my Life.

Coll. Did not you tell Zeal of such a Thing?

Ivy. No, I never did.

Coll. Hark you, Mr. Ivy, you have sworn against me, have you not?

Ivy. What I have sworn against you, or any other Person, is true.

Coll. What have you sworn against me?

Ivy. I am not bound to answer you.

Coll. Did not you call me out with Macnamarra and Haynes, to the Hercules Pillars?

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Colledge, I will tell you something for Law, and to set you right; whatsoever Witnesses you call, you call them as Witnesses to testify the Truth for you; and if you ask them any Questions, you must take what they have said as Truth: Therefore you must not think to ask him any Questions, and afterward call another Witness to disprove your own Witness.

Coll. I ask him, was he the first Time with us, when I was called out of the Coffee-House to hear Haynes's Discovery?

L. C. J. Let him answer you if he will; but you must not afterwards go to disprove him.

Coll. If he were sworn against me, I would not ask him any Questions, for he is among them.

L. C. J. Ask him what you will.

Coll. I desire not if he have sworn against me, for truly I can't expect a good Answer from him; but he was by when Haynes made his Discovery.

L. C. J. Will you ask him any Questions?

Coll. I ask whether he hath given any Evidence against me any where?

Ivy. I am not bound to answer you.

L. C. J. Tell him if you have.

Ivy. Yes, my Lord, I have.

Coll. Then I think he is no good Witness for me, when he hath sworn against me.

Ivy. I have sworn against him and others. You know that you and have had a great many Intrigues about this Business in Hand, and how we dealt with Mr. Haynes.

L. C. J. Look you, he does not call you for a Witness for him, you can testify nothing, and so you must be quiet.

Coll. Call Mr. Lewes. (Who appeared.)

L. C. J. What is your Christian Name?

Mr. Lewes. William.

Coll. Pray, Mr. Lewes, what do you know about Turberville?

Mr. Lewes. I know nothing at all I assure you of him that is ill.

Coll. Do you know any thing concerning any of the Evidence that hath been given here?

Mr. Lewes. If I knew any thing relating to you, I would declare it; but I know something of Mr. Ivy; it has no Relation to you, as I conceive, but against my Lord of Shaftesbury.

L. C. J. You would call Ivy for a Witness, and now you call one against him; and that I told you, you must not do; but Ivy is not at all this Case.

Coll. Do you know any thing of the rest of them, Haynes, or Smith, Dugdale?

Mr. Lewes. No more than what Mr. Zeal told me was told him.

Coll. Do you know any Thing of a Presbyterian Plot?

Mr. Lewes. If the Court please to hear me, I will tell my Knowledge that; but I know nothing that affects him in the least, only that which concerns my Lord of Shaftesbury.

L. C. J. That is nothing to the Purpose, call another.

Mr. Lewes. There was not, to my Knowledge, a Word mentioned of your Name: I will do you all the Justice I can; if I knew any Thing concerning you, I would be sure to relate it.

Coll. I cannot say who can, or who cannot; I am a Stranger to all of it.

L. C. J. Well, call your next Witnesses.

Coll. My Lord, there was a Petition presented to the Common Council of London, wherein they set out, that they were tampered withal about a Plot against the Protestants.

L. C. J. A Petition, from whom?

Coll. I cannot tell from whom; from some of these Witnesses.

L. C. J. Who preferred and signed it?

Coll. Mr. Turberville was one. Pray call Dr. Oates.

L. C. J. The Prisoner calls upon you, Mr. Oates. What would you ask him, Mr. Colledge?

Coll. Where is the Petition to the Common Council, Doctor?

Dr. Oates. I have it in my Hand.

L. C. J. By whom was it presented?

Dr. Oates. It was given by Mr. Turberville and Mr. Macnamarra, to Mr. Wilmore.

L. C. J. Was you present when it was delivered?

Dr. Oates. Mr. Wilmore did deliver it to me before he was apprehended; for, being to come down as a Witness, he was taken up and committed to Prison.

L. C. J. Whose Hands are to it?

Dr. Oates. I know Mr. Turberville's Hand, he will not disown it.

Clerk reads. It is subscribed Edward Turberville, John Macnamarra.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Colledge, what Word is there in all this Petition that is a Contradiction to what they have said now?

Coll. I did not hear it, my Lord.

L. C. J. They say, they are constant Witnesses for the King against the Papists; and they have been tempted to unsay what they have said: How does that contradict what they say now?

Coll. I suppose they say they have been tempted to turn the Plot upon other People, and to make a Plot upon the Protestants.

L. C. J. They have been tempted, they say, by the Papists, to unsay what they have said; but the Jury heard it read, and will give it its due Weight. Will you ask Mr. Oates any Questions?

Coll. What do you know of Mr. Turberville?

Dr. Oates. As to Turberville, my Lord, a little before the Witnesses were sworn at the Old Baily, I met with Mr. Turberville, I was in a Coach, but seeing Mr. Turberville, I stepped out of the Coach, and spoke with him; for, hearing that he was a Witness, I did ask him, whether he was a Witness or no against Colledge? Mr. Turberville said, he would break any one's Head that should say so against him; for he neither was a Witness, nor could give any Evidence against him. So after he came from Oxon, I met with Mr. Turberville again; and hearing he had been there, I asked him if he had any thing against Colledge? He said, Yes, he had been sworn before the Grand Jury. Said I, did not you tell me so and so? Why, said he, the Protestant Citizens have deserted us; and God damn him, he would not starve.

L. C. J. Would he say so to you?

Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lord, he said those very Words.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. 'Tis Mr. Oates's saying, 'tis Mr. Turberville's Oath.

Dr. Oates. Several times he did repeat it; but when I asked him what he had sworn, he said, I am not bound to satisfy People's Curiosities.

L. C. J. What say you to it, Mr. Turberville?

Mr. Turb. My Lord, the first Part of the Doctor's Discourse in Part is true; I met him just at my Lodgings, and the Doctor alighted out of his Coach, and spoke to me, and invited me to come to my old Friends; for he told me, they had some Jealousy that I was not true to them: And he told me, if I would come to the King's Head Club, I should be received with a great deal of Kindness: And never afterwards did I speak with the Doctor a Tittle about any Evidence.

L. C. J. He said, you said you would break any one's Head, that said you were an Evidence against Colledge; for you were not, nor could be.

Mr. Turb. There was no such Thing said by me.

Mr. Att. Gen. Upon your Oath, did you tell him so?

Mr. Turb. Upon my Oath, I did not.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did you tell him that other Passage, when you swore you would not starve?

Mr. Turb. No, I did not.

Dr. Oates. Upon the Word of a Priest, what I say is true. My Lord, I do say, as I am a Minister, I speak it sincerely, in the Presence of God, this Gentleman did say these Words to me; which made me afraid of the Man, and I went my Ways, and never spake with him afterwards, nor durst I; for I thought he that would swear and curse after that Rate, was not fit to be talked with.

L. C. J. 'Tis very improbable that he should say so to you.

Mr. Turb. I always looked upon Dr. Oates as a very ill Man, and never would converse much with him.

L. C. J. Will you ask him any thing more?

Coll. Do you know any Thing of the rest, Doctor?

Dr. Oates. I know nothing of Turberville further, but that he did present this Petition, wherein he says, he lay under great Temptations to go on the other Side, and accuse some Protestants. And truly till I heard he was an Evidence at Oxon, after what he had said to me, I did not believe it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Doctor Oates, Mr. Turberville hath not changed Sides, you have; he is still an Evidence for the King, you are against him.

Dr. Oates. Mr. Attorney, I am a Witness for Truth, against Falshood and Subornation; and it can plainly be made to appear there is Subornation against the Protestants. And, moreover, my Lord—

L. C. J. Mr. Oates, you would do well to explain yourself.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. If there be any Subornation relating to Mr. Turberville, or any of the other Witnesses that have now sworn against Colledge, make it out, Doctor.

Dr. Oates. There is, my Lord, and there will be made further to appear in Time to come. To my own Knowledge, as to Mr. Smith, Mr. Colledge and Mr. Smith had some provoking Words passed betwixt them at Richard's Coffee-House, and Mr. Smith comes out and swears, God damn him, he would have Colledge's Blood. So, my Lord, when I met him, said I, Mr. Smith, you profess yourself to be a Priest, and have stood at the Altar, and now you intend to take upon you the Ministry of the Church of England, and these Words do not become a Minister of the Gospel: His Reply was, God damn the Gospel: This is Truth, I speak it in the Presence of God and Man.

L. C. J. Can you say any thing of any of the other Witnesses?

Dr. Oates. As for Mr. Dugdale, I was engaged for him for 50*l.* for last Lent-Assizes, he wanted Money to go down to the Assizes, having paid some Debts, and paid away all his Money; and so I engaged for 50*l.* that he borrowed of Richard the Coffee-man. After he came from Oxon, I called upon him to hasten to get his Money of the Lords of the Treasury, which, as near as I remember, was ordered him upon his Petition, for so I heard. And that Time, said he, Sir, I hear there is a great Noise of my being an Evidence: Against whom, said I: Against several Protestants, my Lord Shaftesbury, and others: Said I, I never heard any Thing of it: Says he, there is no Body hath any Cause to make any such Report of me, for I call God to Witnefs I know nothing against any Protestant in England. After that I met with Dugdale at Richard's Coffee-House, and pressing him for the Money, and he saying he had it not just then, but would pay it in a little Time: Mr. Dugdale, said I, you have gone, I am afraid, against your Conscience, I am sure against what you have declared to me: Said he, it was all along of Colonel Warcup, for I could get no Money else.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Oates is a thorough-paced Witnefs against all the King's Evidence.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. And yet Dr. Oates had been alone in some Matters, had it not been for some of these Witnesses.

Dr. Oates. I had been alone perhaps, and perhaps not; but yet Mr. Serjeant, I had always a better Reputation than to need their's to strengthen it.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Does any Man speak of your Reputation? I know no Body does meddle with it; but you are so tender?

Coll. Sir George, now a Man is upon his Life, I think you do not do well to affront his Witnesses.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. I do not affront him; but now, my Lord, pray give us leave to call our Witnesses. Mr. Smith, pray stand up.

L. C. J. Mr. Smith, do you hear what Mr. Oates hath said?

Mr. Smith. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then speak it again, Mr. Oates.

Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lord. I will speak it to his Face. He said coming out of Richard's Coffee-House, they having had some provoking Words, as I understood when I came in, God damn that Colledge, I will have his Blood: And, my Lord, when I did reprove him, and said to him, Mr. Smith, you have been a Priest, and stood at the Altar, and intend to be a Minister of the Church of England; these Words do not become a Minister of the Gospel; and he replied, God damn the Gospel; and he went away.

L. C. J. What say you to it, Mr. Smith?

Mr. Smith. Not one Word of this is true, upon my Oath. 'Tis a wonderful Thing you should say this of me; but I will sufficiently prove it against you, that you have confounded the Gospel, and denied the Divinity too.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Mr. Dugdale, you heard what was said against you?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, now Dugdale is come, I will tell you something more. There was a Report given out by Mr. Dugdale's Means, that Mr. Dugdale was poisoned; and in truth, my Lord, it was but the Pox. And this Sham passed throughout the Kingdom in our Intelligences; and this I will make appear by the Physician that cured him.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. That is but by a third Hand.

Dr. Oates. He did confess that he had an old Clap, and yet he gave out he was poisoned; but now, my Lord, as to what I said before of him, I was engaged for 50*l.* for Mr. Dugdale; do you own that?

Mr. Dugdale. I do own it.

Dr. Oates. I did press upon you to hasten the Payment of it.

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, you did.

Dr. Oates. And did not you come to me and tell me there was a Noise of your being an Evidence? It was in Time just before my Lord Shaftesbury was taken up.

Mr. Dugdale. I never spoke to you till you spake to me.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, he came and said to me, there is a Noise of my being an Evidence; now I had not heard it then, but the Day after I did hear it; and I did justify Mr. Dugdale, because he had said to me that he had nothing against any Protestant in England. So I did stand up in Vindication of him; but my Lord, after he had sworn at the Old Bailey, I met him again, and pressed him for the Money, and urged him with it, why he had sworn against Colledge, when he had told me so and so before; and he said it was all along of Colonel Warcup, for he could not get his Money else; and Colonel Warcup did promise he should have a Place at the Custom-House.

Mr. Dugdale. Upon the Oath I have taken, and as I hope for Salvation, it is not true.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Here is Dugdale's Oath against Dr. Oates's Saying.

Dr. Oates. Mr. Serjeant, you shall hear of this in another Place.

Mr. Att. Gen. 'Tis an unhappy Thing that Dr. Oates should come in against these Men that supported his Evidence before.

Mr. Dugdale. My Lord, I say further, if any Doctor † will come forth, and say he cured me of a Clap, or any such Thing, I will stand guilty of all that is imputed to me.

L. C. J. Mr. Colledge, will you call any other Witnesses?

Coll. My Lord, I think this is not fair Dealing with a Man for his Life; because these Men be upon their Oaths, and deny the Things again that my Witnesses prove; therefore what they swear must needs be taken for Truth: But if my Witnefs comes and says such a Thing upon the Word of a Minister, and in the presence of God, and which he is ready to maintain by an Oath, sure it is not to stand for nothing, nor to be hooted out of Court, because Mr. Dugdale denies it upon his Oath; I do suppose he will not acknowledge it. But, my Lord, I am the Prisoner, and cannot be heard as a Witnefs for myself: But God is my Witnefs; he hath said a great deal more to me formerly; and he hath told me, when I have seen him with Warcup, and asked him why he kept Company with Warcup, and others; said he, I know they are suspected Men, but I must keep Company with them to get my Money; what, would you have me starve? And when I lent him Money out of my Pocket, and trusted him with my Horse, I dur'd him for Money and could not get it; said I, Will you pay me the 5*l.* I lent you? He put me off; said he, I shall have it, for the Attorney General hath made up his Accounts, and is very kind to me. Why then, said I, why have you it not? said he, he is my Friend, and I do not question the getting of it; but here is new Work to be done, such Work as my Conscience will not serve me to do; there is more Roguery, they will never have done plotting, and counterplotting; but they will make a thousand Plots if they can to destroy the real one.

L. C. J. Can you prove this now?

Coll. No, it was spoken to myself; and nobody was by but myself.

L. C. J. Then you should not speak it. But you asked the Question whether a Man may not be believed upon his Word, as well as he that is upon his Oath. Your Witnesses are not upon their Oaths, but they may be Witnesses, and their Weight is to be left with the Jury; they will consider how improbable it is, that these Men should come, three Men to one Man, and all of them should speak that which would make themselves Rogues and Villains; and that one Man of them, Smith, should say such vile Words, as God damn him, he would have his Blood; and, God damn the Gospel: That Dugdale should confess he was wrought upon by Warcup to testify against his Conscience; and that Turberville should say to that Purpose, he would not starve; they have sworn the contrary, and so there are all these three Men's Oaths against one Man's Affirmation; but it must be left to the Jury.

Coll. There is his Affirmation against what they three say. He charges every one of them, and 'tis but the single denial of every one of them to his Charge.

L. C. J. 'Tis impossible they should own themselves such Villains to him.

Dr. Oates. They must be so, if they will do what they have undertaken. I hope my Word will be believed as soon as their Oaths.

Coll. It is not to be thought, but when they have sworn so against me, they will deny any such Thing when they are charged with it.

L. C. J. Have you done with your Witnesses? Or will you call any more?

Coll. What is said upon an honest Man's Word in the Face of a Court, is certainly to be believed as well as what is sworn.

L. C. J. 'Tis a Testimony, that is most certain, and must be left to the Jury, they must weigh one against the other. But pray, Mr. Colledge, will you call your Witnesses, for it begins to grow late?

Coll. There is Mr. Wilmore, that was a material Witnefs for me, who was Fore-man of the Grand Jury, that would not find the Bill upon this Evidence. What he had to say I don't know, but I am informed it was very material for me.

L. C. J. It will be enough for him to clear himself, for he is charged with High-Treason, and by two Witnesses too.

Coll. Call Alexander Blake.

L. C. J. What do you ask him?

Coll. Do you know John Smith?

Mr. Blake. Yes, Sir.

Coll. Pray will you tell the Court what you know of John Smith.

Mr. Blake. I suppose you mean this Gentleman. Mr. John Smith, Gent. came to me one Morning, and told me there was one Haynes under Examination, and this Haynes had discovered very material Things against some great Persons: This passed, and within few Days after I met Mr. Smith at the Exchange Coffee-house, and having saluted him, I desired him to drink a Glass of Wine, and so we went to the Sun-Tavern, and when we were there, I asked him, what his Sense was of Haynes and his Discovery? Said he, 'tis a Sham-Plot: I asked him, what he meant by that Sham-Plot: Said he, it is a Meal-Tub Plot. This is all that I know.

J. C. J. Would you ask him any Thing else?

Mr. Blake. I know nothing more.

Coll. Do you know any thing of Turberville or Dugdale?

Mr. Blake. Sir, I have no Acquaintance with him, nor desire it: But I was acquainted with this Gentleman, Mr. Smith, I know him very well.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. You say well, stand down.

Coll. Call Mr. Samuel Smith.

L. C. J. What ask you him?

Coll. What he knows of Mr. Smith.

Mr. S. Smith. Mr. John Smith and I have had an Intimacy and Acquaintance several Months, and since Mr. John Smith swore at the Old Bailey against Mr. Colledge, and was gone out of Town, several People have talked with me concerning him; and asking me what I thought of him? I told them, I believed he was an honest Man; however I would not believe otherwise till I knew a Reason of it. They told me, that he had sworn against Mr. Colledge, that he was to seize the King at the Parliament at Oxford, and that there was 1500 Barrels of Powder, and it was to carry on a Presbyterian Plot: Said I, I will never believe it, and the rather because he hath said to me often, there was a Popish Plot, but he does not believe any Presbyterian or Protestant Plot; and, said I, further, as to his giving any Evidence with Irishmen, I believe it less for that, for I have heard him often say, they were a Company of Rogues that had done the Protestant Interest more harm than ever they could do it good, and bid me have care of coming into their Company, and many other such Things that Mr. Smith here knows to be true. Then, my Lord, when Mr. Smith came home (for I was very impatient till he did come home, to hear every Day such Things said against him) I went to him to see him. Said I, Cousin Smith, I have had great Confronts about you since you went away, but I hope you can't be that ill Man you are represented to be, and truly I would be sorry it should be so: Pray, Cousin, said I, I have put every Man off with this, that I would suspend my belief of you, till I had spoken with you yourself; what is the Evidence you have given? They say you have sworn a Presbyterian Plot, or a Protestant Plot, a Design of seizing the King at Oxon, and of so many Barrels of Gun-powder that were provided. Says my Cousin, I did swear no such Thing, nor need a Word of any such Thing as a Protestant Plot, or a Presbyterian Plot, and pray do not believe it of me. No, said I, I thought you could swear any such Thing, because you have said often to me, you believe there was no such Thing. I do not believe it yet, said he; and as to what Colledge said, I did not believe it, for he did not believe it himself. And Mr. Smith told me after his return, that he did not know of any Protestant concerned in the Plot.

L. C. J. He does not say now 'tis a Protestant Plot.

Mr. S. Smith. So far from that, that he told me after his return, he did not know any Protestant concerned in the Plot.

L. C. J. Mr. Smith, thus I understand you: You say that he said to you, that he had not testified any Thing of a Protestant Plot, nor did believe there was any Protestant Plot, for he did not believe what Colledge said himself: So by that Discourse there seems he did not deny, but he had testified against Mr. Colledge; but he did not believe there was any Protestant Plot?

Mr. S. Smith. No, my Lord, he did not deny but he had sworn against Colledge.

Mr. Just. Jones. Nor that what he had said against Colledge was true?

Mr. S. Smith. No, my Lord, but he did not believe him, and he thought Colledge did not believe it himself.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. It seems Mr. Colledge thinks the whole Protestant Interest concerned in him.

L. C. J. The question is, Mr. Colledge, what you had in your Mind, not what was in the Mind of all the Protestants.

Mr. S. Smith. This, I do say, I would not speak more or less than the Truth, he did not deny but he had heard Colledge speak those Words he swore, but he did not believe him, and I think Mr. Smith hath said that at another time before Mr. Gardner.

Coll. If he knew of no Protestant Plot, it was very unlikely that I should attempt such a Thing myself.

Mr. S. Smith. My Lord, I find Mr. Smith hath been very passionate and very inveterate of late against other Men that he hath given me a very good Report of before; and when I was talking of this, I was saying, if it be true that People say of you, a Man goes in Danger of his Life to converse with you. Mr. Smith, said he, I do not care for all the Men between Wapping and Charing-Cross, there is never a Man that will forbear my Company, but would do or say as much as Colledge hath done or said.

Mr. J. Smith. 'Tis true, and I say so still.

Coll. 'Tis a Contradiction in itself, that there should be such a Design, and none but myself to do it. God my righteous Judge knows my Innocency.

Mr. Just. Jones. You might say those Words in Hopes they would be of your Party, and made so by your Libels and poisonous Pictures.

L. C. J. Come, call another Witness.

Coll. Call Mr. Tho. Gardner. But my Lord, how likely is it that I should say, that I would seize the King, when he, it seems, says, he did not believe there was one Man to stand by me?

L. C. J. What say you to this Gentleman?

Coll. I never saw him in my Life.

Mr. Gardner. Nor I you, Sir.

Coll. I know not three of all that come here.

L. C. J. Well, will you ask him any Thing?

Coll. Pray do you know Mr. Smith?

Mr. Gardner. Yes.

Coll. What do you know of him? Can you say any Thing concerning this Matter that is sworn against me of Treason?

Mr. Gardner. My Lord, that Day-Fortnight I think it was, Mr. S. Smith, the Gentleman that was just now up before me, sent for me to the Rummer in Queen-Street, to drink a Glass of Wine, where when I came, I found him and Mr. J. Smith, that is here, whom they call Narrative Smith, talking very briskly concerning one Colledge, I suppose that is the Gentleman, and the Jury that acquitted him, and he said that two or three of the Jurymen were Rascals and Villains; and, says he, they talk up and down the Town, as if I did intend to sham the Popish Plot, and to make a Protestant Plot, which, said he, I vow to God, and I will justify it before God and all the World, that I know of no Protestant Plot, nor is there any Protestant concerned in a Plot to my Knowledge, but this Colledge, and upon his Trial I believe he will be made appear to be more a Papist than a Protestant: But, says Mr. Smith to him, Now you are known to be a Witness in this Case, it will be a dangerous Thing for a Man to converse with you.

Coll. Will it be now known that I am a Papist? No Man could ever say so in this World.

Mr. Gardner. Says he, I care not what all the World says of me, and I do not value all the Men from Wapping to Charing-Cross, but that Man that will shun my Company, will say and do as much to the King as Colledge hath done. But then I was saying, methinks it seems an improbable Thing, that such a Man as Colledge should seize upon the King, or provide 1500 Barrels of Powder, and those other Things. Upon my Word, said he, with some Passion, clapping his Hand upon his Breast, when Mr. Colledge did say it, I did not believe a Word of it, and upon my Faith I believe Colledge himself did not believe it when he told me so.

Coll. Do you know any Thing more, Sir?

Mr. Gardner. No, indeed Mr. Colledge.

Coll. Call Dr. Oates again.

L. C. J. Well, what say you to him?

Coll. Pray Dr. Oates, Mr. Smith charges me that I should speak some reasonable Words that Time that Alderman Wilcox gave you a Treat at the Crown Tavern; you were there, and pray how long ago was it?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I heard Mr. Smith speaking of it at the Old Bailey, and if you please to take Notice, it was thus: This Summer was Twelve-Month, or I am sure a great while before Christmas, the Alderman had invited me several Times to give me a Treat, and I had not time, other Business calling me off; but finding a Time, I sent him word I would come and see him. He said he was a Brewer, and troubled home with Customers, but he would give me a Dinner at the Crown Tavern without Temple-Bar, that was the Place fixed upon; there was Mr. Smith the Counsellor, who had been serviceable to me in several Instances, I did get him to go along with me, and Mr. Colledge was with me, and I heard Smith swearing at the Old-Bailey that Mr. Colledge and he had discoursed from the Rainbow Coffee-House where we met, and went together.

Coll. There I was invited by Alderman Wilcox.

Vol. III.

Dr. Oates. But, my Lord, I will tell my Story, I am not to tell Mr. Smith's. Colledge did tell me he was invited; said I, you shall be welcome as far as I can make you welcome. So Colledge and I went together from the Rainbow Coffee-House to the Crown Tavern: Now indeed, Colledge was very pleasant and merry, and as I think, the Discourse between the Rainbow Coffee-House and the Tavern was betwixt Mr. Colledge and me; for Mr. Smith stayed somewhat behind, or walked before, I cannot tell which: When we came to the Crown Tavern, we did, to divert ourselves till Dinner came up, enter into a Philosophical Discourse with one Mr. Savage, who was formerly a Romish Priest, but this Savage is since pardoned by the King, and is a Member of the Church of England, and hath been Professor of Divinity and Philosophy beyond Sea. This, as I remember, was the Discourse before we dined, till we went to Dinner; it was concerning the Existence of God, whether that could be proved by natural Demonstration, and whether or no the Soul was immortal. My Lord, after Dinner, Smith went away, I did not hear the least Discourse of any such Thing as he speaks of, and Mr. Smith and Colledge had no Discourse in my hearing from the Coffee-House to the Tavern; and when we were in the Tavern, we did discourse about those two Points. Counsellor Smith, my Lord, will justify a great deal of this, and my Brother too, who was with us. But when I heard Mr. Smith swear as he did about this Matter at the Old Bailey, I did really, my Lord, in my Conscience, look upon him to be forsworn in that Particular.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. And he does swear you are out in this.

L. C. J. Will you ask him any more Questions?

Dr. Oates. If your Lordship please, he speaks of Mr. Wilcox to be a Man that contributes Money to buy Arms, Powder and Shot. I think, Sir George Jefferies knows Alderman Wilcox is a Man of another Employment.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Sir George Jefferies does not intend to be an Evidence, I assure you.

L. C. J. Do you ask him any more Questions?

Dr. Oates. I do not desire Sir George Jefferies to be an Evidence for me, I had Credit in Parliaments, and Sir George had Disgrace in one of them.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Your Servant, Doctor, you are a witty Man, and a Philosopher.

Coll. Call Mr. Tho. Smith.

L. C. J. What would you ask of him now?

Coll. Counsellor Smith, here is John Smith, or Narrative Smith, which you please to call him, hath charged me with speaking Treason at our going to Dinner at Mr. Wilcox's; I remember you were there, and I think you and I, and Dr. Oates and his Brother, and Mr. Goodwin Wharton went together; I did tell Mr. Smith of it, but I did not stir a Step out of the Coffee-House with him, but went away before him. How long ago is it since we had that Dinner?

Mr. T. Smith. My Lord, if your Lordship please, I do very well remember Mr. Alderman Wilcox, so they called him, did desire to give Dr. Oates a Treat, with some other of his Friends at the Crown Tavern without Temple-Bar; but really, my Lord, as to the certain Time I do not remember it, but to my best Remembrance, my Lord, it was before Christmas last, and some Time before Christmas last. And, my Lord, I was there all the Time; Mr. Smith was at that Time somewhat a Stranger to me, something I had heard of his Name, and I did stay there all the while; I remember Mr. Alderman Wilcox was to go out of Town that Day; and truly, as to any Matter of Treason, or treasonable Words, or any Thing tending towards it, I am confident nothing was, or could be spoken, and the Room was a very small Room, and our Company did fill it up, and the Table was so big, that there was little more than for the Servitors to go about; so that any Man might easily hear from the one end of the Room to the other. I remember there was some Discourse betwixt Dr. Oates and Mr. Savage, who, I think, hath been a Jesuit, and it was about some Points of Philosophy and Divinity; but for Treason, I do not remember the least of it, and I am confident Colledge said not any Thing at that Time; and my Reason is this, I very well remember Mr. Colledge did set himself down upon one Side of the Table, and fell asleep; and unless he talked Treason in his sleep, there could not be any such Thing said, and if it had been said, it would have been heard.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Smith, did you never hear Mr. Colledge speak an ill Word of the King?

Mr. T. Smith. Never in my Life. And if I were now to take the Sacrament upon it, I could say so.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Yo used to converse with him, Mr. Smith, did he never say any Thing like it to you?

Mr. T. Smith. Good Mr. Serjeant, you know I can take the Sacrament; pray, let us have no Reflections.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Who did reflect upon you? I did not reflect upon you.

Mr. Just. Jones. Mr. Smith, did he never deliver you any of those Pictures?

Mr. T. Smith. No, Sir, he never did.

Coll. Good Sir George, don't reflect upon my Evidence. It seems Mr. Smith is mistaken in the Time; for he says it was at Christmas; but Mr. Smith says it was some Time before.

L. C. J. Mr. Smith does not say so, the certain Time he cannot tell exactly; but your Witnesses say it was then.

Mr. T. Smith. I do speak as much as if I were upon my Oath; and I do know what an Oath is, I thank God, and what it is to speak before a Court of Judicature; and I know, and do speak Truth as much as if I were upon my Oath; and I do say I did not hear Colledge, or any one else that was in that Company, at that Time, speak any Thing reflecting upon the King and Government, or any Thing tending towards it.

Mr. Just. Jones. Can you remember Matter so distinctly, which Dr. Oates says was a Year and Half ago?

L. C. J. No. this Summer was Twelve-month.

Mr. Just. Jones. And can you tell so long ago, not only your own Actions, but testify to all other Men's Actions too that were in the Room?

Mr. T. Smith. I cannot tell what Dr. Oates's Memory is as to the Time; but I remember the Place, the Occasion, and the Persons that were there.

Mr. Just. Jones. And you take upon you to have such a perfect Memory, as to the Actions of all the Persons that were in the Room.

Mr. T. Smith. I do not speak of all that was done, but I say, I remember no such Thing that was said, and I believe no such Thing was said, and I have given you my Reasons why. But, my Lord, that which I say further for Mr. Colledge, is this; I do hear something pretended, as if he provided arms to go to Oxford. I have known him these three Years, or thereabouts; and, my Lord, I do know that he did usually ride with a Case of Pistols before him. And before that Time I had occasion to borrow his Horse of him, at the Election for Westminster the last Parliament that sat there, and I had it then with a Case of Pistols. I likewise borrowed it at Michaelmas last, the same Horse, and the same Pistols they were, I did at the same time see a Suit of Silk-Armour, which he told me he did provide against the Papists; for he said, he did expect we should have a Brush with them. Said I, do not trouble yourself for that, they dare not meddle; said he, they will do no Harm. And as I remember, it was a Suit of Armour made of Silk to wear under a Coat.

C c c

and

Coll. It was Silk-Armour only for the Thrust of a Sword. And I assure you, my Lord, I had but one Suit, but one Case of Pistols, and but one Horse. I had two before; but they did not then make a Traitor of me, that was all that ever I had; but if I had had ten Horses, and never so many Armours, I declare it upon my Salvation, I intended it for nothing but against the Papists, if they should make a Disturbance; and whatever I did, was with that Design, and truly, by the Grace of God, I would not have been the last Man then; but I see, whatever I provided myself with for that, they have turned it all another way, that it may be believed the Protestants were against the King and the established Government.

L. C. J. Those Observations may be proper for you at last. Go on now with your Evidence.

Coll. My Lord, I am not a Man of that great Memory, I may forget it, and therefore I speak it now whilst I think on it.

L. C. J. Set it down in your Paper.

Coll. Smith says, I talked with him coming from Richard's Coffee-House till we came to the Tavern; I do declare it, I went away before him, and went away with Dr. Oates.

L. C. J. Ask Mr. Smith that Question, if you will.

Coll. Pray Sir, do you know who went together thither?

Mr. T. Smith. I dare not undertake to say that, I cannot tell whether he went from the Rainbow-Coffee-House with us, or no.

Coll. He says, after we had dined, we divided ourselves into Cabals, two and two together; I do declare, it is that which is the real Truth, I fell asleep behind the Table; if any body was divided, it is more than I know; but, Mr. Smith, you can tell, because he says I spoke Treason to him when I was in the Room, he and I in one Cabal.

Mr. T. Smith. My Lord, I remember nothing of that, nor do believe it; for I told you the Room was so little, that we could not divide ourselves: And it is impossible in such a little Compass where we was so many as we were, fourteen or fifteen of us; it may be one might talk to another that was next to him, but then the Company must hear; and whether they did so or no, I cannot tell, I do not remember Mr. Smith's saying any thing to any particular Person; but the great Engagement was between Dr. Oates and Mr. Savage, and about some Questions in Divinity, and that is the great Matter I took Notice of.

Coll. However, my Lord, I declare it, that was above a Twelve-month ago, and I hope your Lordship and the Jury do observe, that there was no new Arms were found but what were provided a great while ago; all that know me, know I was never without a Case of Pistols and an Horse, though I was but a Joiner, and there is no more that you see now. And to what Smith said about going into Cabals, that you hear Mr. Smith denies.

L. C. J. Will you call any other Witnesses?

Coll. Yes, if it please your Lordship. Do you know no more, Sir?

Mr. T. Smith. I know no other thing, if I did, I would declare it.

Coll. Call Dr. Oates's Brother, Mr. Samuel Oates. My Lord, thus you see Smith's Testimony is false.

L. C. J. I do not see this contradicts his Oath, for he speaks of several Times that he did speak with you; one was at Wilcox's, which is this they speak of.

Coll. Mr. Smith says, there was only that great Discourse going on in the Room, and there was no such Thing as Cabals which he speaks of.

L. C. J. What do you say to this Witness?

Coll. Do you know Narrative Smith?—Mr. Oates. Yes, Sir.

Coll. What do you know of him? Were you at the Dinner which Mr. Wilcox gave your Brother?—Mr. Oates. Yes, yes, I was at that Dinner.

Coll. Were you at the Coffee-House when I went along with your Brother?—Mr. Oates. Yes, we went with you.

Coll. Did Mr. Smith go with us?

Mr. Oates. Yes, Mr. Smith followed us.

Coll. Did you hear any treasonable Discourse between us?

Mr. Oates. Not the least of a little Word.

Coll. Did we go into Cabals two and two together there?

Mr. Oates. There was nothing at all of Cabals, that I saw, from the Time of going to Dinner; for we came just as Dinner was going into the Room, as I remember.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What do you mean by Cabals?

Mr. Oates. That is, as I discern by Mr. Colledge, as if there had been Cabals amongst the Company.

Mr. Just. Jones. That is going by Couples?—Mr. Oates. Yes, yes.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What did they talk of?

Mr. Oates. There was nothing at all spoken of.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What did they say nothing all the while?

Mr. Oates. Nothing but Matter of common Discourse, Matters of Eating and Drinking, and talking of Country Affairs; there were several that had Lands in the Country, and they were talking of those Things.

Mr. Just. Jones. Were you there all the while?—Mr. Oates. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Hark you, Sir, Were there no Disputations in Divinity?

Mr. Oates. Not at all.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Nor of Philosophy?—Mr. Oates. No.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Why, pray Sir, did not Dr. Oates and Mr. Savage talk very pleasantly of two great Questions in Divinity, the Being of God, and the Immortality of the Soul?

Mr. Oates. There was not a Word of that, but only common Discourse.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Are you sure there was no such thing?

Mr. Oates. Not that I know of, in the least, I sat at Table with them.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Was it such a little Room that you could hear all was said?

Mr. Oates. There was Room enough.

L. C. J. People cannot give a perfect Account of all things that have passed so long ago.

Coll. I did not hear that Discourse myself, because I was asleep behind the Table; and perhaps Mr. Oates cannot remember it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was it before Dinner, or after Dinner that Colledge fell asleep behind the Table?

Mr. Oates. He was not asleep to my Remembrance all the while.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Recollect yourself pray, was Mr. Colledge asleep there?

Mr. Oates. I do not remember he was.

L. C. J. 'Tis impossible to give an Account; and therefore Witnesses in Negatives are of little Value.

Coll. Did Mr. Smith and you and I go together?

Mr. Oates. Mr. Smith followed us.

L. C. J. How do you know that?

Mr. Oates. For you and I, and my Brother went together; you were a saying, when we came out of the Coffee-House, in a jocose way, Come, Doctor, I will go along with you, and be one of your Guard. You spoke it in a jesting way. So you may, if you please, said my Brother. And so he went by my Brother's Side, and I went by Mr. Colledge's Side.

Coll. Do you remember how long ago that was?

Mr. Oates. It was the last Summer; but to say exactly what Month I cannot.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Oates, answer me this Question, pray, Sir.

Mr. Oates. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. From what Place did you go?

Mr. Oates. From Richard's Coffee-House.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who went along with Colledge?

Mr. Oates. He came along with my Brother and me; for he said to my Brother, I will be one of your Guard.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who went along with Mr. Smith?

Mr. Oates. I don't know, I took very little Notice of Things.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. 'Tis sufficient that he can tell who went with Colledge.

Mr. Oates. I remember one Thing: Mr. Smith would fain have persuaded me into something that my Brother should talk, but I heard nothing; said I, do not examine me upon such things, for I took little Notice of any thing; but this I can say, whereas he doth charge Mr. Wilcox, the Gentleman did not speak five Words all the Time he was there.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. He does not use to be so melancholy, I assure you.

Mr. Oates. I did wonder at it myself, but he was not long with us; for I do not think he was there a quarter of the Time; it seems he had a Son sick in the Country, and he was going thither.

Coll. Have you any thing against Macnamarra?

L. C. J. He is no Witness here.

Coll. Do you know any thing against Mr. Dugdale?

Mr. Oates. No, not I.

Coll. Then I can say no more to you.

L. C. J. Call another Witness.

Coll. Call Bolron.

L. C. J. What do you ask him?

Coll. Do you know John Smith?—Mr. Bolron. Yes.

Coll. What do you say against him?

Mr. Bolron. May it please your Lordship, the last 25th of July, Mr. Smith, and Mr. Mowbray, were travelling from York towards London. We lay the 24th at and the 25th we were travelling towards London.

Mr. Smith did ask me if I did remember what Discourse there was betwixt Sir John Brooks and I at Ferry-bridge when we were coming up before to London? I desired him to tell me what Discourse, and I would tell him if I did remember it or no. So, my Lord, he did say, the Discourse was, that Sir John Brooks did say, there would be cutting of Throats at Oxford, and that the Parliament did go provided some with 8, some with 6, some with 4 Men, and they were to meet at Grantham, and go together. This Discourse I did remember, That Sir John Brooks said, they went with Horse and Arms to secure them from Highway-men; and Sir John Brooks did then further declare, that the Discourse was, there would be cutting of Throats, at Oxford, which made them go with Arms to defend themselves. Mr. Smith did further upon the 25th, 26th, 27th and 28th of July (and it was our frequent Discourse) tell me, that he had given his Majesty an Account of it, which occasioned the dissolving of the Parliament: That Discourse that was made to the King, was, That Sir John Brooks should say, that there would be cutting of Throats at Oxford, and that the Parliament-men went provided with 4, or 5, 6, or 10, men apiece; and he did tell me, that he had given a further Account, that there was to be a Consult at Grantham, wherein it was resolved, that it was better to seize the King, than to let him go on. Now, this I knew nothing of, but he would have persuaded me to have given in this Evidence against Sir John Brooks, as to this Discourse. But I declare, I did never hear it, and Mr. Smith was the first Man that ever I heard it from, I never heard it before in my Life.

Coll. Would he have had you been an Evidence, and swore it?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, he said, he had given an Account of it to the King, and if I did manage it rightly against my Lord Shaftesbury and Colledge, he would make me for ever; those two Persons were mentioned all along. But I do declare it, I did never hear him speak Treason against the King in my Life. And he did further tell me, that I must say so and so; for if we did not agree, it would signify nothing. But, my Lord, I know nothing of the Matter, I never heard any one speak of it but Mr. Smith. My Lord, this is true, Mr. Mowbray was the Man that was by when it was discoursed.

Mr. Just. Jones. He would have had you sworn it, would he?

Mr. Bolron. I discovered it to my Lord-Mayor.

Mr. Att. Gen. When did you discover it?

Mr. Bolron. Soon after I came to Town.

Mr. Att. Gen. When was it?—Mr. Bolron. Some time last Week.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was it on Sunday last?

Mr. Bolron. It was the beginning of the Week.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Thou art such a Discoverer.

Mr. Bolron. My Lord, 'tis very true what I say. If I had known any such Thing, I would have discovered it.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Thou wouldst have discovered it before that Time, my Conscience.

Coll. My Lord, he hath been an Evidence against the Papists as well as Mr. Smith; and therefore, pray, Sir George, don't make your Flourish upon him.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. He was an Evidence, but had the Misfortune never to be believed.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know of any Pictures of Mr. Colledge's making? Have you seen Rary Shew?—Mr. Bolron. Never in my Life.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did not you shew it in Oxford?

Mr. Bolron. No, never in my Life.

Mr. Serj. Holl. Did you never declare to any Gentleman of Oxford, that Colledge made this Picture?

Mr. Bolron. I have seen the Character of a Popish Successor, but I never saw Rary Shew.

Mr. Serj. Holl. Here is the very Gentleman that will make Oath of it.

Mr. Bolron. He was supposed to make them, I did not know that he did.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. I do only desire one Thing, I do not say that you ever had Rary Shew, but did you ever tell any body that Colledge made any of these Pictures?

Mr. Bol. I have heard of such a Paper, but I did never see it in my Life.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Do you know that Gentleman, Mr. Bolron?

Mr. Bolron. I know him not.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. I would ask you, whether you ever had any Discourse with that Gentleman?—Mr. Bolron. Never in my Life.

Then the Gentleman was sworn, being a Master of Arts.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What is the Gentleman's Name?

Mr. Serj. Holl. Mr. Charlett, of Trinity College.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Pray, Sir, do you know that Person there?

Mr. Charlett. My Lord, in the New Coffee-House that was by the Schools, that was set up in the Parliament-time, there was a Gentleman that is in the Court (I think) one Mr. Dashwood, and one Mr. Box, were there, together to drink a Dish of Coffee, and hearing that some of the Evidence were there, we desired their Company up, and that Gentleman was one; and among other discourse, they were speaking of some Pictures, and they shewed us the Picture of the Tantivies.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did this Man shew it you?

Mr. Charlett. This very Man. It was the Pictures of the Tantivies and the Towzer, and he told me they were made by Colledge, he was a very ingenious Man.

Mr. Bolron. I know nothing of it; the Character of a Popish Successor I have seen, but never the other, I never shewed him any such Thing.

Then the Pictures were shewn him.

Mr. Char. It was something like this, but I cannot say for any of the other.

Mr. Bolron. The Character of a Popish Successor, I say, I have seen, and Colledge himself hath told he made the Character of a Popish Successor, I do not deny that I have seen that.

L. C. J. Would you ask him any more Questions?

Mr. Bolron. My Lord, I have something to say concerning Mr. Bryan Hoynes; in January, February, and April last, several times I was in his Company, and I heard him say, he knew nothing of a Popish Plot, nor of a Presbyterian Plot neither; but if he were to be an Evidence he did not care what he swore, but would swear and say any thing to get Money.

Mr. Just. Jones. Did he tell you so?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, I did hear him say, To Day he would be a Papist, to morrow a Presbyterian, he did not Care for Religion, he would never die for Religion, he would be of that Religion that had the strongest Party. My Lord, he told me so at my own House in Fleet-Street.

Coll. He would say any Thing for Money; pray, my Lord, take Notice of that, for so I find he does.

Mr. Bolron. Then there is Dennis Macnamarra, and John Macnamarra.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. We have nothing to say to them.

Coll. They have been Evidences against me; though you do not now produce them, they are all in a String, but they are not now brought, because my Witnesses are prepared to answer them.

L. C. J. Will you call your next Witness?

Coll. Mr. Mowbray, pray, Sir, do you know Narrative Smith, as he calls himself?—Mr. Mowbray. Yes, my Lord.

Coll. What do you know of it?

Mr. Mowbray. I came up from York with him when I returned, after I was commanded down upon the King's Account to give in Evidence against Sir Miles Stapleton, he came to me the third of August, and called at my House in York-shire, and was very importunate for me to come up to London with him; for he said, he had a Letter come to him which commanded his Presence at London very suddenly, and he produced that Letter which he said came from a Gentleman of the Court, or some Court-Dependent; so he read the Letter in Mr. Bolron's Hearing. We set forward on Sunday, and upon our Journey to London he told me he had something of Importance to impart to me; so upon the Road he began to discourse of the Parliament and of the illegal Proceedings and arbitrary Power of the two last Parliaments; he said, their Proceedings were very illegal and arbitrary, and he began to open some of the Votes, as that which they voted, that those that should lend the King Money upon the Crown-lands, should be Enemies to the King and Kingdom, and those that counselled the King to dissolve the Parliament; and he repeated many Votes, and, said he, these are Signs of arbitrary Power, and certainly they design to take off the King; so he proceeded further to ask me, what was the Discourse of Sir John Brooks, when he came up before, and he did much importune me to say, that Sir John Brooks did affirm there could be cutting of Throats at Oxford, and that the King was to be seized there; I told him I could have no plausible Pretence, because I had no Acquaintance with Sir John Brooks, nor did I come up with him; upon which he applied himself to Bolron, and importuned him for the same; he asked me who I came up with? I told him, I came up with three Members of Parliament, my Lord Fairfax, Sir John Hewley, and Mr. Stern; he asked me what Discourse we had upon the Road? And he asked, whether they had any Discourse that tended to justify their former Votes? For he said, if they did think to justify any of these Votes, or if they would allow the King Money, and stood upon the Bill of Exclusion, he said, that was Pretence enough for any Man to swear that there was a design against the King, and that the King was to be seized at Oxford.

Coll. An excellent Pretence indeed, and like the rest.

Mr. Mowbray. He would have tempted me to swear against my Lord of Shaftesbury the same. And he said, it would be well if I did appear on Colledge's Trial at Oxon, for it was a Thing of great Consequence; the Popish Plot was thrown out of Doors, and no Man was looked upon that speak of it.

Mr. Just. Jones. Was all this in the Presence of Mr. Bolron?

Mr. Mowbray. No, my Lord. When he was discoursing about Sir John Brooks, Mr. Bolron rid up to us, and he applied himself to him, because I told him I had no plausible Pretence to swear against him, having no Acquaintance with him.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Pray, Sir, let me ask you one Question, When came you from York?

Mr. Mowbray. We set forward the third Day of August from Wentbridge.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Pray, who came with you in the Company?

Mr. Mowbray. Mr. Bolron.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. That was a Sunday, as I take it.—Mr. Mowbray. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Then pray, how long did you continue before you came to London?—Mr. Mowbray. I think we came in on the Thursday after.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. When was the first Time Mr. Smith came into your Company?—Mr. Mowbray. Upon the Road on Sunday.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Was that the first Time?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes. He had been at York, and went farther, and afterwards came to us.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. When did you come from York?

Mr. Mowbray. About the Thursday before, if I be not mistaken.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Was it in a Week before?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes, within a Week it was.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. And you and Mr. Bolron came together?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. And you left Mr. Smith behind?—Mr. Mowbray. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. And he overtook you upon the Road?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes, he was to go further into the North as soon as the Trial of Sir Miles Stapleton was over, and therefore he did very much importune me to stay in the Country till he came to go up with me.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What Day was the Trial of Sir Miles Stapleton?

Mr. Mowbray. On the Monday before.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. You are sure of that, and that Mr. Smith went further into the North?—Mr. Mowbray. I see him take Horie.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. But he did not come into the Company of you and Mr. Bolron till the Sunday after that.

Mr. Mowbray. See ye, Sir, he did desire me to stay in the Country till he came, for he had a Business of great Concernment to impart to me, but it would be a Week or a Fortnight, e'er he came, but yet he came in a shorter Time, for he said he had received a Letter that brought him up.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. You are sure of this?—Mr. Mowbray. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. And you did not see him from the Monday before, till that Sunday?—Mr. Mowbray. No, no.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Now then, I ask you, where was that Place he met with you?—Mr. Mowbray. At Wentbridge.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. And then you came from thence towards London the next Day?—Mr. Mowbray. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Now would I desire to know of you, for I perceive he did attack you to say something against Sir John Brooks, and finding that you could not do it, because you had no Acquaintance, he applied himself to Bolron. I would know, was it between that Place and London?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes, it was.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. And after the third of August?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes, it was after he set out.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. I thought it had been the 24th of July that you set out, and continued your Journey the 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th, and 29th. Alas, we have lost a great deal of Time between Mr. Bolron and Mr. Mowbray. Bolron said, it was the 25th they lay at such a Place, and you are gotten to the 3d of August; you are mistaken certainly, as to Point of Time.

Mr. Mowbray. See, Sir, I will look in my Almanack, 'tis all set down there.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Let us see now if your Oxford Journey be as well set down, as your Journey to London is.—Mr. Mowbray. Here is my Almanack, Sir.

Mr. Just. Jones. Here, look upon his Almanack.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Mr. Jones, I don't care for his Almanack, I had rather Mr. Mowbray and Mr. Bolron could bring their Almanacks together, and I would have them compared, to see whether the 3d of August in one be the 25th of July in the other. Did you discourse with him upon the Road the 3d of August, and not before, and Bolron, that came up with you, discoursed with him the 25th of July?

Mr. Mowbray. I am mistaken, I find.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Ay, that you are, one of you, most grossly.

Mr. Mowbray. See, Sir, here is my Almanack, whereby I find that it is my Mistake; but pray, see, Sir, here it is set down, the Day we came out, was the 24th, the Day we came up to London was the 27th.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. How didst thou set out the 3d of August from that Place, and yet come to London the 27th of July?

Mr. Mowbray. I will refer myself to Mr. Smith, as to the Time we came up, and here is my Almanack.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. I will believe thy Almanack to speak Truth, though it have never so many Errors about the Changes of the Weather, sooner than I will believe thee.

Coll. I perceive the Man is mistaken in the Month and the Times; but pray, my Lord, will you please to see, for Justice sake, if the Almanack be new writ.

L. C. J. Look you, here is the Matter, Mr. Colledge, he was asked again and again, what Day it was, and he was positive to the 3d of August.

Coll. He was mistaken, but his Almanack is right.

L. C. J. He speaks rashly, that is the best can be said.

Mr. Mowbray. It was a Mistake of mine, Sir George, but my Almanack is right.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Nay, Mr. Mowbray, don't enter into Dialogues with me, I only make a little Observation upon your Almanack.

Mr. Mowbray. It was only my Mistake.

L. C. J. You are a rash Man to affirm so; if you had an Almanack, you should have consulted it, or referred to it.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Nay, we have lost a Day even by your Almanack; for your's says, it was the 27th you came to Town, Bolron the 28th.

Mr. Mowbray. I refer myself to Mr. Smith, he can't deny but he came up with us at that Time.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. You were Examined at Sir Miles Stapleton's Trial, was you not, Mr. Mowbray?—Mr. Mowbray. I was an Evidence there.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did the Jury believe you?

Mr. Mowbray. They did acquit Sir Miles Stapleton.

Coll. That is nothing to the Purpose, so was Mr. Smith too.

L. C. J. Would you ask any thing further?—Coll. Call Mrs. Bolron: L. C. J.

L. C. J. If you have any more Witnesses, pray call them.
Mr. Just. Jones. Mr. Mowbray, was Mr. Bolron's Wife by when this Discourse was?

Mr. Mowb. No, she was in Town, she did not go down with him at all.
L. C. J. Are you Mr. Bolron's Wife?—Mrs. Bolron. Yes.

L. C. J. Well, what do you ask her?

Coll. Mrs. Bolron, pray do you know Mr. John Smith?

Mrs. Bolron. Yes, I do know him.

Coll. What can you say of him?

Mrs. Bolron. He sent several times for my Husband and Mr. Mowbray to my House, something he would have them be concerned in, some Business he had in hand.

L. C. J. When was that?

Mrs. Bol. Within these three Weeks, since he came up from York-Affizes.

Coll. You may see there was an Understanding between them then.

Mr. Just. Jones. Did they go accordingly?

Mrs. Bolron. Now and then they have gone to him, but they knew his Business, because they had Discourse with him, as they said, upon the Road, and they would not go.

L. C. J. Would you ask her any thing else? What do you know more?

Mrs. Bolron. Nothing, for I am not one that stirs much abroad.

Coll. Call Mr. Everard.

L. C. J. What do you ask him?

Coll. As for Mr. Everard, I need not ask him whether he knows him, for they know one another well enough. But Mr. Everard, that I would ask you is this, What do you know of Mr. Smith, and of this Contrivance against me?

Mr. Ever. Mr. Smith I have been to see of late, and he told me, he knew of no Presbyterian or Protestant Plot, and when my Lord Howard was tried, that is, the Bill brought against him, he said, he wondered how my Lord Howard could be guilty, and that both himself and I were joined as Evidence, to that Jury, only to put a gloss upon the Evidence; for, says he, I have nothing material to say.

Coll. Mr. Everard, do you know any thing more concerning him, what he hath said at other times concerning me?

Mr. Ever. I have told you already, what I have heard him say, that he thought there was no Protestant or Presbyterian Plot, and that now of late within this little while.

Coll. Pray, Sir, was there not some Discourse betwixt Justice Warcup and you in Lincoln's-Inn Walks?

Mr. Ever. Is Justice Warcup an Evidence here?—L. C. J. No, no.

Coll. 'Tis but the Evidence of a Presbyterian Plot; therefore pray, Sir, what was the Discourse between Justice Warcup and you? What would he have had you do?

L. C. J. I think it is not material, there is nothing of Mr. Warcup in his Trial.

Mr. Ever. If the Court does allow of it, I will freely tell it.

Coll. My Lord, the Papists Design is to make a Protestant Plot to turn off their own, and they begin with me; but if I should go, they would not be satisfied with me, they would be at others.

L. C. J. There is nothing concerning a Presbyterian or Protestant Plot in the Case.

Coll. My Lord, if there be no Presbyterian Protestant Plot, and others to join in it, how could I do it myself? 'tis impossible I should have such a Design of seizing the King, and improbable I should speak it. Now, my Lord, this Man was solicited to come in for an Evidence of such a Plot.

Mr. Ever. That is true.

L. C. J. I tell you 'tis not material, Mr. Warcup is not concerned in your Trial.

Mr. Ever. Justice Warcup would have persuaded me to have sworn against some Lords a Presbyterian Plot; but I deny that I know any such thing of them.

Coll. The Papists Aim is not at me only, but at others.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. We have nothing to do with what you and Justice Warcup talked of. For Example's sake, my Lord, let us have no Discourses that concern third Persons brought in here.

L. C. J. Would he have persuaded you to say any thing that was not true?

Mr. Ever. He did not say positively those Words; but this he said, I knew several Lords—

Mr. Just. Jones. Now here is Mr. Justice Warcup's Fame traduced behind his Back, in the Face of the Country, and it is nothing to this Cause before us.

Coll. My Lord, I desire to know what he knows of these Things, and that he may speak it out; 'tis a material thing for me and others: Here is a Design of the Papists to turn a Plot upon the Protestants; they begin with me, and if they have my Blood, who may feel the effects of it next I cannot tell.

L. C. J. Truly I think it not material to your Case, and indeed it is of ill Consequence to have any Man traduced behind his back, as Mr. Warcup is.

Coll. My Lord, Macnamarra told me, that that Man would have seduced him to have retracted his Evidence; upon my Salvation 'tis true.

L. C. J. We meddle not with Macnamarra neither, he is no Evidence against you.

Coll. Macnamarra hath sworn against me at the Old-Bailey, and at the finding the Bill; but they have laid him by upon some trick or other. I desire Mr. Everard may tell what he knows.

Mr. Ever. I would not reflect upon any Person, nor will I answer it, if the Court do not think fit.

Coll. My Lord, this is foul Play, if I die myself for my Country's sake, I can do it freely, and the Will of God be done; I would have the Truth out for the sake of the Protestants.

Mr. Ever. I am very willing to tell the Truth, if the Court think fit.

L. C. J. I see not that he says Mr. Warcup would have had him swear that which was not true.

Mr. Ever. But this he said, if the Court will allow me to speak it, Justice Warcup said, that certainly there was a Presbyterian Plot, and such Things; and that some Lords, some of the Protestant protesting Lords must be guilty of it; and, said he, certainly you know much of it, you know such and such Things, therefore you may safely swear it, since you know it; so by argument he would prove first there was a Plot and Combination among those Lords, and then said he, this you may safely swear.

Mr. Just. Jones. What is this to your Purpose, Mr. Colledge? only Mr. Warcup's Name is brought upon the Stage when he is not here to vindicate himself.

L. C. J. Would you ask him any thing else?

Coll. If he does know any thing more of any of them, I desire he would speak it.

Mr. Ever. Concerning Mr. Haynes, he told me it was necessity that drove him to speak any thing against the Protestants, and the hard P. and the Gratitude he did receive from the Citizens.

L. C. J. Where did he tell you this?

Mr. Ever. In the Fields near Gray's-Inn.

L. C. J. How long since?

Mr. Ever. About three Weeks ago. I asked him, Mr. Haynes, said I, I would not draw you from your Testimony in any thing, but how can this be congruous to what you have said formerly, that you knew nothing by them? The Truth is, said he, I will not say much to excuse myself, but my Wife was reduced to that Necessity, that she begg'd at Rouse's Door, and craved some Salary, and Mr. Rouse would not give her any; and said he, mere Necessity drove me to it.

Coll. He found better Pay in another Place.

Mr. Ever. And, says he, 'tis Self-Preservation in the next place; for I was brought in Guilty when I was taken up, and therefore I was obliged to do some things to save my Life.

Coll. Pray, my Lord, and Gentlemen, observe what this Gentleman says, Haynes takes this Course to destroy innocent Persons for his own Preservation.

Mr. Ever. Besides, he told me there is a Judgment impending upon the Nation, said he, either upon the King, or upon the People, I know not which; but these Irishmen's swearing against them, is justly fallen upon them for their Injustice against the Irish in ousting them of their Estates.

Coll. So he did it then by way of Revenge; for his Countrymen; I have nothing of their Estates, I am sure; therefore they had no Cause to swear against me. But, Mr. Everard, have you any more to say concerning any of them?

Mr. Ever. No more concerning those Persons that have sworn against you; I can say no more.

Coll. As to Dugdale or Turberville?

Mr. Ever. No, indeed.

Coll. As to this Presbyterian Plot, Sir?

Mr. Ever. If the Court does allow concerning other Persons; but I would not intrude any thing but what the Court shall think fit.

Coll. I know not but they may come in against me; therefore pray tell what you know. Mr. Everard, do you know any thing more? Pray let me know what you know.

Mr. Ever. Nothing of any Person that has appeared against you as yet, but what I have told you.

Coll. They may do so, Sir.

L. C. J. And then we may properly hear him to them, and not before.

Coll. I desire to know who they are; pray let me know their Names?

Mr. Ever. Fitz-gerald.

L. C. J. He hath been no Witness here.

Coll. Call Thomas Parkhurst.

L. C. J. What do you ask him now he is here?

Coll. What do you know concerning Mr. Dugdale?

Mr. Park. Sir, the latter end of the last November, when the Parliament sat at Westminster, several times Mr. Dugdale having promised me his further Narrative to publish, which he printed, I met him several times; one time I met him at Richard's Coffee-house, and it was towards the Evening before we went away; he told me and Mr. Symonds, that he was to speak with Dr. Tongue; and he told us, that this Dr. Tongue did lie at Mr. Colledge's; and he having spoke the Day before, and several times, of the Danger he was in of his being assassinated by the Papists, Mr. Symonds and I offered to go with him, and we took a Coach; for we did not know where Mr. Colledge lived: He had then a Rheum in his Eyes, and was not well; so we accompanied him to Mr. Colledge's to speak to Dr. Tongue. It was the Evening when we went; and whilst we took a Pipe of Tobacco, in our Discourse we were speaking of the Times, and the Danger of the Papists; so Colledge took down a Steel-Hat, that hung up there, which he said he had, and he said he had a quilted Coat of defensive Armour, and he said he had a Blunderbuss in his House, and two Pistols. But I little thought of any thing of this; neither did I know well what I was subpoena'd down for: But these Arms I saw in his House, and it was only in Discourse that he was provided against the Papists; so I put the Steel Hat upon my Head, and pulled it off again, and so did Mr. Symonds.

Coll. Did I say any thing, Sir, who I had those Arms against?

Mr. Park. At that Time there was no Discourse in the World, but of the Danger of the Papists; and he said he was provided for them, if they did come to make any Disturbance.

L. C. J. When was it, Sir?

Mr. Park. It was about the latter end of November, I have the Narrative that I printed, which was the 23d or 24th, and I have no Directions but that to remember the exact time. So we carried Mr. Dugdale home again in a Coach, and gave him a Pint of Wine at his Lodgings.

L. C. J. This does not contradict Mr. Dugdale at all.

Mr. Park. Mr. Dugdale does own this for a Truth.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. So may any body own it.

Coll. Where is Mr. Symonds? Pray, Sir, what do you know of Dugdale?

Mr. Symonds. What about, Sir?

Coll. I have your Name here, Sir, but I know not for what.

Mr. Symonds. I can say the same that Mr. Parkhurst did; that I suppose is the Business. All I know of it is this; I was with Mr. Parkhurst and Mr. Dugdale at Richard's Coffee-house some time in November; I think it was about the printing of Mr. Dugdale's further Information; and Mr. Dugdale was saying, Dr. Tongue had sent for him, but spoke to him if he was fearful of some Danger in going alone; so we proffered to go along with him, and we took a Coach at the Coffee-house Door, and went with him to Dr. Tongue, who lodged at Mr. Colledge's. When he came into the Room, Mr. Parkhurst and I thought fit we should in civility withdraw, which we did; and Mr. Colledge brought us down into another Room, where we sat and took a Pipe of Tobacco, and talked about the common Discourse of the Times, about the Papists, and the Danger from them, there hung up in Mr. Colledge's Room some Arms; what they were, I dare not charge my Memory with to swear particularly; but I do think there was a Silk Coat of Mail, and there was a Cap of Steel, and as I take it, it was covered with Cloth.

or some such Thing, what else I can't well say; I think there was a Blunderbuss and a Case of Pistols. And all the Discourse that I remember then, was only this, speaking of the Papists, and some Fears as if there would be an Insurrection amongst them, said he, Let the Papist Rogues begin when they will, I am ready to defend myself for one. This is all I know.

Coll. Pray, Sir, how long ago was this? Dr. Tongue died before Christmas at my House.

Mr. Sym. I cannot tell exactly when it was; but during the Session of Parliament I am sure it was, and, as I take it, in November, the latter End.

Coll. So then, pray, my Lord, see that these Arms they charged me withal, were provided before Christmas.

L. C. J. But there is nothing that Contradicts Dugdale's Testimony in all this.

Coll. It does sufficiently contradict him.

L. C. J. I do not see that this does at all contradict what he hath said; but do you observe what you will upon it, when you come to make your Defence.

Stranger. A Gentleman below desires you to call Mr. Yates.

Coll. Pray, Sir, what do you know concerning Dugdale?

Mr. Yates. I know that Mr. Dugdale sent for me to a Coffee-house to bespeak a Pistol for you, and told me, that when I had made the Pistol, I should deliver it to Mr. Colledge, and Mr. Dugdale promised to pay for it when I had done it. Now some time after I did some small Matter for Mr. Dugdale, cleaned his Pistols, or some small Business, and Mr. Dugdale asked me, if I would have a Pint of Wine, which I agreed to; and being at the Tavern, Mr. Dugdale asked me, if Mr. Colledge's Pistol was done. I told him, no, it was not, as yet. So I asked Mr. Dugdale, because he had promised to give Mr. Colledge a Pistol, what Obligation there was betwixt Colledge and him, that he should give him a Pistol? To which he answered, that Mr. Colledge had been serviceable to him, in lending him a Pair of Pistols to ride withal sometimes: So he gave him a Pistol to satisfy him for the wearing of his Pistols now and then. I thought, said I, Mr. Colledge did impose upon your Good nature too much, not but that I believe Mr. Colledge is a very honest Man, and stands up for the Good of the King and the Government. Yes, said Mr. Dugdale, I believe he does, and I know nothing to the contrary.

Mr. Att. Gen. When was this?

Mr. Yates. A little after the Parliament sat at Oxford; for I never knew Mr. Colledge before Mr. Dugdale set me at Work for him.

Coll. Mr. Yates, pray, was there nothing in the Coffee-house about one that he asked to go with him, when he said he knew nothing against me?

Mr. Yates. I heard one say—

Mr. Serj. Jeff. You must speak your own Knowledge, you must not tell a Tale of a Tub of what you heard one say.

Mr. Yates. I heard it affirmed—

Mr. Serj. Jeff. By whom?

Mr. Yates. By a Person in the Coffee-house.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Who was that Person?

Mr. Yates. By one of the Servants of the House.

L. C. J. This is no Evidence at all; if you know any Thing of your own Knowledge, speak it.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Is he here?—Mr. Yates. No, I think not.

Mr. Just. Jones. How long do you think must we sit here to hear other People's Stories?

L. C. J. If you know any thing of your own knowledge, I say, speak it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray let me ask you that Question again; When was it that he said he believed he was an honest Man?

Mr. Yates. It was about three Weeks after the Parliament at Oxford.

Coll. Then he does me Wrong now; for if I were an honest Man then, cannot be true that he says of me.

L. C. J. Who do you call next?

Coll. Pray, my Lord, who hath been sworn against me?

L. C. J. There is Stephen Dugdale, John Smith, Bryan Haynes, Edward Turberville, Sir William Jennings, and Mr. Masters.

Coll. Call Mr. Clayton, My Lord, at his House it was I lay in Oxford, and that Dugdale says I spake some of the treasonable Words. Pray, Sir, do you know what Time I came to Oxford?

Mr. Clayton. I remember it very well, it was at the Time the Parliament sat at Oxford, about two or three Days after it began.

Coll. Pray what Arms did I bring to your House, Sir?

Mr. Clayton. As to the Matter of Arms, there was no other but a Sword and a Pair of Pistols, a Pair of Pistols in his Holsters, and his Sword by his Side.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there no Silk Armour?

Mr. Clayton. I saw none, if it please you; such a Thing might be.

Coll. My Lord, I continued at his House from my coming in to my going out, and that was till after the Parliament was dissolved; and I came after they were sat: But hark you, Mr. Clayton, Mr. Dugdale says, he was with me at your House, did you ever see him there?

Mr. Clayton. I remember I have seen Dugdale at my House, but never in your Company.

Coll. Did you sell any Mum?

Mr. Clayton. No, I never did sell any in my Life.

Coll. Because he says, we had Mum there.

Mr. Clayton. I never saw him there with you, nor changed a Word with him as I know of.

L. C. J. Was he never in the Company of Colledge at your House?

Mr. Clayton. Not that I saw.

Mr. Just. Jones. You don't know all the Companies that come into your House?

Coll. My Lord, I am told there are some that came from the Town where I was born, that know me, and have known me for 24 or 25 Years together; if you think that material for me to prove whether I am a Protestant or no.

L. C. J. If you will make that out, you may: But 'tis your Loyalty that is in Question. If you will produce any that can make it appear, that you used to honour the King in your Discourses, or so, that is something.

Coll. If I am a Protestant, then the Design is plain, these Men swear to make a Protestant Plot, and turn the Plot off the Papists.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What Church do you frequent in London, to hear Divine Service?

Vol. III.

Coll. I have received the Sacrament several times, Sir George.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. When were you last at the public Church?

Coll. I hope I may be a Protestant if I have not gone thither; but however I do use to go to Church.

L. C. J. Well, call whom you will.

Coll. Is Thomas Deacon there?

Mr. Deacon. Yes.

Coll. He lives, my Lord, in the Parish where I was born. If you please, Mr. Deacon, to give my Lord an Account what you know of me from my Childhood.

Mr. Deacon. I have known Mr. Colledge ever since he was a Youth; he was born in the Town where I live.

L. C. J. Where is that?

Mr. Deacon. At Watford, a Town in Hertfordshire. There he lived till he was a Man, and married a Neighbour's Daughter of mine, and lived there while he had two Children; I never knew but that he was a very honest Man, frequented and kept to the Church of England all along, and paid every Man his own.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long is it ago since he left that Place?

Mr. Deacon. I can't directly tell how long it is, truly, but I think 'tis eighteen Years since you left Watford.

Coll. 'Tis fourteen Years ago.

Mr. Just. Jones. You say fourteen, and they say eighteen.

Mr. Deacon. I say, I can't exactly tell.

Coll. But, Mr. Deacon, I have been in your Country lately.

Mr. Deacon. He used to come there once or twice a Year generally to see his Friends. I have heard him declare himself against the Popish Church always very much.

L. C. J. Did you never hear him talk against the Government?

Mr. Deacon. No, never in my Life.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Nor against the King?

Mr. Deacon. Nor against the King.

Mr. Just. Jones. Was he in your Country the last Easter?

Mr. Deacon. I think it was about Easter he was there.

Mr. Just. Jones. Was he at Church there then, and received the Sacrament?

Mr. Deacon. I know not whether he was there on the Lord's Day or no: He did quarter at another Town, at Busby, where he has a Brother-in-Law.

L. C. J. Well, call another.

Coll. Mr. Whitaker.

L. C. J. What is your Christian Name?

Mr. Whit. William.

L. C. J. What do you ask of him?

Coll. Whether he knows me and my Education?

Mr. Whit. Sir, I have known him this 26 Years: I knew his Parents, I know his Mother, she lives now at Watford: I have known his Behaviour to be very civil and good; a very good Churchman he was when he lived with us; and I have enquired, and find he has the same Reputation in the Parish where he last lived in Black-Friars: He was no Jesuit nor Papist, I dare aver; he hath flouted them and mocked them with their wooden Gods, and the like; for he could never endure that Persuasion.

L. C. J. He is not questioned for that, but for Treason.

Coll. Did you ever hear me speak any thing against the Government?

Mr. Whit. I never knew any ill Behaviour of him in my Life.

Coll. But did you ever hear me say any thing against his Majesty or the Government?

Mr. Whit. Never, that I know of. I knew him a Soldier for his Majesty, in which Service he got a Fit of Sickness, which had like to have cost him his Life; he lay many Months ill, to his great Charge.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Where was it he was in his Majesty's Service?

Mr. Whit. At Chatham Business.

Coll. It was under my Lord Rochester. But, my Lord, I have a Testimonial under the Hands of seventy People of Watford, to give an Account of my good Behaviour.

Mr. Just. Jones. He hath been gone thence these eighteen Years.

Mr. Whit. He hath come there almost every half Year, sometimes three or four times in a Year, because his Mother lives there now, and he came to pay his Respects to her. His Children lived and went to School with us.

L. C. J. Come, who do you call else?

Coll. Mr. Neale.

Mr. Neale. I can say no more than the other Men before me. I know the Man, he was bred and born at Watford, he lived there several Years, he married a Wife out of the Neighbourhood, frequented the publick Worship.

L. C. J. How long ago is this?

Mr. Neale. Sixteen or seventeen Years ago. But then he used to come once or twice a Year into the Country.

Coll. Did you ever hear me speak any thing against the King or the Government?

Mr. Neale. No, never in my Life.

Coll. How long is it ago since you were in my Company last?

Mr. Neale. When you were in Town last, I never heard you say any thing that was ill.

Coll. How long ago is it since we were at the White-Hart together?

Mr. Neale. It was about Spring.

Coll. I said right, my Lord, I was there about Easter. Pray, did you ever hear me speak for the King?

Mr. Neale. Truly, the Discourse we had I never used to keep in my Mind; but I never heard him speak any thing against the King or the Government.

L. C. J. Were you much conversant with him?

Mr. Neale. When he came down to give his Mother a Visit, and see his Neighbours, we used always to see one another.

Coll. Pray, will you call Mr. Tanner and Mr. Remington.

[Mr. Remington stood up.]

Mr. Remington. I say, I have known Stephen Colledge these forty Years, and I have known that he always was an honest Man. He was a Soldier some time, but he always went to Church, was no Conventicler; and used to visit his Neighbours when he came down to see his Mother, and was always looked upon to be a very good Man.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. You say, you knew him a Soldier, pray when was that?
Mr. Remington. About the Time of Harwich Business. That is all I can say.

[Then Mr. Tanner stood up.]

L. C. J. Come, what say you? What do you ask him, Mr. Colledge?
Mr. Tanner. I have known Stephen Colledge from a Child, Forty Years, he was born at Watford, his Father worked with my Father, and great intimate Acquaintance we had with him; and saw him very often; I never knew any Fault in him, and I never heard a bad Report of him in all the Town of Watford.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Have you seen him at Church lately?

Mr. Tanner. No, I have not.

Mr. Att. Gen. I would fain know whether this Man hath been at Church himself: he looks as if he had not.

Coll. I know not whether he hath been at the Church you mean, or no; but he may be an honest Man and a Protestant for all that.

L. C. J. Call another.

Coll. Mr. Peter Norreys.

L. C. J. What do you ask him, Mr. Colledge? here he is.

Coll. Do you know any thing concerning Mr. Smith?

Mr. Norreys. I was once in the Hercules Pillars, where was Sir William Waller, Macnamarra, Mr. Ivy, and five or six of us together: And Mr. Smith was there, and we were talking concerning the Parliament approaching at Oxon.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Tell the Names of the rest.

Mr. Norreys. Sir William Waller, Macnamarra, Mr. Ivy, Lewes, Macnamarra's Brother, and I, and Mr. Smith.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Well said; we don't meddle with any of these, but Mr. Smith.

L. C. J. Was John Smith there?

Mr. Norreys. He was there.

L. C. J. Well, go on then.

Mr. Norreys. We were talking of the Parliament at Oxon: Says Sir William Waller, Most of the Parliament-men are afraid to go up to the Parliament. Truly, said Mr. Smith, I hope they will be provided to go, if they do go. Says Sir William Waller, I shall be provided with the rest of my Friends: And Mr. Colledge said, I will go up with the rest of the Parliament-men; I shall be provided too, says most of the Evidence: Says Sir William Waller, Will you go along with me, and I will provide you with an Horse? Said he, I have a Horse of my own, and if it please God I will have nothing else to do, but to go with the Parliament, and I will not neglect it. This was all the Discourse of the Company for that Night.

Coll. Did you hear Mr. Smith say any thing against me?

Mr. Norreys. No, not a Word at all.

Coll. But this were a material Evidence against others of the Confederates, if they had been examined.

Mr. Norreys. My Lord, I was at the Amsterdam-Coffee-House the twenty-third of June last, and there was Mr. Dennis Macnamarra; said he, Will you go, and I will give you a Pot of Ale.

L. C. J. There is nothing of Dennis Macnamarra in Question before us. If you have any thing to say against any of the Witnesses that have been sworn, go on with your Evidence, we must not hear Stories of other People.

Coll. He would speak against some Men that have sworn against me, but are left out, for some Reasons I know not. Pray call Mr. Thomas Norreys.

L. C. J. What do you ask him?

Coll. My Lord, he knew me in this Country some fifteen or sixteen Years ago.

Mr. T. Norreys. My Lord, I have been acquainted with Mr. Colledge about sixteen or eighteen Years, and he hath always carried himself very civilly and well, and he kept to the Church for a considerable Time, as duly as any Parishioner did.

L. C. J. How long have you known him?

Mr. T. Norreys. This sixteen Years.

L. C. J. You live in this Country; don't you?

Mr. T. Norreys. Yes, at Aylworth.

Coll. I was at Astrop-Wells last Year. I believe Mr. Justice Levinz saw me there.

Mr. T. Norreys. Yes, I was there with you.

Coll. We did discourse commonly then concerning the Papists. Pray, Sir, did you find me inclined to the Popish Interest?

Mr. T. Norreys. You spoke very much against them.

Coll. Did you ever hear me speak against the King or the Government?

Mr. T. Norreys. No, I never heard it; for if he were my Brother, I should have discovered it.

L. C. J. How often have you seen him?

Mr. T. Norreys. Very often, and conversed much with him.

Coll. My Lord, as to the Papers charged upon me that they were mine, I declare I know not of them. Dugdale says, I owned them, and the Letter and several Prints; but truly, my Lord, I had done myself a great Injury if I had done or owned those Things he hath charged me withal. I never could make a Picture, nor never did draw a Picture in my Life; and that very Person that he says I owned I got it to be printed by, hath denied it before the King and Council; for he there testified, that he did not know the Person that caused it to be printed.

L. C. J. How came you to have so many seized in your House?

Coll. My Lord, here is Elizabeth Hunt, the Maid by whom they were taken in, and who can give you an Account of it. I cannot deny but that they were in my House; but that I was the Author, or did take them in, is as great a Mistake as ever was made. Call Elizabeth Hunt. I do not know whether Curtis be in Town; but this I am confident, he was examined before the King and Council, and he and his Wife denied it.

L. C. J. He shall be called if he be here.

Coll. I know nothing of the printing of them, nor was I the Author of them.

L. C. J. They were dispersed by you up and down.

Coll. That they were in my House, I believe, my Lord; and this Woman will tell you how, my Lord. Pray tell the Court how these Papers that are called the Rary Shew came to be in my House.

El. Hunt. A Porter brought three Bundles to our House, and asked, whether my Master was not within. I told him, no, he was not. Said he, These Papers are to be left here; said I, Who do they come from? said he, 'tis all one for that, you must pay me, and I must leave them here; so I gave him Six-pence, and he left the Papers, but I never saw the Man since nor before. And, my Lord, I never read them what they were, but I saw they were such Sort of Prints as those.

L. C. J. How long was it before they were seized?

El. Hunt. A matter of seven or eight Weeks.

Coll. My Lord, it seems they were put in a Box and left in my Counting-House: I never touched them, but there they staid, for ought I know, till they were taken.

L. C. J. You were Colledge's Servant, were you not?

El. Hunt. Yes, my Lord.

Coll. My Lord, I never knew the Printer nor the Author; but I heard a Man was in Trouble about them, upon a Bye-Law in the Stationers Company.

Mr. Att. Gen. How came you by that Original?

Coll. Have you it there? I know of none was produced: But if I were a Person concerned, it were no Treason, and, my Lord, I hope you will do me that Justice, to let the Jury know they are not Treason, none of these Papers. And I do declare I know nothing of the Original, the Printer, nor the Author.

L. C. J. You spend Time in making Observations out of Order of Time: When you have given your Evidence, then make your Observations.

Coll. I confess, I may err, as to Matter of Order, for I never was in this Capacity before. But pray, do you tell the Court how the Papers came there, and all the Transactions. For I was a Prisoner when they came and searched.

L. C. J. No, it was eight Weeks before you were taken they were left there.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did you not tell your Master soon after they were left there?

El. Hunt. No.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Within what Time did you tell him?

El. Hunt. I believe it was a Week or a Fortnight.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where was your Master all that Time?

El. Hunt. He was in the Country.

Coll. My Lord, I did see them there, I must confess, I do not deny but I saw them there, but I knew not whence they came, nor whose they were. Nor did I ever intend to meddle with them, nor concern myself about them. What have you to say more?

El. Hunt. Concerning Mr. Dugdale, if I may speak:

L. C. J. Ay, go on.

El. Hunt. I went to receive the Money of Mr. Dugdale, that he owed my Master, and asking him for it, he said, he would pay me such a Time To-morrow Morning, if I would come for it; but when I came, he had not the Money ready for me. Sir, said I, I think it is very hard that you should keep my Master's Money from him, and yet you go and swear against his Life too: What do you think we shall do at home in the Family, if you keep my Master's Money and he be in Prison? Said he, There is a great deal of do about my Swearing against your Master, more than needs; but as I hope for Salvation, I do not believe Mr. Colledge had any more Hand in any Conspiracy against his Majesty, than the Child was born. Here is Dugdale, let him deny it if he can.

Mr. Dugdale. As I hope for Salvation I did not say so.

El. Hunt. Upon my Salvation 'tis true what I say.

Stevens. This was the Maid that hid her Master's Papers when they were searched for.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Be quiet; art thou got into Dialogues with the Maid now?

Coll. Mr. Stevens, 'tis well known what a Man you are to propagate Witnesses. My Lord, she gave me an Account of this in the Tower, before I came away, that Dugdale desired to speak with Mr. Smith, and told her, that nothing that he had to say would touch my Life.

El. Hunt. As I am alive 'tis true.

L. C. J. Mr. Dugdale denies it now.

El. Hunt. He is not a right Man if he denies it, for he told me it twice.

Coll. I told Mr. Smith of it, when he had leave to come to me: I told him what the Maid said he had to say to her, and this was three Weeks ago; said he, I will speak with him with all my Heart, if he has a Mind to speak with me; for he hath said that he hath nothing against her Master that he can touch an Hair of his Head, nor nothing that can touch his Life, that he knew nothing of a Plot or Contrivance against the King; and if I could help it, I had as lieve have given a hundred Pounds I had never spoken what I have. This he said to her.

L. C. J. You tell her what to say.

El. Hunt. Sir, he does not tell me; for Mr. Dugdale said those Things to me.

Coll. This is an Account I had when I was Prisoner; I could not reach her.

L. C. J. Do you deny what they say to be true, Mr. Dugdale?

Mr. Dugdale. My Lord, she came to me for Money; I told her I had it not ready, but would pay her: And in the Shop, before the Apprentice-Boy, she desired of me that I would write two or three Words which would say against her Master; and I told Mr. Graham of it. So said I cannot tell, I have not the Papers, nor what Informations I have given against him. So she came again the next Morning, and she was at me write down what I said. I wonder, said I, your Master will send you not he as good fend Mr. Smith, who is his Counsel? And this was the Words we had.

El. Hunt. My Lord, I do solemnly assure you, he said he would write down what he had said against my Master, and would fain speak with Mr. Smith; for there was more ado made about it than needs.

Mr. Dugdale. Mr. Graham can tell what it was; for I came and told him immediately.

L. C. J. Did you tell her you had nothing to say against her Master that would touch his Life?

Mr. Dugdale. I could not say that I had said nothing against her Master; for she asked me that I would write down what I had said; but I told her I knew not what was Treason, that must be referred to the Court.

Mr. Just Jones. Did he speak it openly or privately to you?

El. Hunt. He did not speak it loud; no Body heard him but myself.

Mr. Dugdale.

Mr. Dugdale. It was in the Shop, and the Apprentice-boy was by.

Mr. Just. Levinz. Was this after he had been at the Old Baily, or before?

El. Hunt. Yes, it was after he had been at the Old Baily, and after he had been at Oxen too.

Mr. Just. Levinz. Then it was before the Court, what could be made of it?

Coll. She hath gone forty Times for the Money I lent him out of my Pocket; and I lent him that when I had little more myself.

El. Hunt. I did tell him, Mr. Dugdale, if you can't let me have my Master's Money, if you please to tell me what you have made Oath against my Master. Said he, I can't let thee have it now; but thou shalt have what I have to say against him: I will draw it up in Writing, and thou shalt have it To-morrow Morning. The next Morning I came to him again, and, said I, I am come again; what must I do? said he, I have no Money; such an one hath not helped me to it. Sir, then said I, I hope you will be as good as your Word, to let me know what you have made Oath against my Master. Said he, I was about it Yesterday, but could not do it: But, Sweetheart, said he, (and took me by the Hand) I will give you a Copy of it To-day at Ten of the Clock; and if I do not, I will tell it thee by Word of Mouth. So I came to the House at ten, and staid till eleven, but did not see him.

Mr. Just. Jones. You had a great Mind to be tampering.

El. Hunt. The first Time, he asked me who was his Counsel; I told him Mr. Smith; then, said he, I have a great Desire to speak with him. So I told my Master of it.

Coll. My Lord, you see it is but black and white, all this whole Contrivance upon me. She hath proved I knew nothing of the Papers; and indeed I did not.

L. C. J. Do you call any more Witnesses?

Coll. There is my Brother-in-Law that received those Papers. Call George Spur and Sarah Goodwin.

[Mrs. Goodwin appeared.]

Coll. Do you know any Thing of the Papers that were carried to my Brother George Spur's?

Mrs. Goodwin. Yes, I do. The Saturday after my Brother's Confinement, about eight of the Clock in the Morning, I having heard of it, came into the House, and in a Quarter of an Hour's Time in comes a Waterman, and desires an Handful or two of Shavings. I knowing not who he was, nor what he desired them for, told him, he should have them; so he went up to the working Shop to gather them, for he pretended that to be his Business.

L. C. J. Whose Waterman was it?

Mrs. Goodwin. A Waterman, I suppose, that belonged to his Majesty, for he had a Coat marked with R. C.

Coll. This is after I was in Custody?

Mrs. Goodwin. Yes, it was the Saturday after. So no sooner had he the Shavings, but he goes out of the Shop, and comes in again with three of his Majesty's Messengers; and they made Enquiry after Papers, and I being innocent of concealing any Papers, or any Thing, said, I know of none; so they came to one Box that had the Tools for the Men to work with, and they demanded the Keys. I told him I knew not where the Keys were. So they went to the next, and found it open, but nothing did they find there; there was a Bed wherein formerly my Brother's Servants did lie: Said one to the other, Look well whether there be not something hid in that Bed; said I, I suppose there is no such Thing as you enquire for: If you please, you may take off the Clothes, and gave them free Toleration to look; but for the Chest, I would not deliver the Keys, because the Man was not there that owned it. In their searching, they flung down the Waincoat, and did a great deal of Damage to his Goods. Gentlemen, said I, I suppose you have Order to search, but none to spoil a Man's Goods. When they were gone, having found none, they threatened, God damn them they would have them, for there they were. But I being ignorant of the Concealment of the Papers, I requested the Maid and my Brother's Son, whether they knew of any Papers, and they satisfied me they knew of some Prints that were brought by a Porter, to be left at my Brother's, but they knew not whence they came, nor what they were: And the same Answer gave my Brother's Son, that he did not know whose the Papers were. But since his Father's Confinement they were laid up sure and safe, for they knew not what they concerned. Upon this, my Lord, my Brother-in-Law, George Spur, he comes into the House, and if it please your Honour, I requested him to carry them into the Country to his House, to secure them till we knew what they did concern, and who they did belong to. Whereupon he replied, my Lord, That he was fearful to carry any Thing out of the House; said I, if you will please to take them of me, I will carry them out of the House for your Security, because his Wife looked every Hour (being with Child) when she should be delivered, and he was fearful of troubling her. So I carried them out of the House, and delivered them to him.

L. C. J. To whom?

Mrs. Goodwin. To my Brother-in-Law, Mr. George Spur. So at my going out, after I had delivered them to him, in my Way back again, I found a small Paper-Book, and a small Parcel of Writings; who dropped them, or who laid them there, I cannot tell. But taking them up unadvisedly, I put them among the Prints which I carried out, I delivered them to my Brother-in-Law. This is all I have to say as to the Papers.

Stevens. Three Parts of what she hath said is false.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Well, hold your Tongue.

Stevens. Mr. Atterbury is here, my Lord, that searched the House.

Atterbury. Be pleased to give me my Oath, I will tell you what passed.

Mr. Att. Gen. We don't think it material, but you were sworn before, and up.

L. C. J. Tell the Manner of finding the Papers. This Woman gives an Account of a Waterman that came in, pretending to fetch Shavings.

Atterbury. Upon my Oath it was not so. The Waterman was a Waterman that brought me and two more of my Fellows, and the Waterman followed us into the Yard, but came after us: And being ordered to look for Papers, I did search the House; for I had Intelligence that there were Papers there, but I did not find them there. But upon finding the first Papers, I made the more diligent Search, but could not find the rest I most chiefly sought after.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did the King's Waterman take any Shavings by himself?

Atterbury. We were all together, we did not move out of any one Room, but together; this Gentlewoman was in the House when I came, and there was a little Child, a Girl, and this Maid was there.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did you come for Shavings there, pray, Mr. Atterbury?

Atterbury. No, I did not.

Mrs. Goodwin. The Waterman did though first.

Coll. Call George Spur. (But he did not appear.) But, Mr. Atterbury, before you go down, pray tell the Court, did you take any of these Papers at my House, or at my Brother-in-Law Spur's House?

Sewel. My Lord, I took the Papers, and I took them at Busby at Spur's House. And this Woman carried out one Half to Spur, and the Maid carried out the other.

L. C. J. When did he carry them?

Mrs. Goodwin. The same Day they searched for them, for my Brother came in at the same Time.

L. C. J. How do you know Spur carried any away?

Mrs. Goodwin. He carried none out of the House, I carried them out of the House, and delivered them to him.

L. C. J. Then they were in your House?

Mrs. Goodwin. They were in the Compting-House.

Coll. My Lord, if they were in any other Place, I know not how they came there, for this was all done after I was a Prisoner; and Sewel says, they were removed when I was a Prisoner. Where is George Spur?

Mr. Serj. Jeff. It is admitted they were at your House, and taken thence, and afterwards carried to Spur's.

Coll. They carried them abroad, and handed them from one to another, and took them into the Country, I know not what they did with them: But, my Lord, I neither know the Printer, nor the Author, I declare it upon my Life.

L. C. J. Have you any more Witnesses?

Coll. No, my Lord, I have not.

L. C. J. Will you that are of Council for the King call any more?

Mr. Att. Gen. One or two, if you please, my Lord. Call John Shirland. And it is to this Purpose; it seems very lately Mr. Bolron would have tempted him to have forsworn himself.

Coll. My Lord, I hope, if they bring in any Persons of new Evidence, I may have Leave to contradict them.

L. C. J. You need not fear but you shall be heard to them.

Mr. Att. Gen. We shall prove Bolron to be a Suborner of Witnesses; and that the Jury may know what he is, he and Mowbray have gone to give Evidence at several Trials, and the Jury would never believe * them when they were on their Oaths.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. I think it needs not, Time hath been spent enough already.

Coll. No Whispering, good my Lord.

Mr. G. Jeff. Good Mr. Colledge, you are not tell me my Duty here.

Mr. Just. Jones. Is it not lawful for the King's Council to confer together?

Coll. Not to whisper, my Lord; all ought to be spoken out.

L. C. J. Nothing ought to be said to the Jury indeed privately.

Mr. Att. Gen. But shall not we talk among ourselves?

Coll. No, I hope not, of any thing that concerns my Trial.

Mr. Just. Jones. You are deceived in that.

Coll. I think 'tis Law, that all ought to be publick; I beg your Pardon, if I am in the Wrong.

Mr. Att. Gen. Swear John Shirland. (Which was done.) Pray give the Court and the Jury an Account of Bolron, what you know of him.

Shirland. Bolron, my Lord, last Whitsun-Tuesday would have given me ten Pounds and a Horse to go down and swear against Sir Miles Stapleton. I was to swear I was suborned by his Friends, and several other Persons which I have discovered upon my Oath.

L. C. J. Is this Man sworn?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes.

L. C. J. Now call Bolron to confront him.

Coll. He offered you an Horse, as much as I offered Turberville an Horse, and I never offered him an Horse in the World.

[Then Bolron appeared.]

L. C. J. Is this the Man, Shirland?

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he give you ten Pounds to swear?

Shirland. He bid me ten Pounds and an Horse to swear against Sir Miles Stapleton.

Mr. Just. Jones. Did you ever see him, Bolron?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, my Lord, he was to have been a Witness against Sir Miles Stapleton, and he pretended that he was suborned by Sir Miles, or some of his Friends.

Coll. What are you, Sir? Mr. Bolron, what is Mr. Shirland?

Mr. Bolron. He is a Man that lives by his Shifts: He hath been whipt in Bridewell.

Coll. Do you know him, Sir? What is he?

Mr. Bolron. Even an idle Man.

Shirland. You, once when you saw me, drew your Sword on me, because I would not do as you would have me:

Mr. Bolron. I profess, my Lord, 'tis not so.

Mr. Att. Gen. Here is Mr. Smith, hear what he says against Mr. Bolron.

Mr. Smith. As we were coming up along, he was speaking to me of Colledge, and told me, he had as much to say against him as any Body, and if I would speak for him, he would evidence against Sir John Brooks for a Discourse at Ferry-Bridge.

Mr. Bolron. I never did hear any such Thing.

* What the Attorney here says, and the Solicitor, in summing up the Evidence, repeated after him, is notoriously false; for at the Summer-Assizes at York the Year before, Thomas Tbowing was convicted solely upon the Testimony of these very Men in their own Country, as was afterwards executed.

Mr. Smith. No Man in your own Country will believe you.

Coll. They believed you no more, it seems, neither.

L. C. J. Do you call any more Witnesses, Gentlemen?

Mr. Serj. Jeff. No, I think we need not.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Colledge, as I understand it, the King's Council will produce no more Witnesses. You may make what Observations you will upon the Evidence to the Court, and then must let them make what Observations they will to the Court; and then we will give the Charge to the Jury.

Coll. My Lord, I have only Innocence to plead; I have no Flourishes to set off my Defence. I cannot take the Jury nor the Court with an Oratory; I am unhappy in those Things. But, my Lord, I do declare, as to my own particular, in the Presence of God Almighty, that as to whatsoever is sworn against me, as to the seizing his Majesty, providing Arms, or having any Design either at Oxford or London, or any other Place in the World, to seize upon the Person of the King, or to rebel against the Government established; I vow to God Almighty, I never had such a Thought in me: 'Tis a Truth, my Lord. My Lord, they have sworn desperately against me, and it hath appeared, I think, by very credible Persons, that they have contradicted one another. It hath been proved that this was a Design; that they were tampered withal; that they complained they were in Poverty, that they wanted Maintenance; and they did confess they were tempted to come over to swear against Protestants: And now the Lord knows, they have closed with it, and they begin with me. I hope the Jury have taken Notice, that I have contradicted them sufficiently in what they have sworn; and that it is not possible, if I had a Grain of Sense, for me to discover myself to be such an one to Haynes, that was an Irish Man, and should speak all the Treason that he hath galloped through at first Sight, that as soon as ever I saw him, that I should speak so to him; I hope you will consider whether it consists with common Reason, when there would be no Probability of making any Use of him in the World. My Lord, all my Witnesses that I have brought, your Lordship can, and I hope will sum them up better than I can; for I declare it, I have been so concerned, that I have not been able to write half of it down. But I think there is never a Man that hath sworn against me, but hath been sufficiently confuted by Persons of Integrity and Honesty, Men of Principles, and Men of Religion; they are such, my Lord, that make Conscience of what they say: They are Persons altogether unknown to me, most of them, as to what they had to say, it was what they offered voluntarily; and I am certain they had nothing but their bare Charges, if they had that, for their Pains, in coming hither; and, my Lord, there is no Probability that they should come and attest any Thing that is false, for me who am a Stranger, for nothing: No Man is a Knave for nothing, as I believe these Men are not. My Lord, I do declare it, I was bred a Protestant, and have lived so; I am so to this very Day; I have been a Lover of the Church of England, and of all the fundamental Points of Doctrine believed in it; I own the same God, the same Saviour, the same Gospel, and the same Faith; I never had a Prejudice against any Man in the Church in my Life, but such as have made it their Business to promote the Interest of the Papists, and such I must beg Leave to say there are amongst them: For there is no Society in the World without some bad Men; and these do promote the Interest of the Papists, by dividing the Protestants, and allowing none to be true Protestants but those that are within the Church of England established by Law; which is a Notion so wide I could never close with that. I never had a Prejudice against any Man but a Knave in my Life. I have heard, I confess, some of the Dissenters, and I have found very honest, just, pious, godly Men among them; Men free from Oaths and all Debauchery; Men that make a Conscience of what they say: Not like some Persons that say they are of the Church of England, that carry themselves in their Lives and Actions so as that no credit can be gained to the Church by them. My Lord, I have been an hearty Man against the Papists; I have been an hearty Man as any Person of my Condition, for Parliaments, which I look upon to be my Birth-right, and under God Almighty, the Bulwark of our Liberty; and I am sorry if any Man should be an Instrument to create a Misunderstanding betwixt the King and the Parliament; For I always thought I served my Country, when I served the Parliament, and I served my King when I served my Country. I never made any Difference between them, because I thought them both one. I had the Honour to be entrusted by them before, and upon that Account I came voluntarily down hither. I rid my own Horse, I spent my own Money, and eat my own Bread; I was not beholding to any Man for the value of six Pence all the while I was here. My Lord, I have ever since the Plot hath been discovered, endeavoured with all my Heart, and all my Power, to detect and come at the very Bottom of it: I have spared for no Time nor Pains, what lay fairly in my way, in every Thing to encourage those that discovered the Villainies of the Popish Plot against the Life of the King, and for the Subversion of the Religion and Government established by Law. Now certainly it is not strange to the World; for I think all Christendom is aware how plain the Popish Plot hath been proved. These Men that swear against me, were they that used to follow me sometimes; they would say, it was they that had come to save our Lives, and yet we let them want Bread. That Argument, my Lord, was so fair, that I thought it unreasonable to see them starve: And I have said sometimes to some honest considerable Men, That it was hard they should have this to say of us, that they should want Bread to eat that were the King's Evidence, to detect a Popish Plot wherein we ourselves were concerned; and that when they had saved our Blood in our Veins, they should be suffered to starve. And one Time, I think, some three or four Gentlemen of the City did give me 42s. or 40s. and 18d. or thereabouts; which I did distribute amongst them: And they never came to me in my Life, but to seek Relief, they knowing that I had a general Acquaintance. And sometimes they thought it might be fit to petition the Common-Council of the City of London to take care of them: Sometimes they would speak to me to speak to particular Men, that care should be taken of them. At other Times indeed it was not this Sort of Discourse they had with me; but they would pretend they had something to discover of the Popish Plot, and so they would apply to me as a Man of some Acquaintance. And the first Time I saw Haynes, was upon such an Account, the beginning of March last, and it was thus: I was at Richard's Coffee-House at Temple-Bar, where Macnamarra did desire me to go out, and I should hear such a Piece of Roguery I never did hear in my Life, against my Lord Shaftesbury. So I did go out with them, and I called Captain Brown, who is since dead, to go with me; and we went to the Hercules-Pillars, and Haynes there discovered what I told your Lordship before, a Design to destroy the Parliament at Oxford; an Army that was to land in the North, and another in Ireland, and the Duke of York was to be at the Head of them. My Lord, after I had heard all out, he did desire us all to conceal what he had said till the Parliament sat, and then he would not only discover this, but much more. He at the same time told us, that there was a Design of Fitz-gerald's against my Lord Shaftesbury to take away his Life, and he was employed to come to his Cousin Macnamarra to get him over to join in the Design, and he should never want for Money, if he would but come over and do as they would have him. After he had discovered himself, Sir, said I, You are a Stranger to me; and I never saw him before in my Days, if he had seen me I can't tell: But, Sir, said I, either this is true, or this is false. If it be true, said he, 'Tis all true, and much more. So he up and told us much of Coleman, and of the Reconciliation between the Duke of Ormonde and the Duke of York, and how he came to be Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, and how Plunket came to be Primate, and by Means of whom, and the Letters that passed, and how so much a Year was given to Plunket for carrying on the Correspondence; and he told us so much, that I did wonder to hear any Man talk after that rate. After I had heard what he had to say, I told him, Sir, said I, this is either true or false that you have said: If it be true, my Lord Shaftesbury shall know it to night; for I will not conceal such a Thing concerning a Peer of the Realm: And if it were a Colour, he should know of it. And I did send him word that Night; and, said I, Sir, you ought to go, for your own Security and our's too, to swear it before a Magistrate. Said he, if I should, I should be discovered. Said I, I can't think you would be discovered. If you swore it before Sir George Treby or Sir Robert Clayton, they will not discover you. So he agreed he would swear before Sir George Treby; and he did go accordingly: But he being out of Town, I cannot have the Affidavit to produce it. There was a Letter sent last Saturday Night to Sir George to Bristol, and I hoped he might have been here to Day. This was the first Acquaintance I ever had with Haynes. The next Time I heard of him, was upon this Occasion. Ivy comes to me in Richard's Coffee-House, and, said he, Yonder is the Man that made that Discovery, which I told you before that Haynes had said to me; it was about a Month or three Weeks before the Parliament was at Oxford. After the Parliament was dissolved at Oxford, Ivy comes to me, and I think it was betwixt the two Terms wherein Fitz-Harris was arraigned and tried: I know not the Names of them; but he comes to me, and tells me he had been with my Lord Shaftesbury, and that there was a Friend of his that would confirm all that Fitz-Harris had discovered concerning the Murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey; and, says he, my Lord of Shaftesbury hath sent me to you to acquaint you with it. Where is your Friend? Said I. He is without, said he. So we went out of the Coffee-House; and when we came out of Doors, there was this Haynes: We went to the Crown Tavern without Temple-Bar; it was in the Forenoon. When we came there into the Room, he examined all the Corners and Cupboards, and Places about the Room, to see that no Body was there. When he thought all was secure, he began to tell me he had been to acquaint my Lord Shaftesbury that there was a Friend of his that would discover the whole Intrigue of the Murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, all that Fitz-Harris had said, and much more. And he desired me that I would intreat my Lord Shaftesbury to be instrumental to get him his Pardon before he discovered particularly. Then I told him, I think 'tis convenient, said I, that you discover something in Writing, and under your Hand, what you can say. He was not willing to do that. Can you believe, said I, that my Lord of Shaftesbury will betray you? Says he, I will not trust any Body; I shall be assassinated. Said I, if you will not give it to any Body else, Will you give it to Mr. Michael Godfrey, Sir Edmundbury Godfrey's Brother? You can have no Jealousy of him that he will ever discover you. Said he, if my Lord Shaftesbury will engage to get me a Pardon, I will tell the whole Truth. Said I, I will go to my Lord, and acquaint him: So I went to both my Lord and Mr. Godfrey; and Sir Edmundbury Godfrey's two Brothers both met me at my Lord of Shaftesbury's House. This is the Thing that he tells me; he would have me get my Lord's Protection and a Pardon for Treason; but the real Truth is, he sent me upon this Errand. So I came to my Lord Shaftesbury, and the two Mr. Godfreys were in the Room; and after I had told my Lord what Discourse I had with him, says my Lord Colledge, these Irish Men have confounded all our Business; and thou must have a care they do not put a Trick upon us: This must be a Trick of the Papists to ruin us; and if they have such a Design, if they will put it upon you and I, they are Fools. Upon your Lordship, said I, they may; but I am a poor inconsiderable Fellow. Says my Lord, I'll tell you, Mr. Godfrey, Mr. Colledge hath not only been an honest Man, but an useful and an active Man for the Protestant Interest. So I told my Lord how far I had gone with him, and that I desired it might be put in Writing. Says my Lord Shaftesbury, if he will put it in Writing, I will once again; for I have been since I saw the Fellow with my Lord Maclesfield, and my Lord Chief Justice Pemberton, and my Lord Chancellor, and I have told them that there is such a Person in general, but I know not the Man; as indeed my Lord did not, for only Ivy was the Person betwixt them that my Lord knew: And I told them, says my Lord, that he can confirm all that Fitz-Harris has said concerning the Death of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, and that he would prove my Lord of Danby in it, if he might have his Pardon; and my Lord said, They promised to speak to his Majesty that it might be granted. But some Time the la-end of the Week I heard it would not be granted; and both of these Men followed me to know what they should do. Said I, my Lord Shaftesbury knows not but that it may be a Trick; and said I to Ivy, I wonder why he should conceal it all this while, being a necessitous Man, and so forth proffered by the King in his Proclamation. Why, says Ivy, do you think there is no Truth in it? Says Ivy, 'tis not my Judgment, but my Lord Shaftesbury's and Mr. Godfrey's Judgment too. He answered me again, Fitz-Harris hath desired he may have a Pardon granted for himself and a Frenchman; and if so be there were nothing in it, Do you think he would move for a Pardon? Says I, Did Mr. Fitz-Harris move for Haynes's Pardon? How do I know that, says Ivy again: Fitz-Harris's Wife told me so. Says I, let me speak with Fitz-Harris's Wife, let me hear her say so, and I will believe you. The next Day he did bring her to me to my House: And this was the Time and the Occasion that brought Fitz-Harris's Wife, and Haynes, and Ivy, and Mr. Fitz-Harris's Maid to my House; and I never saw Fitz-Harris in my Days, till his Trial, nor had any Communication with him. But, my Lord, she did talk with Haynes, and confirmed it to me, that her Husband had desired a Pardon for him: Why then, said I, he would do well to discover what he knows to my Lord Shaftesbury; for I was with my Lord, and he says he will meddle no more, unless he will give it under his Hand what he has to say. And he did confess to me in my own Yard (for there we were together) that he saw my Lord of Danby come into the Chapel at Somerfet House, when the Body of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey lay under the Altar.

L. C. J. Here hath been nothing of this made appear by Proof.

Coll. My Lord, I only tell you which way they introduced themselves into my Acquaintance.

L. C. J. You may observe what you will upon the Evidence, as we told you; but you ramble from the Matter you are to speak to. And as we told Mr. Attorney, that what he said should go for nothing, unless he made it out by Proof; so must we say to you, what you say goes for nothing, further than you have proved it. Now you have quitted the Proof quite, and not spoke to that, but run into other Stories. I would have you keep yourself to your Proofs, and make your Observations upon them.

Coll. 'Tis, as I humbly conceive it, to my Purpose, but I hope my Ignorance may excuse me if I err. I tell you the Truth of things, thus it was.

L. C. J. Truth! Why if your's or any Man's Word in your Case should go for Truth, no Man that stands at a Bar, could be convicted: For every Man will say he is an honest Man, and all the plausible Things in the World. Make you your Observations upon the Proof, that is proper for you to do; and urge it as well as you can, and to the best Purpose you can: But to tell us long Stories of Passages between you and others that are not a whit proved, that is not usual, nor pertinent.

Coll. I thought it had been to the Point, when this Man pretends to have a Familiarity with me, to shew how his Acquaintance begun.

Mr. Just. Jones. Why do you think 'tis an Answer to him in what he proves upon his Oath? Have you proved one Jot of it? Not that I have heard. 'Tis your Part to sum up the Evidence on your own Side, and to answer that which is proved upon you, if you can. Do that, and we will hear you speak to it as long as you can. But to tell Stories to amuse the Jury with that are not proved, and to run out into rambling Discourses to no Purpose, that is not to be allowed, nor ever was in any Court of Justice.

Mr. Just. Raymond. Not one of your Witnesses have mentioned any Thing that you say.

Mr. Just. Levinz. I wonder, Mr. Colledge, you should forget yourself so much: For you found Fault with Mr. Attorney at the beginning for opening the Evidence, and you were told, and the Jury were told at your Request, that what he said, and did not prove, passed for nothing. But must tell you, 'tis much worse in your Case: For Mr. Attorney only opened what he might prove afterwards, but your Observations are upon that hath been proved already; and yet you run out into Stories of what hath not been proved at all, after our Proof is past.

Coll. Sir, I could not prove this otherwise than by Ivy, who hath been sworn against me.

Mr. Just. Jones. Would you have the Jury to believe you upon your Word?

Coll. There is no more than his Oath against me; and why my Oath, being an Englishman and a Protestant, should not be taken as well as his that is an Irishman, and hath been a Papist, I know not.

L. C. J. You go upon that Ground that your Word is to be taken, as appears by your Defence; but I must tell you, all the Course of Justice ere destroyed, and no Justice against Malefactors were to be had, if the Word of him that is accused should pass for Proof to acquit him.

Coll. My Lord, I have given your Lordship an Account of these Fellow's Conversations; and what other Proofs to make I know not: For I saw not what they would swear against me, and I had not Witnesses in my Pockets to confront them.

Mr. Just. Levinz. Well, the Jury have heard it over and over again, first on your Request, that nothing is to be taken Notice of that is not proved.

Coll. Pray, my Lord, then as to Haynes. My Lord, I do observe that there was a Witness for me that did prove, he owned he was one that was employed to make a Protestant Plot, and another that did hear him swear, and him, he would swear any thing against any Body for Money, for it was his Trade.

Mr. Just. Levinz. Now you are right; speak as much as you will as your Proofs.

Coll. My Lord, I think Turberville and Dugdale swear as to the tenth of March in Oxon; I desire it may be proved I was in Oxford the tenth of March.

Mr. Just. Jones. You yourself came down the middle of March.

L. C. J. I do not remember that they said the tenth of March.

Coll. Did not the Indictment say so?

Mr. Att. Gen. It is only in the Indictment.

L. C. J. As to the Time mentioned in the Indictment, it is not material; that is the constant Rule in Trials upon Indictments; as if an Indictment be laid to be stole, the tenth, if it be proved the Prisoner stole it another Day, it will be sufficient, the Time is not material; the Question is, whether the Indictment be true in Substance. Mr. Colledge, my Brothers will all tell you that the Law is so.

Mr. Just. Levinz. Though it is laid the tenth of March, yet if it be proved the first or twentieth before or after, it is all one; so the Thing be proved, they are not bound to a Day.

Coll. My Lord, the Punctilios of Law I know not, but it was the twenty-fourth or twenty-fifth ere I came down.

L. C. J. Well, go on, Sir.

Coll. Dugdale says I meant by the Word Rowley, the King.

Mr. Just. Jones. He does so.

Coll. How does he come to know, that by that Word I meant the King?

L. C. J. That we did ask him, and he says, you used so to expound it.

Mr. Just. Jones. Why, look you, he said you and he used to have frequent Communication concerning the King, and you did most frequently speak of the King by the Name of Rowley.

Coll. But, I say, my Lord, I never spake of the King by the Name of Rowley in my Life.

Mr. Just. Jones. You say it, and he swears the contrary.

Coll. I don't remember that he says, I declare it so; but he said, I meant it; for if I had declared it, then it had been the same Thing for me to have named the King downright.

Mr. Just. Levinz. Look you, Mr. Colledge, as to that, when any Witnesses had done his Evidence, you had Liberty to cross-examine him.

L. C. J. Would you have him called up again to clear this?

Coll. Yes, if you please.

L. C. J. Stand up, Mr. Dugdale. I understood by your Testimony, when Mr. Colledge and you discoursed of the King, you sometimes discoursed of him by the Name of Rowley, and that he explained that Name to be the King.

Mr. Dugdale. The first Time I ever heard what Rowley meant, was from him; for I asked him what he meant by the Name Rowley; I heard it before, but I did not understand it.

Mr. Just. Jones. Where was it?

Mr. Dugdale. At Richard's Coffee-House.

Mr. Just. Jones. What was the Answer he made you?

Mr. Dugdale. He said it was the King.

Coll. Upon what Occasion did I explain it to you?

Mr. Dugdale. Upon the Account of the Pictures.

Coll. I know not which of the Pictures has the Name of Rowley in it.

Mr. Dugdale. It was then we were talking of one of the Pictures you brought in Rowley, and Mac and Mac was the Duke of York, and Rowley was the King.

Coll. Upon what Picture was it, that I took Occasion to explain the Name Rowley to you?

Mr. Dugdale. I am not certain.

Coll. Remember, you have an Account to give as well as I.

Mr. Dugdale. You have so many Pictures, that I can't remember them; you have shewed me more than have been produced in Court.

Coll. Where had you that Picture from me that they call the Rary Shew?

Mr. Dugdale. Truly I received of them twice at Richard's Coffee-House.

Coll. Twice, do you say?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, two of them at two several Times; for you having promised me one, you brought it according to your Word.

Coll. When was that?

Mr. Dugdale. I did not keep an Account of the Day of the Month; and another I do remember, at the Green Dragon Tavern you thrust into my Pocket, and Mr. Baldwin was by at that Time. And, said he, Mr. Colledge, you will be so open, that you will come to be discovered at last.

Coll. Then will I be willing to die for it, if he and I and Mr. Baldwin were at the Green Dragon Tavern together. When was it that I gave you any Pictures there? Was it since the Parliament at Oxon?

Mr. Dugdale. Do I charge you since the Parliament?

Coll. I never saw the Rary Shew before the Parliament at Oxford.

Mr. Dugdale. I do not say it was that; you gave me one of the others.

Coll. 'Tis strange you will stick to nothing; When was it we were at the Green Dragon Tavern?

Mr. Dugdale. We were there before the Parliament sat at Oxon; it was since Christmas.

Coll. What Picture was it I gave you there?

Mr. Dugdale. It may be, I can't remember which of them it was, it was not Rary Shew; I suppose you gave me one of them concerning the Bishops, where you put Bishop Mew kissing the Pope's Toe; for it was a Bishop with a Patch on, and that you told me was Bishop Mew.

Coll. I put it, did I make it?

Mr. Dugdale. You said you were the Author.

Mr. Just. Jones. Mr. Colledge, will you consider upon what Mr. Dugdale was called up about, the Exposition of the Name Rowley?

Coll. I did examine him, and he hath contradicted himself; for he hath said at the Green Dragon Tavern I gave him a Picture of Rary Shew.

Mr. Just. Jones. He said no such Thing; he said, he did not know which it was.

Coll. I am certain he meant that then when he spake it; for he named it before, that he had two from me at Richard's Coffee-House, and one I thrust into his Pocket at the Tavern; and I say, I never was at the Green Dragon Tavern with Mr. Dugdale and Mr. Baldwin, nor in the Tavern these three quarters of a Year.

Mr. Just. Levinz. Mr. Colledge, you were in the right Way just now to manage your Evidence, in Opposition to the other Evidence; go on in that Way.

Coll. My Lord, I don't know well what was said, for I could not hear half, nor write a quarter of it; but, my Lord, I hope your Lordship hath taken Notes of it, and will remember it for me. You are my Counsel as well as my Judges.

L. C. J. In Matter of Fact we are.

Coll. My Life and your Souls lie at Stake to do me Justice; therefore I hope you will take Notice of what I have not had the Opportunity to write down. I have observed that every one of my Witnesses have spoken materially to contradict what they have said, to prove that this was done for Money, and that there hath been Confessions from every Man of them, that they were hired to do it; that they did it for a Livelihood; and one of them said, it was a good Trade, damn him, he would do any Thing for Money: And I hope then you will consider the Improbability, that I should speak to an Irishman whom I had never seen before in my Life; and that I should at the first Dash utter that Treason that he gives in Evidence, I think it cannot consist with any Man's Understanding to believe me so mad or so weak.

Mr. Just. Levinz. That is as to Haynes only.

Coll. As to Smith now, I suppose, it does not come within the Reach of the Statute; for the Dinner that was made by Alderman Wilcox, was made before last July was Twelve-month; all the Witnesses do say it was before Christmas, and Dr. Oates says, it was in the Summer; I know it by a very good Observation; because I went to Astrop Waters after that; and I saw Sir Creswell Levinz at the Wells: Now, Sir, you were there before this Time Twelve-month. So then whatever he says I said to him there, I cannot be charged withal by the Statute, more or less, if I had never a Witness against him; but I have Witnesses that have contradicted him sufficiently that he is forsworn in that; and if so, he is not to be believed in any Thing else; for he says, he and I went to the Coffee-house together, and we discoursed such and such Things, which is not above Half a Bow's Shot, and he made it, I say, a Quarter of a Mile's Discourse; if I had had all the Talk, the Discourse could not be so long, though he had said never a Word: So you see what a Kind of Witness he is. And Dr. Oates's Brother did say, That I did go along with Dr. Oates, and offered to be one of his Guard, and I did say so, and went along with them; but Mr. Smith he came after. And as to what he says, he is sufficiently confuted; that is, about the going into Cabals after Dinner; for it is proved, that I fell asleep behind the Table, and Dr. Oates was discoursing with Mr. Savage upon Points of Divinity; but I take no Notice of it, neither did I see Smith any more; but he went away, and so did the rest of the Company. But, my Lord, when Haynes was taken, Smith came to me that Day to my House at the Ditch-side, and sends in a Man for me, his Man; I was writing in my Parlour, and drawing the Design for Wainscotting Alhallow's Church, a Platform for it; this Man told me, His Master would speak with me, and Haynes was taken that Morning: But, as I understand since, it was by Agreement and his own Consent, though he hath pretended otherwise. You hear, says he, Haynes is taken? Yes, says I, I do, he hath been ever since nine o'Clock before the Secretary upon Examination, and he was till five o'Clock at Night examining, said he: I believe he confesses a great deal, said I: Of what, said he? Of some Design of the Protestants, said I, What, against the Government? I do not know what they may affright him into; he is a great Rogue, if it be true all that he hath said of himself: He says, he was concerned in the Fire of London, and knew of a Design to destroy the Protestants then; of a Rebellion that was to be in Ireland; of Plunket's being made Primate, and a great many of those Things: So that if he speaks Truth, he hath been a great Rogue, and as he hath pretended also, he was a great Coward. So then, I believe, he may say any Thing to excuse himself; says Mr. Smith, I with you are safe: This was the very Night before I was taken.

Mr. Just. Jones. Have you proved any Thing of this?

Coll. My Lord, pray give me Leave to tell you what is Proof.

Mr. Just. Jones. You are not to repeat this, unless you prove it, Sir.

Coll. He spake cautiously to me, as if he would have intimated to me, he would have had me run away. Said he, I believe you are not safe, I would have you take Care of yourself: For you were concerned with him. Now, my Lord, if I had been a guilty Person, I had Time enough to get away; and to prove this, I can only say, this was betwixt him and I. But, my Lord, you hear, Dr. Oates says, that this very Smith did swear he would have my Blood, and that was upon this Occasion of my vindicating Sampson, whom he had struck and abused; and I asked, Why he did it? Said he, I value no Man's Life, if he affront me, if 'tis any Man in England, I value him not. My Lord, upon this Occasion the Words rofe between us; and when he came out of Doors, and was going away, Dr. Oates said, he swore he would have my Blood, and that was the Occasion of his speaking that Blasphemy.

L. C. J. Dr. Oates did say so.

Mr. Just. Levinz. Well, you are right now, if you will go in that Way.

Coll. My Lord, this is for Smith and Haynes, that Haynes should say it was a good Trade, and damn him he would swear any Thing for Money, and that Smith should swear, damn him, he would have my Blood. I cannot sum up the rest of them, for I have not them here.

Mr. Just. Jones. There is Turberville, and Dugdale, and Smith; we will help you as to the Persons.

Mr. Just. Levinz. Pray keep to the Business, and do not run out.

Coll. Pray, my Lord, I have one Thing to say about Smith; he says, I shewed him my Arms, which I have had for any Time almost these three Years, ever since the Plot brake out. I have been armed ready to oppose the Papists, and I did my Duty in the City in Person in the Trained-Bands; but Smith says, these Arms were to destroy the King's Guards; but he does not prove that I was Confederate with any other Person; but instead of that, there were other Persons that say, with his own Mouth, that he did not believe there was any Protestant Plot; nay, he did believe I said it only in Wantonness. This is all; then how probable was it, that I myself should seize the King, or destroy his Guards?

Mr. Just. Jones. You remember Captain Brown, Captain Clinton, and Don Lewes, Mr. Colledge.

Coll. Did he swear they were all in my Company at Oxon?

Mr. Just. Jones. Yes, Dugdale did.

Coll. My Lord, Captain Brown and Lewes were Friends to my Lord Howard, with whom and other Company I came down to Oxon, and they lay with me at the Chequer, and they were in my Company, because they were guests in the House, and we came along together; but he does not say they were either of them armed more than myself, nor was he ever in Company with us; how then does he know we were in a Conspiracy?

Mr. Just. Jones. Because you told him at London first that they were such Persons.

Coll. I never saw Lewes in my Days, till I saw him that Morning I came down from Oxon; and Brown I was not acquainted with a Fortnight before. This is a Truth; but however, they have sworn a Plot upon me at Oxon, and then come and prove I declared these were the Men, and spoke such and such Words at London; I desire your Lordship's Judgment in this Matter of Law, whether what be done at London can be sufficient Matter of Proof in Law to maintain an Indictment against me at Oxon? And if not, they do not prove legally that I have spoken such Words. Besides, I conceive 'tis not a good Proof, because there is but one Witness.

L. C. J. Yes, look you, there are two Witnesses, Dugdale and Turberville, as to what you said at Oxon, and two Witnesses as to what you said at London, Haynes and Smith, who testify what you said you would do at Oxon. Now in Case you came to Oxon with any such Intention, that coming to Oxford is an Overt-Act, and the Witnesses that speak what you said in London, is Evidence to maintain the Indictment here, and to prove what your Intention was.

Coll. Does that become an Overt-Act, if I go to Oxon upon an honest Occasion, any other Occasion, though I had said those Words before?

L. C. J. If you came with that Intent to join with others, and with a real Purpose to seize the King, that is the Overt-Act, and the Words before prove the Intention.

Mr. Just. Jones. He declared it himself by his Words.

Coll. Smith says, that about a Week after Wilcox's Dinner, I discoursed with him at the Ditch-Side, that comes not within the Compass of the Statutes. Then there is twice of the three Times he speaks of; the last Day, I do not remember when it was.

L. C. J. All was in London that Smith speaks of you.

Coll. How comes that to be Proof here? Then nothing he says is to go for any Thing.

Mr. Just. Jones. Nothing will serve your Turn, we have declared our Opinions once already, that if the Witnesses swear true, here are two Witnesses; nay, if one were of what was done at London, and the other of what was done at Oxon, if they be to the same Treason, they are two Witnesses in Law.

Coll. My Lord, I observe one Thing upon Turberville's Evidence; he swears there was a Discourse in the Room when Brown was upon the Bed; but afterwards, if your Lordship minds it, he says, I discoursed with him as he and I lay upon the Bed. Before he said, when Brown lay upon the Bed, and in the Room, and afterwards when we lay upon the Bed.

Mr. Just. Jones. Both the one and the other.

Coll. But he first said one Way, and then the other.

Mr. Just. Jones. Whilst Brown lay upon the Bed, and when he was gone, whilst you both lay upon the Bed.

L. C. J. We will do you no Wrong; therefore if you will, Turberville shall stand up and clear it.

Coll. My Lord, I believe those that have taken the Passages, can prove he contradicted himself in that.

L. C. J. He said both. But the Jury have taken Notes of the Evidence, and will take Notice of it.

Coll. As to Mr. Masters, the Evidence he gives was, he says, that he and I should discourse of the Parliament in 40.

Mr. Just. Jones. And the Justifiableness of the late King's Death, that they had done nothing but what they had just Cause to do.

Coll. He swears that I did say to him, that the late Parliament did not cut off the King's Head.

Mr. Just. Jones. And you said the last Parliament that sat at Westminster, was of the same Opinion with that in 40.

Coll. I dare appeal to Esquire Charleton, in whose Shop the Discourse was. I did not know that Mr. Masters was to be an Evidence against me; and truly they have taken that Course with me, by which any Man may be destroyed with half this Evidence, were they of good Credit, let his Innocence be what it will. I have been used so barbarously in the Tower, kept from all Conversation, and so in an utter Ignorance of what was sworn against me; for else I could easily have disproved Mr. Masters, if I had been in London, and had Liberty to provide for my Defence; but they have taken a Course to prevent that, and brought me hither, because 'tis impossible I should here defend myself.

L. C. J. You have not offered at any Witnesses to impeach Mr. Masters's Credit.

Coll. Mr. Masters's Discourse he speaks of was in Mr. Charleton's Shop, I durst have appealed to him about it; for I knew if he were here he would do me right. Mr. Masters did say, the Parliament cut off the late King's Head. We held a Dispute upon that, which I was not willing to enter into; I said, they did not, and we did then dispute whether they began the War against his Majesty: I said, they did not that I knew of, neither were they the Persons, but the Papists that began that War, and that broke the Treaty at Uxbridge, and that the Papists carried it on to that sad Issue, and put it upon the Protestants, that they had the Odium of it; but it was another Sort of Men that carried it on. I said, that I did always understand that Parliament to be an honest Parliament, that minded the true Interest of the Nation, and much of the same Opinion with the Parliament that sat last at Westminster. But before I said this, I said they were Persons altogether innocent of the King's Murder, and raising the War against the King; I did always understand that so the Parliament in 40 were.

L. C. J. But they were guilty of a Rebellion, and are declared so by Act of Parliament since his Majesty came in.

Coll. My Lord, I am unacquainted with the Law, I speak only my Sense of it. And, my Lord, I did excuse them as to the Murder of the King, and the Beginning of the War, that according to my Understanding they were not guilty of it; and from thence I did maintain they were an honest good Parliament, and much of Opinion with the Parliament that sat last at Westminster, which was for the true Interest of the Nation.

L. C. J. And was that the true Interest of the Nation to cut off the King's Head?

Coll. I did argue that with him some Time, and did tell him that it was the Papists that did all the Mischief.

Mr. Just. Jones. But he says no, upon his Oath, that when he had said the Parliament begun the Rebellion, and the Parliament did cut off the King's Head, you said, the Parliament did nothing but what they had just Cause for, and the Parliament that sat at Westminster was of the same Mind.

L. C. J. Those were his Words.

Coll. Pray let him be called again.

L. C. J. Let Mr. Masters stand up again.

Coll. Pray, Sir, relate the whole Discourse that passed between you and I, whether I did not argue with you it was not the Parliament cut off the King's Head, nor begun the War, but the Papists.

Mr. Masters. No, you did not say any such Thing. We had a great deal of Discourse in the Shop, and under the Arch, and the Thing that was said, Mr. Colledge, was this: You did say to me, that you did justify the late long Parliament of 40, and their Proceedings; and you said, they were a Parliament that did nothing but what they had just Cause for. Said I, How can you be so impudent to say so, when they raised the Rebellion against the King, and cut off his Head? Said he again, They did nothing but what they had just Cause for, and the Parliament that sat last at Westminster were of the same Opinion.

Mr. Just. Jones. I did you no Wrong in repeating the Evidence, you see, Mr. Colledge.

Coll. Did I not first dispute with you that they did not begin the War, nor cut off the King, but the Papists did it.

Mr. Masters. Look you, Mr. Colledge, you would have had it the King began the War.

Coll. Don't you say so; for I said the Papists began the War. Sir, say no more to me than what you will answer to God Almighty; for I always said the Papists did all the Mischief in the late Times; and I wonder, Sir, you would not be so just to his Majesty, as to detect me for what I said then, if you apprehended it to be as you now say; but I am sure you do not, nor could not.

Mr. Masters. Mr. Colledge, it was so far from that, that I was afraid it was of dangerous Consequence, and I gave some Persons of Honour an Account of it; and I was sent to but on Friday last, to know what it was was said, and I was desired and commanded to come down hither.

Coll. Pray, Mr. Masters, you are upon your Oath, do me but Justice, and speak upon your own Conscience; look you to it that you speak the Truth.

Mr. Masters. I will do you all the Right I can in the World.

Coll. Then before the Court do you declare, whether we did not discourse at that Time as I said, for this Discourse was at Mr. Charlton's Shop at the further End.

Mr. Masters. No, it was at the Entrance into the Shop, Mr. Colledge; and did not we go into the Arch, and talk there?

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Mr. Masters, don't trouble yourself, your Reputation is not upon the Level with that Gentleman's.

Coll. I desire he may speak the very Truth, and nothing but the Truth.

Mr. Masters. I do, as near as I can, and do you no Wrong; you did in your Discourse say the Parliament did not begin the War, nor cut off the King's Head.

Coll. You did say to me, they did cut off the King's Head; and I told you no, the Papists did.

Mr. Masters. I think you did say that the Papists had an Hand in it; but, Sir, you have left out the most material Part of our Discourse, which was, that you said they did nothing but what they had just Cause for.

Coll. I do say, and it was my Sense always, that the Parliament did not cut off the King's Head; for they were long out of Doors before that came to pass, and a new unhappy War was begun.

L. C. J. The War was a Rebellion on the Parliament's Part, let us not mince the Matter, and so it was declared by Act of Parliament; and if you argued after that Rate, it shews your Temper, and that you are a very ill Man; for they that justify such Things, as to the Time past, would lead us to the same Things again if they could. Therefore don't go about to palliate it, ad faciendum Populum; here it is nothing to the Matter, but only to shew your Principles, and the Jury have heard what Mr. Masters says.

Coll. I was then a Child, and do not know all the Passages, but I speak my Sense.

L. C. J. You should not have justified such Things.

Mr. Just. Jones. Who appointed the High-Court of Justice that tried the King, and condemned him, but the Parliament?

Mr. Just. Levinz. It was the Garbage of that Parliament, I am sure, that is the Rump; but they called themselves the Parliament of England, and the Parliament it was that begun the War.

Coll. My Lord, I did not know, nor don't know, that it is proved yet, that the Parliament were those that did cut off the King's Head. I don't know, Mr. Masters is pleased to say this of me; but I thought no Evil, nor did he understand it so, I believe, at that Time, for he did not seem to take Advantage of my Discourse. I know he talked violently and passionately with me, as he used to do; and for Mr. Masters to say this of me now, is a great Unkindness; for I thought he was so much a Gentleman, that if I had spoken any Thing that had not become me, he would have taken Notice of it then.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. He did then, he tells you.

Coll. Had I known of it, I am sure Mr. Charlton would have done me Justice, and set Things right; but this I say, I did first excuse the Parliament from being concerned in the Murder of the King, or that they did begin the War, but the Papists did it: If it were otherwise, it was more than I understood: And after that I said, I thought that the Parliament that sat last at Westminster did stand up for the People's Rights, after the same Manner that the Parliament in 40 did.

Mr. Just. Jones. What, just after the same Manner, in raising War and Rebellion against the King?

Coll. After I had discoursed it thus, my Lord, as I told you, it could not be understood that I thought that Parliament would cut off the King's Head: And therefore you that are my Jury, pray consider, and take it all together, there could be no such Meaning made of my Words; for I did not conceive that that Parliament were concerned in those Things, but were a Parliament that stood up for the Rights of the People: Now, if it were so, then the Parliament at Westminster were of the same Opinion.

L. C. J. I tell you, the Long-Parliament's levying War, is declared Rebellion by Act of Parliament.

Coll. My Lord, if there hath been an Act since, that says they were guilty of Rebellion, I declare 'tis more than ever I knew before: This is the first Time that ever I heard of it.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. You are a mighty learned Gentlemen, to talk of those Points indeed.

Coll. My Lord, I desire to know whether any Words that were spoken six Months before they gave their Depositions, can be a sufficient Evidence in Law against me now?

L. C. J. 'Tis upon the Act of the 13th of this King you speak.

Coll. Yes, my Lord, I take it upon that Statute.

L. C. J. I tell you, as to that Part of the Statute which concerns Misdemeanors, there is a particular Clause for Prosecution by Order of King and Council; But as to that Part of the Statute that concerns Treason, it must be prosecuted within six Months, and the Indictment within three Months after.

Coll. What Statute is this Indictment grounded upon?

Mr. Just. Jones. All Statutes that concern Treason.

L. C. J. Upon the Statute of the 25th of Edw. III. which declares the Common Law, and the Statute of the 13th of this King, which when you have done, I will have read to the Jury.

Coll. Then, pray, my Lord, let me ask you one Question, Whether the Statute of 25 Edw. III. does not say, that there shall be two positive Witnesses to Treason?

Mr. Just. Jones. No, but there is another that does.

Coll. I am ignorant of the Law, and therefore I ask the Question.

L. C. J. Well, I will tell you, there must be two Witnesses in the Case, but one Witness to one Fact at one Time, and another Witness to another Fact at another Time, will be sufficient Evidence to maintain an Indictment of Treason; this was told you in the Morning.

Mr. Just. Jones. And it was told you withal, That it was the Resolution of all the Judges in the Case of my Lord Stafford, when he was tried in Parliament.

Coll. They proved Fact in that Case, writing of Letters, and offering Money to kill the King; but nothing of Fact is proved against me, but riding in the Country with Arms that I had three Years before.

L. C. J. We will read the Statute of the 13th, wherein Words are declared to be Treason.

Coll. I pray it may be read, if you please. (Which was done.)

L. C. J. Look you here, To compass or imagine the Imprisonment of the King, and to express it by malicious and advised Speaking, when proved by two lawful Witnesses, is Treason by this Act.

Coll. Now whether you will distinguish, that there must be two Witnesses to distinct places or Times, or whether the Statute intends two Witnesses to every particular Fact and Words.

L. C. J. We told you our Opinion before, That one Witness to one Fact, and another to another of the same Treason, was sufficient. We are upon our Oaths in it, and speak not our own Opinions, but what hath received publick Resolution in Cases of the like Consequence.

Coll. What lies before these Gentlemen of the Jury, as done at Oxon, 'tis but upon a single Testimony.

Mr. Just. Levinz. Nay, Mr. Dugdale and Mr. Turberville both swear the same Thing, your Design to seize the King at Oxon. And it would be the difficultest Thing in the World to prove Treason against any Man, if the Law were not so, and a Man might commit all Sorts of Treasons securely; for to be sure he would never say the same Things before two Witnesses in one Time, and the King would be in no Sort safe; for there would never be two Witnesses to one and the same Thing. But that hath been resolved often and often, over and over again, particularly in my Lord Stafford's Case, as you have been told.

Coll. My Lord, you say the King is not safe upon those Terms, and no private Man is safe in the other Way.

Mr. Just. Levinz. We say, that the Law is so, and there is good Reason for it.

Mr. Just. Jones. We must not alter nor depart from the allowed received Law.

L. C. J. I say, the Thing hath been considered in other Cases, and the Law hath been adjudged and settled. It was so resolved in my Lord Stafford's Case, when the Judges, by the Command of the Parliament, did deliver their Opinion upon that Point moved by him.

Coll. There is nothing of Fact proved against me, but a Pair of Pistols, a Sword, and an Horse.

L. C. J. We have told you the Law, and answered your Question.

Coll. But as the Case stands, if that be the Law, all Society and Conversation must be ruined by it.

Mr. Just. Jones. Pray go on, when do you think we shall have done else?

Coll. However I do not insist upon that so much, as that the Testimonies and Oaths of these Men are altogether invalidated, by substantial Persons that have here testified against them. I do declare upon my Salvation (I have nothing else to say) I am wholly innocent, and the Jury are my Judges, and I beseech them, as they will answer it at the great Day of Judgment, where they must appear as sure as I stand at this Bar now, that they do me right, and go according to their own Consciences; for if a Man shall be sworn against by such Fellows as these are, no Man is safe.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. The worse, the better to be trusted by you.

Coll. I am sure it cannot be thought by Men of common Reason, that I should speak Treason at that Rate that they have sworn, and to such Men, Men of their Profession, Irishmen, and Papists, Traitors that have declared they have been in all Manner of Rogueries, Murders, Plots and Treasons. Therefore, my Lord, I cannot do any more for myself, because I have no Notes, and cannot recite what hath been said for me or against me; but I do depend upon your Lordship, and I hope you will inform the Jury rightly, and do me Justice; and I do pray the Jury, that they will let their Conscience be satisfied, as they are Englishmen, and as they are Christians, to consider how the Case lies with with me, whether there has not been more Occasion of talking of late, and whether a Slip of the Tongue may be called a premeditated, malicious, advised Speaking. I mean, my Discourse with Mr. Masters. He talked with me as hot as Fire, he was so violent, and I did discourse him at that Rate I have told you, and that is Truth, as I have a Soul to be saved: I did excuse the Parliament, that as I understood it, they had no Hand in the beginning of the War, or the Murder of the King. My Lord, as for the rest that have sworn against me so desperately, I must say, that if the Jury did not as well consider my Evidence as their's, yet they might well consider, whether it consists with common Sense and Reason, that I should speak to these Men after this Rate, when I could lay no Obligation upon them, nor have any Confidence in them; necessitous Persons, that could not assist me one Mite, Men that were beholding to me to borrow Money of me, and that eat of my Cost, that I had always been obliging to, and not they to me. But I hope I need insist upon this no further; the whole Nation is sensible what is doing, and what this does signify: They have begun with me in order to the making of a Presbyterian Plot, which they would carry on to stifle the Noise of the Popish Plot; and this is not the 1st, the 2d, nor the 10th Time that they have been at this Game; how many Shams have they endeavoured to raise—

Mr. Att. Gen. Who do you mean by they?

Coll. The Papists.

Mr. Att. Gen. There is nothing of Popery in the Case; they are all Protestants.

Mr. Just. Jones. They are all Persons that have lately received the Sacrament.

Coll. They were all Papists, and I believe are so still; for Mr. Dugdale did justify to me the Church of Rome in several Things: And when I told him that they were all Knaves and Fools that were of that Religion, he told me, that many of their Priests were holy good Men.

Mr. Just. Jones. Have you proved that?

Coll. I can't prove it, it was betwixt him and me, my Lord.

Mr. Just. Jones. Then I hope you have done.

Coll. If I had sworn against him, he had stood in my Place.

L. C. J. Have you done, Mr. Colledge?

Coll. My Lord, I only desire the Jury to take all into their serious Consideration; I expect a Storm of Thunder from the learned Council to fall upon me, who have Liberty to speak, and being learned in the Law, understand these Things better than I, who must defend myself without Council. I know not whether it be the Practice in any Nation; but certainly 'tis hard Measure, that I being illiterate and ignorant in the Law, must stand here all Day, they being many, and taking all Advantages against me, and I a single Person, and not able to use one Means or another either of writing or speaking. But, Gentlemen, I do declare and protest, as I shall answer it at the Day of Judgment, that as to what these People have sworn against me either as to Words, or as to any Manner of Treason against the King, the Government, the Laws established, I take God to witness I am as innocent as any Person upon Earth. And therefore I must beseech you, be not frightened nor flattered; do according to your Judgments and your Consciences; you are to be my Judges both in Law and Fact; you are to acquit me or condemn me, and my Blood will be required at your Hands. And whatever is said to you by others, you are my true Judges, you must give an Account of the Verdict you give; and therefore you must see that you do Justice, as you will answer it at another Bar, where you must all certainly appear, and the Lord Almighty direct you that you do me true Justice, and I ask no more.

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury. Here hath been a great deal of Time spent, and truly I think for no other Reason but to divert you from the Matter that is before you, and that you might forget the Evidence that hath been given. And therefore I will briefly repeat it to you, that I may refresh your Memories about what hath been sworn. Gentlemen, the Crime charged upon Mr. Colledge is High Treason in imagining and compassing the Death of the King; the Proof of that hath been by a Conspiracy to seize the King here at Oxon, which Conspiracy he declared he was in, by shewing Arms prepared for that Purpose, and by coming down to Oxon with that intent, that is the Proof of his Design to kill the King.

Coll. Is the Conspiracy proved of that, Mr. Solicitor?

L. C. J. Mr. Colledge, We have had a great deal of Patience with you, you have spent a great deal of Time, you must contain yourself now, and let them go on.

Coll. Do not let him do me wrong, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I will do you no wrong, Mr. Colledge.

Coll. Sir, there is no Conspiracy proved.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Colledge, you have taken up a great deal of Time, and we have had much Patience, because we consider your Condition, and had rather hear too much, than be hard upon you, and because the Evidence was long and difficult to repeat; now we have heard you, you must have Patience to hear what the King's Council repeat and observe upon it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. As I was saying, the Fact that is charged upon him, is a Design to kill the King, the Manifestation of that Design is by preparing Arms to that Purpose, and by coming down to Oxon to seize the King here; and that this was his manifest Intent to seize the King, the Proof of it hath been by Witnesses, that I think by and by you will have no Objections against. These Witnesses were Dugdale, Turberville, Smith, and Haynes, these are the most material Witnesses to the Treason, there are two other Witnesses indeed, but they are to other circumstantial Matters that I will take Notice of to you by and by, and make my Observations upon them in their proper Place.

Mr. Dugdale was the first that was produced, and his Evidence is very full, he proves that Mr. Colledge declared to him at the Coffee-House here, that he was come down with an Intent to seize the King, that he had an Expectation something would be done, that he was armed, and that he did advise Mr. Dugdale to be armed too, for he was provided for the rooting out of Popery, which he explained himself what he meant by it, that was the Church of England, and the King and all his Adherents. He came hither armed for that Purpose, Gentlemen, and did advise Mr.

Dugdale to arm himself too, that he did declare to him the King was a Papist, and all his Family were Papists, he was as deep in the Plot, and as guilty of the Murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, as any Body else. This was what he declared to Dugdale here, and this he swore to you when he gave his Evidence.

The next Witness is Mr. Turberville, and he is positive to the Matter that is laid in the Indictment, and swears to you expressly, that he did declare it to him at the Chequer-Inn, that they came down here in Expectation of some Sport, that something would be done, that they did expect the King would begin with them; but if he did not, they would begin with him, and they would secure him till they had brought him to Compliance. He shewed him his Arms, that he was ready to engage in that Design, and advised Turberville to be ready too. And rather than Turberville should not be ready, he offered to procure him an Horse.

Coll. Every Man had the same Arms that I had, and I had had them long before that Time.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But every one had them not with the same intent. But, Gentlemen, because Mr. Colledge interrupts me with an Objection, I will take notice of it now by the Way. He says, those Arms he had before, and therefore they were not provided for this Purpose. Gentlemen, we do not pretend to prove when this traitorous Intent first began, and how long this Design hath been hatching; but such a Design there was, and such a Design he manifested to be in himself when he made the Declaration to Turberville, and advised him to arm himself; whether he prepared them against that Time or no, is not material, if he had them before; and if he had them first innocently, yet if he afterwards designed them for such a Purpose, and shewed them in a readiness for it, that is a sufficient Evidence to prove this Treason.

So here are two Witnesses, you observe, against the Prisoner of this Matter that is laid against him in the Indictment, an intent to kill the King, they both prove it positively upon him at Oxon. Mr. Dugdale speaks to Matters precedent to; for he tells you, his Discourse before they came down, that they would come down for that Purpose, that they had an Expectation something would be done, and therefore he came down in an Equipage not suitable to his Profession; for you see he was by Trade a Carpenter or a Joiner, but armed on Horseback with a Case of Pistols, Things that don't become such Men to travel with, and he did declare to Mr. Dugdale for what Purpose he came down. The next Witness is Mr. Smith, and Mr. Smith is as positive and full to this Matter of Treason as any of the rest.

Coll. There is scarce a Carpenter or a Joiner in London but hath Pistols when he rides.

L. C. J. Mr. Colledge, we must not suffer this, we had so much Patience with you that we expect you should be quiet now, and not interrupt the Council.

Coll. My Lord, let me not be overborn upon, there is scarce a Poulterer in London, but what hath Pistols.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We had great Patience with you, Mr. Colledge, and did not interrupt you, I am sure, but let you say what you would. I think I do you no wrong, if I do, I am under the Correction of the Court, they will reprove me if I do that which does not become me.

Mr. Just. Jones. Did not you ramble I don't know how, and yet you were suffered to go on?

Mr. Sol. Gen. He tells you of a Discourse as he came from the Coffee-House to go to a Dinner whither he was invited by Alderman Wilcox; and the Discourse was, that the King was as great a Papist as the Duke, and much more to that Purpose, vilifying the King. That Alderman Wilcox was a Man that gave Money to buy Arms to bring the King to Submission. He objects against this, and says 'tis impossible such a Discourse should be, and that all this should be talked in so little a Time, as in passing from the Coffee-House to the Crown Tavern without Temple-Bar.

Coll. Pray remember whose Company it was proved I went in, Mr. Solicitor.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But, Gentlemen, when you consider, how busy a Man he was, and how ready at talking of Treason, you will not think, but that this Man might talk much more than this; but this I mention to do him right, it being one of the Arguments he used; and, to give an Answer to it, though when you consider it, I believe you will think it not to need an Answer. But I would do him all the right I can, and now you have heard it, you will consider the Weight of it.

Gentlemen, he tells you of another Discourse afterwards, that does relate to his being here at Oxon, he tells you he had Arms in his House, and was ready upon all Occasions, and shewed Mr. Smith his Arms, and told him, these were the Things that were to destroy Rowley's Guards, as he said, which by the Evidence is made to appear he meant the King by that Name, his Arms he said were for that Purpose. That he would go down to Oxon, and there he expected some Sport. I know not what Sport he thinks there is in Rebellion; you see what Principles he is of, that does maintain and justify the greatest and horridest Rebellion that ever was in England, and says they did nothing but what they had good Cause for. He tells Smith, that he thought the King would seize upon some Members, and with that Expectation he came down, but yet was as ready as the King, and would be one in the securing of him, if he meddled with any of the Members. This Proof Mr. Smith made; and that after the Parliament was dissolved, he said, that the King ran away and was very much afraid. This is proved by Smith likewise, and that Colledge did declare after he came to Town. Smith proves further, that he did wonder the King did not consider how easily his Father's Head was brought to the Block; and for Mr. Colledge's Part he did declare, that he did believe this King would be served so shortly. And this does confirm what his other Witnesses have spoken of his Words at Oxon. Thus there are three Witnesses, though two are enough to convict a Man, they be positive to the Treason.

Mr. Haynes is the fourth Witness, and he is as full as any of them. I do but repeat it in short; you have had it so often canvassed by Colledge, that I believe you will easily remember it. He did advise Haynes that he should not value the King at all, for the King should be called to account for all his Actions; he said he would seize the King, and bring him to the Block, as they did his Father, with an indecent Expression of that bleſſed King, not fit to be repeated. And he ſaid, they did intend, when they had cut off him, never any more of his Race ſhould reign. This it was Haynes ſays, though there are other Matters. I would take Notice of one thing more, and I need not but mention it, you will remember it, and that is about the Libel of Fitz-Harris. Haynes tells you upon Diſcourſe of that Libel, he ſaid, That every Word of it was true; as ſure as God was in Heaven. Now that was a Libel made by a Papiſt, an Iriſh Papiſt, who had been tried, convicted, and executed for it, and the horriſt Libel it was that ever was writ. And this is the Libel which this Gentleman, who is ſo very converſant in Libels, and Books of that ſort, avers to be as true as God is in Heaven. This is the Subſtance, Gentlemen, of that Proof which hath been made to you, we have other Circumſtances to prove, That as he came down with that Intent to ſeiſe the King, and as he expected, what he calls, ſome Sport, ſo he did endeavour to begin the Sport, he did quarrel in the Lobby of the Houſe of Lords with Fitz-Gerald, ſome Blows paſſed, and Sir William Jennings telling him his Noſe bled, he did declare, I have loſt the firſt Blood in the Cauſe, but it will not be long before there be more loſt. Thus, after he had come down, he endeavoured to begin a Commotion; for from little Matters great Things do ſometimes ariſe; and when all Men were poſſeſt with an Expectation, ſuch as he himſelf did declare, he and others came down with an Expectation that the Parliament ſhould be attacked; a little Matter might have begun ſuch a Commotion, which no Man knows what End it would have had.

Gentlemen, this hath been our Proof. Now the Objection made to this Proof by Mr. Colledge, is, That this is a Popiſh Deſign to raiſe a new Plot, and caſt it upon the Proteſtants, and that theſe Witneſſes are now to deny all the Evidence they have given of the Popiſh Plot, and throw all upon the Proteſtants. This is that he would perſuade you to believe, but which I think when you do conſider a little of it, it will be impoſſible for you in the leaſt to have ſuch a Thought. For what are the Evidence that have proved this? Who are they? Men of Credit, that have been Evidences againſt the Popiſh Plotters, and againſt Men that have ſuffered for that Plot, Men that ſtill ſtand to the Evidence they have given, and affirm it every Word to be true, and one of the very Men that he brought, ſays, that they ſtill ſtand to it; for Turberville, who was one of the Witneſſes againſt my Lord Stafford, was tempted by ſome Perſons to deny the Evidence he had given againſt the Papiſts; but his Answer was, No, I can never depart from it, I have a Soul to ſave, that was true which I ſaid, I cannot deny it. If then the Witneſſes which he would have you to believe to be guilty of denying the Popiſh Plot, do confirm what they have ſaid as to that Diſcovery, that Objection is taken off, and they do ſtand ſtill to it, that every Part of it was true, and aver the ſame Thing; and yet forſooth theſe Men are going about to ſtiſle this Plot.

Gentlemen, theſe are the Men the whole Nation have given Credit to, the Parliament having impeached my Lord Stafford, upon the Credit of them (for it was upon the Credit of Dugdale and Turberville that they impeached him, for there was not two Witneſſes till Turberville came in and made a ſecond, and upon their Credit) after ſo ſolemn a Trial, where all the Objections that could poſſibly be made was made, the Houſe of Lords thought fit to find my Lord Stafford Guilty, and my Lord Stafford ſuffered for it, and died upon the Credit of theſe Men. Theſe are the Witneſſes, Gentlemen, that this Man thinks ought to be blown off with that frivolous Objection, that they are Perſons he would have you believe, who are guilty of a Deſign to throw the Plot upon the Proteſtants. But becauſe he hath deſired to ſave himſelf in an Herd, by numbering himſelf among the Proteſtants, I muſt a little obſerve to you what a ſort of Proteſtant he is, a Man, he would have you to believe, ſo popular for his Religion, that he has obtained the Name of the Proteſtant Joiner. But when you have conſidered what his Actions are, I believe you will a little ſuſpect his Religion. If the Proteſtant Religion allow any Man to vilify the King, to arraign the Government, and to throw off all Manner of Allegiance, then this Man is a Proteſtant. But if this be to act the Part of a Papiſt, and if the Papiſts could with that ſuch an Infamy might be put upon the Proteſtant Religion, that it ſhould juſtify ſuch a Rebellion as the late horrid one was, and own ſuch a Principle that it is lawful for any Subject to aſperſe and vilify the King, and this Man by thoſe many ſcurrilous Libels ſeems to do: If they could with this Nation overturned, and the Government in Confuſion, and the Church of England deſtroyed, the beſt Bulwark now in the World againſt Popery, and the beſt only Refuge at this Day left for the poor afflicted Proteſtants abroad; then whiſt Mr. Colledge does thus act the art of a Papiſt, he does very ill to call himſelf a Proteſtant. Gentlemen, I cannot but obſerve one Thing to you, and it was the Evidence of Dr. Oates, when he did firſt diſcover the Plot, and without his Evidence you would eaſily believe the Thing. He told you, there were two Ways they had to accompliſh their Deſign, by direct murdering of the King, or if that failed, by putting all Things into Confuſion here, and raiſing Rebellion and Diſturbance amongſt us; and the Way to effect that Rebellion, it was by having Emiſſaries ſent among us, to work us into a Diſlike of the Church, and by that Means into a Rebellion againſt the State. That ſome Men were ſent abroad for that Purpoſe to preach at Conventicles, ſome whereof were caught, and ſome did ſuffer. Now without this Evidence it would not be hard to believe, that ſuch there are, and have been; for all that know the Hiſtory of our Reformation, do know that it was an early Practice among them, to raiſe Sects amongſt us, to bring Confuſion firſt into the Church, and then in the State. And we have already found the ſad Effects of it.

Now, Gentlemen, if Colledge has all this while under the Name of a Proteſtant acted the Part of a Papiſt, though I cannot ſay he is a Papiſt, nor that he is one of thoſe Emiſſaries, yet I may ſay, he is not that good Proteſtant he pretends to be. Gentlemen, I muſt now, to do him Right, come to repeat the Evidence that he hath given againſt our Witneſſes; for Mr. Haynes he hath produced ſeveral Witneſſes, one is Mr. Hickman, who ſays, he over-heard Haynes ſay to one that was his Tenant, that it was his Trade to ſwear, and he muſt get Money by it. This he over-heard him ſtanding and liſtning at a Door. You have another Man, Lun, that is the next Witneſs, and he ſays, that at the Fleet-Ditch where he ſaw him, there he declared the ſame Thing to him, that he would ſwear any Thing for Money, and damn his Soul rather than the Catholic Cauſe ſhould ſink; and now he comes to prove a Plot upon him that is a Proteſtant, and in his Perſon upon all the Proteſtants of England; and this Man would ſain throw off the Credit of the Popiſh Plot, and turn it upon the Proteſtants. But, Gentlemen, it is ſtrange, that Mr. Haynes ſhould have this Diſcourſe with Lun, the firſt Time that ever he ſaw him; for I am ſure his own Witneſs Lun ſays it was the firſt Time, and that he ſhould immediately talk to him at this Rate is ſomewhat ſtrange: But for an Answer to it, this Lun we have confronted with the Evidence of White the Meſſenger, who ſwears, that afterwards meeting him at Uxbridge, Lun asked him what Gentleman that was, and did not know Mr. Haynes, and yet he takes upon him to prove, that he had ſpoke ſuch Words to him before. I think there is never another material Witneſs againſt Haynes, except Whaley, who was an under-Officer in the King's-Bench; and he ſays, that Haynes, while he was a Priſoner there, ran away with a Silver Tankard, but he never was indicted or proſecuted for it, though he remained afterwards in the Houſe, and this was five or ſix Years ago.

Now, Gentlemen, I think the Nature of this Evidence hath not that Weight, as to take off the Credit of what this Man hath ſaid upon his Oath, eſpecially when this Man's Evidence is ſo backed with the Evidence of other Men, that I think there is no Objection at all againſt it. For the other Witneſſes, Dugdale, Smith, and Turberville, are Men whoſe Credit has not been impeached, and they have confirmed in Subſtance what the Evidence of Haynes is; ſo that he does not ſtand alone in what he here ſwears, but 'tis confirmed with concurrent Evidence with it.

Then, Gentlemen, for the Objection againſt Dugdale, Turberville, and Smith, they have produced Dr. Oates to you, and he muſt vilify the Credit of thoſe Men, whoſe Teſtimony as to what he gave at firſt in diſcovering the Popiſh Plot, received Credit by being ſeconded by theſe Men. And I cannot but obſerve it as a ſtrange Thing, that this Man comes now to vilify the Teſtimony of thoſe, who have given Evidence, and been credited by the whole Kingdom; that he ſhould come here upon the Word of a Prieſt to declare, that Mr. Dugdale was a Man of very lewd Converſation, and was a Perſon that had a foul Diſeaſe on him, when he pretended he was poiſoned. I remember, this was an Objection that hath been made by the Papiſts to him, and I believe you have heard it often out of their Months; but it is the firſt Time that ever I heard it from any one that is a Witneſs of the Popiſh Plot, and pretends to ſtand up for the Proteſtant Religion. Gentlemen, if any ſuch Thing as this could have been made out againſt him, it had been made out e're now, the Papiſts would have taken Advantage of it, and when the Wit of all that Party was bent againſt him, he could not have eſcaped the having it proved. If it had been true, yet Dr. Oates takes upon him now to vilify his Credit, and takes up thoſe Arguments the Papiſts have maliciously ſuggeſted, but yet were never able to make out. This looks as if the Doctor were again returning to St. Omers, that he is thus going about to diſparage the Evidence of Mr. Dugdale, which in great Meaſure verified the Truth of that Diſcovery, himſelf firſt made of the Popiſh Plot.

Againſt Turberville, Gentlemen, I think there hath been very little at all objected that can have Weight with you. Mr. Broadgate, as I ſuppoſe you obſerve, has ſaid enough to confirm Turberville's Credit; for he hath proved to you, that when he was tempted to renounce his Evidence againſt the Papiſts, he reſuſed to do it, he had more Conſcience than to do it, he knew well enough what he had ſaid was true, and as he had a Soul to ſave, he could not go from it. This is the Evidence that he gives, and which certainly ſerves much to confirm the Truth of Turberville, beſides the ſtrict Examination he hath been under, and beyond any Thing that Dr. Oates, I think, has been able to contradict him in.

Dr. Oates contradicts Smith about his coming from the Coffee-houſe to Wilcox's Dinner. He ſays, he did not come along with Mr. Colledge, but Colledge came along with Dr. Oates, and Smith followed them. But, Gentlemen, you hear what Smith hath declared upon his Oath, That they came both together out of the Coffee-houſe; and you hear what his Witneſs Mr. Smith the Counſellor ſays: He does not poſitively remember that Circumſtance, yet one would think he ſhould; for Oates ſays, Mr. Smith the Lawyer walked juſt before them, and Colledge followed. Mr. Smith that is the Witneſs for the King, he ſwears he came along with Colledge, but Mr. Smith the Lawyer being asked that Queſtion, he does not remember that. Then another Thing is, Dr. Oates ſays, when they were there, Colledge was ſo far from diſcourſing of any reaſonable Matters, that he was very merry in the Company, and talking innocently; but Mr. Smith ſays, he was ſo far from being merry, or talking Treafon, that he fell aſleep, and ſlept behind the Table. Gentlemen, theſe Objections you ſee what the Weight of them is, and how little the Evidence agree one with another; but there is nothing that does contradict Mr. Smith in his main Evidence. 'Tis poſſible they may not remember particular Circumſtances, whether Mr. Colledge and Mr. Smith came together, ſo they might come together for ought they know, and they may not remember any Circumſtance about their retiring, but they can't take upon them to ſwear it is not ſo, and their not remembering it does not prove it was not ſo, and the Circumſtance itſelf is ſo trivial, that there was no Neceſſity they ſhould remember it. So then no Evidence that comes from Dr. Oates can take off that that is given by Smith; though if Mr. Smith were out of the Caſe, and Mr. Haynes too, yet there is Evidence ſufficient from Mr. Dugdale and Mr. Turberville, who are not impeached, and are both of them poſitive both to the Faſt and to the Place.

There are two Witneſſes more that I muſt mention, and they are Bolton and Mowbray; they ſwear that Smith travelling upon the Road with them, would have ſuborned them to ſwear againſt John Brooks, about a Diſcourſe at ſome Place; but it happened, Gentlemen, they differ in point of Time in their Teſtimony; the one ſaid it was the 25th of July, the other was poſitive it was the 3d of Auguſt. But I think I need ſay no more to theſe Men, but only to deſire you to weigh their Credit.

Balron and Mowbray, I confess, have been Evidence against several Men that have been accused of the Popish Plot, but they have been so unfortunate as never to gain Credit with any Jury. Mr. Smith hath been believed by the whole Court of Parliament: But if there were no more in the Case, these are two Men that never were yet believed, Men that have been sworn and their own Jury have rejected the Credit of their Testimony: But besides that, comparing the Testimonies and the Difference that was between them, is a sufficient Evidence to confront all that they have said.

I think, Gentlemen, this is the Substance of what hath been offered by his Witnesses, against the Witnesses produced for the King, except that of Mr. Everard, who says something against Haynes, that Haynes should say, he swore for self-preservation. And against Mr. Smith he says, that he heard him say, he did not know of any Presbyterian Plot. I believe that may be true, and yet it does not contradict Smith's Evidence against Colledge; for Mr. Smith does not tell you, that he was privy to any such Design of the Presbyterians, that he knows of any Consultations that they held, or the Ways and Means by which they would arrive at the Treason charged upon the Prisoner at the Bar; but his Evidence is, That this Man declared there was such a Design, That there was a party would do it, and That he would be sure to be one, and armed himself for that Purpose: But his not being privy to any Plot, or knowing the Particulars, is no Contradiction to what he said.

This is that he hath produced for his Defence, and by these Things he hath endeavoured to take off the Credit of our Witnesses, and he would have you believe that he is a very good Protestant, though he does that which no Protestant would do, and which is the Papists Work; he hath produced you Witnesses, that he has gone to Church, but I do not see he hath produced any Witnesses at all that are now conversant with him, his own Parishioners in London; but if he had brought never so many Witnesses of his going to Church, and of his Conformableness to the Church, yet if he were guilty of these Practices, he must give me Leave to suspect the Truth of his Profession; and I think it a great Piece of Arrogance for him to take upon him the Title of a Protestant, when he hath abused that Title by such unsuitable Practices: And, Gentlemen, if such Practices as these are, which we have fully proved, are such as all good Men must abhor, I cannot but reflect upon the Condition of this Man, whose only Hope is, that you should now forget yourselves, and become as ill as he is. But as that cannot be presumed, so I shall not need to say any more to you; you are Men of that Consideration, that can judge between Things, and the Appearances of them, and you know very well how to give the due Weight to the Evidence we have given to you, as well as the Objections made by the Prisoner; and so, Gentlemen, I shall leave it to you.

Mr. Serj. Jeffries. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, it hath been a long Time that hath been spent in the Course of this Evidence; whether there has been any Art or Design in protracting the Time, on Purpose to obtrude upon the Patience of the Court, or that you, Gentlemen, should forget the Force of the Evidence that hath been given against the Prisoner at the Bar, when there hath been so much Time taken up unnecessarily, when there was no Occasion, as I must needs say, there was not for such a tedious Defence, I leave it to you to determine: But which was truly intimated by the Court at the Beginning of the Trial, must in the End of this Cause be repeated, and indeed go through it all, that what we of the King's Council, and what the Prisoner has affirmed, that has not been given in Proof, signifying nothing, and is not to be any Guide at all to you. You are upon your Oaths, and by the Oath you have taken, you are bound in Conscience to give a Verdict according to the Evidence that has been given to you, and that is your Guide; so that what we opened and have not proved, is no more to be believed, than what the Prisoner has said for himself in his own Defence; and whatsoever he says, if he make not good Proof of it, is no more to be regarded, than what we who are for the King have alledged, and not made out.

So then this being in the first Place premised, I shall take Care as near as I can to save the Time of the Court, and not to trespass on your Patience, Gentlemen, unnecessarily, in a Case whereupon as great a Concern does depend, as perhaps ever came to Trial at any Bar: For, I say, 'tis a Case wherein the Life and the Liberty of the King is concerned, and that is the great Concern of the Nation; then the Religion of the Nation is concerned; I would be understood aright, I mean the Protestant Religion established by Law; for I know of no other Religion men ought to sacrifice their Lives and Fortunes for, but the Protestant Religion established by Law; and when these Things are concerned, 'tis a Case of great Consequence: God forbid any Person, Protestant or other, should attempt the Life of the King, and the Subversion of our Religion, and by stiling themselves by the Name of Protestants, should excuse themselves from any such Crimes.

For the Evidence that has been given, I shall not enumerate the Particulars against the Prisoner at the Bar, other than such as have been omitted, (if I mistake not) by Mr. Solicitor.

In the first Place, there are the Things that happened at Oxon, for you have had it already sufficiently told you by my Lords the Judges who are up on the Bench, and who (under Mr. Colledge's Favour) are the Prisoner's Judges in Point of Law, as you are his Judges in Point of Fact. They have (I say) already told you what the Law is in Relation to Treasons; that in Case the Treason be in two Counties, if the Witnesses speak to the self same Treason, though to different Facts, that will be two Witnesses to prove High-Treason; and that there hath been such a Case, the Prisoner at the Bar, who says he is a Protestant (for his own Soul's Sake I wish he were a good one) must take Notice, that Gawan, the great Priest who was tried at Newgate, and convicted, by what Evidence? By one of them that is a Witness now against the Prisoner at the Bar, that is, Dugdale; his Treason was committed part in London, part in the Country, of which part Dugdale gave Evidence; but being both to the self same Purpose, by the greater Part of the Judges, who were in the Commission, and present at the Trial, they were reckoned a sufficient Testimony to prove him guilty of High-Treason: And I hope we do not live to that age, that any Protestant whatsoever should come to trip up the Heels of the Popish Plot; by saying, that any of them who suffered for it, did die contrary to Law, or without sufficient Proof: For if Mr. Dugdale was not a Person fit to be believed; or if the rest of the Judges who tried Gawan were out in the Law, then that Man died wrongfully; for he had as much Right to have been tried according to the Law, as any other Person whatsoever. Therefore, Gentlemen, as to that Matter, we must submit it to my Lords the Judges, who are to give you an Account what the Law is in all Particulars before you; but as to the Fact whereof you are Judges, that is the great Matter we shall apply ourselves to, and for that it stands thus.

Here is Dugdale that does give you an Account what his Design was in coming to Oxford; how he came to be armed as an Index (Gentlemen) of his Mind. And pray give me Leave to put you in Mind of one Thing. You have first a Libel produced and read to you; a pretended Letter, wherein there are Queries that have been taken Notice of, and which seem to back the Evidence given by Mr. Masters: For there is a Vindication in those Queries of the Proceeding of the Parliament of 41, which he has Confidence enough now at the Bar to justify too. But, Gentlemen, you were told by the Court, and you know it, that that Parliament was guilty of high Rebellion; and even in those Queries he asperses not only the Government, but every Man that has any Concern in it; for it takes Notice not only of the King, but of all his Council. Never a Judge nor an Officer in the Nation but is traduced by it; and which is the most material, it was the Foundation of that Libel which has been mentioned to you, and which Fitz-Harris was so justly condemned and executed for; that most traitorous and infamous Libel in part of it has these Queries, and a great Paragraph of this Libel makes up Part of that Libel of Fitz-Harris, which our Witnesses say, Mr. Colledge was pleased to affirm was as true as God is in Heaven. Another Thing is this, this Gentleman, whose proper Business it had been to manage his Employment at London for a Joiner, is best seen in his proper Place, using his proper Tools of his Trade. I think it had been much more proper for him, and I believe you will think so too, than to come with Pistols and those Accountments about him, to be regulating of the Government; what have such People to do to interfere with the Business of the Government? God be thanked, we have a wise Prince, and God be thanked he hath wise Counsellors about him, and he and they know well enough how to do their own Business, and not to need the Advice of a Joiner, though he calls himself the Protestant Joiner. What had he to do to engage himself, before his advice was required? How comes he to concern himself so much that after he had writ this Libel, wherein he is pleased to take notice of Tyrants, afterwards should go to make a Print, I mean the Rary Shew? And when Dugdale comes to enquire of him, what do you mean by such a Thing, The Tyrant shall go down? Says he, I mean by that, the King. And what do you mean by having them to go to Breda? Why, there he explains it, that he puts all the Government, the Lords and the Bishops upon the King's Back, and being asked what he meant to have done with them, Why, the Bishops, and the King, and all were to go to Breda. These are the Things that himself did acknowledge he was the Author of, and these Prints he did cause to be made, and he is the Person that gives you an Account, that it was but the Conception and Imagination of Dugdale, that Rowley meant the King; but Dugdale being called again, he tells you after some Time, that he was under some Difficulty to know the Meaning of it; and then Colledge tells him it was meant the King, and some expounded it to him. And so Smith tells you of the same Name of Old Rowley again. Gentlemen, thus I tell you what hath been omitted. The Evidence hath been long, and therefore we must be pardoned, if we can't exactly repeat it. This is the Evidence that was done at Oxon, the next is Mr. Smith, who speaks of what was done in London, and he is an Evidence both as to the Word Rowley, as to the coming with arms, and as to the declaring to what End he came, and what he had done. Mr. Haynes, he tells you, both before and after the same, and that I must take Notice of to you, Mr. Smith does particularly say, he used those Words, which I hope every honest Man, and every good Man, that desires to preserve the Government according to Law, will hear with the greatest Detestation and Abhorrence; he talked of the taking away the Life of the late King of blessed Memory at such an impudent Rate, that every true Protestant's Blood would curdle at the hearing of it. And this he said not only to Mr. Masters, but he justified it to Mr. Smith too.

In the next Place you have Turberville, who gives you all the Reasons, how he did not only tell of these Things himself, but encouraged him to prepare himself accordingly, and he gave him a Mark, a Ribbon with No Popery, no Slavery. These were Marks whereby they were to be known, and they were to be one and all, as they call it, that when such a Blow was struck, they would be ready to fall in. There is one Thing more that I take Notice of, that is, what was said by a Gentleman, Sir William Jennings, which is a Confirmation of all the other Evidence, that Gentleman who hath appeared to you to be a Man of Honour, even by the Confession of Mr. Colledge himself, and by his own Words; for he said like an honest Man, and like a loyal Man too, that he would rather engage himself in three Dangers for the Service of the King at Sea, than come in cold Blood to give Evidence against a Man for his Life at the Bar. And yet this Man who tells you of this himself, and that very Person whom Colledge himself calls a worthy Person, hath given you this Account, that when he told him his Nose bled, he answered him, It was the first Blood lost in the Cause, but it would not be long ere there was more lost: An excellent Cause for a Man to venture his Blood in. When he was told of this, he began to put it off, and to use his own Words, had a great Mind to sham off the Business, but in Truth there was no Answer given to it. Gentlemen, the Objection that hath been made against the Evidence that have not been taken Notice of, I desire to take Notice of. I think against three of them there has been only Mr. Oates, and Mr. Oates, I confess, has said, in verbo Sacerdotis, strange Things against Dugdale, Smith, and Turberville: I have only the Affirmation of Mr. Oates, and as ill Men may become good Men, so many good Men become ill Men; or otherwise I know not what would become of some Part of Mr. Oates's Testimony. And in the next Place Place, if these Men have not sworn true, I am sure Mr. Oates must stand alone in the greatest Point, in which all the Evidence agree, that is, the Popish Plot.

But, Gentlemen, I must take Notice to you, that it is strange to me, that ever you, upon your Consciences, should perjure three Men, who positively upon their Oaths deny any such Discourses as Mr. Oates speaks of against them, I do put that upon your Consciences, whether you, upon the bare Affirmation of Mr. Oates, in this Place, will convict three Men, upon whose Testimony the Lives of so many as have suffered, have been taken away, and, as we Protestants do believe, justly. I say, whether you will do it upon the bare Affirmation of Mr. Oates, against their Oaths.

In the next Place, Gentlemen, I must tell you, besides the positive Evidence of these Gentlemen, there is Circumstance of Improbability in the very Words he speaks of. Will any Man tell me, that after such Time as Men have given their Oaths, as Smith had given his that he was concerned, and so had Dugdale and Turberville too, that these Men should come and voluntarily tell Mr. Oates they were all forsworn, are these Men such great Coxcombs as he would have us to believe? Is it so probable a Thing, that any Men of common Knowledge would do it? Do you think a Man of that Knowledge and Consideration, as Smith is, an allowed Scholar, and a Man of known Learning; and Mr. Dugdale, who has been reckoned by all Men to be a good Evidence; Do you take these Men to be such absolute Novices, that they must seek an Occasion to tell him they were bribed off, and were forsworn? If you can think this, and if a bare Affirmation against these positive Oaths can prevail; Gentlemen, upon your Consciences be it.

In the next Place, 'tis a strange Sort of Thing to believe Mr. Smith should come out of a Coffee-house, where a Quarrel is pretended to have been between him and Colledge; but Mr. Smith does, upon his Oath, say, he never had any such Quarrel with him, and that he should fall a damning and sinking against Colledge, and against the Gospel, that there should be such Impudence in the World in any Man as to desire or wish such a Thing: Gentlemen, these are strange Sorts of Apprehensions, and Men must have very strange Thoughts, that can strain themselves up to the Belief of them.

In the next Place, here it is said by the Prisoner, Good Lord! What a Conviction we shall be in! Here is a Plot upon the Protestants! I hope in God there is no Protestant Plot, but I also hope the whole Interest of the Protestant Religion is not involved in the Prisoner at the Bar, and all will be destroyed, if Mr. Colledge dies for Treasons. Gentlemen, the Question is not, whether there be a Presbyterian or a Protestant Plot, we declare we know of none; but whether the Prisoner at the Bar have spoken such Words, and done such Things as are sworn against him. And I would fain know what all the Discourses we have had about Irish Witnesses and Papists signify, when in all the Course of our Evidence, there has been but one Irish, and never a Papist: But here have been great Discourses about Macnamarra, and Denis, and what it hath been for, but to make a Noise and raise a Dust, I can't tell, for in this Case there has not been one Irish Man besides Haynes, and never a Papist throughout the whole Evidence: So that it is easy, if Men think it will take with the Auditory, for a Person to cry out, O Lord! We are all like to be undone, here are Irish Witnesses brought against us. And yet, after all this Stir, there is but one Irish Witness, and never a Papist. And as for him, truly, Gentlemen, I must take Notice, that even Colledge himself, till such Time as he was taken, reckoned him an honest Man.

Colledge. Never in my Life.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. It was so said. But I do say, Gentlemen, suppose (which I do not admit) that the Irish Man he speaks of be out of the Case; not that the Country is an Objection against any Man's Testimony, God forbid it should be so affirmed; for Truth is not confined to Places, nor to Persons neither, but applied to all honest Men, be they Irish Men or others; but I say, set Mr. Haynes out of the Case: Suppose there was no such Man as Haynes in this Case; yet I must tell you, Gentlemen, you have as great a Proof as possibly can be.

In the next Place, I must take Notice to you of some Account that hath been given of him by himself: It is wonderful strange, when there was that Kindness of Intimation given by the Court, that he should do well to prove his Loyalty, as well as his Religion, but he did not produce some of his later Acquaintance. If this Man that makes himself a Protestant, would have it believed he is such, I wish he would have brought some of these Men that knew him at London, to give you some Account of him, and not to stretch backward sixteen Years to prove his Birth and Education; that is not the best Account sure a Man can give of himself, to say, after he hath been talking at this disloyal Rate, that he is a good Protestant, because he was thought so eighteen Years ago.

Again, in the next Place, here is an Account of the Libel given by the old Woman that is his Sister; truly she would have it, and that is another Libel at the Bar, as though the Man in the red Coat, with R. C. upon it, had dropped this Kind of Libel in his House, and so he, or some Body else, put a Trick upon him; and because she would inveigle you to such an Interpretation, she says, that they staid behind till the Man in the red Coat had fetched away the Shavings, and so here is a new sham Plot to be put upon the Prisoner, by dropping Papers in his House; a pretty Kind of Insinuation. But, Gentlemen, against the Evidence of this Woman, you have the very Person that was there, the Officer, who swears, that he and his Fellows came before the Waterman into the House: But I suppose, you observe how that notable talking Maid and she do agree; for the Maid tells you, there came a strange Fellow seven Weeks before, delivered these Things into her Hands, her Master was abroad, and she was not to enquire whence they came, or what they were, but paid him six Pence for bringing those Things. Now 'tis very strange that the Maid should pay for the bringing of those Things, and yet after all should imagine that Somebody else should put them there.

But now, Gentlemen, in the next Place, I must tell you another Thing, which I would beg you to take Notice of: Here are two Gentlemen, Mr. Bolton and Mr. Mowbray, and they have given you an Account, that they have been Evidence against the Papists; they did well in it; but it hath been their Misfortune, hitherto they have not been believed; but whether they have been believed or not before, is no Guidance to you at this Time: But that which is to guide you is, whether or not they have given you now a Testimony that you in your Consciences can believe. Now, can you believe what they have said? Nay, can you believe it without any Circumstance to confirm it, against those express Objections that arise from themselves, and against the Oath of the Person, when the one tells you so exactly of the 25th, 26th, 27th, and 28th of July; and the other tells you, that Smith took Post, and yet overtook them not till the Sunday after, which was the third of August; and when the Almanack is produced, it was so far from making out what they spake of to be the same Time, that whereas one said he came to London the 28th, the other's Almanack says it was the 27th? Then pray how do these Persons agree, when the one says, that Mr. Smith talked with him upon the Road the 28th, and the other says, that they came to London the 27th? These are Circumstances, Gentlemen, that you must weigh; and you may bring the North and South together, as soon as their two Testimonies, they are so far asunder. Besides, Gentlemen, I hope you take Notice of a Person that was sworn, a Person of some Quality, a Scholar in the University here, that says Bolton (though he denied it) did shew him one of these Pictures, and did discover they were Mr. Colledge's; and Bolton himself, his own Witness, tells you, that he did acknowledge one of those Pictures was his. It appears then how busy he was, and concerned himself in what belonged not to his Profession.

So that, upon the whole Matter, after this long Evidence that hath been given, I must wholly appeal to your Lordships and the Jury; as to the Law, to your Lordship and the Court; and as to the Fact, to the Jury: For I do not desire any Sort of Evidence should be strained against a Prisoner at the Bar, who there is to be tried for his Life. God forbid, if he be innocent, but he should be acquitted; but, on the other Side, consider the Murder of that great King of ever blessed Memory is before you, and remember that base Reflection which the Witnesses tell you of upon that horrid Action; and as a great Evidence, remember that seeming Vindication of it at the Bar, which certainly no Englishman, no Protestant, according to the Church of England, can hear without having his Blood stirred in him. And these Things are not only testified by Dugdale and Smith, but by Gentlemen of known Reputation and Quality; and he hath a little discovered himself by that Defence he hath made against their Testimony. But know, Gentlemen, that the King is concerned, your Religion is concerned, that Plot that is so much agreed to by all Protestants is concerned; for if Dugdale, Smith, and Turberville be not to be believed, you trip up the Heels of all the Evidence and Discovery of that Plot. Then I will conclude to you, Gentlemen, and appeal to your Consciences; for according to the Oath that has been given to you, you are bound in your Consciences to go according to your Evidence, and are neither to be inveigled by us beyond our Proof, nor to be guided by your Commiseration to the Prisoner at the Bar against the Proof; for as God will call you to an Account, if you do an Injury to him, so will the same God call you to Account, if you do it to your King, to your Religion, and to your own Souls.

L. C. J. Gentlemen, I shall detain you but a little, and shall be as short as I can, for your Patience has been much exercised already: It is a Burden, and a necessary one, that lies upon us all, for there is nothing more necessary, than that such Trials as these should be intire and publick, intire for the Dispatch of them, and publick for the Satisfaction of the World, that it may appear no Man receives his Condemnation without Evidence, and that no Man is acquitted against Evidence.

Gentlemen, there are these two Considerations in all Cases of this Nature; the one is, the Force of the Evidence; the other is, the Truth of the Evidence. As to the Force of the Evidence, that is a Point of Law that belongs to the Court, and wherein the Court is to direct you; as to the Truth of the Evidence, that is a Question in Fact arising from the Witnesses, and must be left upon them, whereof you are the proper Judges.

As to the Force of the Evidence in this Case, it must be considered what the Charge is; it is the compassing the Death of the King, and conspiring to seize the Person of the King, which is the same Thing in Effect; for even by the Common Law, or upon the Interpretation of the Statute of the 25th of Edw. III. that mentions compassing the Death of the King to be Treason, it hath always been resolved, That whosoever shall imagine to depose the King, or imprison the King, are guilty of imagining the Death of the King; for they are Things that depend one upon another: And never was any King deposed or imprisoned, but with an Intention to be put to Death; they are in Consequences the same Thing.

Now, Gentlemen, in Cases of Treason the Law is so tender of the Life of the King, that the very Imagination of the Heart is Treason, if there be any Thought concerning any such Thing; but then it must be manifested by some Overt-Act, upon the Statute of the 25th Edw. III. but upon the Statute of the 13th of this King, made for the Preservation of the King's Person, if it be manifested, be malicious and advised speaking, 'tis sufficient. This is as to the Charge, and as to the Law concerning that Charge, I must tell you, there must be two Witnesses in the Case.

Now then, for the Force of the Evidence, the Question will arise here, whether this Evidence, admitting it to be true, is sufficient to maintain the Indictment; so that if there be two Witnesses, you must find him guilty. Now as to this, Gentlemen, the Prisoner has before-hand called upon the Court, and had their Resolution; and I hope you will remember what hath been said, and I shall have Occasion to trouble you the less.

I here have been six Witnesses produced for the King; there are two of them, Sir William Jennings and Mr. Masters, that are some way applicable to the Case, though they do not go to the Treason, they are only to infer the Probability of the Treason. This of Sir William Jennings, was upon the Occasion of the bleeding of the Prisoner's Nose, after his Quarrel with Fitz-Gerald, when he said, He had lost the first Blood, and it would not be long ere there would be more lost; which shews there were some extraordinary Thoughts in his Heart, concerning some Divisions, Quarrels, and Fighting Fighting that he expected should be. That which Mr. Masters has said besides what he offered concerning his Principles in justifying the long Parliament) was this, That when he called him Colonel, Marry mock not, said he, I may be Colonel in Time; that shews some extraordinary Thoughts were in his Heart.

Colledge. Will not that bear a more favourable Interpretation, my Lord? Must that necessarily follow upon my saying, I might be a Colonel in Time; and that more Blood would be lost? if I had expressed it so.

L. C. J. I say, you had some extraordinary Thoughts in your Heart.

Colledge. I am, sure, fittest to explain my own Thoughts.

L. C. J. You would have done well to have explained it which Way you expected to be a Colonel.

Colledge. Is was not an Expectation, for a may be may not be; my Word was, Mocking is catching: I thought he had called me Cousin.

L. C. J. Well, Gentlemen, these are Witnesses, I say, that go not to the Treason, but only relate and reflect somewhat, to shew there were Thoughts in his Heart; but nobody could tell what they were, or know what he meant by them.

Colledge. Then they are always to be taken in the best Sense.

L. C. J. For the other Witnesses, Stephen Dugdale, John Smith, Bryan Haynes, and Edward Turberville, they are all of them, taking what they say to be true, very full Witnesses. The Prisoner hath objected as to two of them, because they speak to nothing that was done in Oxfordshire; but Turberville and Dugdale they speak to what was said in Oxfordshire. Now for that I must tell you, if you believe any of these Witnesses, as to what was said in Oxford, and any of them as to what was said in London, relating to the same Fact of Treason, they will be two good Witnesses to maintain the Indictment, though the one is in the one County, and the other in another; for if a Treason be committed in two Counties, it is the King's Election where he will exhibit the Indictment, and the Evidence from both Counties is good Evidence; that I take for Law; and these four Witnesses, with that Consideration that they are true, as I think, are full Witnesses to maintain this Indictment.

Why then, the next Head is concerning the Truth of this Evidence of which you are to be Judges, and you are the proper Judges whether the Witnesses speak true or no; therefore you must have your own Consciences to direct you in that Case, and what I shall say about them, shall be only for your Assistance.

Gentlemen, I shall not take upon me to repeat the Evidence to you, it has been long; and for me to speak out of Memory, I had rather you should recur to your own Memories, and your own Notes; only I shall say something in general to contract your Consideration of it.

And, as I told you at first, you must mind nothing of what the King's Council said, for nothing must have Impression upon you, but what they proved; so you are not to consider any thing of the Facts the Prisoner speaks of, that are not proved neither; for common Justice is concerned in it, and no Justice can be done at that Rate, if the Prisoner's own Affirmations or Purgations should be taken. No Man ever can be accused, but he will be ready to say he is innocent, and say as flourishing and popular Things as ever he can for himself. And therefore these Things must not weigh with you farther than as was said, argues upon the Proofs you have had. And you are to consider upon the Proofs what the Prisoner has produced, not what he says; on the other Side, for the Proofs you have heard a great many Witnesses in general produced by him, that say he was bred a Protestant, and has been an honest Man, that they knew no ill by him; that will be of little Weight in a Case of this Consideration; for unless he was a Man that had committed Treason to the Knowledge of all the World, there is no Man but can produce Witnesses that know no ill of him, nor any Treason nor Harm in him; wherefore the Question will lie upon the Credit of the Witnesses produced for the King barely, and that will be the Consideration you are only to have, and you are to weigh them in the Balance against the Witnesses produced against them.

Now, Gentlemen, for these Witnesses, I shall not repeat them to you; but only this I shall observe in general, that Dugdale and Turberville, that are the two most material Witnesses relating to what was spoken in Oxfordshire, have the least said against them. I do not remember, I profess to you, I do not (but your own Notes must guide you) that there was any very material thing said against them, except what is said against them by Dr. Oates, and Dr. Oates does say against Smith, that he came out of the Coffee-house, and swore damn him he would have Colledge's Blood; and when he reproved him, he said it was not fit for a Minister of the Gospel to use such Expressions, he said, God damn the Gospel; if that be true, 'tis a great Reflection upon the Credit of Smith. He says as to Dugdale, that when he was expostulating with him about his Evidence, he excused himself, that he was in want of Money, and was pressed to it, and being asked, he did say, he was pressed to swear against his Conscience, he said yes; and much of the same Kind he says as to Turberville, that he said he was deserted, and would not starve. Now all these three Witnesses being called upon their Oaths, deny that which Dr. Oates testifies. Now if it were in an indifferent and probable Matter to have three Men condemned, and set aside by the Testimony of one, is not equal, unless the Man were of mighty extraordinary Credit, and his Testimony of more than ordinary Weight. But then I must tell you, this Matter is very improbable, that after Witnesses had sworn a Thing, they should voluntarily acknowledge themselves to be forsworn, and that without any Provocation, they should at several Times come to this one Man, and declare themselves Rogues and Villains; but if it were probable, here are three Men's Oaths against one Man's Affirmation; this I say, as to what concerns Dugdale and Turberville, I do not see any Thing material against them; besides, now if you believe them, they are two Witnesses to the full Matter of the Indictment, and two Witnesses to what was done in Oxfordshire, and that satisfies all the Considerations of the Law.

As to the Rest of the Witnesses, Bryan Haynes and John Smith, you have had many Witnesses produced against them, I shall not undertake to repeat the Evidence, 'tis your Place and Duty to weigh their Testimony, and I shall leave it to your Consideration.

Mr. Just. Jones. I shall add nothing to what my Lord hath said, nor indeed can.

Colledge. My Lord, I wish you would look upon your Notes, you would then find there was much more Evidence, that you have not repeated, against Turberville and Dugdale, besides what your Lordship urged.

L. C. J. If there be, I refer it to the Memory of the Jury, I can remember no more.

Colledge. I desire nothing but Justice, and true Justice.

L. C. J. I am sure I design nothing else, you are a Stranger to me; I believe I have seen your Face, but I never knew you by Name till now. Look you, if the Jury be like to stay, they may take something to refresh themselves at the Bar before they go.

Colledge. My Lord, I did see when the Bill was brought against my Lord Howard, Mr. Attorney General and Mr. Solicitor were an Hour and Half with the Grand Jury.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. You must say nothing now.

Colledge. Let me have Justice done me, my Lord, that's all I crave, that nobody may be with the Jury.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Colledge, they might be with the Grand Jury, but as to the Petty Jury, there shall be a Bailiff sworn, and neither Mr. Attorney, nor Mr. Solicitor, nor nobody else shall come to them till they be agreed of their Verdict.

Mr. Just. Jones. If that be the Thing you ask, you shall have it according to the Law.

Colledge. And any Friend of mine may be by.

L. C. J. There shall be an Officer sworn to keep them.

Then the Court called for two Bottles of Sack, which the Jury divided among themselves at the Bar, for their Refreshment, in the Presence of the Prisoner.

After which a Bailiff was sworn, and the Jury withdrawing to consider of their Verdict, the Court adjourned for Half an Hour, and when they returned, Proclamation being made for Attendance, the Court sent to see whether the Jury were agreed, who immediately came into Court.

Cl. of Cr. Gentlemen, are you agreed of your Verdict?

Om. Yes.

Cl. of Cr. Who shall say for you?

Om. Foreman.

Cl. of Cr. Stephen Colledge, hold up thy Hand. Look upon him, you of the Jury: How say you, is he Guilty of the High Treason, whereof he stands indicted, or Not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Cr. Look to him, Gaoler, he is found Guilty of High Treason; what Goods, &c.

At which there was a great Shout given; at which the Court being offended, one Person who was observed by the Crier to be particularly concerned in the Shout, was committed to Gaol for that Night, but the next Morning having received a publick Reproof, was discharged without Fees.

Then, it being about three o'Clock in the Morning, the Court adjourned to ten. At which Hour, the Court being sat, and first Mr. Aaron Smith having entered into a Recognizance of 500*l.* to appear the first Day of the next Term, at the Court of King's Bench.

L. C. J. Where is the Prisoner, Stephen Colledge?

Cl. of Cr. Set up Stephen Colledge.

Then the Prisoner was brought to the Bar.

Cl. of Cr. Harken to the Court, and hold up thy Hand: Thou hast been indicted and arraigned of High Treason, and for thy Trial hast put thyself upon thy Country, and they have found thee Guilty; what canst thou say for thyself, why the Court should not give Judgement on thee to die according to the Law?

Colledge. My Lord, I have nothing more to offer, but only that I am innocent of what is laid to my Charge; I think it was severe against me, now contrary to what was sworn at London: They swear now, I was to seize the King at Oxon, in London they swore I would pluck the King out of Whitehall, but 'tis altered since, and now 'tis to seize the King at Oxon; but be it either one or t'other (for the one is as true as the other) I am wholly innocent of either, I never had such a Thought in my Life, God forgive them that have sworn against me; I have no more to say, my Lord.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Colledge, it is too late to profess your Innocence, you have been tried, and found Guilty; but because you say so now, 'tis necessary for me to say something in Vindication of the Verdict, which I think the Court were all very well satisfied with: There were sufficient Proofs to warrant it, and the Jury did according to Justice and Right. I thought it was a Case, that as you made your own Defence, small Proof would serve the Turn to make any one believe you Guilty. For as you would defend yourself by pretending to be a Protestant, I did wonder, I must confess, when you called so many Witnesses to your Religion and Reputation, that none of them gave an Account that they saw you receive the Sacrament within these many Years, or any of them particularly had seen you at Church in many Years, or what Kind of Protestant you were. If we look to your Words and Actions, it is true, they did prove this, that you were mighty violent and zealous in crying out against Popery and the Papists; but if we look to your Actions, they favoured rather to promote the Papists Ends. For I must tell you, the Papists are best extirpated, and suppressed by a steady Prosecution of the Laws against them, not by violent Cryings-out, and putting the People into fervent Heats and Confusions, for that is the Thing the Papists aim at; they have no Hopes any other Way to creep into the Kingdom, but by Confusion, and after the Church is destroyed, that is under God the best Bulwark against them. But you that cried so loud against the Papists it was proved here, who you called Papists. You had the Boldness to say that the King was a Papist, the Bishops were Papists, and the Church of England were Papists. If these be the Papists you cry out against, what a kind of Protestant you are, I know not, I am sure you can be no good one. But of that thing, when you called so many Witnesses to that Purpose, and if we look to your Politicks, what Opinion you had of the King, it was proved by your Discourse, and by Witnesses, that you could have no Exception to their Testimony, that you did justify the late horrid Rebellion, and the Consequence of that was the Murder of the best King in the World, that you should go to justify the Proceedings of that Parliament, and affirm that they did nothing but what they had just Cause to do. I say, he that will justify such a thing, if there were the same Circumstances, would do the same thing again.

Then if we look upon another Part of your Defence, as to your Arms, it was objected, you went armed to Oxon, and that was made the Evidence of the Overt-Act when you said by Words your Intentions what you would do, that you would make one to seize the King; that you did go armed, you did confess; I expected you should have said, you only wore those things for your own Defence upon the Road as a Gentleman travelling, or went with your Friends to accompany them out of Town, and defend them from Robbery; but you said, you went to guard the Parliament. I did not understand what you meant by it. I do not believe the Parliament sent for any Guard, or intended to have any Guard. I do not believe that any of them in their Hearts thought they needed a Guard; for I believe there was not a Man that had any thing that looked like that, or any thing of that Nature. For we saw, that when the King by the Necessity of his Affairs, when the two Houses differed so much, was pleased to dismiss them; they all departed quietly, not a Man was seen to be disturbed; there was no Appearance of any such thing; and how it should come into your Head, that were but a private Man, to go to guard the Parliament, I much wonder. Suppose all Men of your Condition should have gone to have guarded the Parliament, what an Assembly had there been? what a Bustle might they have made, and what confusion might have been on a sudden? And though you say you are no Man of Quality, nor likely to be able to do any thing upon the King's Guards, or the King's Person, yet if all of your Quality had gone upon the same Design that you did, what ill Consequences might have been of it? We see what has been done by Massinella, a mean Man in another Country, what by Wat Tyler and Jack Straw in this Kingdom. I confess, I know not what you meant by it, but very ill things might have happened upon it.

So that these Things, when I look upon them, and consider the Complexion of your Defence, it makes an easy Proof have Credit. But I think there was a full Proof in your Case; yet I say if there had been a great deal less Proof, the Jury might with Justice have found you Guilty. And because you now declare your self innocent of all you are charged with, I think myself bound to declare here in Vindication of the Country, and in Vindication of the Justice of the Court, that it was a Verdict well given, and to the Satisfaction of the Court, and I did not find my Brothers did dislike it. This I say to you out of Charity, that you may incline your Mind to a Submission to the Justice that has overtaken you, and that you may enter into Charity with all Men, and prepare yourself for another Life.

There is nothing now remaining, but to pronounce the Sentence which the Law provides for such an Offence, which is this, and the Court does award,

That you Stephen Colledge shall be carried from hence to the Place from whence you came, and from thence you shall be drawn on an Hurdle to the Place of Execution, where you shall be hanged up by the Neck, and be cut down alive, your Privy Members shall be cut off, and your Bowels taken out and burnt before your Face, your Head shall be cut off from your Body, your Body be divided into four Quarters, which are to be at the King's Dispose, and the Lord have Mercy upon you Soul.

Colledge. Amen. My Lord, I would know what Time your Lordship is pleased to appoint for my Execution.

L. C. J. That will depend upon the King's Pleasure, we do not use in these Cases of High-Treason to precipitate the Execution; but we will leave such Order with the Sheriff to receive the King's Pleasure and obey it. He will not do it so sudden, but that you shall have Notice to prepare yourself; but that depends upon the King's Pleasure, for your Body is to be at his Disposal.

Then the Court adjourned.

On Wednesday 31 of Aug. 1681. being the Day appointed by His Majesty for his Execution, he was according to Sentence Executed over-against the Gate of the Castle at Oxford.

When he was come to the Place of Execution, the High-Sheriff spoke to him as follows:

Mr. High-Sheriff. MR. Colledge, it is desired, for the Satisfaction of the World, because you have professed yourself a Protestant, that you would tell what Judgment you are of.

Colledge. Dear People, dear Protestants, and dear Countrymen, I have been accused and convicted for Treason; the Laws adjudge me to this Death, and I come hither willingly to submit to it: I pray God forgive all those Persons that had any Hand in it. I do declare to you, whatever hath been said of me, I was never a Papist, or ever that Way inclined; they have done me Wrong; I was ever a Protestant, I was born a Protestant, I have lived so, and so by the Grace of God I will die, of the Church of England, according to the best Reformation of the Church from all Idolatry, from all Superstition, or any thing that is contrary to the Gospel of our blessed Lord and Saviour.

VOL. III.

I do declare I was never in any Popish Service, Prayers, or Devotions, in my Life, save one Time; about some seventeen or eighteen Years ago, as near as I remember, I was, out of a Curiosity, one Afternoon at St. James's Chapel, the Queen's Chapel at St. James's; except that one Time, I never did hear any Popish Service, any thing of the Church of Rome, Mass or Prayers, or any thing else, private or publick. I know you expect that I should say something as to what I die for: It hath been charged upon me, when I was apprehended and brought before the Council, some of the Council, the Secretary, and my Lord Killingworth, and Mr. Seymour, they told me there was Treason sworn against me; truly, they surprized me when they said so: For of all things in the World, I thought myself as free from that as any Man. I asked them if any Man living had the Confidence to swear Treason against me? They said several, three or four, as I remember: Then they told me, it was sworn against me, That I had a Design to pull the King out of White-Hall, and to serve him as his Father was served, or to that Purpose, the Logger-Head his Father, or that kind of Language: I did deny it then, and do now deny it upon my Death. I never was in any Manner of Plot in my Days, neither one way nor another; I never knew any such Persons, nor ever had such Communication with any Man hitherto: I know of no Plot in the World but the Popish Plot, and that every Man may know as much as I: If I had such a Design as these Men have sworn against me, to have seized his Majesty, either at London, or this Place at Oxford, I take God to Witness, as I am a dying Man, and upon the Terms of my Salvation, I know not any one Man upon the Face of the Earth that would have stood by me; and how likely it was that I should do such a thing myself, let the whole World judge.

Dugdale swears, that I spoke Treason to him, treasonable Words in the Coffee-house, and in the Barber's Shop by the Angel; he could not pretend to see me any where else; but it is false, and a very unlikely thing that I should speak Treason to him. I must confess I was in his Company at the Coffee-house and that Barber's Shop, before I went out of Town: But there could be no Communication between us; for he was writing at one End of the Room, and eating a Piece of Bread, and I lighted a Pipe of Tobacco at the other End, and took it, till Sir Thomas Player, and Sir Robert Clayton came to me, and we went to my Lord Lovelace's out of Town that Night; So when they came, we took Horse, and went out of Town with the rest: For my Part, I can't sum up my Witnesses; I was under most strange Circumstances as ever any Man was; I was kept Prisoner so close in the Tower, that I could have no Conversation with any, though I was certain the Popish Lords had it every Day there, but I could have none: I could not tell the Witnesses that were to swear against me; I could not tell what it was they swore against me, for I could have no Copy of the Indictment, nor no way possible to make any Preparation to make my Defence as I ought to have done, and might have done by Law.

I had no Liberty to do any thing, as I am a dying Man. And as to what Dugdale, Smith, Turberville, and Haynes, swore against me, they did swear such Treason that nothing but a Mad-man would ever have trusted anybody with, and least of all to Papists, every one of them that had been concerned with Plots and Treasons among their own Party, and under the greatest Ties and Obligations of Damnation; and to be fainter if they kept it secret, and to be damned if they reveal it. If these Men will not keep Things private for their own Party, how could I trust them? I take God to Witness, and do freely acknowledge, I have sought my God with Tears several Times to inform me, if so be I had with any Word transgressed at any Time. I knew not of any Part of what they swore against me, till such Time as I heard it sworn against me at the Bar.

This is very hard, Gentlemen, but this is the Truth: and there be a great many other strange Reports that I have heard since I have been a Prisoner; that I should be a Means to convert the Countess of Rochester, by bringing one Thomson, a Priest, to her. Truly, all that I was concerned in, was some fifteen or sixteen Years ago. I lodg'd at Colonel Vernon's, that married the Lady Brooks, the Family were Papists; the Brooks's were Papists; and there was this Thomson, and I did suppose him a Priest, in the House, though I never saw him at Popish Service, or Worship, though I was there half a Year; but coming afterwards to my Lord Rochester's about some Business I had to do for him, and several other Persons of Quality; he sent for me one Afternoon from the Parsonage in Adderbury to his House, and his Lady and he stood together: He sent to me, and asked me, if my Horse were at Home; said he, I would have you carry this Letter to Mr. Thomson, if you are at Leisure this Afternoon: My Lord, I am at Leisure to serve you; so I took a Letter from his Hand, and his Lady's too; as I remember (he made an Offer that way) sealed with his own Seal, and I carried it to Thomson, and delivered it to him: And he told me, that he would wait upon my Lord, for it was for some Lands my Lord did offer, to raise Money for some Occasion: This is the Truth of that Scandal.

It is said, that I had a Priest several Years in my House, viz. Sergeant, that came over from Holland to discover. About some ten Years ago, that very same Man came to me, but was a Stranger to me, and he came to me by the Name of Doctor Smith, a Physician; and there was an Apothecary in the Old-Bailey, and a Linen-Draper within Ludgate, that came with him, they brought him thither, and took a Chamber, and he lay about half a Year, or three Quarters, at times, by the Name of Doctor Smith, and as a Physician; this is the Truth of that, and no otherwise. This is the Entertainment of Sergeant.

So the Occasion of my coming to Oxford I do say was voluntary; the Parliament-men last Parliament at Westminster, and several Lords, dined together the Day before they sat; the last Sessions of Parliament at Westminster, they sent for me to the Sun-Tavern behind the Exchange, and when I came, the Duke of Monmouth, and several Lords were together, and I believe above a hundred Parliament-men of the Commons: The Duke of

G g g

Monmouth

Monmouth called me to him, and told me, he had heard a good Report of me, that I was an honest Man, and one that may be trusted; and they did not know but their Enemies, the Papists, might have some Design to serve them as they did in King James's Time by Gun-Powder, or any other Way: And the Duke, with several Lords and Commons, did desire me to use my utmost Skill in searching all Places suspected by them; which I did perform: And from thence I had, as I think, the popular Name of The Protestant Joiner, because they had intrusted me, before any Man in England to do that Office.

This same Haynes, one of them that swore against me, had discovered to me, and several others, as to Macnamarra and his Brother, and this Ivy, who are now all of another Stamp, that the Parliament was to be destroyed at Oxford, and that there was a Design to murder my Lord Shaftesbury, by Fitz-gerald and his Party; and that they did endeavour to bring Macnamarra over to him, and said, then it would be well with him; and they would not be long before they had Shaftesbury's Life: And he made Depositions of this to Sir George Treby, as I heard afterwards, for I was not with him when it was sworn. I wish the Commons of England as well as I wish my own Heart; and I did not understand, but when I served the Parliament I served his Majesty too; and let them be miserable that make the Difference between them, for my Part, I never did. I came to Oxford with my Lord Howard, whom I look upon to be a very worthy honest Gentleman, my Lord Clare, my Lord Paget, and my Lord Huntington, and this Captain Brown, and Don Lewes, were in my Company, and came along with us, as they were my Lord Howard's Friends: Brown I have known, I believe, two or three Months; but Lewes I never saw before that Day; they said they came with my Lord Howard. I take God to witness, I never had one Six-pence, or any thing else to carry on any Design; and if it were to save my Life now, I cannot charge any Man in the World with any Design against the Government, as God is my Witness, or against his Majesty, or any other Person.

As for what Arms I had, and what Arms others had, they were for our own Defence, in case the Papists should make any Attempt upon us by way of Massacre, or any Invasion or Rebellion, that we should be ready to defend ourselves; God is my Witness, this is all I know. If this be a Plot, this was I in, but in no other; but never knew of any Numbers, or Times appointed for meeting; but we have said, one to another, that the Papists had a design against the Protestants, when we did meet, as I was a Man of a general Conversation; and in case they should rise, we were ready; but then they should begin the Attempt upon us: This was my Business, and this is the Business of every good Subject that loves the Laws of his Country and his King. For England can never hope to be happy under those Blood-thirsty Men, whose Religion is Blood and Murder; which I do with all my Soul, and did, ever since I knew what Religion was, abhor and detest, viz. the Church of Rome, as pernicious and destructive to human Societies, and all Government.

I beseech God that every Man of you may unite together as Protestants against this common Foe. Gentlemen, it is my Sense, and I do in that believe, I am as certainly murdered by the Hands of the Papists, as Sir Edmundbury Godfrey himself was, though the Thing is not seen. These Witnesses certainly are mercenary Men, and I beseech God Almighty to have Mercy upon their Souls, and forgive them; and either by his Judgments or Mercies reclaim them, that they shed no more innocent Blood: There is not a Man of them that I know of, that ever heard me say, or do, any bit of Treason in my Life. This is (the first, I may not say it is) but almost twentieth Sham-Plot that they have endeavoured to put upon the Nation, to delude the People, and put off their own damnable Plot. This is not the first, but I think, the sixteenth or seventeenth; I pray God that my Blood may be the last. I pray God defend every Man's Blood, and all Protestants in England, from the Hands of these bloody Papists, by whose Means I die this Death; and if they should go on in this Nature, I hope the good God will open every Man's Eyes to see it before he feels it. And, I beseech you, if you have any Love for your King, your Country, and the Protestants, unite together, if you are Protestants. I pray God those that deserve the Name, let them be called how they will, either Dissenters, or Church of England Men, that they may unite together like Men, like Christians, against the common Foe, who will spare neither the one Side, nor the other, but beat you one against another like two Pitchers; the last that stands, they will certainly destroy if they can. This is my Sense, and God is my Witness, I speak my Conscience. I do not know, Mr. Sheriff, whether there be any thing else I have to say, or no; we have a good God, and I beseech every Man that hears me this Day, (for we live in a sinful Age, good People, and it behoves every one of you, it cannot be long before all that look upon me in this Condition must lie down in the Dust, and, God knows, must come into an eternal State, either for Mercy or for Judgment.) I beseech you in the Name of God, he is a God of Mercy, and a God of Patience and Long-Suffering, that you would break off your Sins by Repentance, and serve a good God, who must be your Friend at last, or else you are lost to Eternity.

O Lord how ungrateful Wretches are we, that have a God of such infinite Mercy and Goodness, that affords us our Life, our Health, and a thousand Mercies every Day; and we, like ungrateful People, not deserving the Name of Men or Christians, live riotous Lives, in Debauchery and Swearing, in Malice, and the Lord knows how many Evils? I beseech God that I may be this Day a Means in the Hand of God, to bring some of their Souls over to him: I beseech you, remember what I say; indeed I do not know, I have been so strangely used since I have been a Prisoner, what to say, being brought from one Affliction to another, that my Body is worn out, and my Memory and Intellects have failed me much to what they were. I cannot remember what I have to say more, but that the Lord Jesus Christ would bless my Country, and preserve it from Popery, and in Mercy bless his Majesty: Good God be merciful to him, make him an Instrument in thy Hand to defend his Protestant Subjects; Lord in Mercy defend him from his Enemies. Good God bless his People; Good Lord continue the Gospel of Jesus Christ, thy Gospel, in its Purity to us and our Posterity, as long as the Sun and Moon endure. O Lord, save all that call upon thee; be merciful to all thy Servants, all thy People that put their Trust in thee; good Lord deliver them from the Hands of their Enemies; good God, let their Lives, and Bodies and Souls, be all precious in thy Sight. O merciful God, put a Stop to these most wicked Conspiracies of thy Enemies, and the Nation's Enemies, the Papists. Let no more Protestant Blood be shed but this of mine, I beseech thee, O my God. O Lord look upon me, O Lord bless me, O good God receive me into thy blessed Presence, by Jesus Christ my alone Saviour and Redeemer, in whom I put my Trust alone for Salvation: It is thee, O God, that I trust in, thou righteous Judge of Heaven and Earth: all Popery, all Pardons, all Popes and Priests, all Dispensations I disown, and will not go out of the World with a Lie in my Mouth. From the Sincerity of my Heart I declare again, that what I have said to you is the very Sentiments of my Soul, as God shall have Mercy upon me, and to the best of my Knowledge.

I desire the Prayers of you, good People, while I am here; and once more I beseech you to think upon Eternity, every one of you that hear me this Day. The Lord turn your Hearts and Souls, if you have been wicked Livers; if you do live wicked Lives, the Lord in Mercy convert you, and shew you your Danger; for I as little thought to come to this as any Man that hears me this Day; and, I bless God, I have no more deserved it from the Hands of Men, than the Child that sucks at his Mother's Breast: I bless my God for it, and do say I have been a Sinner against my God, and he hath learnt me Grace ever since I have been a Prisoner. I bless my God for a Prison, I bless my God for Afflictions, I bless my God that ever I was restrained, for I never knew myself till he had taken me out of the World. Therefore you that have your Liberties, and Time, and precious Opportunities, be up and be doing, for God and for your Souls, every one of you.

To his Son. Where is my dear Child?

Mr. Sheriff. I made one Request to you, and you gave me an imperfect Answer: You said you were of the best reformed Church in the World, the Church of England according to the best Reformation in the World: I desire you, for the Satisfaction of the World, to declare what Church that is, whether Presbyterian, or Independent, or the Church of England, or what?

Coll. Good Mr. Sheriff, for your Satisfaction, for twenty Years and above I was under the Presbyterian Ministry, till his Majesty's Restoration; then I was conformable to the Church of England when that was restored, and so continued till such Time as I saw Persecution upon the dissenting People, and very undue Things done to their Meeting-places; then I went among them to know what kind of People those were. And I do take God to witness, since that Time I have used their Meetings, viz. the Presbyterians, others very seldom, and the Church of England. I did hear Dr. Tillotson not above three Weeks before I was taken. I heard the Church of England as frequently as I heard the Dissenters, and never had any Prejudice, God is my Witness, against either, but always desired heartily that they might unite, and be Lovers and Friends, and had no Prejudice against any Man; and truly I am afraid that it is not for the Nation's Good that there should be such Heart-burning between them: That some of the Church of England will preach that the Presbyterians are worse than the Papists. God doth know that what I say, I speak freely from my Heart, I have found many among them truly serving God, and so I have of all the rest that have come into my Company; Men without any manner of Design but to serve God, serve his Majesty, and keep their Liberties and Properties; Men that I am certain are not of vicious Lives; I found no Damners, or those kind of People among them, or at least few of them.

To his Son, kissing him several times with great Passion. Dear Child, farewell, the Lord have Mercy upon thee. Good People, let me have your Prayers to Almighty God to receive my Soul.

And then he prayed. And as soon as he had done, spake as followeth.

The Lord have Mercy upon my Enemies, and I beseech you, good People, whoever you are, and the whole World that I have offended, forgive me; whomever I have offended in Word or Deed, I ask every Man's Pardon; and forgive the World with all my Soul, all the Injuries I have received, and I beseech God Almighty, forgive those poor Wretches who have cast away their Souls, or at least endangered them, to ruin the Body of mine: I beseech God that they may have a Sight of their Sins, and that they may find Mercy at his Hands: Let my Blood speak the Justice of my Cause.

I have done: And God have Mercy upon you all.

To Mr. Cashwait. Pray, Sir, remember me to Dr. Hall, and Dr. Rennall, and thank them for all their Kindnesses to me; I thank you, Sir, for your Kindnesses: The Lord bless you all. Mr. Sheriff, God be with you all, good People.

The Executioner desired his Pardon, and he said, I do forgive you. The Lord have Mercy on my Soul. And so he was turned off, and the Sentence executed, but his Quarters were permitted to be buried.

CVIII. The Trial of Slingsby Bethel, Esq; at the Bridge-House in Southwark, for an Assault and Battery on Robert Mason, at the Election of Members of Parliament for the Borough of Southwark, October 5, 1681. 33 Car. II.

The Court being sat, the Jury were called, as follows :

JURY MEN.

Edward Collingwood, Brazier,	John Morgan, Grocer,
Francis Waker, Comb-maker,	William Morrice,
Zebulon Newington, Chandler, alias	Francis Ferrey,
Salter,	Richard Frankling,
William Head, Woollen-Draper,	Thomas Wade, Butcher,
Humphrey Roberts,	Edw. Kemp, Ale-Draper.
John Ailyn, Baker,

Being Sworn, the Indictment was read.

THE Jurors for our Sovereign Lord the King, upon their Oath do present, That Slingsby Bethel, late of the Parish of St. Olave's, Southwark, within the Town and Borough aforesaid, in the County of Surrey, Esquire, on the twelfth Day of March, in the three and thirtieth Year of the King, with Force and Arms at the Parish aforesaid, and within the Town and Borough aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, in and upon one Robert Mason, at that Time one of the King's Watermen, in the Peace of God, and of our Lord the King, then and there standing, did Assault and make a Battery, and the said Robert Mason, then and there most grievously and dangerously did beat, wound, and evil entreat, so that his Life was greatly despaired of, and other Enormities that then and there he offered to, and brought on the said Robert Mason; and that the same Slingsby Bethel, then and there, (to wit) the same twelfth Day of March, in the thirty third Year aforesaid, in the Parish aforesaid, in the Town and Borough aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, in the Presence and Hearing of very many of the Subjects of our Sovereign Lord the King, then and there to the said Robert Mason, he spake, uttered, and with a loud Voice declared and published these provoking, threatening, and opprobrious Words, (to wit) Sirrah, pointing at the said Robert Mason, I (meaning himself, Slingsby Bethel) will have your Coat (a certain Cloth Coat of a red Colour, with which the said Robert Mason was covered, and adorned with a certain Badge of our said Lord the King upon the said Coat) plucked off your Back, to the great Terror, Disturbance, and Trouble of divers of our Sovereign Lord's liege People and Subjects, being then and there present, to the evil Example of all others offending in the like Case, as also against the Peace, Crown, and Dignity, of our Sovereign Lord the King, &c.

Mr. Peafely. MY Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, Slingsby Bethel, Esq; stands indicted, for that he, the said Slingsby Bethel, made an Assault and Battery on Robert Mason: As also for menacing and threatening Words; saying to him the said Robert Mason, Sirrah, I will have your Coat plucked off your Back, to the great Terror and Damage of the said Robert Mason, &c. to which Indictment he has pleaded, Not Guilty.

Mulley. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am Council for the King, against Slingsby Bethel, Esq; who, upon the twelfth Day of March last, in the thirty third Year of the King, did assault Robert Mason, one of the King's Watermen, and did injuriously beat and strike the said Robert Mason, did give several opprobrious Words, saying, he would have his Coat plucked off his Back, &c. To which he pleadeth, Not Guilty.

Mr. Holt. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am Council for the King, against Slingsby Bethel, Esq; You understand the Issue you are to try, it hath been opened; the Question is, Whether Mr. Slingsby Bethel be guilty of this Battery, and the Matter contained in the Indictment, and the aggravating Words therein, or no? The Occasion was, that in March last, there was an Election for two Burgesses to be chosen to serve in Parliament for this Borough; this Robert Mason was desired to come from Lambeth, to see whether any of that Parish came to poll, which had no Right so to do. The Competitors were, Sir Richard How, Captain Rich. Slingsby Bethel, and Edward Smith, Esqrs. Mr. Slingsby Bethel hewed, at his Entrance into the Borough, what Inclination and Temper he came with; for his Followers, and such as came with him, came with their God-damne's, and several execrable Oaths against those that voted against him; after the Election began, and the Poll demanded, truly, then Mr. Bethel acted his Part, and took Occasion to go off from the Place where he was, and strike several Persons that were acting against him, particularly this Robert Mason, finding him to be against him, took his Cane, and knocked him over the Pate, and afterwards knowing him to be the King's Waterman, said he deserved to have his Coat plucked over his ears: Were the Affront against him as a single Person, it were not of so bad Consequence; but we are to take Notice of the Solemnity of the Occasion of the Meeting: Now, consider the Occasion, it was for the choosing of Parliament-Men; and had it not been for the Prudence of the Waterman, in forbearing to strike again, God knows the Effects, and what an Uproar it might have occasioned: But he prudently refrained, and took his Course in a legal Way, and according to Law hath preferred this Indictment against Mr. Slingsby Bethel. Now though the said Mr. Bethel be so great a Man, and a Person of Value, lately Sheriff of the City of London; and he, Robert Mason, appearing to be but a poor Waterman, yet I don't question, he will find an English Jury to do him Right.

King's Council. Call Mr. Robert Mason, Arthur Adams, Thomas Walbrooke, Griffith Meade, Tho. Smith, Alexander Dory, . . . . Lawrence.

Mr. Holt. Mason, What can you say on the King's and your own Behalf, concerning this Matter?

Robert Mason. I was standing upon the Steps, by the Door in the Artillery-Ground, and Mr. Bethel came and gave me divers Blows on the ears, knocked me with his Cane, and followed me down beating of me, and said, Sirrah, I will have your Coat plucked over your Ears; and I answered, So you would my Master's too, if you could.

Mr. Thompson. By whose Solicitation came you there?

Mason. I was desired to be there.

Thompson. What, did he strike you also with his Fist?—Mason. Yes.

Thompson. Where did he hurt you with all his Blows?

Mason. On the Breast.

Thompson. How many Blows?

Mason. He gave me twenty Blows at least, I can swear safely; but how many more, I know not.

Thompson. Did not you, before Mr. Bethel came there, interrupt the People's coming to poll, and what did Mr. Bethel say?

Mason. He asked what I did there, and bid me go down.

Justice Pys. Did Mr. Bethel single you out from the rest of the Company?

Mason. Yes, he did.

King's Council. Call Adams, Adams, what can you say? Did you see Mr. Bethel strike Mason, and what Words did he say?

Adams, first Witness. There was a Tumult at the Stairs, and they called to me, being Constable, and when I came, Mr. Bethel and Mason were together, and a great Company followed them; I said, Sirs, pray keep the Peace; and I saw Mr. Bethel give him two or three Shugs, and said, Sirrah, I will have your Coat off your Back; and Mason answered, Ay, and so you would my Master's too, if you could.

Holt. Adams, Tell the Court what you think would have been the Consequence if Mason had struck again.

Adams. It would have been of a sad Consequence.

Holt. What was Mr. Bethel's Behaviour, when he entered into the Borough? Did you see him come into the Borough?

Adams. They came in and cry'd, No Abhorers, No Abhorers.

Thompson. Did you hear Mr. Bethel say so?—Adams. No.

Thompson. Did you hear him swear?—Adams. No.

Thompson. Who was it that swore?—Holt. He that rid first.

Thompson. Mason said, Mr. Bethel gave him twenty Blows; Did you see it?—Adams. I was not there all the while, I did not see it.

Third Witness. Thomas Walbrooke, What can you say to the Case in Hand?

Walbrooke. I stood by the Stairs when Mr. Bethel passed by; I saw Mr. Bethel thrust him down the Stairs, and I said, Robert, take Care what you do: Mr. Bethel said, Sirrah, come down; Mason said, I will come when I see my own Time, I do Nobody any Hurt: Mr. Bethel answered, I command you to come down; and his Answer was, I will when I see my own Time.

Thompson. Did you see any Blow given by Mr. Bethel?

Walbrooke. No, I saw none; I won't swear to any Blows, but I saw two or three Pushes in the Breast; he pushed him back.

Thompson. And how many Blows were given, ten, twenty, or how many?

Walbrooke. I will not answer any Thing concerning that.

Thompson. Upon the Oath you have taken (being, I think, you are an honest Man) had the Waterman this Coat on at that Time? Or had he not a Campaign Coat over it?

Walbrooke. He had that Coat, but I don't remember any other.

King's Council. Call Griffith Meade. Give an Account of what you can of this Matter.

Griffith Meade. I saw a great Number of People come to the Place, and saw Mr. Bethel give him a Push, and that was all.

Thompson. What Words did you hear?

Meade. No Words.

Thompson. How was this Man clothed? Was he clothed with this Coat, or had he a Campaign Coat over it?

Meade. I cannot tell.

Thompson. Upon the Oath you have taken, how many Blows did you see given, because they say twenty?

Meade. No Blows at all, but a little Push.

Call Thomas Smith. (He appeared.) What do you know?

Smith. As Robert Mason and myself stood together, Mr. Bethel came round the Burying-Place, and he brought a great Multitude of Persons with him, and bid Mason come down the Steps: Mason answered, I will come down when I see my Time. Mr. Bethel said, If you will not come down, I will have your Coat plucked off your Back. Afterwards many Words passed, which I cannot remember, and Mr. Bethel pushed him on the Breast.

Second Council. Mr. Smith, Pray give the Court an Account of the Behaviour of the Men that followed Mr. Bethel: Did you not see Mr. Bethel give Robert Mason a Push, when he was in the Artillery-Ground?

Smith. I saw none.

Holt. What do you think the Consequence had been, if Mason had struck again?

Smith. Had he given any Blows again, I do believe a hundred and a hundred had been slain.

Thompson. Smith, pray give an Account of the Behaviour of the Men that came with Mr. Bethel, and what Coat Mason wore, and whether he had not a Campaign Coat on it?

Smith. Sir, I know not that, but he had the same Coat then on his Back, which he has on now.

Thompson. Why, what made you think, if Mason had struck Mr. Bethel, that it would have made such a great Disturbance?

Smith. Because he was the King's Servant.

Call Alexander Dory. Dory, Give the Court an Account of the Matter in Question. Did you see Mr. Bethel give Mason any Blows?

Dory. Sir, Mr. Bethel gave him some Pushes in the Breast, and said, He would have his Coat off his Back.

Thompson.

Thompson. Had he the same Coat on as now he hath?

Dory. I saw the same, and no other.

Mulloy. Call Lawrence. He appeared. Lawrence, give the Court and Jury an Account of what you know of the Quarrel between Mr. Bethel and Robert Mason. Did you see Mr. Bethel give him any Blows? And give an Account of the Behaviour of Mr. Bethel and his Company, when they came into the Borough.

Thompson. This Indictment is for an Assault and Battery; if you can give an Account of that, do; but not of the Behaviour of those that came with Mr. Bethel; that is not the Matter at this Time.

Holt. I answer, Sir, it is not; but we ask the Question, to make out the Behaviour of Mr. Bethel and his Company, and shall leave it to the Jury, what Judgment to make of it.

Lawrence. I saw the Persons that came with Mr. Bethel, hectoring and swearing at a strange Rate, and the Persons which rid before, cry'd Hollow, Hollow.

Thompson. I appeal to Mr. Holt; What if John an Nokes, or Tom a Styles, swear and hector, &c. shall Mr. Bethel answer for that, in a Matter that falls out long afterwards, as this did?

Lawrence. I saw their Behaviour, as I have said; and when Mr. Bethel came to Robert Mason, he stood with his Hands behind him, Mr. Bethel bid him come down; he said, No, he would not: Then said Mr. Bethel, I will pluck your Coat off your Back; and Mason answered, Ay, and so you would my Master's too, if you could.

Lord Mayor. Did Mr. Bethel swear, when he came into the Borough?

Lawrence. No.

Lord Mayor. Who did swear?

Lawrence. He that rid first.

Mr. Thompson. May it please your Lordship, I am of Counsel for Mr. Bethel the Defendant, who has been, and stands indicted for making an Assault and Battery upon Robert Mason; and for speaking many menacing and threatening Words, as, That he would pull his Coat over his Ears, &c. and for giving several Blows; unto which we have pleaded, Not Guilty. They have produced several Witnesses, and Robert Mason himself, who is so thorough-fitch in the Case, that he swears so as no one can believe him; for his own Witnesses do not; for they do not swear, nor pretend to swear like him, being not able to stretch at that Rate; he is desperately mistaken, to speak the best of him.

For this Mason swears Mr. Bethel gave him twenty Blows at least, but how many more he cannot say: See how this will look, when we shall prove, by substantial and credible Men, that not one Blow was given, or push either. But suppose he were pushed, yet his Evidence agree not one with another; for some swear to one Push, some to more: But Mr. Mason swears to the full Number of twenty Blows at least, and that positively, but how many more, he doth not remember. But suppose it were so, yet the Matter is not so much, but what may be justified by the Occasion given; and what would be a good Plea in Law, in an Action, will be the same upon pleading Not Guilty in this Case.

May it please your Lordship, The Occasion of Mr. Bethel's coming here was this; being about the chusing of Parliament-Men for this Borough, the Competitors were, Sir Richard How, Mr. Rich, Mr. Bethel, and Mr. Smith; there was a House wherein they appointed to poll, call'd the Artillery-House: When they came to take the Poll at this Place, where there is a Pair of Stairs which leads to the Door, the Manner of taking the Poll was thus; first to fill the House, by that Door to the Stairs, and after they had voted, to put them out at the other Door; this being the Occasion of the Battery, (however aggravated) will, to all that know it, or shall take the Matter into Consideration, seem a very shameful Thing to ground an Indictment upon. But this Mason, a very officious Man, who had no right to poll, (as himself confesses) and who might have spared the Trouble (for any Authority he had) of coming there; and it might have been better he had stayed at Home, by what he has sworn. This Man and one Sam. Sams, a hectoring Carman, were set upon the Stairs; and their Business was not (as they now pretend) to take Notice who were fit to poll, but to understand who were for Mr. Bethel and Mr. Smith, and those they did abuse, and push them down the Steps; which Mr. Bethel being informed of, came out of the House, and spoke civilly to them, and said, Friends, What have you to do here? If you have not a right to poll, come down from the Place: Which Mason refusing, the Defendant took him gently by the Hand, and led him down the Steps, giving neither Blow nor Push; we shall call Witnesses to prove this.—Now, for a Gentleman that stood as one of the Competitors for a Parliament-Man, at that Time, in that Place, he might do this to a Person that had nothing to do there: Nay, they themselves say, there ought not to be any Interruption at an Election; and that the Interruption was from themselves, and that occasioned the mighty Battery they make so much of. We shall call our Witnesses, and make this Matter appear to be our Case; and then, though Mason hath spoken of twenty Blows, if believed, as there is but little Reason for it, it will be sufficiently justified by the Witnesses we shall produce, and the Evidence we shall give in this Matter.

Call Mr. Nath. Travers Constable, Mr. Benjamin Tarrant, Mr. Geo. Hampton, Mr. Mark Clark, Mr. Thomas Weekes, Mr. Benjamin Gerrard.

Thompson. Let us begin with Mr. Travers. Mr. Travers, What Account can you give of the Matter?

Travers. May it please your Lordship, I remember it as if it were but just now; I was called out of the House, to come to this Door, hearing the People were in a very great Disturbance; I came to this Robert Mason, and said, What do you there, to make this Disturbance, have you a right to poll? He answered, It may be I may. I told him, If he would not be civil, I should take a Course to indict him.

Thompson. And what was he doing?

Travers. He was throwing People from both Sides with his Elbows. In this Time, a Report being carried to Sheriff Bethel, of a Person's Leg broken, and a Man like to be killed, Sheriff Bethel came to the Steps, and took him just by the Arm, thus—[Shewing the Manner—]—and said, Pray, Friend, what hast thou to do here, hast thou a right to Poll? At first he said, He had; afterwards he said, No. Then said Sheriff Bethel, Pray go about your Business. Mr. Bethel gave no Blow, nor did so much as shew any Passion, or angry Countenance; and said no more: But others said, Mason was a rude Person, and that he deserved to have his Coat plucked over his Ears.

Thompson. Did you not hear Mr. Bethel say so?

Travers. No, but it was said by some of the Company.

Thompson. I ask one Question more—Mason said he had twenty Blows, what say you to that?

Travers. He had not one, upon the Oath that I have taken.

Thompson. Had he this Coat on, or no?

Travers. Truly I know not, I cannot tell; but he had a Badge, whereby he discovered himself to be some Gentleman's Servant.

Thompson. Was Sams there?

Holt. Mr. Thompson, is that a fair Question?

Thompson. I did it purposely to try your Observation; you would call to what others did long before the Battery, I must not ask if one was there at the Time of the Battery.

Holt. Did you not see Mr. Bethel on the Artillery-Ground, was not Mason pushed there?

Travers. I tell you, Sir, there was not one Blow given.

Holt. Then you did not see the Quarrel on the Ground?

Travers. I tell you, there was no Quarrel on the Ground: I stood on the Steps when Sheriff Bethel came; and the Sheriff, when he was half Way on the Steps, seeing the Waterman's Posture he was in, said, Friend, have you any Thing to do to Poll; if you have not, why do you make a Disturbance? He answered, It may be I have, and it may be not. Pray, Friend, said Sheriff Bethel, if you have not, come down, I went from thence about the Ground, and did not see the least Blow given, or any Appearance of Passion.

Thompson. Before Mr. Bethel came, how did this Man behave himself, did he not shout, and behave himself rudely?

Holt. Let him speak of himself, let not Words be put into his Mouth.

Thompson. Had he a red Coat on?

Travers. I cannot say it.

Thompson. Mr. Tarrant, what can you say?

Tarrant. I was on the Ground when the Sheriff came, I was at some Distance; but upon the Oath I have taken, I saw Mr. Bethel and the Waterman coming together, but I saw no Blow, and I am sure there was not one Blow given.

Mr. Weekes. give an Account of what you know.

Weekes. My Lord, I saw Sheriff Bethel when he came into the Ground, and went up the Steps; I made haste after him, and was there all the while, and there was nothing like a Blow; but all he did was to this Purpose—Pray, Friend, (said he) if you have no right to Poll, go your Way, What have you to do here? And I followed after him into the Artillery-Ground, and there was nothing of a Blow, or any Thing like it.

Thompson. You were there all the while?

Weekes. Yes, I was.

Thompson. Yet Mason saith, there were twenty Blows given.

Weekes. Upon the Oath I have taken, there was none, nor any Thing like it.

Holt. Mr. Weekes, do you live in London, or do you live in the Borough?

Weekes. Sir, I live in London.

Holt. What is this Witness to the Purpose then?

Thompson. May not a Man live in London, and be a good Evidence here? Notwithstanding, call Mr. Gerrard.

Mr. Gerrard, what can you say?

Gerrard. I was in the Ground before Mr. Bethel came out of the Polling-House; and I saw this Waterman, and Sam. Sams, thrusting of People down, that seemed to be for Mr. Bethel and Smith, crying, How and Rude.

Weekes. My Lord, my Memory failed in this Point; but, upon the Oath I have taken, what that Gentleman swears, it is true.

Thompson. Pray, Sir, (as you seem to be a sober Man) were any Blows struck by Mr. Bethel?

Gerrard. I went with Sheriff Bethel there at that Time, and asked the Waterman what he had to do there? I cannot well tell what Answer he made; but Mr. Sheriff said, If you have no right to Poll, pray go about your Business. Upon the Oath I have taken, he did not strike one Blow, nor more than he doth now, standing in this Court before your Lordship.

Lord Mayor. Was there any pushing or thrusting by Mr. Bethel?

Gerrard. Upon my Oath, my Lord, not any.

Thompson. And you say you were there all the while, and saw no Disturbance given by Mr. Bethel?

Gerrard. I am sure there was not.

Thompson. Had he this Coat on, or no; or had he not a Campaign Coat on?

Gerrard. To the best of my Remembrance he had a Campaign Coat on, and I believe he had.

Thompson. Mr. Hatfield, pray give an Account of what you know of the Matter.

Hatfield. There were two Men which I saw in red Coats, which pushed down the People that came to poll for Mr. Bethel, before Mr. Bethel came, and had not Mr. Bethel come to appease the Tumult, I do believe there had been much Mischief done by them and Sams.

Thompson. Upon the Oath you have taken, were any Blows given?

Hatfield. No, Sir, there were none.

Thompson. Were there any Blows given by Mr. Bethel?

Hatfield. No, Sir, not one; for Mr. Bethel being informed of the civility of Mason and Sams, Mr. Bethel came civilly to them, and treated them to come down, and bid them be gone, and not make a Disturbance.

Mulloy. Call Lawrence again, to shew that Mason did not make a Disturbance.

Lawrence. I saw Robert Mason, and the Party with him, behave themselves very civil; and the Disturbance that was proceeded from the Party.

Thompson. This is the same Man we had but now, he is called to witnesses again; a pretty Way of multiplying Witnesses: I appeal to Mr. Mason himself, whether this be not the same Man you called once before?

Thompson. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I think the Case is plain, and needs no Arguments: I shall only take Notice how these Men are (as they pretend) to keep the King's Peace. The Matter you see, in short, is, Mr. Bethel (who stood for a Parliament-Man of this Place, and at the same Time bore an eminent Character, as Sheriff of the City of London) upon Information given of the Disturbance made by this Mason, and of the Unfairness of their Proceedings, only came civilly, and took him by the Arm, persuading him to come away, and make no Disturbance. And this is the Truth of the Case, and the mighty Battery they pretend to. Now, suppose that when People are in such a Croud, and upon such an Occasion, there were some Pushes (as is the utmost here pretended) could this be a sufficient Matter to ground an Indictment upon? No, Gentlemen, no: This Indictment, and the Design of it, is to raise a Dust, and (if possible) to cast Reflections on Mr. Bethel; but 'tis more than they can do in Point of Law, by any Matter here proved, if Mason's Witnesses do swear true: Yet you see how Mason behaves himself, crying How and Rich, striking down all that came between Sam. Sams and him; so they broke the Peace, and raised the Disturbance themselves. And in that Case, any Man (and why not Mr. Bethel?) might have taken him, and carried him before a Magistrate, and have justified it. But now, for the Credit of the Thing: You see that none swears it but Mason himself; but even he swears to that Impossibility, so over-reaches the Matter, through the Excess of his Passion in Swearing, that no one can believe him; if he had sworn modestly, as the rest did, to two or three Pushes, it might have been credited; but to twenty Blows, no one can believe it; neither doth any one of his own Witnesses swear like him, or of so much as one Blow given: So there is not one Word Mason saith can be credited.

Then, my Lord, admit it to be so, yet you saw Mr. Bethel was not the Person that first began this Disturbance: Now, if the other Party had been indicted and tried (as indeed it had been much more fit they should) we could have proved much against them.

And as to the Fact, and Manner of what Mr. Bethel did, it was no more than coming in a civil Manner, asking whether he had a Right to poll; when he said no, he took him civilly by the Arm and led him down; and this is a justifiable Assault, being the Nature of the Thing required a Necessity of somewhat of Action in it. I appeal to you of the Jury, whether here be any Cause for this Indictment, or Colour of Reason for you to find it?

Holt. Gentlemen of the Jury, you have heard the Evidence on both Sides, and the Question is, Whether in your Consciences, you can disbelieve eight Witnesses, that swear positively to the Battery, and believe those Witnesses that did not see it? If you acquit Mr. Bethel, you must necessarily convict eight Persons of Perjury: But if you do not find for Mr. Bethel, the other Witnesses cannot be convicted of Perjury; for how can Men swear (though they were there all the Time) that they did not see? Possibly they might be very honest Men, and present at the Time, and yet not see Mr. Bethel strike, and so not swear to it: But our Witnesses swear very true; I hope you will be guided by Sense and Conscience, and not by Spectators Humours, and Apprehensions, that come here and hiss in a Court of Justice. Now, eight Witnesses swearing it, I do appeal to the Court, whether in Matters of this Nature, one Witness for the Affirmative, be not more valid than many of the Negative?

They take Notice of the Impossibility, and why, because they swear

(as they say) at an extravagant Rate, that Mr. Bethel give him twenty Blows.

Gentlemen, if Mr. Bethel will beat a Man extravagantly, it is not Extravagancy to swear it. Now, Mason's Evidence is confirmed by all the rest produced, and no Contradiction: If one swear to ten, and another to two, and another to three, is this inconsistent? No, Gentlemen, it is evident those Men swear cautiously and fearfully; for if otherwise, they could swear to as many as Twenty, as Mason hath done. Who is the best Judge, he that felt the Blows, or they that swear there was not one given? He that felt them, I am sure.

Gentlemen, it was in a Croud, 'tis possible they may not see all; yet their Evidence is a concurring Circumstance.

Next I come to the Point of Law, how a Man that is a Candidate at an Election, can beat any Man that stands in his Way; I do not understand that to be Law. If any Man had beaten Mr. Bethel, he might have beaten him again in his own Defence; but there was no such Thing, Mr. Bethel saw no Disturbance himself, but was informed of it, and so became too officious; though he was Sheriff of London, yet he was not an Officer there; for he was not a Constable there; and it was a Constable's Office, and he only could have seized him; and not a Constable neither, unless he had seen the King's Peace broken.

And as to what Mr. Thompson saith, that it is impossible that such an Election should be carried on without some Bustle. It's true, in a Croud, Men jostling one another, and by Accident strike another down, it's no Battery: But is it necessary for Mr. Bethel to thump a Man on the Breast? Is it necessary for Mr. Bethel to beat a Man with his Cane? Is it necessary for Mr. Bethel to give a Man twenty Blows? Is it necessary for Mr. Bethel to pluck a Man's Coat off his Back? Is it necessary to an Election? It is not necessary; and so being not necessary, is not by Law justifiable. Gentlemen, as Mr. Thompson saith, it is a Case of Example; I say so too; and it is fit Persons that will do such Things, should be made an Example.

Justice Pys afterwards summ'd up the Evidence, and told the Jury (as Mr. Holt the Counsellor for the King had before well observed) that they were to have Regard to the positive affirmative Evidence, Mason having sworn positively to several Blows that were struck by Mr. Bethel, and that eight Witnesses had sworn in the Affirmative, and that though there were seven Witnesses produced by Mr. Bethel, which were on the negative Part; yet they were to observe, that the Law did not allow of those Negative Evidences. But for that so many had sworn in the Affirmative, that they saw a Thing done, and as many swear that they saw it not; he could not tell what to say, but to leave it to the Jury, saying, that one Affirmative was better than forty Negative Oaths.

So the Jury went out, and in a very short Time were pleased to find the Indictment, and brought Mr. Bethel in Guilty.

Then Mr. Bethel's Council moved in Arrest of Judgment, for that no Indictment lay for the Words, and the Court for that Reason staid the Judgment, as to that Part of the Indictment, and gave Judgment only as to the Assault and Battery, and fined Mr. Bethel five Marks. Upon which, the Council for the King moved to have him taken into Custody, until he paid the Fine; which he presently paid, and so was discharged.

CIX. Proceedings at the Old-Baily, upon the Bill of Indictment for High-Treason against Anthony Earl of Shaftesbury*, November 24, 1681. 33 Car. II.

The GRAND JURY.

The OATH.

YOU shall diligently enquire, and true Presentments make of all such Matters, Articles, and Things, as shall be given you in Charge, as of all other Matters and Things as shall come to your own Knowledge, touching this present Service; the King's Council, your Fellows and your own, you shall keep secret; you shall present no Person for Hatred or Malice; neither shall you leave any one unpresented, for Fear, Favour, or Affection, for Lucre or Gain, or any Hopes thereof; but in all Things you shall present the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth, to the best of your Knowledge.

So help you GOD.

L. C. J. Pemberton. Gentlemen of the Jury, we are all met here, in one of the most solemn Assemblies of this Nation; it is upon the Execution of Justice upon such as shall be found Offenders, and guilty of the Breach of the King's Laws.

This Commission by which we sit, and you are summoned, doth in its Nature extend to all Offences whatsoever, against the Laws of the Land, Treasons, Misprisions of Treasons, Felonies, and all other Crimes and Offences against the King and his Government, such as are vulgarly called Pleas of the Crown; they all fall under our Cognizance and your Enquiry in a general Manner. But I must tell you, there is a particular Occasion for this Commission at this Time. His Majesty having Information of some evil traitorous Designs against his Person and Government, has thought fit to direct a due Examination of them, and that the Persons may be brought to condign Punishment who shall be found Guilty thereof. You must not therefore expect any general and formal Charge from me: Truly, I came hither this Morning, with an Apprehension that you had had your Directions given you before, by the Recorder; for it is our usual Way, not to come until the Juries are sworn in this Place, and their Directions given them; but since I find it otherwise, I take it to be my Duty to say something to you, but shall not go about now to make any such formal Charge, as in Commissions of this Nature is wont to be done; nor to give an Account of all Offences that fall under your Enquiry of a Grand Inquest, impannell'd by Virtue of such a Commission at large; nor must you expect I should acquaint you with all the Crimes that you may enquire of as such an Inquest.

I shall content myself so far, as on the sudden I can recollect my Thoughts, to acquaint you with the Nature of those Bills; with the Enquiry whereof, you shall at present, upon this Occasion, be troubled, and your Duty concerning this Enquiry. I hinted to you at first, that they are Matters of High-Treason, which is a Crime of the greatest and highest Nature of any Crime that can be committed against Man: Other Crimes, as Felonies, Riots, Trespasses, and Things of that Nature, they may occasion Disorders and Troubles in a State or a Kingdom; but I must tell you, Treason strikes at the Root and Life of all: It tends to destroy the very Government, both King and Subjects, and the Lives, Interest, and Liberties of all, and therefore has always been looked upon as a Crime of the most notorious Nature that can be whatsoever, and accordingly Punishments have been appointed for it of the highest and severest Extremity. There was at Common Law great Variety of Opinions concerning Treason, and there were many Disputes about it, what should be Treason, and what not; and therefore it was thought fit, by the Wisdom of our Ancestors, to have a Law to declare Treason; and by the Statute of the 25th of Edward III. there was a plain Declaration made of what was Treason, and what not: By that Law, For any one to compass, imagine, or intend the Death of the King (for I will give you no more of that Statute, nor concerning the Sense thereof, than may be for your Purpose now,) I say, by that Law, to compass, imagine, or intend the Death of the King, and to declare it by Overt-Act, or to levy War against the King, were declared (amongst other Things in that Statute mentioned) to be High Treason: And this hath obtained for Law among us ever since; and by that standing Law, nothing is to be accounted Treason, but what is therein particularly declared so; but upon many emergent Occasions, there hath been several other Laws, as the Case hath required now and then, for to declare and bring other particular Crimes within the Compass of Treasons: So there was a Law made in Queen Elizabeth's Reign, for enacting several Crimes to be Treasons, during her Life; which was made upon the Occasion of the inveterate Malice of the Roman Catholics against her and her Government; and so there hath been in other Kings Reigns upon other Occasions.

Amongst the rest, it was thought fit, by the Parliament assembled here, in the 13th Year of this present King, to make a particular Law for the enacting and declaring several Crimes to be Treasons, during this King's Life; they had great Grounds, and too much Occasion for it, and so they express it in the Preamble of that Law. The Wounds which the then late Treasons had made, that had so far obtained in this Kingdom, were then still bleeding, ripe, and scarcely closed; many traitorous Positions, and many seditious Principles were spread, and had obtained and gained footing among the People of this Kingdom; and the Parliament had Reason to believe that where they had been so maliciously bent against the King and his Family, and had taken off his Father, and maintained so long and dangerous a War against him, almost to the utter Destruction and Extirpation of him, and all his good Subjects, and of his, and all our Interests, Properties and Liberties, and had almost destroyed a flourishing Kingdom: Here they had Reason, I say, to be careful, to prevent the like Mischief for the future; therefore, Gentlemen, they did think fit to make a new Law for this Purpose; and whereas the Law before was, that it should be Treason, to compass, imagine, or intend the Death of the King, so as it were declared by Overt-Act; now they thought it would be dangerous to stay till an Overt-Act should declare the Intention: For when they had seen such malicious and evil Designs against the King and supreme Authority; and that they had prevailed so far, as to murder one King and banish another; and had gone a great Way in the Destruction of the Government of this Kingdom, absolutely to root it quite out; they had reason then, as much as they could, to prevent the Designs before they should grow full ripe, and vent themselves in Overt-Acts; therefore, it was enacted by that Statute, made in the 13th Year of this King's Reign, "That if any one should compass, imagine, or intend the Death of the King, or his Destruction, or any bodily Harm that might tend to his Death, or Destruction, or any maiming or wounding his Person, any Restraint of his Liberty, or any Imprisonment of him; or if any should design or intend to levy any War against him, either within the Kingdom, or without; or should design, intend, endeavour, or procure any foreign Prince to invade these his Dominions, or any other of the King's Dominions, and should signify or declare this by any Writing, or by any Preaching or Printing, or by any advised, malicious Speaking, or Words, this shall be High Treason."

Now this hath altered the former Law greatly, especially in two Cases: First, as to levying of War; the Intention was not Treason before, unless it had taken Effect, and War had been actually levied: and then as to the designing and compassing the King's Death, that was not Treason, unless it was declared by an Overt-Act: and as to the imprisoning, or restraining of the Liberty of the King, they of themselves alone were not High Treason: But now by this Law these are made Treason,---by this Law, during his Majesty's Life; and the very designing of them, whether they take Effect, or not take Effect, though it be prevented (before any Overt-Act) by the timely Prudence of the King and his Officers---though it should be timely prevented, that there is no Hurt done, yet the very Design, if it be but uttered and spoken, and any ways signified by any Discourse: this (Gentleman) is made Treason by this Act; and this hath wrought very great Alteration in the Case of Treason now; formerly it was said, and said truly enough, that Words alone would not make Treason; but since this Act, Gentlemen, Words, if they import any malicious Design against the King's Life and Government, and traitorous Intention in the Party, such Words are Treason now within this Act: And this Act was made with great Prudence, and with great Care, to take off that undue Liberty that Men had taken to themselves; in those Times of Licentiousness, People had taken to themselves an undecent and undue Liberty to vent all their seditious and malicious Minds one to another, without any Restraint at all: Therefore now, Gentlemen, you must consider, that Words, if they signify or purport any traitorous Intention or Design in the Party, either against the King or his Government; either to restrain his Liberty, or imprison him, or to do him any bodily Hurt, or any Crime of that Nature; this is Treason within this Act of Parliament.

Look ye, Gentlemen, now as to the Indictments that shall be brought before you, you are to consider these Things: 1. Whether the Matter contained in them, and which you shall have in Evidence, be Matter of Treason within the former, or this Act of Parliament? And here, if you doubt of it, then you must advise with us that are commissioned by his Majesty, to hear and determine these Crimes; and in Matters of Law we shall direct you: And you are to enquire if there be two Witnesses that shall testify the Matters in Evidence to you; for without two Witnesses, no Man is to be impeached within these Laws; but if there be two Witnesses that shall testify to you Matters to make good the Indictments, then you have Ground to find the Indictments. But I must tell you, as to this Case of two Witnesses, it is not necessary that they should be two Witnesses to the same Words, or to Words spoken at one Time, or in the same Place; that is not necessary: if one be a Witness to Words that import any traitorous Design and Intention, spoken at one Time, and in one Place; and another testify other seditious and traitorous Words spoken at another Time, and in another Place; these two are two good Witnesses within this Statute, and so it hath been solemnly resolved by all the Judges of England, upon a solemn Occasion.

Look ye, Gentlemen, I must tell you, That that which is referred to you, is to consider, whether, upon what Evidence you shall have given unto you, there be any Reason or Ground for the King to call these Persons to an Account; if there be probable Ground, it is as much as you are to enquire into: You are not to judge the Persons, but for the Honour of the King, and the Decency of the Matter, it is not thought fit by the Law, that Persons should be accused and indicted, where there is no Colour nor Ground for it; where there is no Kind of Suspicion of a Crime, nor Reason to believe that the Thing can be proved, it is not for the King's Honour to call Men to an Account in such Cases: Therefore you are to enquire, whether that that you hear be any Cause or Reason for the King to put the Party to answer it. You do not condemn, nor is there such a strict Enquiry to be made by you, as by others, that are sworn to try the Fact, or Issue: A probable Cause, or some Ground, that the King hath to call these Persons to answer for it, is enough, Gentlemen, for you to find a Bill, 'tis as much as is by Law required. Gentlemen, you must consider this, That as it is a Crime for to condemn innocent Persons, so it is a Crime as great to acquit the Guilty; and that God that requires one of them, requires both; so that you must be as strict in the one, as you would be in the other. And let me tell you, if any of you shall be refractory, and will not find any Bill, where there is a probable Ground for an Accusation, you do therein undertake to intercept Justice; and you thereby make yourselves Criminals and Guilty, and the Fault will lie at your Door. You must consider, Gentlemen, you are under a double Obligation here to do right; you are under the Obligation of Englishmen, as we are all Members of one great Body, of which the King is Head; and you are engaged, as Englishmen, to consider, That Crimes of this Nature ought not to go unpunished: Then you have an Oath of God upon you, you are here sworn to do according to what the Evidence is. Now therefore, if you have two Witnesses of Words that may import a treasonable Design or Intention in any of those Parties, against whom you shall have Indictments offered to you, you are bound both by the Law of Nature, as you are Members of this Body; and by the Law of God, as you have taken an Oath upon you, for to find those Bills.

Gentlemen, Compassion or Pity is not your Province, nor ours in this Case; there is no Room for that, in Enquiries of this Nature; that is reserved to an higher and superior Power, from which ours is derived: Therefore, Gentlemen, I must require you to consider such Evidence as shall be given you, and to be impartial, according to what you shall hear from the Witnesses, if you have Ground, upon what Evidence you shall have given to you, to believe that there is any Reason or Cause for the King to call the Persons named in such Indictments, as shall be tendered to you, to answer for what is objected against them therein, you are to find those Bills; that is all that I shall say to you; only pray God to direct you in your Enquiry, that Justice may take Place.

[Then a Bill of High Treason was offered against the Earl of Shaftesbury; and Sir Francis Withins moved, That the Evidence might be heard in Court.]

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, you hear it is desired by the King's Council (and that we cannot deny) that the Evidence may be publicly given, that it may not be hereafter in the Mouths of any ill-minded Persons abroad, to scatter any Mistakes or Untruths up and down; or to slander the King's Evidence, or to say any thing concerning them that is not true: Therefore, we cannot deny this Motion of the King's Council, but desire that you will take your Places, and hear the Evidence that shall be given you.

[The Jury then desired a Copy of their Oath, which the Court granted, and then they withdrew. After some little Time they returned, and then the Clerk called them by their Names.]

Foreman. My Lord Chief Justice, it is the Opinion of the Jury, that they ought to examine the Witnesses in private, and it hath been the constant Practice of our Ancestors and Predecessors to do it; and they insist upon it as their Right to examine in private, because they are bound to keep the King's Secrets, which they cannot do, if it be done in Court.

L. C. J. Look ye, Gentlemen of the Jury, it may very probably be, that some late Usage has brought you into this Error, that it is your Right, but it is not your Right in Truth: For I will tell you, I take the Reason of that Use for Grand Juries to examine the Witnesses privately and out of Court, to comply with the Conveniencies of the Court; for generally upon such Commissions as these are, the Business is much; and at Good Deliveries there are a great many Persons to be indicted and tried, and much other Work besides, of other Natures to be done: And if at such Times, we should examine all Businesses publicly in the Court, it would make the Business of these Commissions of a wonderful great Length and Cumbrance. Therefore the Judges, for the Conveniency of the Matter, have allowed, that Witnesses should go to the Jury, and they to examine them; not that there is any Matter of Right in it, for without Question, originally all Evidences were given in Court: The Jury are Officers and Ministers of the Court, by which they enquire, and Evidence sure was all given in Court formerly; and the Witnesses still are always sworn in Court, and never otherwise. And, Gentlemen, I must tell you, for your Advantage, as well as for the King's, that it may be sure, that you comply with your Evidence, that you do nothing clandestinely; therefore 'tis for your Advantage that this is done, and the King likewise desires it. Now I must tell you, that if the King requires it of us, and it is a Thing that is in its Nature indifferent, we ought to comply with the King's Desire to have it examined in Court; you shall have all the Liberty that you can have in private; what Question soever you will have asked, yourselves shall ask it, if you please, and we will not cramp you in Time, nor any thing of that Nature. Therefore, Gentlemen, there can be no kind of Reason why this Evidence should not be given in Court. What you say concerning keeping your Counsels, that is quite of another Nature, that is, your Debates, and those Things, there you shall be in private, for to consider of what you hear publicly. But certainly it is the best Way, both for the King, and for you, that there should, in a Case of this Nature, be an open and plain Examination of the Witnesses, that all the World may see what they say.

Foreman

Sir Rob. Sa

Foreman. My Lord, if your Lordship pleases, I must beg your Lordship's Pardon, if I mistake in any Thing, it is contrary to the Sense of what the Jury apprehend. First, they apprehend that the very Words of the Oath doth bind them, it says, That they shall keep the Counsels, and their own Secrets: Now, my Lord, there can be no Secret in publick; the very Intimation of that doth imply, that the Examination should be secret; besides, my Lord, I beg your Lordship's Pardon if we mistake, we do not understand any Thing of Law.

Mr. Papillon. Your Lordship is pleased to say, that it hath been the common Usage and Practice; sometimes, my Lord, we have heard, that that hath been the Law of England, that hath been the Custom of England: If it be the ancient Usage and Custom of England, that hath never been altered from Time to Time, and hath continued so, we desire your Lordship's Opinion upon that; as we would not do any Thing that may be prejudicial to the King, so we would not do the least that should be prejudicial to the Liberties of the People; if it be the ancient Custom of the Kingdom to examine in private, then there is something may be very prejudicial to the King in this publick Examination; for sometimes in examining Witnesses in private, there come to be discovered some Persons guilty of Treason, and Misprision of Treason, that were not known, nor thought on before. Then the Jury sends down to the Court, and gives them Intimation, and these Men are presently secured; whereas, my Lord, in case they be examined in open Court publickly, then presently there is Intimation given, and these Men are gone away. Another Thing that may be prejudicial to the King, is, that all the Evidences here, will be foreknown before they come to the main Trial upon Issue by the Petty-Jury; then if there be not a very great deal of Care, these Witnesses may be confronted by raising up Witnesses to prejudice them, as in some Cases it has been: Then besides, the Jury do apprehend, that in private they are more free to examine Things in particular, for the satisfying their own Consciences, and that without Favour or Affection; and we hope we shall do our Duty.

L. C. J. Look ye, Mr. Papillon, it is reasonable that we should give you our Advice in this Case: I must tell you, if you had considered of what I had said before, I thought I had obviated these Objections: First, as to what you do say that you are bound to conceal your Counsels, and the King's Secrets, that is very true; as to your Counsels, that is, your Debates, you are bound to conceal them: As to the King's Secrets, so long as he will have them kept secret, you are bound to keep them so too; but it doth not deprive the King of the Benefit of having it publick, if he have a Desire for it; you don't break your Oath, if the King will make it publick; you don't make it publick; 'tis the King does it. Then as to that that you do say, that you apprehend the common Usage of the Kingdom to be a Law; that is true, Mr. Papillon, in some Sense; a constant and uninterrupted Usage goes for a Law among us; but I thought I had told you before, that both of ancient and later Times there have been Examinations of the Witnesses in Court, in Cases of this Nature; and we are not without Precedents of it every Year, every Term, continually from Time to Time, Evidence is heard in Court by the Grand Jury; it is as usual a Thing with us, as any Thing, if it be desired, nothing more frequent, or more common: I never heard it denied, or stood upon by any Grand-Jury, in my Life, till of late here; you may be instructed with a thousand Precedents, for I am sure it is a common and ordinary Case, upon such Occasions, if desired, to hear the Evidence in Court.

Look ye, Gentlemen, as to that Care that you have of the King's Affairs, the King has Reason to take it well that you are so careful for them; and that you are so mindful of his Concerns, he hath a great deal of Reason to think well of you for it: And, Gentlemen, consider this, that his Majesty's Council have certainly considered of this Evidence, before they brought this to a publick Enquiry; or else it would be a hard Thing if they should come raw, and not know what the Witnesses can say; for though you are the Jury to hear the Witnesses, yet you must consider, that the King's Council have examined whether he hath Cause to accuse these Persons, or not; and, Gentlemen, they understand very well, that it will be no Prejudice to the King to have the Evidence heard openly in Court; or else the King would ne'er desire it.

Foreman. My Lord, the Gentlemen of the Jury desire that it may be recorded, that we insisted upon it as our Right; but if the Court overrule, we must submit to it.

L. C. J. Here are enough Persons to take Notice of it; to make Records of such Things, is not usual; it is not our Business here to record every Thing, that every Man will desire to be recorded: We can record nothing but what is in order to the Proceedings, but Notice enough is taken of it; you need not fear but that there will be Witnesses enough.

L. C. J. North. Gentlemen, I must say something to fortify what my Lord Chief Justice has said: If any of us had been of a different Opinion, we would have spoken it; the same Thing was stood upon, and discoursed on the last Sessions, and then all the Judges were of this Opinion, and in what all the Judges agree to, you should acquiesce. I must tell you from my own Experience; where the King will, he ought to have it kept secret: I have not known it done publickly in the orderly Course of Business; but I have often known where it hath been desired by those which prosecute for the King, that Evidence hath been given openly; and I never knew it denied: If any of my Brothers think otherwise, I desire they would speak; but, I tell you, as to my Experience, this is the Case.

Mr. Sheriff P. I desire the Witnesses may be kept out of the Court, and called one by one.

L. C. J. It is a Thing certainly, that the King's Council will not be afraid of doing; but Sheriffs do not use to move any Thing of this Nature in Court, and therefore 'tis not your Duty, Mr. Sheriff, to meddle with it.

Sheriff P. It was my Duty last Time, my Lord, and appointed.

* Mr. Att. Gen. You were acquainted 'twas not your Duty last Time, and you appear against the King.

Sir Rob. Sawyer.

Then the Indictment was read.

London ff. THE Jurors for our Sovereign Lord the King, upon their Oaths present, that Anthony Earl of Shaftesbury, late of the Parish of St. Martin's in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex, as a false Traitor against the most illustrious, and most excellent Prince, our Sovereign Lord Charles II. by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, King, his natural Lord, the Fear of God in his Heart not having, nor weighing the Duty of his Allegiance; but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, the cordial Love, and true, due, and natural Obedience, which true and faithful Subjects of our said Sovereign Lord the King, towards him our said Sovereign Lord the King, should, and of Right ought to bear, wholly withdrawing, and with all his Strength intending the Peace and common Tranquillity in this Kingdom of England, to disturb, and War and Rebellion against our said Sovereign Lord the King, to stir up and move, and the Government of our said Sovereign Lord the King, within this Kingdom of England, to subvert, and him our said Sovereign Lord the King, from the Title, Honour, and regal Name of the Imperial Crown of his Kingdom of England to depose and deprive, and him our said Sovereign Lord the King to Death and final Destruction to bring and put, the 18th Day of March, in the three and thirtieth Year of our Sovereign Lord Charles II. now King of England, and divers other Days and Time, as well before as afterwards, in the Parish of St. Mary le Bow, in the Ward of Cheap, London traiterously compassed, imagined, and intended the Death and final Destruction of our said Sovereign Lord the King, and the ancient Government of his Kingdom of England, to change, alter, and wholly to subvert, and him our said Sovereign Lord the King, from the Title, Honour, and kingly Name of his Imperial Crown of this Kingdom of England to depose and deprive, and War and Rebellion against our Sovereign Lord the King, to move and levy within this Kingdom of England; and his said most wicked Treasons, and traiterous Compasses, Imaginations and Purposes aforesaid, to fulfil and perfect, he the said Anthony Earl of Shaftesbury, as a false Traitor, with divers armed Men, Subjects of our said Sovereign Lord the King, then being, maliciously, traiterously and advisedly, did provide and prepare to be aiding to him the said Earl of Shaftesbury, to fulfil and perfect his Treasons aforesaid. And his said wicked Treasons, traiterous Compasses, Imaginations and Purposes, the sooner to fulfil and perfect, he the said Anthony Earl of Shaftesbury as a false Traitor, with one John Booth, and other Subjects of our said Lord the King, then and there traiterously assembled, met and consulted; and the same wicked Treasons, and traiterous Compasses, Imaginations and Purposes aforesaid, then and there to the said John Booth, and other Persons, to the Jury unknown, in the hearing of divers Liege Subjects of our Sovereign Lord the King, then and there present, openly, publickly, maliciously, traiterously and advisedly did say and declare, and to persuade and induce the said John Booth to be aiding and assisting in his said Treasons, Compasses, Imaginations, and Purposes, he the said Anthony Earl of Shaftesbury, as a false Traitor, maliciously, advisedly, and traiterously, the said 18th Day of March, in the three and thirtieth Year of the Reign of our said Sovereign Lord the King, at the Parish and Ward aforesaid, within the City of London aforesaid, falsely, advisedly, subtilly, maliciously and traiterously said, asserted and declared, that in a short Time the Parliament was to sit at Oxford, and that he the said Anthony Earl of Shaftesbury had inspected the Elections, and considered the Inclinations and Dispositions of the Generality of the Members of Parliament elected; and that he the said Anthony Earl of Shaftesbury was satisfied that the Parliament would insist upon three Matters, (to wit) The Bill of Exclusion against the Duke of York; the abolishing the Act of Parliament of the 35th of Queen Elizabeth, and the passing of a new Bill for uniting Protestant Dissenters; with divers other good and wholesome Bills. To which he the said Anthony Earl of Shaftesbury was certain that the King's Majesty would refuse to give his Royal Assent; and therefore he the said Anthony Earl of Shaftesbury did expect that there would be a Division between the King's Majesty and the Parliament; and that many noble Lords and worthy Members of the Lower House did concur in the same Opinion; and they were resolved to insist upon the passing of those Bills: And if the King's Majesty refused, that they (meaning him the said Anthony Earl of Shaftesbury, and the said noble Lords and worthy Members) and provided Strength to compel the King's Majesty to grant thereunto: And that for his Part, he the said Anthony Earl of Shaftesbury had provided stout Men to be commanded by Captain Wilkinson, (meaning one Henry Wilkinson, one of the Subjects of our said now Sovereign Lord the King); of which he the said Anthony Earl of Shaftesbury had agreed that the said John Booth should be one.

And further, the Jurors aforesaid upon their Oaths do say, that the aforesaid Anthony Earl of Shaftesbury, his said wicked Treasons, and traiterous Imaginations, to fulfil, perfect and bring to Effect afterwards: to wit, the said eighteenth Day of March, in the thirty-third Year of his said now Majesty's Reign, in the Parish and Ward aforesaid, within the City of London aforesaid, as a false Traitor in the presence and hearing of divers liege People of our said Sovereign Lord the King, then and there present, openly and publickly, falsely, maliciously, advisedly and traiterously said, asserted, published, and with a loud Voice declared, that our said now Lord the King was a Man of no Faith, and that there was no Trust in him; and that our said Lord the King deserved to be deposed, as well as Richard the Second, late King of England deserved.

And further, the Jurors aforesaid upon their Oaths do say, that the said Anthony Earl of Shaftesbury, his said wicked Treasons, and traiterous Imaginations aforesaid, to be fulfilled and perfected, and brought to effect the said 18th Day of March, in the three and thirtieth year of his said now Majesty's Reign, in the Parish and Ward aforesaid, in the City of London aforesaid, as a false Traitor, in the presence and hearing of divers liege Subjects of our said Lord the King then and there present, openly and publickly, falsely, maliciously, advisedly, and traiterously said, asserted, published, and with a loud Voice declared, that he the said Anthony Earl of Shaftesbury, could never desist, until he had brought this Kingdom of England into a Commonwealth without a King, and that the said Anthony Earl of Shaftesbury, and all those that him the said Anthony Earl of Shaftesbury would assist, (and he knew many that would assist him the said Anthony Earl of Shaftesbury) would make England a Commonwealth as Holland was: and that he the said Anthony Earl of Shaftesbury, and other Traitors unknown, would live as in Holland, and that he our said Lord the King, and all his Family, should be rooted out.

And further, the Jurors aforesaid do say, that the said Anthony Earl of Shaftesbury, his said wicked Treasons, and traiterous Imaginations aforesaid, to be fulfilled, perfected, and brought to Effect afterwards, the said 18th Day of March, in the three and thirtieth Year of his said now Majesty's Reign, in the Parish and Ward aforesaid, in the City of London aforesaid, as a false Traitor, in the presence and hearing of divers liege Subjects of our said Sovereign Lord the King then and there present, openly, publicly, falsely, maliciously, advisedly, and traitorously said, asserted, published, and with a loud Voice declared, that our now Sovereign Lord the King was a Man of an unfaithful Heart, and not worthy to be trusted, and not fit to rule and govern, being false, unjust, and cruel to his People; and if he would not be governed by his People, that they (meaning him, the said Anthony Earl of Shaftesbury, and other Traitors to the furors unknown) our said Sovereign Lord the King would depose, against his Allegiance and Duty, and against the Peace of our said Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, &c. and against the Form of the Statute in such Case made and provided, &c.

Sir Fr. Withens. Gentlemen of the Jury, This is an Indictment against the Earl of Shaftesbury; I shall not trouble you to open the Indictment, because the Evidence will be somewhat long, I shall only tell you which Way we shall go.—

L. C. J. North. I do not know whether you desire the Witnesses should be examined a-part, do you desire that, Gentlemen?

L. C. J. If you do desire it, Gentlemen, they shall, for Mr. Sheriff hath nothing to do with it; but if you do desire it, you shall have the Witnesses called one at a Time, and all the rest shall be put out of the Court.

Jury. My Lord, it is our Desire.

L. C. J. We did deny it to Mr. Sheriff, because we are to keep Men within their Duty. Here it is not his Duty to meddle with any Thing of this Nature.

Foreman. My Lord, we desire we may have a List of their Names, and that they may be put a-part, that they may not hear what one another say.

Sir Fr. Withens. My Lord, there is one Part I would open.

L. C. J. There is no need for it at all—You shall have their Names told you as they are called.

Mr. Harrison. My Lord, we pray we may have a List of their Names.

L. C. J. If you desire it, you may have it: but it will be no Advantage, for you will hear them named, and you may write them down as they come in.

Mr. Godfrey. We desire a List; for you told us, the King's Council had examined them, and knew who they were.

L. C. J. I'll tell you, the Court is to have their Names indorsed, for they don't bring Witnesses in hugger-mugger, and I suppose they are indorsed here.

L. C. J. North. It is want of Experience that makes you ask this; you are told, they are indorsed here.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir Samuel Barnardiston, you must have the Indictment itself out with you, and all their Names written upon the back of that Indictment; but that you should desire to have the Names of them in a Roll beforehand, I do not know, if there be any Reason that you can assign for it.

Foreman. One Thing more I have to say, That we may see the Warrant by which the Earl of Shaftesbury was committed, for there are some other Questions depend upon it.

L. C. J. That we cannot do, for the Lieutenant of the Tower hath that Warrant, which he keeps for his Indemnity; we cannot demand it from him upon any Terms: Any Thing that you do desire of us, let us know; what is reasonable, and within our Power, we will grant; and for other desires of your's, we tell the Reason why we cannot grant them.

Mr. Papillon. My Lord, if your Lordship pleases, I will only acquaint your Lordship, that the Gentlemen of the Jury do seem to be of Opinion, that your Lordship gives them leave to examine the Witnesses; and the Jury, because they would not put the Court to too much Trouble, do desire, that the Witnesses should come one after another, and make their Information, and then the Jury would withdraw, to consider what proper Questions to ask them, and come down again.

L. C. J. You shall do so, Gentlemen. Look you, we did, at the Request of the last Jury, use the same Method; after they had heard the Witnesses what they gave in Evidence, they came and desired leave to ask them some Questions, which we granted, and they were all called one by one, and they did examine them; you shall do so, Gentlemen.

Mr. Att. Gen. I was informed this Morning there were several Questions to be asked of several Witnesses to direct the Grand-Jury how to demean themselves.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, the Request is reasonable enough.

Mr. Harrison. We desire they may be examined one by one.

L. C. J. North. I suppose you don't stand upon it for these Witnesses, they are Clerks of the Council, that only prove a Paper which it seems was found in the Earl of Shaftesbury's House: If you will, they may go out, and be called in again.

Harrison. We humbly beg it.

Mr. Godfrey. I was Foreman of the Jury at Fitz-Harris's Trial, and it was complained he had hard Measure from some Irish Witnesses, and that it was severe that they should be examined in Troops: It hath troubled me since that I did not put them out and examine them a-part.

L. C. J. Look ye, Gentlemen, you that are Witnesses for the King, you must go all out, and come in as you are called, one by one.

[Which done, William Blathwait, Esq; was produced, and a Paper delivered in.]

Mr. Saunders to Mr. Blathwait. I pray, Sir, give an Account how you came by that Paper?

W. Blathwait. This Paper, Gentlemen, was put into my Custody by Mr. Gwyn, Clerk of the Council, who seized it among others in my Lord Shaftesbury's House: He gave me the Key of the Room where they were kept, and it hath been altogether in my Custody, except for a short Time that it was delivered to Mr. Secretary Jenkins, by whom it was re-delivered to me. Mr. Gwyn having seized Papers at my Lord Shaftesbury's House brought them to the Council-Office, and put them into one of the Rooms, and locked the Door, and delivered the Key to me. When I was ordered by the Committee of Examinations, I fetched up the Trunks and Papers, and brought them into the Council Chamber, and the Trunks were opened in the Presence of some of the Lords of the Council, and in the Presence of Mr. Wilson, who was appointed to attend there on the behalf of my Lord Shaftesbury, and he was always present when the Papers were taken out of the Trunks and Bags: This was one Paper, and was taken out upon the 6th of July in the Presence of Mr. Wilson, who took particular Notice of this Paper, as may appear by his own Hand. The Trunk was sealed, it was a great Trunk, and it was opened in the Presence of Mr. Samuel Wilson and Mr. Starkey, who were both appointed by my Lord of Shaftesbury.

L. C. J. Was this Paper found in one of those Trunks or Boxes that was delivered to you by Mr. Gwyn?

Mr. Blathwait. This Paper was taken out of a Velvet-Bag which Mr. Gwyn had put into the great Trunk, which Trunk was sealed and opened in the Presence of Mr. Wilson and Mr. Starkey.

Sir Fr. Withens. Did you find that Paper in the Trunk?

Mr. Blathwait. I took this and others out of the Velvet Bag, which was in the great Trunk.

L. C. J. Call Mr. Gwyn to give an Account where he found these Papers. Look you, Gentlemen of the Jury, you hear what his Evidence is, would you ask him any Thing while he is here.

[Then Mr. Gwyn coming in.]

L. C. J. Where had you the Trunk you delivered to Mr. Blathwait?

Gwyn. My Lord, on the second of July, by a Warrant from the Secretary, I was commanded to go to my Lord Shaftesbury's House to search his Papers, I did there meet with a great many Papers, and I took a Note how I had parted them, and into what Parcels I had put the Papers; there were several Sorts of them in a great Hair Trunk, and there was a Velvet Bag in which I put some Papers that were loose in my Lord's Closet above Stairs. My Lord Shaftesbury as soon as I came, gave me the Keys, and told me where his Closets were, and said he would seal them up with his own Seal: I staid for it, but he sent me word by a Gentleman that I might put my own Seal if I pleased: I did put my Seal upon the Trunk, but afterwards being sent another Way, I delivered it to this Gentleman Mr. Blathwait: Whether any of the Papers were taken out afterwards I cannot tell.

L. C. J. Mr. Gwyn, that your Evidence may be the better understood, tell me; were all the Papers that were in that Velvet Bag in my Lord Shaftesbury's Closet?

Mr. Gwyn. In my Lord Shaftesbury's Closet above Stairs.

L. C. J. This you swear; when you delivered it to Mr. Blathwait, all the Papers were in that Bag; was there nothing in that Bag, but what you took in my Lord Shaftesbury's Closet?

Mr. Gwyn. Nothing, my Lord.

L. C. J. Look you, Gentlemen, you do observe that this Paper was put into the Bag by Mr. Gwyn, and Mr. Blathwait swears he found it in the Bag, and delivered it to Mr. Secretary Jenkins; therefore if you please Mr. Secretary Jenkins, you shall be sworn whether that Paper was delivered to you by Mr. Blathwait, because we would clear it as we go, whether that be the Paper was delivered to Mr. Secretary Jenkins by Mr. Blathwait: I pray, Sir, was that the Paper that Mr. Blathwait did deliver into your Hands?

Mr. Sec. Jenkins. My Lord, this is the Paper, this Paper was delivered into my Hands by Mr. Blathwait in the Council Chamber. I cannot say that this Numerical Paper was taken out of the Velvet Bag; but there were a great many Papers taken out of it, and I having the Honour to be at the Examination of the Papers; this was ordered to be put (and was put) into my Hands, with nine Papers more.

L. C. J. Was it out of your Hands?

Mr. Sec. Jenkins. It was out of my Hands; for upon Monday last I took out the nine Papers intrusted with me, and this tenth out of my Desk, and caused my Servant to mark them by Numbers. Then I sealed up these Papers and sent them to Mr. Graham. Mr. Graham brought them back again to me without any Alteration whatsoever; then I put this tenth Paper into the Hands of Mr. Blathwait again. All the while it was in my Hands, it was under Lock and Key, and none of my Servants saw it, but the Time it was numbered; and no Manner of Alteration was made in this, or any other of the nine Papers.

L. C. J. Now it appears this was the Paper taken in my Lord Shaftesbury's Closet.

Then this Paper was read as followeth.

WE the Knights, &c. finding to the Grief of our Hearts, the Popish Priests and Jesuits, with the Papists and their Adherents and Abettors have for several Years last past pursued a most pernicious and hellish Plot, to root out the true Protestant Religion as a pestilent Herefy, to take away the Life of our gracious King, to subvert our Laws and Liberties, and to set up arbitrary Power and Popery.

And it being notorious that they have been highly encouraged by the Countenance and Protection given and procured for them by J. D. of Y. and by their Expectations of his succeeding to the Crown, and that through crafty Popish Councils his Designs have so far prevailed, that he hath created many and great Dependents upon him by his bestowing Offices and Preferments both in Church and State.

It appearing also to us, that by his Influence mercenary Forces have been levied and kept on foot for his secret Designs contrary to our Laws; the Officers thereof having been named and appointed by him, to the apparent Hazard of his Majesty's Person, our Religion and Government, and the Danger had not been timely foreseen by several Parliaments, and part of those Forces with great Difficulty, caused by them to be disbanded at the Kingdom's great Expence: And it being evident, that notwithstanding all the continual Endeavours of the Parliament to deliver his Majesty from the Councils, and out of the Power of the said D. yet his Interest in the Ministry of State and others have been so prevalent, that Parliaments have been unreasonably prorogued and dissolved when they have been in hot pursuit of the popish Conspiracy, and ill Ministers of State their Assistants.

And that the said D. in order to reduce all into his own Power hath procured the Garrisons, the Army and Ammunition, and all the Power of the Seas and Soldiery, and Lands belonging to these three Kingdoms to be put into the Hands of his Party and their Adherents, even in Opposition to the Advice and Order of the last Parliament.

And as we considering with heavy Hearts how greatly the Strength, Reputation, and Treasure of the Kingdom both at Sea and Land is waisted and consumed, and lost by the intricate expensive management of these wicked destructive Designs; and finding the same Counsels after exemplary Justice upon some of the Conspirators, to be still pursued with the utmost devilish Malice, and Desire of Revenge; whereby his Majesty is in continual Hazard of being murdered to make way for the said D.'s Advancement to the Crown, and the whole Kingdom in such Case is destitute of all Security of their Religion, Laws, Estates and Liberty, sad Experience in the Case, Queen Mary having proved the wisest Laws to be of little Force to keep out Popery and Tyranny under a Popish Prince.

We have therefore endeavoured, in a parliamentary Way, by a Bill for the Purpose, to bar and exclude the said Duke from the Succession to the Crown, and to banish him for ever out of these Kingdoms of England and Ireland. But the first Means of the King and Kingdom's Safety being utterly rejected, and we left almost in Despair of obtaining any real and effectual Security, and knowing ourselves to be intrusted to advise and act for the Preservation of his Majesty and the Kingdom, and being persuaded in our Consciences that the Dangers aforesaid are so eminent and pressing, that there ought to be no Delay of the best Means that are in our Power to secure the Kingdom against them, We have thought fit to propose to all true Protestants an Union amongst themselves, by solemn and sacred Promise of mutual Defence and Assistance in the Preservation of the true Protestant Religion, his Majesty's Person and Royal State, and our Laws, Liberties, and Properties, and we hold it our bounden Duty to join-ourselves for the same Intent in a Declaration of our united Affections and Resolutions in the Form ensuing.

I A. B. do in the Presence of God solemnly promise, vow, and protest to maintain and defend to the utmost of my Power, with my Person and Estate, the true Protestant Religion, against Popery and all Popish Superstition, Idolatry, or Innovation, and all those who do or shall endeavour to spread or advance it within this Kingdom.

I will also, as far as in me lies, maintain and defend his Majesty's Royal Person and Estate; as also the Power and Privilege of Parliaments, the lawful Rights and Liberties of the Subject against all Inroachments and Usurpation of arbitrary Power whatsoever, and endeavour entirely to disband all such mercenary Forces as we have Reason to believe were raised to advance it, and are still kept up in and about the City of London, to the great Amazement and Terror of all the good People of the Land.

Moreover J. D. of Y. having publicly professed and owned the Popish Religion, and notoriously given Life and Birth to the damnable hellish Plots of the Papists against his Majesty's Person, the Protestant Religion, and the Government of this Kingdom; I will never consent that the said J. D. of Y. or any other, who is or hath been a Papist or any ways adhered to the Papists in their wicked Designs, be admitted to the Succession of the Crown of England; but by all lawful Means, and by Force of Arms, if need to require, according to my Abilities, will oppose him, and endeavour to subdue, expel, and destroy him if he come into England, or the Dominions thereof, and seek by Force to set up his pretended Title, and all such as shall adhere unto him, or raise any War, Tumult or Sedition for him, or by his Command, as publick Enemies of our Laws, Religion and Country.

To this End we and every one of us whose Hands are here underwritten, do most willingly bind ourselves and every one of us unto the other jointly and severally, in the Bond of one firm and loyal Society or Association, and do promise and vow before God, that with our joint and particular Forces we will oppose and pursue unto Destruction all such as upon any Title whatsoever shall oppose the just and righteous Ends of this Association, and maintain, protect, and defend all such as shall enter into it in the just Performance of the true Intent and Meaning of it. And lest this just and pious Work should be any Ways obstructed or hindered for want of Discipline and Conduct, or any evil-minded Persons under Pretence of raising Forces for the Service of this Association, should attempt or commit Disorders; we will follow such Orders as we shall from Time to Time receive from this present Parliament, whilst it shall be sitting, or the major Part of the Members of both Houses subscribing this Association, when it shall be prorogued or dissolved; and obey such Officers as shall by them be set over us in the several Counties, Cities, and Boroughs until the next Meeting of this or another Parliament; and will then shew the same Obedience and Submission unto it, and those who shall be of it.

Neither will we for any Respect of Persons or Causes, or for Fear, or Reward, separate ourselves from this Association, or fail in the Prosecution thereof during our Lives, upon Pain of being by the rest of us prosecuted, and suppressed as perjured Persons, and publick Enemies to God, the King, and our Native Country.

To which Pains and Punishments we do voluntarily submit ourselves, and every one of us without benefit of any Colour or Pretence to excuse us.

In Witness of all which Premises to be inviolably kept, we do to this Writing put our Hands and Seals, and shall be most ready to accept and admit any other hereafter into this Society and Association.

Sir Fran. Withens. This Paper is very plausibly penned in the beginning, and goes a great way so, but in the last Clause but one, there they come to perfect levying War; for they do positively say, they will obey such Officers as either the Parliament or the major Part of them, or after the Parliament is dissolved, the major Part of those that shall subscribe this Paper shall appoint; they will obey all such Officers.

Foreman. Pray, what Date is this Paper of?

Sir Fran. Withens. It was after the Bill for the Exclusion of the Duke of York, for it says, that way failing, they would do it by Force.

Foreman. There is no Hand to it at all?

Sir Fran. Withens. No, none at all. One thing I had forgot, that they would join to destroy the mercenary Forces about London, which is downright levying of War against the King and his Guards.

Vol. III.

Mr. Saunders. The Design of it is pretended to oppose Popery and arbitrary Power, and destroy the Papists; but that doth not seem so much in it's self: But when you have heard the Evidence you will hear who were the Papists that were to be destroyed by this Army.

John Booth.

Jury. He has stood in the Face of the Court all this while.

L. C. J. When did Mr. Booth come down?

Jury. He was here before we went up, my Lord, and hath been here ever since.

L. C. J. Look ye, Gentlemen, they tell you he was carried away, and came down but now.

Mr. Booth. No, my Lord, I came down but now.

Mr. Shepherd. My Lord, we desire a List of their Names, that we might know who is here, and who is not.

Mr. Godfrey. This Man hath been here all this while, and all the others may be here for aught that I know.

Sir Fran. Withens. In the first Place give an Account what Discourse you have had with my Lord Shaftesbury.

L. C. J. Speak out, that the Jury may hear you.

Mr. Booth. I will speak as loud as I can. In the Month of January, about the middle of January last, I was introduced into my Lord Shaftesbury's Acquaintance by one Captain Henry Wilkinson. I say, I was introduced into my Lord Shaftesbury's Acquaintance by one Captain Henry Wilkinson. This Captain Wilkinson is a Yorkshire Gentleman, he has known me above twenty Years, and he and I have had familiar Conversation a long while; so waiting upon my Lord Shaftesbury, our first Business that we went about was, Captain Wilkinson did pretend to receive a Commission from my Lord Shaftesbury, and some others of the Lords Proprietors of the Palatinate of Carolina to be their Deputy Governor; and he told me the Prospect of that Journey was like to be very hopeful, and that his Interest was good, and that he could procure me a Commission, and such a Number of Acres for Quality and Quantity as I did desire: And he said he did not design to go over immediately in his own Person, but he would send his eldest Son, and his youngest Son, and if he went, he would return again as Occasion should serve. I consented to him in all this, and we discoursed it divers times together, and we went to my Lord Shaftesbury on purpose to receive Commissions in order to this Purpose. The first time I went there was the Earl of Craven, Sir Peter Colleton, and one Archdell a Quaker; I thought him a Quaker because he kept his Hat on, when the rest of the Lords stood bare in Civility to him. We discoursed the Thing about Carolina. After this, and before, Captain Wilkinson and I had several Discourses about the Juncture of Affairs in these Times, though I knew him to be an old Royalist, and one that served his Majesty and his late Father very much in the Wars; yet being under great Disappointments of Preferments at Court, and missing the Reward he expected from the King, his Heart was turned another Way, and he had repented himself of those Services he had done for the King, and was become a Man of another Opinion; and there was some Inducements upon me that I was inclined to the same Opinion: So he expressed himself to my Lord, and so from one Thing to another we went on in Discourse, and related the several Parliaments, and the proroguing them, and the Disappointments of the People, and the Fear of Popery and arbitrary Power: And this was not done once, nor twice, nor ten times; for I cannot enumerate them, for we kept a continual Club, and conversed together familiarly near three quarters of a Year. After this first Acquaintance with my Lord Shaftesbury at his House, I did frequently go with Captain Wilkinson, and between Christmas and March four or five times: And I observed this, that when we came to my Lord Shaftesbury's they were cautious in our Accession: In the first Place it was to be known by some of the Servants, who he was in Company with: And in the second Place the Names were sent up, who they were that were to speak with him: Sometimes we had an Alehouse at the Bell in the same Street: (I forget the Name of the Street) we staid at the Alehouse till we had a fit Time, Captain Wilkinson had Acquaintance with his Porter and his Gentleman of his Chamber: And so we often discoursed. And from the Concerns of Carolina we fell to Matters more publick concerning the State. I remember he would use to inveigh sharply against the Times, and look upon himself as not so valued nor so respected, nor in those Places and Dignities as he expected he should be, and seemed to be discontented, and he did fear that Popery would be introduced, and arbitrary Power: And when Parliament-men were to be elected, there came every Week News, bringing Particulars of such Boroughs and Counties as had made particular Elections for Members for Parliament; whether Knights, Citizens, or Burgesses: And he would often consider that Parliament that was to sit at Oxford, what they were as to their Inclinations and Dispositions: And he said, they would insist upon the same Things the other Parliaments before had done. Particularly he said the Parliament would never grant the King any Assistance of Money, nor satisfy him in those things that he desired, unless he gave the People first Satisfaction in those Things that they insisted on before, and he believed would insist upon after; and particularly the Bill of excluding the Duke of York from the Crown: Another was the abolishing the Statute of the 25th of Elizabeth: And the third was giving his Royal Assent for the Passing a new Bill, whereby all Dissenting Protestants, Nonconformists, or what you will term them, should be freed from those Penalties and Ecclesiastick Punishments that they are subject to by the present established Law: And he said, if these and some other wholesome Laws and Bills were passed by the Royal Assent of the King, he believed that when the People had received this Security and Satisfaction, that they would be very willing to grant the King such Accommodations of Money by Way of Assentment, or so, as his necessary Occasions should also require: But without this he believed, there would be a Breach between the King and the Parliament, and that they had ordered the Parliament should meet at Oxford, and not at this Metropolis at London, where they might go on without Fear of being overawed: That this was an Intention to awe the Parliament. But he said, himself and divers noble Lords, and Members of the House of Commons had considered themselves and their own Safety, and that they judged it dangerous to go to Oxford, where they were sure the Guards, the Retinue of the Court, and the Assistance of the Scholars (which usually incline to the Crown) might so over-awe the Parliament, that they might not so freely proceed in a Way for the publick Good as they intended; and therefore he and others had considered with themselves, that it were fit for them to have Guards, and send them thither; and to this Purpose he had established a Matter of fifty Men, Persons of Quality, that he believed would have Men along with them; and he intrusted Captain Henry Wilkinson with the Command of these Men, and they were to come to Oxford at such a Time, and if there were any Breach between the King and the Parliament, or any Violence offered to any of these Members by the Guards, or Retinue of the Court, that then these Men, with others that other Lords had provided, should repel his Force, by greater Force, and should purge the Guards of all the Papists and Tories, and such as were against the Protestant Religion, and the established Laws of the Land; and likewise these Men should be ready to assist himself, and those other Persons in his Confederacy, to purge from the King those evil Counsellors which were about him; particularly there were named, the Earl of Worcester, my Lord Clarendon, my Lord Halifax, my Lord Feversham, and Mr. Hyde, now Lord Viscount Hyde: And these Persons were looked upon to be dangerous, and gave the King evil Advice, and made him continue so very deaf to what the Parliament urged him to; and therefore they said they would not only purge the Guards, and repel that Force by a greater Force, but also take those Lords by Violence from the King, and bring the King to London, to the chief Metropolitan City, where those Things should be established, which they designed for their Safety in these two Respects, for the preserving the Protestant Religion, and likewise for the keeping and defending us safe from arbitrary Power and Government. Upon this Captain Wilkinson did desire me that I would be one of those under his Command: This I did consent to. And he requested me further, that I would provide for myself Horse and Arms; and likewise Arms for my Man, and he would provide me a Horse for my Man. I did accordingly provide Arms for myself, and a good Stone-Horse for myself, and Arms for my Man before the Parliament did sit at Oxford. I think the 23d of March, I do not punctually remember the Day, and when the Parliament was set, we enquired and heard how things went on, and found that it was as my Lord Shaftesbury had predicted, that the Parliament did insist upon those very Things that he told they would do, but never believed or imagined they would be so soon dissolved. Upon Thursday before the Parliament was dissolved, Captain Wilkinson told me, he expected that very Week to have a Summons to go up to Oxford with those Men that were lifted with him; but then Saturday's News came of the Dissolution of the Parliament, and therefore it took no further Effect. The whole Matter, the main Design was this, That my Lord Shaftesbury should have so many Men to attend him there for the Security of his Person, and likewise to repel the Force of the King's Guards, or any other Persons that followed the King; and also to remove from him those five Lords, and bring the King back to London, to establish those Laws that I have mentioned.

Sir Fra. Withens. Pray what Time did you discover this?

Mr. Booth. About six Weeks ago.

Sir Fra. Withens. Had you any Discourse with the Earl of Shaftesbury after Captain Wilkinson spoke with you, or before the Sitting of the Parliament?

Mr. Booth. I said before, that the first Motion of these fifty Men that were to be my Lord Shaftesbury's Guard came from Captain Wilkinson; but after this, when I went with Captain Wilkinson to my Lord Shaftesbury, the same Thing was discoursed there. The last Time I was with my Lord Shaftesbury, was about a Week before he went to Oxford, about ten Days before the Parliament sat, or a Week, and then I heard the same Discourse from my Lord Shaftesbury's own Mouth.

Sir Fra. Withens. Had you any other Discourse with my Lord Shaftesbury?

Mr. Booth. I say, I made three or four Visits between Christmas and March, and we had discourse every Time particularly about the King's Person, and if the King did refuse these Motions, that then these Men were to be taken from him, and he repelled with a greater Force, and be brought to it by Force.

Sir Fra. Withens. Did you ever make any Solicitation to any to make this Discovery?

Mr. Booth. Thus far I did, and I will tell you the whole Matter in that Point; there was one Walter Banes, an Acquaintance of mine, and I found that he had, at Wilkinson's Request, engaged himself in some Business that one Brownrig, an Attorney in Yorkshire, had writ to him about, concerning some Men that were to swear against my Lord Shaftesbury. I asked Mr. Banes what Men these were? He said, he thought they were Irishmen. I said, I don't know what Conversation in that Nature my Lord Shaftesbury might have with Irishmen, for I know none of them; but I am satisfied that he had Conversation tending to these Ends that you speak of with some Englishmen, and that I know. This Mr. Banes did take particular Notice of, and he was very frequently upon me to tell him what the Matter was, and I gave him some Intimation of it. Truly 'twas very much upon my Spirit, and I could not tell whether I was able to carry it through or not, or had better to let it alone as it was in Silence: But discoursing still more with him, and at the Result of that Discourse we had by Degrees, I did give him some Intimation of it. And after that, upon second Thoughts, I took a Resolution to discover it: And when I did discover it, I do here in the Presence of God declare, that no Mortal did know any thing of what I had to say, in Reference to the King; nor did I make any more Applications in the World, but took Pen, Ink, and Paper, and writ it down, and sealed it under a Cover, and sent it to the Council.

Sir Fra. Withens. Gentlemen of the Jury, would you ask him any Questions?

Mr. Papillon. The Jury told your Lordship before, that after all had had been examined they would consider what Questions.

L. C. J. Where would you have these Witnesses that have been examined to stand?

Mr. Papillon. We leave to the Sheriffs to appoint a Place for them.

L. C. J. To keep them a-part 'tis utterly impossible, for we must have as many Rooms then as there are Witnesses.

Jury. Let one Man keep with them.

L. C. J. Empty that Place where they were the last Time, and let them stand there.

[Edward Turberville.]

Sir Fra. Withens. Mr. Turberville, have you had any Discourse with my Lord Shaftesbury?

Turberville. Yes, several Times. In February last, I am not positive in the Time, but about the Beginning of the Month, I waited upon my Lord Shaftesbury about some Moneys. I waited upon him to have his Advice how I might come by it, and to gain my Lord Shaftesbury's Letter in my Behalf to the President of the Council to stand my Friend, and he said, there was little Good to be had from the King, as long as his Guards were about him; for, were it not for his Guards, we would quickly go down to Whitehall, and obtain what Terms we thought fit. Said I, my Lord, I suppose his Guards can't defend him from the whole Kingdom. His Lordship said, that the Rabble were all of that Side, especially the People about Wapping, and Aldersgate-Street; and the rich Men of the City would vote for Elections; but they could not expect they should stand by them in Case there should be any Disturbance, for they valued their Riches more than their Cause. And at Oxford I heard my Lord say again, he wondered the People of England should stickle so much about Religion, and that if he were to choose a Religion, he would have one that should comply with what was apt to carry on their Cause.

Mr. Saunders. Had you any other Discourse with him at any other Time?

Mr. Turberville. I told you all that is material that I can say to it.

[John Smith.]

Mr. Smith. My Lord, I only beg a Word or two from your Lordship, of some Reflections cast upon me.

L. C. J. Go to your Evidence.

Mr. Smith. My Lord, this is something to my Evidence.

L. C. J. You may take another Time for that.

Mr. Smith. My Lord, it hath been reported about in Coffee-Houses and Taverns, that I should swear there was a general Design against his Majesty; and that I swore it before the King and Secretary of State; and that I also swore it at the Trial of Mr. Colledge and Mr. Rowse: I take it upon my Oath I never swore any such Thing, neither can I swear there was a general Design by the City, or the Parliament against the King.

L. C. J. Speak what Discourse you have had with my Lord Shaftesbury.

Mr. Smith. My Lord, I suppose it is past all Doubt, that I have been very often with my Lord Shaftesbury; and I have often in his Discourse observed, that he spake very irreverently and slightly of the King; sometimes saying he was a weak Man, and sometimes saying he was an inconstant Man; a Man of no firm or settled Resolution; and a Man that was easily led by the Nose, as his Father was before him, by a Popish Queen, which was the Ruin of his Father: This was both in publick and in private. I have also observed sometimes in his Discourse, something that he mentioned of the Earl of Essex; and that the King should declare, that the Earl of Shaftesbury was not satisfied to be an ill Man himself, but got over the Earl of Essex too: This the Earl of Shaftesbury declared publicly in his own House. Another Story was of the Rebellion of Scotland, that the King should say, that the Earl of Shaftesbury was the chief Promoter of that Rebellion; and when this was told my Lord Shaftesbury, that he should send Word back again to the King, "I am glad (says he) that the King sees not his own Danger, nor what he runs himself into: And pray tell him, that, if I were to raise a Rebellion, I could raise an otherguess Rebellion than the Rebellion was in Scotland." But now, as to the particular Points I am to charge him with: I remember, my Lord, that my Lord Shaftesbury sent for me one Time, and that by one Manly; sometimes they call him Major Manly, sometimes Captain Manly; and this Man found me at Mr. Bethel's Club in Newgate-Street, at the Queen's-Arms; and there he told me my Lord Shaftesbury would speak with me that Night. I immediately left the Club, and went to my Lord Shaftesbury's; and I was introduced into the Dining-Room, where there were two Gentlemen in Discourse with my Lord; and as soon as he saw me, he asked me how I did: I told him I was very well, and came in Obedience to his Lordship's Command to wait upon him; for Major Manly told me your Lordship had a Mind to speak with me: He said he had. Soon afterward, these two Gentlemen went away. Upon this my Lord turns about, Mr. Smith, said he, Mr. Hetherington was with me this Morning, and told me he was afraid that the Irish Witnesses would go over to the Court Party, and retract what they had said formerly. My Lord, says I, I know no Person can better with more Ease hinder than your Lordship, by procuring some small Allowance for them; for they complain much of Poverty. Says he, Matthew Hetherington has the Charge of them, and hath a special Care of them, and I believe they don't want. My Lord, says I, I know nothing of that he knows what Provision he hath made for them. This is the Thing said my Lord, that I would have you do; they stand in great Awe of you, and you must persuade them from going nigh that Rogue Fitz-Gerald, that great Villain, that is pampered up, and maintained by the King and the Court-Party, to stifle the Plot in Ireland. My Lord, says I, do you think the King would be at such vast Charges for to bring over Witnesses, and at last maintain Men to stifle this Plot, for that is the Way to stifle the Plot in England too, as well as that? Says he, what is this frequent Dissolutions and Prorogations of Parliament for, but to stifle the Plot, and to hinder the Lords in the Tower to come to a Trial? This is a strange Thing, my Lord, said I, when he gave Dr. Oates, Mr. Bedloe, and Mr. Dugdale such large Allowances to prosecute this Plot. Says my Lord, that nothing, that may hold for a Year or two, he may take it off when he will; but the chief Means are put by, whereby we might find out the Design of this Plot; and if Mr. Dugdale and Dr. Oates be knocked on the Head, then where is this Plot? then there will come an Act of Oblivion for them, and all things will be well as they were before. My Lord, said I, this is very strange to me. I can give you Instance of it, says he, when I was in the Tower, I told some I saw Popery coming in, and that it was hard prevent it. I am sorry to hear it, said I, but what would you have me do with these Irish Witnesses? Says he, persuade them not to go near Whitehall; nor this Fitz-gerald. And, said he, one Thing more I would have you mind, Mr. Smith, that if the King were not as well satisfied with the coming in of Popery as ever the Duke of York was, do you think the Duke of York would be so much concerned in the bring-in of Popery as he is? I am sorry for it, my Lord, if it be so. After this I parted with my Lord Shaftesbury, with full Instructions from him to those Irish Witnesses. I met Mr. Hetherington the next Morning, and I told him that I was with my Lord Shaftesbury: Says he, I know your Business, and would have you meet us at the Sun Tavern in the Afternoon. My Lord, I went according the Time appointed, and met him at the Sun Tavern between six, or seven, or eight of the Clock, as near as I can remember. When I came to them I began to open those great and horrid Crimes that I heard Mr. Fitz-gerald accused of, that he was a Man came to discover a Plot, and disowned it here, and retracted all he had said. I told them what a Crime this was. In short, my Lord, they promised never to go near the Man. I parted that Night and came to my Lodging, and the next Morning Mr. Hetherington and one Mr. Bernard Dennis came to my Lodging and told me, that this Bernard Dennis was ready to give in Information against Fitz-gerald, that he had tampered with him to forswear all he had sworn before, I went presently with Mr. Hetherington and Mr. Dennis to my Lord Mayor, who was then Sir Patience Ward; after we had told the Business to Sir Patience Ward, Sir Patience asked this Dennis if there were any other Persons present. Yes, says he, there was. Says Sir Patience, you are upon your Oath, if you know not the Nature of an Oath, I will tell you. The Information was drawn up; the Copy of this Information I carried to my Lord Shaftesbury and shewed it him, he read it, and was very well pleased with it, and said, Mr. Smith, don't you see the Villiany of that Man and that factious Party, and that the King runs the same Steps as his Father did before him, how can any Thing of this Nature be done, without the King and the Court pampered him up? My Lord, said I, I think now the Thing is clear. Ay, says he, these are the very same Steps that his Father followed when he was led by his Popish Queen, and the poor Man doth not see his Danger. I parted from my Lord, and came and gave an Account of this very Discourse to the Club in Newgate-street, and they were glad of it, and I told what my Lord Shaftesbury said, that the King would never be quiet till he came to his Father's End, he followed the same Steps. Another Thing that I have observed particularly before the Parliament went to Oxford; I went to see him, and we fell into some Discourse, and my Lord said there was great Preparations made, and a great many gathered together upon the Road between London and Oxford. My Lord, said I, what is the meaning of that? Any Body may see, says he, that is only to terrify the Parliament to comply with the King's Desire, which I am sure the Parliament never will, for we are as resolute now as ever; and more resolute, for we see clearly what the King aims at, and that is to bring in Popery: Which I told several Years ago, and when I was last in the Tower; but, says he, we have this Advantage of him, if he offer any Violence to us, (for we expect it) that we have the Nation for us, and we may lawfully oppose him, and he will meet with a very strong Opposition; for all that come out of the Country, shall be well horsed and well armed, and so we shall be all; and here is the City which now has a Question in Debate among them, whether they shall bear the Charge of their own Members or no, but they are willing to do it, and send so many Men to wait on them, and if we oppose the King, as we may do, for it hath been done in former Times, the whole Nation is to stand by us, and as I said when I was in the Tower, I would die, before I would ever bring in Popery or any Thing of that Nature.

Jury. Repeat that again.

Smith. He said, that the King, if he offered any Violence at Oxford to the Parliament, he would meet with a strong Opposition, and that the Gentlemen that came out of the Country were well provided with Horse, Arms, and Men, to oppose him, and that they might lawfully do it if the King offered any Violence to them whilst they sat, and that the Nation stood by them, and that they did represent the Nation, and that for his Part he and all his Friends would do it to the utmost of their Power, and, as old as he was, he would be one that would oppose it to his Power. My Lord, said I, we can expect nothing but Confusion from this Parliament, in this Nature, for then we shall be involved in another Civil War, nothing else can put an end to our Miseries, or make this Nation a settled Nation, but a Civil War. Then my Lord, said I, by this Means we shall make an end of Monarchy, or else enslave the Nation to Popery for ever. No doubt of one, says he, but we are sure of one, for the Nation is of our Side, and the City you know how they are, and where-ever they strike, I am sure the Nation will, and this I'll stand and die by. This is the Substance of what I have to say against my Lord Shaftesbury, and upon the Oath I have taken, I am sure I have not added a Word. One Word more I have to say, 'tis reported I have been hired and suborned, I do admire why this City of London, where there are as worthy Men, and as great Lovers of the King and Government as any in the World, should say any such Thing; I was never suborned by them, nor never took a Farthing of their Money, nor never took a Farthing of the King in my Life.

L. C. J. Who supposes it?

Mr. Smith. 'Tis in Print, my Lord, 'twas in the Book that came out last Night; it is supposed, my Lord, for it is in print.

L. C. J. I had reason to expect that there was no such Objection.

Brian Haines.

Mr. Saunders. Give your Knowledge of what Discourse you have heard concerning my Lord Shaftesbury.

Mr. Haines. Sir, I have heard him vilify the King very often, and he told me about the Narrative that I made about Sir Edmundbury Godfrey's Death, Mr. Ivy and I went to him one Day and he spoke to me of it, and I desired him not to expose my Person to the King's Anger, for I was sure he would never grant a Pardon to any Man that impeached the Earl of Danby. Says he, do not fear, if he doth not grant you a Pardon, he makes himself the Author of the Plot; and, says he, the Earl of Effingham, my Lord Maxfield and I, we do all resolve, if you put it in Writing, we will go to the King, and beg a Pardon of his Majesty for you, and if he doth not grant it, we will raise the whole Kingdom against him; for, says he, he must not expect to live peaceably in his Throne, if he doth not grant it. For he makes himself Author of the Plot.

My Lord, said I, he hath dissolved so many Parliaments for the sake of the Earl of Danby, and prorogued so many Parliaments, therefore he will never grant me this Pardon. Says he, do not fear, 'tis the best Pretence we can have in the World, and if you will but put it in Writing, and let me read it, that I may give my Opinion of it, the Work is done; and if he doth not do it, we are prepared to raise Arms against him. I was with him another Time after I made this Narrative, and he told me the two Mr. Godfreys were with the King at Windor, and begged a Pardon of his Majesty for me, but the King would not grant it, but if he be an honest Man, let him lie at my Mercy, let him come in and declare what he knows. Said I, I would not have your Lordship expose my Cause in these Days. This is the best Time for it in the World, says he, if he doth not do it, he can't expect to be long King of England. Pray, my Lord, said I, what shall I do in the mean Time? I will go beyond Sea, said I. No, says he, don't leave the Kingdom, he dares as well be hanged as meddle with you. I desired him a second Time not to expose me to the King's Fury, and I prayed him to help me to a little Money to go beyond Sea, for I was sure I could not be safe in England. Says he, have a Care of yourself; but, says he, he dares as well be hanged as meddle with you. Then I was in close Conference with him one Day, and I gave him so exact an Account of all Transactions from King Charles the First's Reign, the Commencement or coming to the Crown, to this very Day, that he was mightily satisfied; finding by me that I was a Traveller, he was mightily pleased, and free with me. Pray, my Lord, what Model do you take, or intend to do? Says he, Do you not think but there are Families in England that have as great Pretences to the Crown as the King? Says he, there is the Duke of Bucks, in the Right of his Mother, she was descended from Edward, one of the Edwards, and in her Right he claims the Barony of Refs, he hath as great a Right to the Crown of England, as ever any Stuart of them all.

Jury. Speak that again.

Mr. Haines. I was in Conference with my Lord Shaftesbury one Day, and I gave him an exact Account of all Transactions, and I asked what they did intend to do with the Government, if they pulled the King down. Says he, do you think there are no Families in England, that have as much Pretence to the Crown as any of the Stuarts? I know none, my Lord. Says he, there is the Duke of Bucks, that is descended of the Family of the Plantagenets; he named some of the Edwards, and in her Right he should have the Barony of Refs, and in her Right he has as good a Title to the Crown of England as ever any Stuart had.

John Macnamarra sworn.

Sir Fr. Withens. Pray give an Account to the Jury of what Discourse you had with my Lord Shaftesbury.

John Macnamarra. My Lord, I was with my Lord Shaftesbury a little before he went to Oxford, before the Parliament sat there, and my Lord told me at that Time, that he would take Care, together with those that were with him at Oxford, for the Witnesses that were concerned in the Popish Plot.

Mr. Harrison. Speak out, pray, Sir.

John Macnamarra. My Lord told me he would take Care, with those that were with him, for the Witnesses that were concerned in the Popish Plot; after my Lord went to Oxford, I writ him a Letter, giving his Lordship to understand, that whereas his Lordship was pleased to promise, that he would take Care of the Witnesses, that he would be pleased to take Care of me, as well as the rest of the Witnesses; after my Lord came home from Oxford, I went to him, to see what was done. His Lordship was pleased to express himself and say that the King was popishly affected and did adhere to Popery, and that he took the same Methods that his Father before him took, which brought his Father's Head to the Block, and we will also bring his thither; and told me also, that he told some Persons of Quality that this would fall out five Years before; at the same Time my Lord told me, that there was a Collection of Money made, and that the Meeting was at the Sun Tavern, and that there came a Tory Lord in to hinder their Proceedings, but says he, we do remove to Ironmonger-Lane, and says he, you shall hear further in a Fortnight. I came to my Lord a Fortnight afterwards, and his Lordship was pleased to tell me, that there was Provision made for the Witnesses, and that it was in the Hand of one Mr. Rouse, that was Servant to Sir Thomas Player; there was one Mr. Ivy, and I think my Brother was by too, when his Lordship spoke these Words: He said that the King was a Faithless Man, that there was no Credit to be given to him, and that the Ducheſs of Mazarine was his Cabinet Council, who was the first of Womankind. This is all that I have to say, my Lord.

Sir Fr. Withens. Do you remember nothing at any other Time?

John Macnamarra. No.

Sir Fr. Withens. Did you hear any Thing about deposing the King?

John Macnamarra. Yes, he did at the same Time say, the King deserved to be deposed as much as ever King Richard the Second did.

Dennis Macnamarra.

Mr. Saunders. Tell these Gentlemen whether you have had any Discourse with the Earl of Shaftesbury.

Dennis Macnamarra. He said, my Lord, that the King was a Man that ought not to be believed, and there was no Belief in him, and that he ought to be deposed as well as King Richard the Second, and that the Ducheſs of Mazarine was one of his Cabinet Council, and that he did nothing but by her Advice.

Sir Fr. Withens. Begin again.

L. C. J. Raise your Voice a little, for the Jury don't hear you.

Dennis Macnamarra. That the King is a Man that ought not to be be-believed, that there was no Belief in him, and that he ought to be deposed as well as King Richard the Second, and that the Duchess of Mazarine was his Cabinet Council, and that he did nothing but by her Consent.

L. C. J. Who was with you at that Time?

Dennis Macnamarra. There was Mr. Ivy and my Brother at his own House.

L. C. J. When was this?

Dennis Macnamarra. 'Twas at the latter end of March or the beginning of April.

Sir Fra. Withens. You say Mr. Ivy was by at the same Time?

Dennis Macnamarra. Yes.

Sir Fra. Withens. Call Mr. Ivy.

Jury. What Place was it in?

Dennis Macnamarra. In his own House.

Edward Ivy sworn.

Mr. Ivy. My Lord, soon after the Parliament was dissolved at Oxford, I was at my Lord Shaftesbury's House, where he was speaking against the King, and said, that he was an unjust Man, and unfit to reign, and that he was a Papist in his Heart, and would introduce Popery.

Jury. Say that again.

Mr. Ivy. I tell you I was at my Lord Shaftesbury's House, where he was then speaking against the King, saying, that he was altogether unjust, and not fit to reign, and he wondered he did not take Example by his Father before him, and did really believe that he was a Papist in his Heart, and intended to introduce Popery. I was sometimes after with him, and I told him one Haines had told me he had something to discover about the Death of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, and several other Things, and my Lord desired to see him, and I brought Mr. Haines to his House, and he desired him that what he had to say he would put in Writing, and he should have a Pardon, and that if the King did deny it, as he dares not deny it, but if he does, we will rise upon him and force him.

Sir Fr. Withens. Had you any other Discourse at other Times?

Mr. Ivy. Yes, I had other Discourse, but not to this Purpose.

Sir Fr. Withens. Was you frequently with him?

Mr. Ivy. I was frequently with him; he desired at the Time I was with him to bid Colledge to come to him, and I went and came again to Haines with Instructions how to proceed, and I took his Examination of him, and carried it to my Lord, and he desired it might be explained what he meant by the tall black Man; and, says he, if he does mean the King, he must explain himself, and speak of the King, or of the Duke of York, or the rest; and if he does, we will take care of him as long as he lives; but unless he does, we will do nothing for him: And I was with him with my Lord Shaftesbury, and my Lord Shaftesbury did exclaim against the King.

Sir Fr. Withens. What Words did he speak?

Mr. Ivy. He said he was altogether an unjust Man, and not fit to reign, and that he believed he was a Papist in his Heart, and designed to introduce Popery, and therefore they designed to depose him, and set up another in his stead.

Sir Fr. Withens. Do you remember any Discourse of Richard the Second at that Time?

Mr. Ivy. No, Sir, I do not remember any thing of it.

Bernard Dennis sworn.

Sir Fra. Withens. Pray tell the Jury what Discourse you had with the Earl of Shaftesbury at any Time, and what it was.

B. Dennis. My Lord I came upon a Design to make clear the Plot in general, as far as I have travelled, as in Ireland, France, Spain, Maryland, Virginia and England, and upon that Account I was brought before a Justice of the Peace in Westminster, November last, this Time Twelvemonth, and examined before Justice Warcup, a Justice of the Peace, and from thence to the Committee of the House of Commons, of whom Colonel Birch (I believe he is here) was Chairman, and gave in my Evidence, and being called upon at the Trial of the Earl of Stafford, I was commended, as I suppose to the Earl of Shaftesbury, and upon the Account he sent me word of it, by William Hetherington, who was then very intimate with the Earl of Shaftesbury, to my Knowledge; and William Hetherington came to me several Times, and he precisely was my Maintainer at that Time, that is, to find me whatever I wanted, and provide me my Lodging, and carry me to some Place where Accommodation might be more better for me. Upon this Account one Time the Earl of Shaftesbury sent to me desiring that I would wait upon him at his own House. I came to him, and there in the Gallery of his own House, walking very slowly, he told me what I gave in of the Plot in general was very good and sufficient, but as to the Queen and the Duke of York, that I should speak more home and positive against them; at least, that I might be a Corroboration to others in what they swore against them. This was all at that present Time, that the Earl of Shaftesbury spake to me, and he desired me to go home to his Lodgings. With that I went home, and within a Month, it may be, or thereabouts, he sent for me again, by the same William Hetherington, and William Hetherington told me, that the Earl of Shaftesbury would speak with me. So I came and waited upon his Lordship at his own House, and says he, Mr. Dennis, I understand that you are a Clergyman. Yes, my Lord, said I. And, says he, I would advise you to take a black Gown, and I will prefer you to a Benefice, till such Time as this Business is over; and, says he, at the End of this Business I will not fail to prefer you to a better, and in the mean Time I would advise you to take a black Gown; and this was a little as I remember, after the Parliament was dissolved at Oxford; and he sent a Gentleman out of his own House along with me, to a Doctor of Divinity living hard by Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, Dr. Burnet by Name, as I remember, and the Gentleman acquainted the Doctor what I was, and about what Occasion I came there; so the Doctor indeed discoursed with me very familiarly, and rendered Thanks to the Earl for recommending me into his conversation rather than another's. What Discourse we had then was nothing to the Matter, it was about Matters of Conscience and Religion. But Mr. Colledge, that was the Joiner here in Town, and executed afterwards, being familiar with me, brought me to one Mr. Ferguson a Minister, as I suppose of the Presbyterian Form, for he goes in their Garb as near as I can tell, and Mr. Ferguson at our first Meeting was in Richard's Coffee-House, in an upper Room one Pair of Stairs, and in some Company; and Colledge going to him brought him aside, and spake to him concerning me, and he came to me apart, and discoursed with me: From whence he brought me to a Bookseller's Shop, and bought for me the Articles of the Church of England, and in all these Discourses there was a Hand, as Colledge told me, of the Earl of Shaftesbury, who did procure him, and sent to Dr. Burnet to bring me that Way. I do not deny neither, that I had an Inclination before I left Ireland, and when I was in Spain, and when I was in France, for to become a Protestant, according to the Laws and Rules of the Church of England. The Force of what I have to say is this, The Earl of Shaftesbury one Day after all these Things were past, and after the Parliament were dissolved at Oxford, discoursing with me in his own House, Major Manly being in the same Room then, who lives beyond Tower-Hill, he asked me what was the present Occasion I came to him there? And it was pretty early in the Morning, and the Earl had a Barber to trim him in his Room. I told him my Occasion was then, that I was something low in Money, that I did a little want Money at that Time, and did not know to whom to speak for any Thing but his Lordship, and said, I came to tell you so. Well, said he, Mr. Dennis, I have appointed Mr. Rowse, John Rowse, whom you know, for to give you and maintain you in Money; go to him especially once a Week, and he will give you Money, and said he, Mr. Dennis, what is the Number of your Name in the Country, as near as you can tell, how many are you? My Lord, said I, to tell you exactly what Number they be of, I cannot at present, but within a little time I may tell you. I believe really there may be upon the Matter three or four hundred able Men of my name, in the County where I was born. Says the Earl of Shaftesbury, Mr. Dennis, I would very willingly have you to advise those of your Name, and those of your Friends for to be in Readiness, whenever Occasion shall serve, and to stand by, if Occasion should be, for to assist the Commonwealth of England; for we do really intend to have England under a Commonwealth and no Crown; and, says he, we intend to live as we see Holland does; that is, to have a Commonwealth and to have no supreme Head, particular Man, says he, or King, nor owe Obedience to a Crown; and, says he, we will extirpate the King, and all his Family as near as we can; and Mr. Dennis, says he, I do admire that your Nation should be such Fools as they are, for it is very certain that King James, Queen Elizabeth, King Charles the First, says he, and the King that now is, does wrong you to very Destruction; and, says he, if you had been under a Commonwealth, the Commonwealth would take more Pity of your Nation, and the Gentry of your Nation, than any of them do now, in this Time wherein the King governs, and upon this I do count the Irish Fools. This is all that I can say.

L. C. J. The King's Council declare they will call no more Witnesses, for they think they have called enough already, and there are several of them that do swear Words that are treasonable in themselves, if you do desire to ask any of the Witnesses any Thing, you shall have them all called one by one.

Foreman. My Lord, we will walk up again, and consider what Questions to ask, and come again presently.

Mr. Papillon. It seems they will call no more Witnesses than these.

L. C. J. Not against the Earl of Shaftesbury, being you are charged only with that.

Mr. Papillon. It is so my Lord, but we pray we may be satisfied about the Statute upon which the Indictment is grounded, and that we may hear it read before we go up, because your Lordship speaks of two different Statutes, the 25th of Edward, and you mention the Statute of the 13th of this King; your Lordship in your Discourse to the Jury mentioned them both, we pray your Lordship to acquaint us upon what Statute it is grounded, whether upon both or one of them.

L. C. J. Look ye, Gentlemen, this is grounded upon the Statute of this King, though there is enough to find an Indictment of Treason upon the Statute of the 25th of Edward the Third. That which is Treason within the Statute of the 25th of Edward the Third, is Treason within this Statute, so this is the more copious Statute; for as I told you before, this Statute has enlarged that of Edward the Third in a great many Particulars; and therefore, look ye, Gentlemen, always consider this, when one Statute contains the Matter of another, and enlarges it, the Indictment is always upon the last Statute, that being the more copious Statute: But you are to consider both.

L. C. J. North. The Indictment is Contra formam Statuti, and it being Contra formam Statuti, it may be understood, Statutorum or Statuti, so that all Statutes that may be the Foundation of this Indictment you may go upon.

Jury. We desire to know whether any of these Witnesses stand indicted, or no?

L. C. J. Look you, Gentlemen, don't talk of this, but consider with yourselves, an Examination of Proofs concerning the Credibility of the Witnesses is not properly before you at this Time; for I must tell you, and inform you as to that, you are not to examine properly here concerning the Credibility of the Witnesses, that is not to be proved or controverted here before you, that is Matter upon a Trial by the Petty Jury, for there the King will be heard for to defend the Credit of his Witnesses, if there be any Thing that can be objected against them; it is proper for the Prisoner to do that, you are only to see whether the Statute be satisfied, in having Matter that is treasonable, and having it witnessed by two Men, by two Witnesses, who are intended prima facie credible, unless you of your own Knowledge know the contrary; for otherwise, you must consider what a Disadvantage this would be in such Cases, if the Credibility of the Witnesses should be examined before the Grand Jury, where the King is not present, nor in a Possibility of defending the Credit of his Witnesses; nor is the Prisoner or the Party indicted present; that is a proper Objection when he comes upon his Trial; for all Men are intended credible, till there are Objections against them, and till their Credits come to be examined one Side and the other.

Mr. Papillon. My Lord, if your Lordship thinks good, I will beg this of your Lordship's Pardon, whether your Lordship doth not think that we are within the Compass of our own Understanding and Consciences to give our Judgment?

L. C. J. Your own Understanding and Consciences, yes; but look ye, Gentlemen—

Mr. Papillon. If we are not left to consider the Credibility of the Witnesses, we cannot satisfy our Consciences.

L. C. J. Look ye, Gentlemen, you are to go according to the Evidence of the Witnesses; you are to consider of the Case according to the things alledged and proved, unless you know any thing yourselves: But if any of you know any thing of your own Knowledge, that you ought to take into Consideration, no doubt of it.

Jury. Very well, my Lord.

L. C. J. The Grand Jury are to hear nothing, but the Evidence against the Prisoner; therefore for you to enter into Proofs, or expect any here, concerning the Credit of the Witnesses, it is impossible for you to do Justice at that Rate.

The Jury withdrew, and the Court adjourned till Three o'Clock.

L. C. J. Let the Witnesses be brought in one by one.

Foreman. We will first ask a Question of Mr. Gwyn.

Mr. Gwyn.

Foreman. Who put up the Papers?

Mr. Gwyn. I put up the Papers myself.

Foreman. Who went in with you?

Mr. Gwyn. None but my Lord's Servants, I think, were there: But I put up the Papers myself.

Foreman. Pray, Sir, whose Hand-writing is that Paper of?

Mr. Gwyn. Indeed, Sir, I cannot tell.

Foreman. How did it come into my Lord Shaftesbury's Closet?

Mr. Gwyn. My Lord, this is a strange Question. Indeed, Sir, I can't tell; all the Papers that I found in that Closet I put into that Bag.

L. C. J. To satisfy the Jury, was the Paper in the Closet before you came there?

Mr. Gwyn. My Lord, it was certainly there, for there I found it. I don't know the particular Paper, but all the Papers in that Bag were there.

L. C. J. From whom had you the Key?

Mr. Gwyn. From my Lord Shaftesbury.

Foreman. Don't you know, Sir, there was a Discourse in the Parliament of an Association?

Mr. Gwyn. Sir, I was not of the last Parliament. Sir, I know nothing of it.

Foreman. You have not heard then, that there was such a Thing in Parliament concerning an Association?

Mr. Gwyn. I have heard of an Association talk'd of.

Foreman. Mr. Secretary, I would ask you some Questions: If you did not know of a Debate in Parliament of an Association?

Mr. Secretary. I was not present at the Debate; but there was a Talk in Town of an Association.

Foreman. Did not you hear of it in Parliament?

Mr. Secretary. Indeed there was an Answer to a Message from the House of Commons that had something in it that did strongly imply an Association; but this particular Association I do not remember to have heard propos'd.

Foreman. Don't you remember in the House of Commons, Sir, it was read upon Occasion of that Bill?

Mr. Secretary. I heard such a Thing spoke of; but at the Reading of it I was not present, to the best of my Remembrance.

Foreman. What Date, Sir, was the Warrant for my Lord Shaftesbury's Commitment?

Mr. Secretary. I refer myself to the Warrant, for that I don't know the Date.

L. C. J. Mr. Secretary, you must speak about the Time that it was.

Mr. Secretary. I was the Man that had the Honour to sign that Warrant by which the Serjeant at Arms did apprehend my Lord Shaftesbury, but what Day of the Month I do not remember; and therefore I refer myself, if you please, to the Warrant, and to the Serjeant at Arms.

Foreman. What Month was it?—Mr. Secretary. Sir?

Foreman. About what Month?—Mr. Secretary. July.

Foreman. The Beginning of July?

Mr. Secretary. Sir, I do not remember the Day precisely; for I did not foresee that Question would be asked me; but I refer myself to the Warrant, and that is beyond all Doubt.

Foreman. I suppose all these Witnesses that are examined, were examined before the Committee?

Mr. Secretary. Sir, they were examined, and I was present at the Examination.

Foreman. All of them?

Mr. Secretary. I don't know whether all of them; but I am sure I was at the Examination of several of them.

Foreman. How many, Sir?—Mr. Secretary. I can't tell truly how many.

Foreman. Call Mr. Booth.

Officer. He is not here, the Tipstaff has him somewhere.

Foreman. Is that Witness a Prisoner?—L. C. J. Booth is a Prisoner.

Foreman. Then call Mr. Turberville.

Mr. Papillon. Is Mr. Turberville there?

Officer. Here is Mr. Booth come now.

Mr. Godfrey. Put Turberville out again.

Foreman. Mr. Booth, you told me of a Discourse that passed between the Lord Shaftesbury and yourself, we desire to know where it was, and when?

Mr. Booth. It was in Thanet-House, Sir, where he lived, about a Week or ten Days before the Parliament sat at Oxford.

Foreman. The precise Time?—Mr. Booth. I cannot be more precise.

Foreman. Who introduced you?

Mr. Booth. I think one Mr. Wilson led me into the Chamber.

Foreman. Who was present when the Discourse was?

Mr. Booth. None but he and I, Sir.

L. C. J. If we have these Noises, we will have every one of you put out of Court.

Mr. Att. Gen. Richardson, Richardson, Pray turn them all out; they are brought in on purpose.

Mr. Booth. It was not the first, second, nor third Time that I had waited upon the Lord of Shaftesbury.

Foreman. In what Room was it that my Lord spake those Words to you?

Mr. Booth. It was in the Room he usually sits in, on the Left-Hand as we came out of the Long-Gallery, I think we passed through a Room before it, wainscotted about, as I remember, and hung: I have been in that Room with him four or five Times, I am sure.

Foreman. After this Discourse with you, how long was it before you spake of it to any body else?

Mr. Booth. Truly I think I did not publish this Discourse that my Lord and I had, from the Time it was, till within this seven or eight Weeks.

Foreman. You were never examined before then as a Witness?

Mr. Booth. No, Sir, I never was, nor no body will pretend it, I suppose.

Foreman. To whom, Sir, did you give your first Information?

Mr. Booth. Sir, I sent my first Information in Writing to the Lords in the Council.

Foreman. By whose Hand?—Mr. Booth. By the Hand of Walter Banes.

Foreman. You had several Discourses with him; had you easy Admittance, or was it with Difficulty you came into his Company?

Mr. Booth. I was admitted by the Influence of Captain Wilkinson at first, and ever after went with him, and had easy Admittance and Familiarity with him.

Foreman. Was he with you every Time?

Mr. Booth. No, not every Time; he was not this Time with me.

Foreman. Did he talk to this Purpose every Time?

Mr. Booth. Something to this Purpose he did talk every Time, but not so fully; for I was first acquainted with this Business of Oxford by Captain Wilkinson, and I had a great Desire to understand it from my Lord's own Mouth, because I would be satisfied in my Lord's Interest as well as his Conduct.

Foreman. Pray, Sir, what Education have you had?

Mr. Booth. I have had the Education of a Gentleman, an Academical Education.

Foreman. Were you ever in Orders?—Mr. Booth. Yes.

Foreman. Do you own yourself to be in Orders still?

Mr. Booth. How do you mean to be in Orders? I tell you I was in Orders; but I am not now benefited.

Foreman. Do you officiate as a Minister?—Mr. Booth. No.

Foreman. Were you ever an Attorney's Clerk?—Mr. Booth. Never.

Foreman. Or a Justice's Clerk?

Mr. Booth. Never, nor to no Mortal.

Foreman. Were you ever indicted for any Felony?—Mr. Booth. No.

L. C. J. That is a Question not to be asked by any Jurymen of any Witness whatsoever: No Man is bound to discover any thing of that Nature, that is criminal, concerning himself.

Foreman. If it be pardoned, my Lord, he may.

L. C. J. Pardoned or not pardoned, he is not bound to accuse himself, nor to fix a Scandal on himself.

Mr. Booth. No, my Lord, Nemo tenetur seipsum prodere.

L. C. J. Sir, we must not suffer such Questions; I will tell you the Reason: It is proper for a Prisoner that stands upon his Justification to object it, but then the Prisoner must prove it: It lies upon him to prove it.

Mr. Papillon. Mr. Booth, you told us of fifty Men that were lifted under Captain Wilkinson, do you know any more of them?

Mr. Booth. I never directly conversed with any other.

Mr. Papillon. Did you know any more of them?

Mr. Booth. No, not directly I did not, but only by Captain Wilkinson's Information.

Mr. Papillon. How many Stories was that Room where you talked with my Lord?

Mr. Booth. One Pair of Stairs, as I remember.

Mr. Godfrey. Was it the Right-Hand as you came in?

Mr. Booth. I think so.

Mr. Godfrey. Was it the Right-Hand or the Left?

Mr. Booth. I went into the Long Gallery first, and staid there about a Quarter, or Half an Hour; and I remember very well I looked upon some Maps that were there, to divert myself, a while; and when I was called in, went out of the Gallery on the Left-Hand, and went through another Room before I came into my Lord's Room.

Foreman. Did you never hear my Lord speak Treason in any House but his own?

Mr. Booth. I never had Occasion to hear this Discourse from my Lord, but in his own House: I never waited upon him in any other House.

Foreman. Was you never desired to be a Witness against my Lord Shaftesbury?

Mr. Booth. Not till I intimated something of it.

Foreman. Who was that to?

Mr. Booth. That was to Mr. Banes; I told you before so.

Foreman. And what then?

Mr. Booth. When he told me of this Business with the Yorkshire Attorney, Brownrig, I did say again, I did not know what my Lord had done, as to any thing of Irishmen, but I was sure there was something as to Englishmen, as to that Purpose.

Foreman. Did he propose any Reward, or any thing of that Nature?

Mr. Booth. Not a Farthing; for I think he had no Commission to do it.

Foreman. Are you acquainted with one Callaghan and Downing, two Irishmen?—Mr. Booth. No.

Mr. Godfrey. Were you never in their Company?

Mr. Booth. Not that I know of.

Mr. Godfrey. Did you ever hear their Names?

Mr. Booth. I don't know that I have.

Foreman. Were you in their Company lately?

Mr. Booth. Not as I know of. I do not remember either their Names, or their Persons, nor do I know them from other Men.

Foreman. Do you know one Mr. Shelden?—Mr. Booth. No.

Foreman. Do you know one Mr. Marriot?

Mr. Booth. No, Sir: I have heard of one Marriot that did belong to my Lord Duke of Norfolk.

Foreman. When were you in his Company?

Mr. Booth. Never that I know of.

Foreman. Has no body discoufured you from him?

Mr. Booth. No, no Body.

Foreman. Did you never hear of any Witnesses he sent to his Tenants?

Mr. Booth. I have heard from Banes about Brownrig, about Irish Witnesses.

K k k

Mr.

Mr. Godfrey. Did you never hear of any Irish Witnesses sent down by Mr. Marriot to the Isle of Ely?

L. C. J. We gave you all the Liberty in the World, hoping you would ask pertinent Questions, but these are Trifles. I did not expect that any wise Men would have asked these Questions. Mr. Godfrey, was it to the Purpose, whether Mr. Marriot sent any Irish Witnesses to his Tenant; or no? What is that to this Business?

Foreman. My Lord, I have it under the Hand of the Clerk of the Council.

Mr. Booth. Pray, Sir, did any inform you that I had any Correspondence with this Man?

L. C. J. Nay, Sir, you must ask no Questions.

Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Booth, do you go under no other Name but Booth?

Mr. Booth. No, nor never did in my Life.

Mr. Booth. My Lord, I cannot go in Safety here for the Tumult.

L. C. J. Let Officers secure him: Mr. Sheriff, look to him, that the Man be secure and safe; I will require him at your Hands else.

Mr. Sheriff Pilkinton. What should I do?

L. C. J. Send your Officers to protect him, as becomes you, that he may be secured from the Rabble here.

Mr. Turberville.

Foreman. Mr. Turberville, when you had this Discourse with my Lord Shaftesbury, who was present with you?

Mr. Turberville. One of his Servants; truly I cannot tell his Name.

Foreman. No Body else?

Mr. Turberville. I know the Name of none of his Servants, but Mr. Sheppard; I cannot remember any Body else.

Foreman. Did he carry you up to my Lord?

Mr. Turberville. It was he, I think, told me I might go in: I was in the Dining-Room.

Foreman. What Time was this?—Mr. Turberville. In the Morning.

Foreman. What Time was it when you had this Discourse with my Lord Shaftesbury?—Mr. Turberville. It was in February.

Foreman. What Time in February?

Mr. Turberville. About the Beginning; I cannot tell exactly to a Day.

Foreman. How long was this before you communicated this to any Body?

Mr. Turberville. It was about the 4th of July.

Foreman. Then you concealed it from February to July: Who did you communicate it to first of all?

Mr. Turberville. The first Deposition I gave was to Mr. Secretary.

Foreman. Which Secretary?—Mr. Turberville. Secretary Jenkins.

Foreman. Pray, what Room was it you had this Discourse in?

Mr. Turberville. Sir, it was the Room at the upper End of the Dining-Room; I think they call it the Dining-Room; at the upper End of the Room, and turns on the Left-Hand, where he lay.

Foreman. Did you meet with no Body about the Beginning of July, after my Lord's Commitment, and tell them, when you were challenged and told you were to be a Witness against him, as you were alive you knew no such Thing?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, this is not to be allowed: This is private Instructions which the Jury are not to take.

Foreman. No, Sir, it is not private Instructions. Did you not speak such Words to William Herbert?

L. C. J. Have you had any Information concerning this to Mr. Herbert?

Foreman. My Lord, I have, a long Time ago. My Lord, such a Person did tell me so and so, and set down the Day; and he then said he was very angry with him for it.

L. C. J. Look ye, Gentlemen, what Discourse you take up at Random in every Coffee-House, is that fit to be brought in when Treason is in Question against the King's Life? Are these Coffee-House Discourses, do you think, Ground enough for you to caval at Persons, because you have heard this Discourse in a Coffee-House?

Foreman. My Lord, I never was in a Coffee-House in my Life with Mr. Herbert; but he declared this to me some Months ago.

L. C. J. And you think this is Ground enough for you against him?

Mr. Papillon. My Lord, we only ask this Question, Whether he hath not contradicted this, or said the contrary to any Body else?

Mr. Turberville. I do not remember that ever I spake one Word to Mr. Herbert in my Life; and I can give you one Reason: For I was discarded by all People of my Lord's Interest at that Time? And if I had given under my Hand that I had known nothing against him, I believe I might have been in their Favour as much as before.

Mr. Papillon. Were not you one that petitioned to the Common-Council in London?—Mr. Turberville. I did, Sir.

Mr. Papillon. And did not you declare then, that you were tempted to witness against your Conscience?

Mr. Turberville. I believe I never read the Petition: It was drawn by the Order of Mr. Colledge, by a Man that lives about Guildhall; by a Scrivener about Guildhall; and I signed that Petition, but never read it, nor knew what was in it.

L. C. J. Mr. Richardson, any you Officers; watch by those Men that make a Noise, and bring me in one to make an Example.

Mr. Turberville. My Lord, I go in Danger of my Life, for the People threaten to stone me to Death, and I cannot go safe to my Lodging.

Mr. Papillon. What was your Design in signing that Petition? What did you look for?

Mr. Turberville. The Design was, that the City should take Care of us.

Mr. Papillon. Were you in a poor Condition?

Mr. Turberville. Truly I was not very poor, though I was not over full of Money.

Mr. Papillon. It is a strange Thing that you should petition for Relief, if you were not in Want.

Mr. Turberville. We were told by some Members of the House of Commons, that there was a Vote in the House of Commons ready to pass, that the City should advance Money for the Support of the Witnesses, and that if we would petition that they would answer the Design of the Parliament.

Mr. Papillon. What Members were they?

Mr. Turberville. It was a Member of the House of Commons that told me so, I will assure you; two of them.

Mr. Papillon. Did never any Body move you, or desire you to be a Witness in this Case against my Lord Shaftesbury?

Mr. Turberville. No Body in my Life. When I came to speak the Truth of what I knew, I did it voluntarily.

Mr. Papillon. You did it voluntarily?

Mr. Turberville. I did, I will assure you.

Mr. Papillon. Do you know any thing more than what you have said here?—Mr. Turberville. No, not one Tittle.

Mr. Papillon. Mr. Turberville, I desire to be satisfied in one Thing, whether my Lord Shaftesbury was committed before or after your Information?

Mr. Turberville. Truly, Sir, I cannot tell positively, as to that Point; but I believe it was before; I cannot tell.

Mr. Papillon. Did you hear my Lord speak these Words in any other Room or Place?—Mr. Turberville. No, indeed, I did not.

Mr. Papillon. It was about the fourth of July, you say, your Depositions were taken?

Mr. Turberville. About that Time; I suppose the 4th of July—I hope your Lordship will take Care that we be not knocked on the Head.

L. C. J. That we give in Charge to Mr. Sheriff; and see you do take Care of the King's Witnesses at your Peril. It is a Reflection, not only upon the Government of the City to suffer these Disorders, but upon the whole Kingdom; therefore, Mr. Sheriff, look the Witnesses come by no Hurt.

Mr. John Smith.

Mr. Papillon. Mr. Smith, the Jury ask you a Question, whether or no you did not use to go by the Name of Barry?

Mr. Smith. Sir, what Names I have gone by is not pertinent to this Purpose; I tell you I have gone by several Names, as all Popish Priests do.

Mr. Papillon. Did you never go by the Name of Barry?

Mr. Smith. It may be I might; I have gone by several Names, as all Popish Priests do.

L. C. J. Did you ever go by the Name of Barry?

Mr. Smith. I did, my Lord; it is usual for Popish Priests so to do.

Mr. Papillon. What Religion are you of, Mr. Smith?

Mr. Smith. I am a Protestant, Sir.

Mr. Papillon. How long have you been a Protestant?

Mr. Smith. Many Years.

Mr. Papillon. When were you first converted?

Mr. Smith. First converted?

Mr. Papillon. Ay, to the Protestant Religion: You say you have been one many Years?

Mr. Smith. I have been a Protestant, and was perverted to the Popish Religion, and afterwards became a Protestant again.

L. C. J. Bring in one of those Men that make the Noise. Cannot you bring in one of them?

Mr. Papillon. When did you receive the Sacrament?

Mr. Smith. I believe not above three Months ago, as the Rector of Bow Church will inform you: I have it under the Church-Wardens Hands in other Places in London.

Mr. Papillon. Have you been desired to be a Witness, or did you do it voluntarily?

Mr. Smith. Never desired, I declare it; I did it voluntarily myself.

Mr. Papillon. When did you give in your Evidence first?

Mr. Smith. Truly I cannot exactly tell when I gave it in; I did not keep an Account of it.

Mr. Papillon. What Month?—Mr. Smith. I cannot tell.

Mr. Papillon. Was it before my Lord was committed, or after?

Mr. Smith. I believe it might be a little after. Whether it was before or after, I cannot exactly tell.

Mr. Papillon. To whom did you give your Information?

Mr. Smith. My Lord, they commanded the People to stone us to Death.

L. C. J. Who did?

Mr. Smith. Several Persons: And when we were at the Tavern, Dr. Oates's Man came out and gave the Rabble a Bottle of Wine, and bid them knock us down.

L. C. J. Do you know what the Man's Name is?

Dr. Oates. I know nothing of it, my Lord.

L. C. J. What is your Man's Name?

Dr. Oates. I keep half a Dozen Men, my Lord.

L. C. J. I hope you keep no Men to affront the King's Witnesses?

Dr. Oates. No, my Lord, it is a Mistake, I know nothing of it; we went thither to refresh ourselves.

Mr. Papillon. Mr. Smith, who did you give your Information to?

Mr. Smith. What Information?

Mr. Papillon. The first Information.

Mr. Smith. My Lord, am I to answer to these Questions?

L. C. J. Aye, answer them; tell them.

Mr. Smith. My Lord, the Information I gave in to Secretary Jenkins, but I gave Notice long before of what I intended to do to other Persons.

Mr. Papillon. When did you hear these Words; speak to the Time exactly?

Mr. Smith. Which Words do you ask?

Mr. Papillon. Those you mentioned even now.

Mr. Smith. Sir, if you please, I know you take all in Short-Hand; you ask me what Words, I will tell you; for if I do not express myself in the same Words as before, you will take Hold of me.

L. C. J. I will tell you this; this may be an ill Question, for he told you, he had discoursed my Lord Shaftesbury at a great many Times, and that at some Times he said these Words, at other Times other Words, and for you to catch him upon a Question, it doth not shew a fair Inclination.

Mr. Papillon. My Lord, under your Lordship's Favour, we only desire to discover the Truth, we are not for Catches.

L. C. J. Ask him then, which of the Words you would have him declare the Time of, and he will tell you?

Mr. Papillon. Let him speak his own Words, it was about the Time when Hetherington went thither.

Mr. Smith. Truly, I will answer that as punctually as I can; the Month or Day I cannot well tell, but the Person that came from me was Major Manly; and he came to Bethel's Club; what Time that was, I cannot say; but if you please to inform yourselves of those Gentlemen that I named, I believe

I believe they will tell you Mr. Babel was there present, and knew very well I went to my Lord Shaftesbury that Night, and returned to the Club again.

Mr. Godfrey. Was it in the Evening or the Morning?

Mr. Smith. Mr. Godfrey, Clubs are usually at Night, I suppose; you know that was.

Mr. Papillon. Where did you see my Lord Shaftesbury?

Mr. Smith. It was in his Dining-Room.

Mr. Papillon. Did you hear these Words in any other Place, or at any other Time, or any treasonable Words against the King?

L. C. J. Look you, Gentlemen, he told you of several other Words at several other Times.

Mr. Papillon. But he said all at his House, my Lord.

L. C. J. Ay, but at several Times.

Mr. Smith. I know, Mr. Attorney, what the Gentleman would be at very well.

L. C. J. Answer them whether you did hear him speak any Words that you conceive treasonable at any other Time?

Mr. Smith. I did not, indeed.

Mr. Papillon. In another Place?

Mr. Smith. I do say I did not.

Mr. Papillon. Did you petition to the Common Council?

Mr. Smith. No, Sir, I never did.

Mr. Papillon. Are you an Englishman or an Irishman?

Mr. Smith. That's no Matter, no more than if I were a Frenchman or a Dutchman.

L. C. J. Give them an Account whether you are an Englishman or an Irishman?

Mr. Smith. My Lord, I beg your Lordship's Pardon for that; if I were an Irishman, whether thereupon my Evidence would be prejudiced.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Smith, I do hope the Gentlemen of the Jury have more Discretion among them all, than to think that an Irishman is not a good Witness, I hope they are not such Persons.

Mr. Smith. My Lord, if you please; whilst I was in the City amongst them, I never petitioned to the City: I never had a Farthing from them, nor ever spake to any for it: I never had any Occasion for it; but if I had, it is probable I have enough in England, and other Places, without being beholden to your Common-Council.

L. C. J. Will you ask him any more Questions?—Jury. No, no.

Mr. Papillon. Is Mr. Smith gone? I would ask him one Word: We would fain know what Allowance you have, or what you receive, if you have any Allowance from any Body?

Mr. Smith. From whom?

Mr. Papillon. Nay, I know not from whom: I ask whether you have any from any Body?

L. C. J. Look ye, Gentlemen, is that a Question that is pertinent? I wonder you will go to such Questions: We allowed you to ask Questions yourselves, because we look upon you as Men of Reason.

Mr. Papillon. My Lord I do not know but it may be a proper Question to ask him, if he have any Allowance from any Man upon this Account?

L. C. J. Upon what Account?

Mr. Papillon. Upon this Account: If he says he has none, 'tis an Answer.

L. C. J. Do you intend your Question, whether he is bribed to give Evidence? If you mean so speak plain.

Mr. Papillon. We ask if he have any Allowance?

Mr. Smith. You don't ask me how the 6 or 700*l.* was made up.

L. C. J. You that are upon your Oaths should have a Care what you do.
Bryan Haynes.

Mr. Papillon. Mr. Haynes, when did you give in your Information upon this Matter?

Mr. Haynes. Against the Earl of Shaftesbury, Sir?—Mr. Papillon. Ay.

Mr. Haynes. The Day that I was taken by the Messenger.

Mr. Papillon. That was before my Lord was committed, was it not?

Mr. Haynes. Yes, Sir, it was before my Lord was committed.

Mr. Papillon. Did you ever make any other Information to a Justice of the Peace?

Mr. Haynes. Not of my Lord of Shaftesbury.

Mr. Papillon. Nor touching this Matter?

Mr. Haynes. No, not any information upon Oath: I may have discoursed with a Justice of the Peace.

Mr. Papillon. Did not you give in an Information of a Design against the Earl of Shaftesbury?

Mr. Haynes. To none but Secretary Jenkins.

Mr. Papillon. You understand the Question; whether you did give no Information of a Design against my Lord Shaftesbury to some Justice of the Peace?

Mr. Haynes. No, no, to none but Mr. Secretary Jenkins.

L. C. J. You do not observe his Question: Did you ever give to any Justice any Information of a Design against my Lord Shaftesbury?

Mr. Haynes. Yes, my Lord, I did, to Sir George Treby; I made Affidavit before him.

Mr. Papillon. When was that?

Mr. Haynes. I think it was in March last.

Mr. Papillon. What was that Design against my Lord Shaftesbury?

Mr. Haynes. The Design was what Mr. Fitz-gerald told me; he told me he gave under his Hand to the King, that the Earl of Shaftesbury did resolve to set the Crown upon his own Head, or otherwise to turn the Kingdom into a Commonwealth.

Mr. Papillon. Fitz-gerald told you this, and so you made Affidavit of it?

Mr. Haynes. Yes, before Sir George Treby.

Mr. Papillon. What Time?

Mr. Haynes. It was before the Parliament met at Oxford.

Mr. Papillon. So you say the Words were: When were the Words spoken that you mentioned?

Mr. Haynes. The Words against my Lord?

Mr. Papillon. Ay.

Mr. Haynes. He spake them to me a little before I made Affidavit: I cannot tell positively the Time?

Mr. Papillon. That was before his Commitment.

Mr. Haynes. Yes, yes, my Lord was committed in June last; this Affidavit was made in March last, before the Recorder of London.

L. C. J. North. When you ask him about the Information of the Design against my Lord Shaftesbury, he says that was in March last; and when you ask him about the Evidence he gives now, that was the same Day he was apprehended by the Messenger.

Mr. Papillon. About June you say it was, that you say you gave in the Information against my Lord Shaftesbury?

Mr. Haynes. The Information I made against the Lord Shaftesbury was in June last, the 28th, as I take it, of June last.

Mr. Papillon. Where was it you had this Discourse?

Mr. Haynes. I had several Conferences with my Lord.

Mr. Papillon. Did he every Time say the same?

Mr. Haynes. The last Time I spake with him was in Ironmonger-Lane: For Mr. Whitaker told me he would speak with me, and he would fain have me explain myself what I did mean by the tall Man I mentioned in the Narrative; and I went to the House, and they told me he was there, and I sent up a Note, and he desired me to come up; but I sent Word I did not care to come up, because I would not be known; and so he sent me Word to meet him after Dinner; and when I came, my Name is Haynes, my Lord, said I; and I led his Lordship by the Hand and went in there. I had, I believe, a whole Hour's Discourse with him: And pray, my Lord, said I, among other Questions, What Religion is the King of? Truly, says he, Mr. Haynes, he hath no more Religion than an Horse; for, faith he, they say, Sir, he was inclined to Popery when he came first to England; says he, he had a Tincture of Popery, and was much inclined that way; but since he was degenerated from all the Principles of Christianity, for he is just like a perfect Beast.

Mr. Papillon. This, you say, was in Ironmonger-Lane.

Mr. Haynes. Ay, Sir, at a Pastry-Cook's Shop.

Mr. Papillon. What Time was it?

Mr. Haynes. After Dinner in the Afternoon.

Mr. Papillon. In June, or when?

Mr. Haynes. I cannot tell what Time positively; it was about the Time of the Trial of Fitz-Harris.

Mr. Papillon. Was it the same Time he spake about the Duke of Buckingham?

Mr. Haynes. No, no.

Mr. Papillon. When was that?

Mr. Haynes. That was when I was with him at his own House, and desired him not to expose me.

Mr. Papillon. What Time?

Mr. Haynes. I cannot tell, Sir, for I never thought I should be called to an Account for it, and I cannot keep an Almanack in my Head; and I desired them not to expose me to the King's Fury, for I heard the King was displeased with me. No, says he, you are mistaken, this is the best Opportunity we can have; and if he will not give you a Pardon, we will raise the whole Kingdom against him in Arms; and then he makes himself the Master and Author of the Plot, and consequently he must expect to be ruined, unless he grant you a Pardon.

Mr. Papillon. Did you ever hear any other Words than what you have now testified?

Mr. Haynes. Yes, Sir, for I discoursed with him in Ironmonger-Lane a great while, and told him, that our only and best way to have our Ends of the King, was to raise a Rebellion in Ireland, and that I had Relations and Friends, and could get discontented Persons enough, and his Lordship would do the Work here.

Mr. Papillon. What, did you propound a Rebellion in Ireland?

Mr. Haynes. I offered to go beyond Sea, and that now was the best Time to raise a Rebellion in Ireland; and he said that was not the best way, for they had other Means to take, and so the Discourse was waved.

Mr. Papillon. And is that all?

Mr. Haynes. That is all I remember now.

Mr. Papillon. Do you know of any other Place or Time?

Mr. Haynes. I was with him at his House.

Mr. Papillon. Were you ever a Witness for my Lady Wyndham, or against her?

Mr. Haynes. No, Sir; but she arrested me, because I said I lay with her.
John Macnamarra.

Mr. Papillon. Mr. Macnamarra, when was it you had this Discourse with my Lord Shaftesbury, what is the Time, as near as you remember?

Mr. Mac. In March and April last, Sir.

Mr. Papillon. Twice then, do you speak of?

Mr. Mac. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Papillon. Which is that that was in April?

Mr. Mac. That was the last; the last Discourse was in April.

Mr. Papillon. To what Purpose was that?

Mr. Mac. My Lord said that the King deserved to be deposed as much as King Richard the Second did.

Mr. Papillon. In April you say?—Mr. Mac. In April.

Mr. Papillon. When did you give Information of this?

Mr. Mac. I cannot exactly tell, Sir.

Mr. Papillon. Repeat what you said.

Mr. Mac. That the King deserved to be deposed as much as King Richard the Second, and that he took the Ducheys of Mazarine's Advice in every Particular, which was the worst of Womankind.

Mr. Papillon. What Time in April was this?

Mr. Mac. It was in the beginning of April.

Mr. Papillon. Where?—Mr. Mac. In his own House.

Mr. Papillon. Who was present?

Mr. Mac. There was Mr. Ivy by.

Mr. Papillon. When did you make Information of this?

Mr. Mac. I cannot tell, it was a good while ago.

Mr. Papillon. Was it before his Commitment?

Mr. Mac. Yes, Sir, it was.

Mr. Papillon. To whom did you give Information?

Mr. Mac. To the Secretary of State, Sir.

Mr. Papillon. Which of them?

Mr. Mac. Mr. Secretary Jenkins, Sir.

Mr. Papillon. Did not you petition the Common-Council, Sir, for Relief?

Mr. Mac. Yes, Sir, I signed a Petition that was drawn up, but I did not see it till it was brought to me to sign.

Mr. Papillon.

Mr. Papillon. Did you read it?

Mac. No, I never read it neither.

Mr. Papillon. Nor don't know what is in it?

Mr. Mac. No, nor don't know the Contents of it.

Mr. Papillon. My Lord, in that Petition they say, they were tempted to swear against their Consciences, and that some of the Witnesses had made Shipwreck of their Consciences; we ask them now, and they say, they do not know what was in the Petition: If we should ask them who tempted them, and who those Witnesses were, that made Shipwreck of their Consciences; it would signify nothing; for since they do not know what was in the Petition, it is in vain to ask them any more.

Mr. Mac. For my Part, my Lord, I never saw it till it was brought to me to be signed, and do not know the Contents of it: But I heard Mr. Collidge, that was executed at Oxford, was concerned in promoting the Petition, by my Lord Shaftesbury's Advice.

Dennis Macnamarra.

Mr. Papillon. Dennis Macnamarra, tells us how you were introduced to my Lord Shaftesbury when you had this Discourse?

D. Mac. By my Brother, Sir.

Mr. Papillon. What, he that was here last?

D. Mac. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Papillon. He introduced you?—D. Mac. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Papillon. When was it?

D. Mac. It was in March last; the latter End of March, or beginning of April.

Mr. Papillon. Cannot you tell which of the Months?

D. Mac. No, I cannot be positive in it.

Mr. Papillon. Who was by?

D. Mac. There was Mr. Ivy.

Mr. Papillon. No Body but Mr. Ivy?

D. Mac. No Body but Mr. Ivy and my Brother.

Mr. Papillon. Where was it?

D. Mac. It was in his own Dining-Room.

Mr. Papillon. Were none of his Servants in the Room?

D. Mac. Not that I know of.

Mr. Papillon. Are you sure none of his Servants were there?

D. Mac. Not that I know of.

Mr. Papillon. Did you hear any Thing else at any other Time?

D. Mac. No.

Mr. Papillon. Nor in any other Place?—D. Mac. No.

Mr. Papillon. When did you give in this Information?

D. Mac. I gave it in a good while ago; Sir, I cannot be positive.

Mr. Papillon. Was it before my Lord was committed?

D. Mac. Yes a great while.

Mr. Papillon. To whom did you give it?

D. Mac. I gave it to the Secretary of State.

Jury. Cannot you remember how long it was before?

D. Mac. No, I cannot at the present.

Mr. Papillon. Which of the Secretaries?

D. Mac. Secretary Jenkins.

Mr. Papillon. My Lord, I only propose, whether we may not ask whether he have not a Pardon? For it would be Satisfaction to us, for some Reason.

L. C. J. North. Look you here Gentlemen, when the Prisoner makes Exceptions to the Witnesses, then it is proper, but here are no Exceptions to the Witnesses.

Mr. Papillon. My Lord, we make no Exceptions, but we must satisfy our Consciences, my Lord, that we must do, and that is very much, as we find the Credibility of the Witnesses.

L. C. J. North. Gentlemen, what do you mean that he should have a Pardon for?

Mr. Papillon. For Crimes.

L. C. J. North. You must not ask him to accuse himself.

Mr. Papillon. If he hath a Pardon he is in statu quo: Suppose, my Lord, some of them have been guilty of poisoning, some of Felony, some of robbing on the Highway, we do but ask them if they be pardoned?

L. C. J. North. A Man must not be impeached but where he may answer for it.

Mr. Papillon. My Lord, if you do not give us Leave, we must forbear then.

L. C. J. North. I do not think it proper to ask.

Edward Ivy.

Mr. Papillon. The Discourse that you had with my Lord Shaftesbury, when was it, at what Time?

Mr. Ivy. It was a little after the sitting of the Parliament at Oxford.

Mr. Papillon. Was it more Times than one?

Mr. Ivy. Yes, Sir, several Times.

Mr. Papillon. All the same Discourse?

Mr. Ivy. No, not the same Discourse.

Mr. Papillon. The Words that you spoke of, when was that?

Mr. Ivy. That was after the sitting of the Parliament at Oxford.

Mr. Papillon. About what Time was it?

Mr. Ivy. It was about the latter End of March or beginning of April.

Mr. Papillon. When did you make Information of this?

Mr. Ivy. I cannot be positive in that neither.

Mr. Papillon. Before my Lord's Commitment or after?

Mr. Ivy. A while before.

Mr. Papillon. To whom did you give it?

Mr. Ivy. To the Secretary of State.

Foreman. Who was present when my Lord Shaftesbury spake those Words?

Mr. Ivy. Both the Macnamarra's, as I remember.

Foreman. Who else?

Mr. Ivy. Truly, I do not remember any else privy to our Discourse; neither am I certain, that both the Macnamarra's were there; one of them was there I am sure of it.

Foreman. What was the Reason you concealed this Information so long? Had you no Inducement to make it at that Time? How came you to do it then and not before? What was the Reason? You say it was the latter End of April and May; my Lord was not committed for a good while after; here was two Months Time?

Mr. Ivy. I am not certain how long a Time it was before, but I made it as soon as I could.

Foreman. I ask you whether you know any thing either of Words or treasonable Actions, or any thing of my Lord Shaftesbury, spoken or acted at any other Time or Place?

Mr. Ivy. No, I have declared what I know as to the Particulars.

Bernard Dennis.

Mr. Papillon. Mr. Dennis, in the Morning you told me something about the Discourse you had with my Lord of Shaftesbury, tell me when it was?

Mr. Dennis. It was in April, four or five Days after the Parliament was dissolved at Oxford.

Mr. Papillon. In the beginning?

Mr. Dennis. In March, after the Parliament was dissolved at Oxford.

Mr. Papillon. It was in March, and where?

Mr. Dennis. In his own House, here in this Town, four or five Days after the Parliament was dissolved at Oxford, immediately after he came home, I do not think he was at home three Days before.

Mr. Papillon. Who was present with you then?

Mr. Dennis. There was in the Room Mr. Sheppard, his Gentleman.

Mr. Papillon. Who else?

Mr. Dennis. Some of his Servants, his Pages I suppose, but whether they did hear this or no, I cannot tell.

Mr. Papillon. Did my Lord whisper it, or speak out?

Mr. Dennis. My Lord is not a Man of an high Voice, but of moderate Voice.

Mr. Papillon. Did he whisper it in your Ear?

Mr. Dennis. No, I was just by him.

Mr. Papillon. Who was in the Room besides?

Mr. Dennis. No Body, only his Servants.

Mr. Papillon. When did you make this Information?

Mr. Dennis. I made it in the Month of June.

Mr. Papillon. In the Month of June?

Mr. Dennis. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Papillon. Before my Lord was committed, or after?

Mr. Dennis. Before.

Mr. Papillon. Who did you make it to?

Mr. Dennis. I made my Information to the Secretary of State.

Mr. Papillon. Which of them?—Mr. Dennis. Secretary Jenkins.

Mr. Papillon. Why did you conceal it so long?

Mr. Dennis. Because I was in the City so long.

Mr. Papillon. Did you ever go about to muster your 400 Men you had in Ireland, I ask you whether you did or no?

Mr. Dennis. Upon my Word I did advise some of them to be ready.

Mr. Papillon. And did you provide them with Arms?

Mr. Dennis. Not I, Sir, I was not able to do it.

Mr. Papillon. What Religion are you of?

Mr. Dennis. I am a Protestant.

Mr. Papillon. How long have you been a Protestant?

Mr. Dennis. I have been a Protestant since February last. And this I must confess, that when I was in Spain and France, my Resolution was to be a Protestant.

Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Dennis, pray who was in the Room when you were there?

Mr. Dennis. The Earl of Shaftesbury, Sir.

Mr. Godfrey. Who else?—Mr. Dennis. Mr. Sheppard.

Mr. Godfrey. Who else?—Mr. Dennis. I cannot name them.

L. C. J. Mr. Godfrey, when another Man asks a Question, you should consider what is said, and not ask the same Question over and over again.

Mr. Papillon. In what Place in his House?

Mr. Dennis. In his own Chamber, in the great Chamber, I do not know whether you call it the Hall or the Parlour.

Mr. Papillon. Was it above Stairs?

Mr. Dennis. Yes, it was above Stairs, my Lord does not use to speak with any below Stairs.

Mr. Papillon. Is this all that you know? Have you heard my Lord say any treasonable Words in any other Place, or at any other Time?

Mr. Dennis. In the long Gallery in his own House at another Time?

Mr. Papillon. Why did not you say so before?

Mr. Dennis. I did say so before. In the long Gallery he told me he would have a Commonwealth in England, and extirpate the Crown of England and the King of England.

Mr. Papillon. Is that all? Speak all your Knowledge.

Mr. Dennis. He said, we should all Irishmen conform ourselves to a Commonwealth, and by that we should get our Estates again.

Mr. Papillon. I ask you if this is all you have to say?

L. C. J. Do you remember any more?

Mr. Papillon. More than you said in the Morning?

Mr. Dennis. He said he would extirpate the King, and make England a Commonwealth, and that we were Fools and silly Folks that did not comply ourselves to their factious Party, and that we should get our Estates, and that he would get me a black Gown and a Benefice in the mean Time; and when all Things were done, he would prefer me to a better, and not only myself, but all that were of my Name, and would stick to me.

Mr. Papillon. Is this all?—Mr. Dennis. This is all.

Mr. Papillon. Then you have nothing more?

Mr. Dennis. I never spake to him but in his own House.

Mr. Papillon. All your Kindred are Papists, are not they?

Mr. Dennis. No, Sir, I cannot say so, but most of them are.

L. C. J. North. Who can say that? That Question no Body can answer.

L. C. J. Look ye, Gentlemen, now you have asked these Questions, you had best go and consider what Evidence is delivered, and weigh well those Things that have been said to you; and you must consider your Duty; you are to enquire here, whether it be fitting for the King to call my Lord Shaftesbury to question upon this Account of treasonable Words.

Mr. Papillon. My Lord, we desire, before we go, that either the Law may be read, or we may have the Statute-Book up with us.

L. C. J. The Statute-Book was never denied, but you shall have the Law read here: First the Statute of the 25th of Edward the Third, and then this last Statute.

L. C. J. North. I would say one Thing because I observed that formerly you asked the Question, whether the Parliament did not debate about Association.

Association? Whether it related to that Paper or no, I am not certain; I hope you will consider that Paper well; for my Part, I must needs say for myself, I heard of it, but I never heard it read before, and never heard the Contents of it; but it seems to me to shew what those Officers were to do, for the Ends of this Association; and one of those Ends, as I remember (Gentlemen, I refer you to the Paper, and hope you will consider it, you are Men of Understanding) I thought that one of those Ends was to destroy the mercenary Forces in and about the Cities of London and Westminster, and that the Government was to be by the major Part of the Members of Parliament in the Sitting of Parliament, not with the King, but the major Part of the Members of Parliament. Gentlemen, I may mistake, for I profess I speak only out of Memory; but it seems to me to be of great Consequence, and there is great Matter to be presumed upon it, it being found under Lock and Key in his Study: But I suppose my Lord Shaftesbury may give an Account of it, but there is great Presumption upon it; it doth not import to be an Association by Act of Parliament.

Mr. Att. Gen. When the Parliament was prorogued or dissolved, then the major Part of the Members in each County engage themselves to follow their Command and obey their Order.

L. C. J. North. Gentlemen, I hope you will consider your Oaths, and give all Things their due Weight.

L. C. J. Will you have the Statute Read?

Jury. We will read it above.

The Jury withdrew to consider the Evidence, and returned the Bill Ignoramus: Upon which the People fell a hollowing and shouting.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, let it be recorded this Hollowing and Hooping in a Court of Justice.

CX. The Trial of the Earl of Argyle*, in Scotland, for Treason, November, &c. 1681.

THIS Day the Earl of Argyle having first openly declared his Sense, as you have it hereafter set down in his Explication, took the Test as a Privy-Counsellor; and after he was called to, and had taken his Place, the Council's Explication having been read and debated, was put to the Vote, and passed, the Earl not voting thereto.

Edinburgh, the 3d Day of November, 1681.

The Privy-Council's Explication of the Test.

FORasmuch as some have entertained Jealousies and Prejudices against the Oath and Test appointed to be taken by all Persons in publick Trust, Civil, Ecclesiastical, or Military, in this Kingdom, by the Sixth Act of his Majesty's third Parliament; as if thereby they were to swear to every Proposition, or Clause of the Confession of Faith therein mentioned; or that Invasion were made by it upon the intrinsick spiritual Power of the Church, or Power of the Keys, or as if the Present Episcopall Government of this National Church, by Law established, were thereby exposed to the Hazard of Alteration or Subversion: All which are far from the Intention or Design of the Parliament's imposing this Oath, and from the genuine Sense and Meaning thereof: Therefore his Royal Highness, his Majesty's High Commissioner, and Lords of the Privy-Council, do allow, authorize, and empower the Archbishops and Bishops to administer this Oath and Test to the Ministers, in their respective Diocesses, in this express Sense: (1.) That though the Confession of Faith, ratified in Parliament 1567, was framed in the Infancy of Reformation, and deserves it's due Praise, yet by the Test we do not swear to every Proposition, or Clause therein contained, but only to the true Protestant Religion, founded on the Word of God, contained in that Confession as it is opposed to Popery and Fanaticism. (2.) That the Test, or any Clause therein contained, no Invasion or Encroachment is made intended upon the intrinsick spiritual Power of the Church, or Power of the Keys, as it was exercised by the Apostles, and the most pure and primitive Church in the first three Centuries after Christ, and which is still reserved entirely to the Church. (3.) That the Oath and Test is without any Prejudice to the Episcopall Government of this national Church, which is declared by the first Act of the said Session of his Majesty's first Parliament, to be most agreeable to the Word of God, and most suitable to Monarchy, and which upon all Occasions his Majesty hath declared he will inviolably and unalterably preserve. And appoint the Archbishops and Bishops to require the Ministers in their respective Diocesses, with their first Conveniency, to obey the Law in swearing and subscribing the aforesaid Oath and Test with Certification, that the Refusers shall be esteemed Persons affected to the Protestant Religion, and to his Majesty's Government; and that the Punishment appointed by the foresaid sixth Act of his Majesty's third Parliament, shall be impartially and without Delay inflicted upon them. By me.

PET. MENZEIS.

His Royal Highness, &c.

Montrose Præses,	Winton,	Linlithgow,
Perth,	Strathmore,	Roxburgh,
Ancrum,	Airley,	Balcarras,
Livingston,	Bishop of Edinburgh,	Elphinston,
President of Session,	Treasurer Deputy,	Register.
Advocate,	Lundie,

THIS Day the Earl of Argyle being about to take the Test, as a Commissioner of the Treasury, and having upon Command produced a Paper bearing the Sense in which he took the Test, the preceding Day, and in which he would take the same, as a Commissioner of the Treasury; upon Consideration thereof, it was resolved, that he cannot sit in Council, not having taken the Test in the Sense and Meaning of the Act of Parliament, and therefore was removed.

The Earl of Argyle's Explication of the Test when he took it.

I Have considered the Test, and I am very desirous to give Obedience as far as I can. I am confident the Parliament never intended to impose contradictory Oaths; therefore I think no Man can explain it but for himself. Accordingly I take it, as far as it is consistent with itself, and the Protestant Religion. And I do declare, that I mean not to bind up myself in my Station, and in a lawful way, to wish and endeavour any Alteration I think to the Advantage of Church or State, nor repugnant to the Protestant Religion and my Loyalty. And this I understand as a Part of my Oath.

But the Earl finding, as hath been narrated, this his Explication, though accepted and approved by his Highness and Council the Day before, to be this Day carped and offended at, and Advantages thereupon sought and designed against him, did immediately draw up the following Explication of his Explication; and for his own Vindication, did first communicate it to some privately, and thereafter intended to have offered it at his Trial for clearing of his Defences.

The Explanation of his Explication.

I Have delayed hitherto to take the Oath appointed by the Parliament to be taken, betwixt and the first of January next; but now being required, near two Months sooner, to take it, this Day peremptorily, or to refuse, I have considered the Test, and have seen several Objections moved against it, especially by many of the Orthodox Clergy, notwithstanding whereof, I have endeavoured to satisfy myself with a just Explanation, which I here offer, that I may both satisfy my Conscience and obey your Highness, and your Lordships Commands in taking the Test, though the Act of Parliament do not simply command the thing, but only under a Certification, which I could easily submit if it were with your Highness's Favour, and might be without Offence, but I love not to be singular; and I am very desirous to give Obedience in this and every thing as far as I can; and that which clears me is, that I am confident whatever any Man may think or say, to the Prejudice of this Oath; the Parliament never intended to impose contradictory Oaths; and because their Sense (they being the Framers and Imposers) is the true Sense, and that this Test enjoined is of no private Interpretation, nor are the King's Statutes to be interpreted but as they bear, and to the Intent they are made, therefore I think no Man, that is, no private Person, can explain it for another, to amuse or trouble him with (it may be) mistaken Glosses. But every Man, as he is to take it, so is to explain it for himself, and to endeavour to understand it, (notwithstanding all these Exceptions) in the Parliaments, which is its true and genuine Sense. I take it therefore, notwithstanding any Scruple made by any, as far as it is consistent with itself and the Protestant Religion, which is wholly in the Parliament's Sense, and their true Meaning; which [being present] I am sure was owned by all to be the Securing of the Protestant Religion, founded on the Word of God, and contained in the Confession of Faith recorded J. 6. p. 1. c. 4. and, not out of Scruple, as if any thing in the Test did import the contrary, but to clear myself from all Cavils; as if thereby I were bound up further than the true Meaning of the Oath. I do declare, that by that part of the Test, that there lies no Obligation on me, &c. I mean not to bind up myself, in my Station, and in a lawful way, still disclaiming all unlawful Endeavours, to wish, and endeavour any Alteration, I think, according to my Conscience, to the Advantage of Church or State, not repugnant to the Protestant Religion, and my Loyalty, and by my Loyalty, I understand no other thing than the Words plainly bear, to wit the Duty and Allegiance of all loyal Subjects; and this Explication I understand as a Part not of the Test, or Act of Parliament, but as a qualifying Part of my Oath that I am to swear; and with it I am willing to take the Test, if your Royal Highness and your Lordships allow me, or otherwise, in Submission to your Highness, and the Council's Pleasure, I am content to be held as a Refuser at present.

The Council's Letter to his Majesty, concerning their having committed the Earl of Argyle.

May it please your Sacred Majesty,

THE last Parliament having made so many and so advantageous Acts, for securing the Protestant Religion, the Imperial Crown of this Kingdom, and your Majesty's sacred Person, (whom God Almighty long preserve) and having, for the last, and as the best Way for securing all these, appointed a Test to be taken by all who should be entrusted with the Government; which bears expressly that the same should be taken in the plain and genuine Sense and Meaning of the Words; We were very careful not to suffer any to take the said Oath or Test with their own Glosses or Explications:

But the Earl of Argyle having, after some Delays, come to Council, to take the said Oath, as a Privy Councillor, spoke some Things which were not then heard, nor adverted to, and when his Lordship at his next Offering to take it in Council, as one of Commissioners of your Majesty's Treasury, was commanded to take it simply, he refused to do so, but gave in a Paper, shewing the only Sense in which he would take it; which Paper we all considered, as that which had in it gross and scandalous Reflections upon that excellent Act of Parliament; making it to contain Things contradictory and inconsistent, and thereby depraving your Majesty's Laws, misrepresenting your Parliament, and teaching your Subjects to evacuate and disappoint all Laws and Securities that can be enacted for the Preservation of the Government; suitable to which, his Lordship declares in that Paper, That he means not to bind up himself from making any Alterations he shall think fit for the Advantage of Church or State; and which Paper he desires may be looked upon as a Part of his Oath, as if he were the Legislator, and able to add a Part to the Act of Parliament. Upon serious Perusal of which Paper, we found ourselves obliged to send the said Earl to the Castle of Edinburgh, and to transmit the Paper to your Majesty, being expressly obliged to both these by your Majesty's express Laws. And we have commanded your Majesty's Advocate to raise a Pursuit against the said Earl, for being Author, and having given in the said Paper: And for the further Prosecution of all relating to this Affair, we expect your Majesty's Commands, which shall be most humbly and faithfully obeyed, by

The King's Answer to the Council's Letter.

C. R.

MOST dear, &c. having in one of your Letters directed unto us, of the 8th Instant, received a particular Account of the Earl of Argyle's refusing to take the Test simply, and of your Proceedings against him, upon the Occasion of his giving in a Paper, shewing the only Sense in which he will take it, which had in it gross and scandalous Reflections upon that excellent late Act of our Parliament there, by which the said Test was enjoined to be taken: We have now thought fit to let you know, that as we do hereby approve these your Proceedings, particularly your sending the said Earl to our Castle of Edinburgh; and your commanding our Advocate to raise a Pursuit against him, for being Author of, and having given in the said Paper; so we do also authorize you to do all Things that may concern the further Prosecution of all relating to this Affair. Nevertheless, it is our Express Will and Pleasure, that before any Sentence shall be pronounced against him, at the Conclusion of the Process, you send us a particular Account of what he shall be found guilty of, to the End that, after our being fully informed thereof, we may signify our further Pleasure in this Matter. For doing whereof, &c.

But as notwithstanding the Council's demanding, by their Letter, his Majesty's Allowance for prosecuting the Earl, they, before any Return, caused his Majesty's Advocate exhibit an Indictment against him, upon the Points of slandering and depraving, as hath been already remarked, so after having received his Majesty's Answer, the Design grows, and they thought fit to order a new Indictment containing, beside the former Points, the Crimes of Treason and Perjury, which accordingly was exhibit, and is here subjoined, the Difference betwixt the two Indictments being only in the Particulars above-noted.

Archibald Earl of Argyle,

YOU are indicted and accused, that albeit by the Common-Law of all well-govern'd Nations, and by the Municipal-Law and Acts of Parliament of this Kingdom; and particularly, by the 21st, and by the 43d Act, Par. 2. James I. and by the 83d Act, Par. 6. James V. and the 134th Act, Par. 8. James VI. and the 205th Act, Par. 14. James VI. All Leasing-makers and Tellers of them, are punishable with Tinsel of Life and Goods; like as by the 107th Act, Par. 7. James I. it is statuted, that no Man interpret the King's Statutes otherwise than the Statute bears, and to the Intent and Effect that they were made for, and as the Makers of them understood; and who so does in the contrary to be punished at the King's Will: And by the 10th Act, Par. 10. James VI. it is statuted, that none of his Majesty's Subjects, presume or take upon him publicly to declare, or privately to speak or write any Purpose of Reproach or Slander of his Majesty's Person, Estate, or Government, or to deprave his Laws, or Acts of Parliament, or misconstrue his Proceedings, whereby any Mistaking may be moved betwixt his Highness, his Nobility, and loving Subjects, in Time coming, under Pain of Death; certifying them that does in the contrary, they shall be reputed as seditious and wicked Instruments, Enemies to his Highness, and to the Commonwealth of this Realm, and the said Pain of Death shall be executed against them with all Rigour, to the Example of others: And by the second Act, Sess. 2. Par. 1. Char. II. it is statuted, that whosoever shall by writing, libelling, remonstrating, express, publish, or declare any Words or Sentences, to stir up the People to the Dislike of his Majesty's Prerogative and Supremacy, in Causes Ecclesiastick, or of the Government of the Church by Archbishops and Bishops, as it is now settled by Law, is under the Pain of being declared incapable to exercise any Office civil, ecclesiastick, or military, within this Kingdom, in any Time coming. Like as by the fundamental Laws of this Nation, by the 130th Act, Par. 8. James VI. it is decared, that none of his Majesty's Subjects presume to impune the Dignity or Authority of the three Estates, or to procure Innovation or Diminution of their Power and Authority, under the Pain of Treason. And that it is much more Treason in any of his Majesty's Subjects, to presume to alter Laws already made, or to make new Laws, or to add any Part to any Law, by their own Authority, that being to assume the Legislative Power to themselves, with his Majesty's highest, and most incommunicable Prerogative. Yet true it is, that albeit his Sacred Majesty did not only bestow on you the said Archibald Earl of Argyle those vast Lands, Jurisdctions and Superiorities justly forfeited to his Majesty by the Crimes of your deceased Father; preferring your Family to those who had served his Majesty against it, in the late Rebellion, but also pardoned and remitted to you the Crimes of leasing, making and misconstruing his Majesty's and his Parliament's Proceedings against the very Laws above-written, whereof you were found guilty, and condemned to die therefore, by the High Court of Parliament, the 25th of August, 1662. and raised you to the Title and Dignity of an Earl, and being a Member of all his Majesty's Judicatures. Notwithstanding of all these, and many other Favours, you the said Archibald Earl of Argyle, being put by the Lords of his Majesty's Privy-Council to take the Test, appointed by the Act of the last Parliament to be taken by all Persons in publick Trust, you, instead of taking the said Test, and swearing the same in the plain genuine Sense and Meaning of the Words, without any Equivocation, Mental Reservation, or Evasion whatsoever, you did declare against, and defame the said Act; and having, to the End you might corrupt others by your pernicious Sense, drawn the same in a Libel, of which Libel you dispersed and gave abroad Copies, whereby ill Impressions were given of the King and Parliament's Proceedings at a Time especially when his Majesty's Subjects were expecting what Submission should be given to the said Test; and being desired the next Day to take the same, as one of the Commissioners of his Majesty's Treasury, you did give in to the Lords of his Majesty's Privy-Council, and owned twice, in plain Judgment before them, the said defamatory Libel against the said Test and Act of Parliament; declaring that you had considered the said Test, and was desirous to give Obedience as far as you could: whereby you clearly insinuated, that you was not able to give full Obedience: In the second Article of which Libel you declare, that you were confident the Parliament never intended to impose contradictory Oaths; thereby to abuse the People with a Belief, that the Parliament had been so impious as really and actually to have imposed contradictory Oaths; and so ridiculous, as to have made an Act of Parliament (which should be most deliberate of all human Actions) quite contrary to their own Intentions: After which you subscribed, contrary to the Nature of all Oaths, and to the Acts of Parliament above-cited, that every Man must explain it for himself, and take it in his own Sense; by which not only that excellent Law, and the Oath therein specified, which is intended to be a Fence to the Government both of Church and State, but all other Oaths and Laws shall be rendered altogether useless to the Government. If every Man take the Oaths imposed by Law in his own Sense, then the Oath imposed is to no Purpose; for the Legislator cannot be sure that the Oath imposed by him will bind the Takers according to the Design and Intent for which he appointed it; and the Legislative Power is taken from the Imposers, and settled in the Taker of the Oath; and so he is allowed to be the Legislator, which is not only an open and violent depraving of his Majesty's Laws and Acts of Parliament, but is likewise a settling of the Legislative Power on private Subjects, who are to take such Oaths. In the third Article of that Paper you declare, that you take the Test in so far only as it is consistent with itself, and the Protestant Religion; by which you maliciously intimate to the People, that the said Oath is inconsistent with itself and with the Protestant Religion, which is not only a downright depraving of the said Act of Parliament, but is likewise a misconstruing of his Majesty's and the Parliament's Proceedings, and misrepresenting them to the People in the highest Degree, and in the tenderest Points they can be concerned; and implying, that the King and the Parliament have done Things inconsistent with the Protestant Religion, for securing of which, that Test was particularly intended. In the fourth Article you do expressly declare, that you mean not by taking the said Test, to bind up yourself from wishing and endeavouring any Alteration in a lawful Way that you shall think fit, for advancing of Church and State; whereby also it was designed by the said Act of Parliament and Oath, that no Man should make any Alteration in the Government of Church and State, as it is now established; and that it is the Duty of all good Subjects, in humble and quiet Manner, to obey the present Government: Yet you not only declare yourself, but by your Example you invite others to think themselves loosed from that Obligation; and that it is free for them to make any Alteration in either, as they shall think fit, concluding your whole Paper with these Words (and this I understand as a Part of my Oath); which is a treasonable Invasion upon the Royal Legislative Power, as if it were lawful for you to make to yourself an Act of Parliament; since he who can make any Part of an Act may make the whole, the Power and Authority in both being the same. Of the which Crimes above-mentioned, you the said Archibald Earl of Argyle are Actor, Art and Part; which being found by the Affize, you ought to be punished with the Pains of Death, Forfeiture and Escheat of Lands and Goods, to the Terror of others who commit the like hereafter.

An Abstract of the several Acts of Parliament upon which the Indictment against the Earl of Argyle was grounded.

Concerning Raisers of Rumors betwixt the King and his People. Chap. 1 Statutes of K. Rob. I.

IT is defended and forbidden, That no Man be a Conspirator or Inventor of Narrations or Rumors, by the which Occasion of Discord may arise betwixt the King and his People. And if any such Man shall be found and attainted thereof, incontinent he shall be taken and put in Prison, and there shall be surely kept up, ay and while the King declare his Will anent him.

Act 43. Par. 2. King James I. March 11, 1424. Leafing-makers for fault Life and Goods.

Item, It is ordained by the King and whole Parliament, That all Leafing-makers, and Tellers of them, which may engender Discord betwixt the King and his People, where-ever they may be gotten, shall be challenged by them that Power has, and tyne Life and Goods to the King.

Act 83. Par. 6. James V. Dec. 10, 1530. Of Leafing-makers.

Item, Touching the Article of Leafing-makers to the King's Grace, of his Barons, great Men and Leiges, and for Punishment to be put to them therefore, the King's Grace, with Advice of his three Estates, ratifies and approves the Acts and Statutes made thereupon before, and ordains the same to be put in Execution in all Points; and also statutes and ordains, That if any manner of Person makes any evil Information of his Highness to his Barons and Leiges, that they shall be punished in such Manner, and by the same Punishment as they that make Leafings to his Grace of his Lords, Barons, and Leiges.

Act 134. Par. 8. James VI. May 22, 1584. Anent Slanderers of the King, his Progenitors, Estate and Realm.

Forasmuch as it is understood to our Sovereign Lord, and his three Estates assembled in this present Parliament, what great Harm and Inconveniency has fallen in this Realm, chiefly since the beginning of the civil Troubles occurred in the Time of his Highness's minority, through the wicked and licentious, publick and private Speeches, and untrue Calumnies of divers of his Subjects, to the Disdain, Contempt, and Reproach of his Majesty, his Council and Proceedings, and to the Dishonour and Prejudice of his Highness, his Parents, Progenitors and Estate, stirring up his Highness's Subjects thereby to Misliking, Sedition, Unquietness, and to cast off their due Obedience to his Majesty; to their Evident Peril, Tinsel and Destruction: His Highness continuing always in Love and Clemency toward all his good Subjects, and most willing to seek the Safety and Preservation of them all, which wilfully, needlessly, and upon plain Malice, after his Highness's Mercy and Pardon oft-times afore granted, has procured themselves, by their treasonable Deeds, to be cut off, as corrupt Members of this Commonwealth. Therefore it is statute, and ordained by our Sovereign Lord, and his three Estates in this present Parliament, that none of his Subjects, of whatsoever Function, Degree, or Quality, in Time coming, shall presume, or take upon Hand, privately or publicly, in Sermons, Declamations, and familiar Conferences, to utter any false, slanderous, or untrue Speeches, to the Disdain, Reproach and Contempt of his Majesty, his Council and Proceedings, or to the Dishonour, Hurt, or Prejudice of his Highness, his Parents and Progenitors, or to meddle in the Affairs of his Highness, and his Estate present, by-gone, and in time coming, under the Pains contained in the Acts of Parliament anent Makers and Tellers of Leafings, certifying them that shall be tried, Contraveners thereof, or that hear such slanderous Speeches, and Reports not the same with Diligence, the said Pain shall be executed against them with all Rigour, in Example of others.

Act 205. Par. 14. King James VI. June 8, 1594. anent Leafing-makers, and Authors of Slanders.

OUR Sovereign Lord, with Advice of his Estates, in this present Parliament, ratifies, approves, and for his Highness and Successors, perpetually confirms the Act made by his noble Progenitors, King James the First, of worthy Memory, against Leafing-makers, the Act made by King James the Second, entituled, Against Leafing-makers and Tellers of them; the Act made by King James the Fifth, entituled, of Leafing-makers; and the Act made by his Highness's self, with Advice of his Estates in Parliament, upon the 22d Day of May, 1584. entituled, For the Punishment of the Authors of Slanders and untrue Calumnies against the King's Majesty, his Council and Proceedings, to the Dishonour and Prejudice of his Highness, his Parents, Progenitors, Crown and Estate; as also the Act made in his Highness's Parliament holden at Linlithgow upon the 10th of Dec. 1585, entituled, Against the Authors of slanderous Speeches or Writs; and statutes and ordains all the said Acts to be published of new, and to be put in Execution in Time coming, with this Addition, that whoever hears the said Leafings, Calumnies, or slanderous Speeches or Writs to be made, and apprehends not the Authors thereof, if it lies in his Power, and reveals not the same to his Highness, or one of his Privy-Council, or to the Sheriff, Steward, or Bailiff of the Shire, Stewards in Regality or Royalty, or to the Provost, or any of the Bailiffs within Burgh, by whom the same may come to the Knowledge of his Highness, or his said Privy-Council, where through the said Leafing-makers and Authors of slanderous Speeches may be called, tried, and punished according to the said Acts: The Hearer, and not Apprehender, [if it lie in his Power] and Concealer, and not Revealer of the said Leafing-makers, and Authors of the said slanderous Speeches or Writs, shall incur the like Pain and Punishment as the principal Offender.

Act 107. Par. 7. King James I. March 1, 1427. That none interpret the King's Statutes wrongously.

Item, The King, by Deliverance of Council, by manner of Statute, forbids, That no Man interpret his Statutes otherwise than the Statutes bear, and to the Intent and Effect that they were made for, and as the Maker of them understood; And whofo does the contrary, shall be punished at the King's Will.

Act 10. Par. 10. King James VI. Dec. 10, 1585. Authors of slanderous Speeches or Writs should be punished to the Death.

It is statute and ordained by our Sovereign Lord and three Estates, That all his Highness's Subjects content themselves in Quietness and dutiful Obedience to his Highness and his Authority; and that none of them presume, or take upon Hand publicly to declaim, or privately to speak any Purpose of Reproach or Slander of his Majesty's Person, Estate or Government; or misconstrue his Proceedings, whereby any Misliking may be proved betwixt his Highness and his Nobility, and loving Subjects in time coming, under the Pain of Death; certifying them that do in the contrary, they shall be reputed as seditious and wicked Instruments, Enemies to his Highness and the Commonwealth of this Realm: And the said Pain of Death shall be executed upon them with all Rigour, in Example of others.

Act for Preservation of his Majesty's Person, Authority and Government, May 1662.

—And further, It is by his Majesty and Estates of Parliament declared, statute and enacted, That if any Person or Persons shall, by writing, printing, praying, preaching, libelling, remonstrating, or by any malicious or advised speaking, express, publish, or declare any Words or Sentences, to stir up the People to the Hatred or Dislike of his Majesty's Royal Prerogative and Supremacy, in Causes Ecclesiastical, or of the Government of the Church by Archbishops and Bishops, as it is now settled by Law—That every such Person or Persons so offending, and being legally convicted thereof, are hereby declared incapable to enjoy or exercise any Place or Employment, civil, ecclesiastick, or military, within this Church and Kingdom, and shall be liable to such further Pains as are due by the Law in such Cases.

Act 130. Par. 8. James VI. May 22, 1584. Anent the Authority of the three Estates of Parliament.

THE King's Majesty considering the Honour and the Authority of his Supreme Court of Parliament, continued past all Memory of Man, unto their Days, as constitute upon the free Votes of the three Estates of this ancient Kingdom, by whom the same, under God, has ever been upholden, rebellious and traitorous Subjects punished, the good and faithful preserved and maintained, and the Laws and Acts of Parliament (by which all Men are governed) made and established. And finding the Power, Dignity, and Authority of the said Court of Parliament, of late Years called in some Doubt, at least, some curiously travelling to have introduced some Innovation thereant; his Majesty's firm Will and Mind always being, as it is yet, That the Honour, Authority, and Dignity of his said three Estates shall stand and continue in their own Integrity, according to the ancient and laudable Custom by-gone, without any Alteration or Diminution: Therefore it is statute and ordained by your said Sovereign Lord, and his said three Estates in this present Parliament, That none of his Leiges or Subjects presume, or take upon hand to impugne the Dignity and Authority of the said three Estates, or to seek or procure the Innovation or Diminution of the Power and Authority of the same three Estates, or any of them, in Time coming, under the Pain of Treason.

The Earl of Argyle's first Petition for Advocates, or Council to be allowed him.

To his Royal Highness, his Majesty's High Commissioner, and to the Right Honourable the Lords of his Majesty's Privy-Council.

The humble Petition of Archibald Earl of Argyle,

Sheweth,

THAT your Petitioner being criminally indicted before the Lords Commissioners of Justiciary, at the Instance of his Majesty's Advocate, for Crimes of an high Nature. And whereas in this Case no Advocate will readily plead for the Petitioner, unless they have your Royal Highness, and Lordships Special License and Warrant to that Effect, which is usual in the like Cases.

It is therefore humbly desired, that your Royal Highness and Lordships would give special Order and Warrant to Sir George Lockhart, his ordinary Advocate, to consult and plead for him in the aforesaid criminal Process, without incurring any Hazard upon that Account:

And your Petitioner shall ever pray.

Edinburgh, November 22, 1681.

The Council's Answer to the Earl of Argyle's first Petition, and his having Advocates allowed him.

HIS Royal Highness, his Majesty's High Commissioner, and Lords of Privy-Council do refuse the Desire of the above-written Bill, but allow any Lawyers the Petitioner shall employ, to consult and plead for him in the Process of Treason, and other Crimes, to be pursued against him at the Instance of his Majesty's Advocate.

Extr. By me,

WILL. PATERSON.

The Earl of Argyle's second Petition for Council to be allowed him.

To his Royal Highness, his Majesty's High Commissioner, and to the Right Honourable the Lords of his Majesty's Privy-Council.

The humble Petition of Archibald Earl of Argyle.

Sheweth,

THAT you Petitioner having given in a former Petition, humbly representing, That he being criminally indicted before the Lords Commissioners of Justiciary, at the Instance of his Majesty's Advocate, for Crimes of an high Nature: And therefore desired that your Royal Highness, and Lordships, would give special Warrant to Sir George Lockhart, to consult and plead for him: Whereupon your Royal Highness and Lordships did allow the Petitioner to make Use of such Advocates as he should think fit to call. Accordingly your Petitioner has desired Sir George Lockhart to consult and plead for him, he hath as yet refused your Petitioner. And by the 11th Parliament of King James the VI. Cap. 38. as it is the undeniable Privilege of all Subjects, accused for any Crimes, to have Liberty to provide themselves of Advocates, to defend their Lives, Honour, and Lands, against whatsoever Accusation; so the same Privilege is not only by Parliament 11 King James the VI. Cap. 90. farther asserted and confirmed, but also it is declared, that in case the Advocates refuse, the Judges are to compel them, lest the Party accused accused should be prejudiced: And this being an Affair of great Importance to your Petitioner, and Sir George Lockhart having been not only still his ordinary Advocate, but also by his constant Converse with him is best known to your Petitioner's Principles; and of whose eminent Abilities and Fidelity, your Petitioner (as many others have) hath had special Proof all along in his Concerns, and hath such singular Confidence in him, that he is most necessary to your Petitioner at this Occasion.

May it therefore please your Royal Highness and Lordships to interpose your Authority, by giving a special Order and Warrant to the said Sir George Lockhart, to consult and plead for him in the said criminal Process, conform to the Tenor of the said Acts of Parliament, and constant known Practice in the like Cases, which was never refused to any Subject of the meanest Quality, even to the greatest Criminals. And your Royal Highness's and Lordships Answer is humbly craved.

Edinburgh, November 24. 1681.

The Council's Answer to the Earl of Argyle's second Petition.

HIS Royal Highness, his Majesty's High-Commissioner, and Lords of Privy-Council, having considered the foresaid Petition, do adhere to their former Order, allowing Advocates to appear for the Petitioner in the Process aforesaid,

Extr. By me,
WILL. PATERSON.

The Earl of Argyle's Letter of Attorney, constituting Alexander Dunbar his Procurator, for requiring Sir George Lockhart to plead for him

WE Archibald Earl of Argyle do hereby substitute, constitute and ordain Alexander Dunbar, our Servitor, to be our Procurator, to pass and require Sir George Lockhart, Advocate, to consult and plead for us in the criminal Process intended against us, at the Instance of his Majesty's Advocate; and to compare with us, before the Lords Commissioners of Justiciary, upon the 12th of December next, conform to an Act of Council, dated the 22d of November instant, allowing any Lawyers that we should employ, to consult and plead for us in the said Process, and to another Act of Council of the 24th of November instant, relative to the former, and conform to the Acts of Parliament. In Witness whereof we have subscribed these Presents, at Edinburgh-Caste, Nov. 26, 1681. before these Witnesses, Duncan Campbell, Servitor to James Glen, Stationer in Edinburgh, and John Thom, Merchant in the said Burg.

An Instrument whereby the Earl of Argyle required Sir George Lockhart to appear and plead for him.

Apud Edenburgum vigesimo sexto die Mensis Novembris, Anno Domini millesimo sexcentesimo octuagesimo primo, & Anno Regni Car. II. Regis trigesimo tertio.

THE which Day, in Presence of me Notary-Publick, and Witnesses under-subscribed, compared personally Alexander Dunbar, Servitor to a noble Earl, Archibald Earl of Argyle, as Procurator, and in Name of the said Earl, conform to a Procurator subscribed by the said Earl at the Castle of Edinburgh, upon the 21st Day of November, 1681. making and constituting the said Alexander Dunbar his Procurator, to the Effect under-written; and passed to the personal Presence of Sir George Lockhart, Advocate, in his own Lodging in Edinburgh, having and holding in his Hands an Act of his Majesty's Privy-Council, of the Date of the 22d of November, 1681, instant, proceeding upon a Petition given in by the said Earl of Argyle to the said Lords, shewing, that he being criminally indicted before the Lords Commissioners of Justiciary, at the Instance of his Majesty's Advocate, for Crimes of an high Nature; and whereas in that Case no Advocates would readily plead for the said Earl, unless they had his Royal Highness's and their Lordships special License and Warrant to that Effect, which is usual in the like Cases: And by the said Petition humbly supplicated, that his Highness and the Council would give special Order and Command to the said Sir George Lockhart, the said Earl's ordinary Advocate, to consult and plead for him in the foresaid criminal Process, without incurring any Hazard upon that Account. His Royal Highness, and Lords of the said Privy-Council, did refuse the Desire of the said Petition, but allowed any Lawyers the Petitioner should employ, to consult and plead for him in the Process of Treason, and other Crimes to be pursued against him, at the Instance of his Majesty's Advocate. And also the said Alexander Dunbar having and holding in his Hands another Act of the said Lords of Privy-Council, of the 24th of the said Month, relative to, and narrating the foresaid first Act, and proceeding upon another Supplication given in by the said Earl, to the said Lords, craving, that his Royal Highness and the said Lords would interpose their Authority, by giving a positive and special Order and Warrant to the said Sir George Lockhart, to consult and plead with him in the aforesaid criminal Process, conform to the Tenor of the Acts of Parliament mentioned and particularized in the said Petition, and frequent and known Practice in the like Cases, which was never refused to any Subjects of the meanest Quality. His Royal Highness, and Lords of Privy-Council, having considered the aforesaid Petition, did, by the said Act, adhere to their former Order, allowing Advocates to appear for the said Earl in the Process aforesaid, as the said Acts bear; and produced the said Acts Procuratory aforesaid to the said Sir George Lockhart, who took the same in his Hands, and read them over successive; and after reading thereof, the said Alexander Dunbar Procurator, and in Name and Behalf aforesaid, solemnly required the said Sir George Lockhart as the said noble Earl's ordinary Advocate, and as a Lawyer and Advocate, upon the said Earl's reasonable Expence, to consult and advise the said Earl's said Process at any Time and Place the said Sir George should appoint to meet thereupon, conform to the foresaid two Acts of Council, and Acts of Parliament therein mentioned, appointing Advocates to consult in such Matters: which the said Sir George Lockhart altogether refused: Whereupon the said Alexander Dunbar, as Procurator, and in Name aforesaid, asked and took the Instruments, one or more, in the Hands of me Notary-Publick under-subscribed. And these Things were done within the said Sir George Lockhart's Lodging, on the South Side of the Street of Edinburgh, in the Lane Mercat, within the Dining-Room of the said Lodging, betwixt four and five Hours in the Afternoon, Day, Month, Year, Place, and of his Majesty's Reign, respective aforesaid, before Robert Dixone, and John Leshy, Servitors to John Campbell, Writer to his Majesty's Signet, and Dowgall Mac Alester, Messenger in Edinburgh, with divers others, called and required to the Premises.

Wednesday, the 12th of December, the Day of Compareance assigned to the Earl being now come, he was brought by a Guard of Soldiers from the Castle to the Place appointed for the Trial, and the Justice Court being met and fenced, the Earl, now Marquis of Queensbury, then Justice-General, the Lords Nairn, Collingtown, Forret, Newton and Kirkcubright, the Lords of Justiciary sitting in Judgment, and the other Formalities also performed, the Indictment above set down was read, and the Earl spoke as follows.

The Earl of Argyle's Speech to the Lord Justice General, and the Lords of the Justiciary, after he had been arraigned, and his Indictment read.

My Lord Justice General, &c.

I Look upon it as an undeniable Privilege of the meanest Subject to explain his own Words in the most benign Sense: And even when Persons are under an ill Character, the Misconstruction of Words in themselves not ill, can only reach a Presumption or Aggravation but not any more.

But it is strange to alledge, as well as, I hope, impossible, to make any that know me believe, that I could intend any thing but what was honest and honourable, suitable to the Principles of my Religion and Loyalty, though I did not explain myself at all.

My Lord, I pray you be not offended that I take up a little of your Time, to tell you, I have from my Youth made it my Business to serve his Majesty faithfully, and have constantly, to my Power, appeared in his Service; especially in all Times of Difficulty, and have never joined, nor complied with any Interest or Party, contrary to his Majesty's Authority, and have all along served him in his own way, without a Frown from his Majesty these thirty Years.

As soon as I passed the Schools and Colleges, I went to travel to France and Italy, and was abroad 1647, 1648, and till the end of 1649.

My first Appearance in the World was to serve his Majesty as Colonel of his Foot-Guards. And though at that time all the Commissioners were given by the then Parliament, yet I would not serve without a Commission from his Majesty, which I have still the Honour to have by me.

After the Misfortune of Worcester, I continued in Arms for his Majesty's Service; when Scotland was over-run with Usurpers; and was alone with some of my Friends in Arms in the Year 1652. and did then keep up some Appearance of Opposition to them: And General Major Dean coming to Argyleshire, and planting several Garrisons, he no sooner went away but we fell upon the Garrisons he had left, and in one Day took two of them, and cut off a considerable Part of a third, and carried away in all about three hundred Prisoners: And in the End of that Year, I sent Captain Shaw to his Majesty, with my humble Opinion, how the War might be carried on; who returned to me with Instructions and Orders which I have yet lying by me.

After which, I joined with those his Majesty did commissionate, and stood out till the last, that the Earl of Middleton, his Majesty's Lieutenant-General, gave me Orders to capitulate, which I did without any other Engagements to the Rebels but allowing Persons to give Bail for my living peaceable: And did at my capitulating relieve several Prisoners by Exchange, whereof my Lord Granard, out of the Castle of Edinburgh, was one.

It is notary known, that I was forefaulted by the Usurpers, who were so jealous of me, that, contrary to their Faith, within eight Months after my Capitulation, upon Pretence I kepted Horses above the Value they seized on me, and kepted me in one Prison after another, till his Majesty's happy Restoration, and this only because I would not engage not to serve his Majesty, though there was no Oath required.

I do with all Gratitude acknowledge his Majesty's Goodness, Bounty and Royal Favours to me, when I was pursued before the Parliament in the Year 1662. His Majesty was graciously pleased not to send me here in any opprobrious Way, but upon a bare verbal Paroll. Upon which I came down Post, and presented myself a Fortnight before the Day. Notwithstanding whereof I was immediately clapt up in the Castle, but having satisfied his Majesty at that Time of my entire Loyalty, I did not offer to plead by Advocates. And his Majesty was not only pleased to pardon my Life, and to restore me to a Title and Fortune, but to put me in Trust in his Service, in the most eminent Judicatories of this Kingdom, and to heap Favours upon me, far beyond whatever I did or can deserve: Though I hope his Majesty hath always found me faithful and thankful, and ready to bestow all I have, or can have, for his Service: And I hope never had had nor ever shall have Ground to repent any Favour he hath done me. And if I were now really guilty of the Crimes libelled, I should think myself a great Villain.

The next Occasion I had to shew my particular Zeal to his Majesty's Service was in Anno 1666, when the Infurrection was made that was reported at Pentland-Hills. At the very first, the intercourse betwixt this Place and me was stopt, so that I had neither Intelligence nor Orders from the Council, nor from the General; but upon a Letter from the now Archbishop of St. Andrews, telling me there was a Rebellion like to be in the three Kingdoms, and bidding me beware of Ireland and Kintyre, I brought together about two thousand Men: I seized all the Gentlemen in Kintyre that had not taken the Declaration, though I found them peaceable. And I sent a Gentleman to General Dalziel, to receive his Orders, who came to him just as they were going to the Action at Pentland, and was with him in it; and I kept my Men together till his Return. And when I met with considerable Trouble from my Neighbours, rebelliously in Arms, and had Commissions both on publick and private Accounts, have I not carried dutifully to his Majesty, and done what was commanded with a just Moderation, which I can prove under the Hands of my Enemies, and by many infallible Demonstrations?

Pardon me a few Words: Did I not in this present Parliament shew my Readiness to serve his Majesty and Royal Family, in asserting vigorously the lineal legal Succession of the Crown, and had a Care to have it expressed in the Commissions of the Shires and Burghs I had Interest in? Was I not for offering proper Supplies to his Majesty and his Successor? And did I not concur to bind the Landlords for their Tenants, although I was mainly concerned? And have I not always kept my Tenants in Obedience to his Majesty?

I say all this, not to arrogate any thing for doing what was my Honour and Duty to his Majesty; but if after all this, upon no other Ground but Words that were spoken in absolute Innocence, and without the least Design, except for clearing my own Conscience, and that are not capable of the ill Sense wrested from them by the Libel, I should be further troubled, what Assurance can any of the greatest Quality, Trust, or Innocency have, that they are secure? especially considering, that so many Scruples have been started, as all know, not only by many of the Orthodox Clergy, but by whole Presbyteries, Synods, and some Bishops, which were thought so considerable, that an eminent Bishop took the Pains to write a Treatise, that was read over in Council, and allowed to be printed, and a Copy given to me, which contains all the Expressions I am charged for, and many more that may be stretched to a worse Sense.

Have I not shewed my Zeal to all the Ends of the Test? How then can it be imagined that I have any sinister Design in any thing that I have said? If I had done any thing contrary to it all the Course of my Life, which I hope shall not be found, yet one Act might pretend to be excused by a Habit. But nothing being questioned but the sense of Words misconstrued to the greatest Height, and stretched to imaginary Insinuations, quite contrary to my Scope and Design, and so far contrary, not only to my Sense, but my Principles, Interest, and Duty, that I hope my Lord Advocate will think he hath gone too far on in this Process, and say plainly what he knows to be Truth by his Acquaintance with me, both in publick and private, viz. That I am neither Papist nor Fanatick, but truly loyal in my Principles and Practices.

The hearing of this Libel would trouble me beyond most of the Sufferings of my Life if my Innocence did not support me, and the Hopes of being vindicated of this and other Calumnies before this publick and noble Auditory.

I leave my Defences to these Gentlemen that plead for me, they know my Innocence, and how groundless that Libel is.

I shall only say, as my Life hath most of it been spent in serving and suffering for his Majesty; so, whatever be the Event of this Process, I resolve, while I breathe, to be loyal and faithful to his Majesty. And whether I live publicly or in Obscurity, my Head, my Heart, nor my Hand, shall never be wanting where I can be useful to his Majesty's Service. And while I live, and when I die, I shall pray, that God Almighty would bless his Majesty with a long, happy, and prosperous Reign; and that the lineal legal Successors of the Crown may continue Monarchs of all his Majesty's Dominions, and be Defenders of the true Primitive, Christian, Apostolick, Catholick, Protestant Religion, while Sun and Moon endure.

God save the King.

The King's own Letter to this Nobleman, when he was Lord Lorn.

Cologne, Dec. 1654.

My Lord Lorn,

I AM very glad to hear from Middleton, what Affection and Zeal you show to my Service, how constantly you adhere to him in all his Distresses, and what good Service you have performed upon the Rebels. I assure you, you shall find me very just, and kind to you in rewarding what you have done and suffered for me; and I hope you will have more Credit and Power with those of your Kindred, and Dependants upon your Family, to engage them with you for me, than any body else can have to seduce them against me; and I shall look upon all those who shall refuse to follow you as unworthy of any Protection hereafter from me, which you will let them know. This honest Bearer, M——, will inform you of my Condition and Purposes, to whom you will give Credit; and he will tell you, that I am very much

Your affectionate Friend,

C. R.

General Middleton's Order to the Earl of Argyle, who was then Lord Lorn, for capitulating with the English, wherein he largely expresseth his Worth and Loyalty.

John Middleton, Lieutenant-General, next and immediately under his Majesty, and Commander in Chief of all the Forces raised, and to be raised, within the Kingdom of Scotland.

BEING the Lord Lorn hath given so singular Proofs of clear and perfect Loyalty to the King's Majesty, and of pure and constant Affection to the Good of his Majesty's Affairs, as never hitherto to have any ways complied with the Enemy, and to have been principally instrumental in the enlivening of this late War, and one of the chief and first Movers in it, and hath readily, chearfully, and gallantly engaged, and resolutely and constantly continued active in it, notwithstanding the many powerful Dissuasions, Discouragements, and Oppositions he hath met withal from divers Hands, and hath, in the carrying on of the Service, shewn such signal Fidelity, Integrity, Generosity, Prudence, Courage, and Conduct, and such high Virtue, Industry, and Ability, as are suitable to the Dignity of his noble Family, and the Trust his Majesty reposed in him; and hath not only stood out against all Temptations and Enticements, but hath most nobly crossed and repelled Designs and Attempts of deserting the Service, and persisted loyally and firmly in it to the very last, through excessive Toil and many Difficulties, misregarding all personal Inconveniences, and chusing the Loss of Friends, Fortune, and all private Concernments, and to endure the utmost Extremities rather than to swerve in the least from his Duty, or taint his Reputation with the meanest Shadow of Disloyalty and Dishonour. I do, therefore, hereby testify and declare, that I am perfectly satisfied with his whole Deportments, in relation to the Enemy, and this late War; and do highly approve them, as being not only above all I can express of their Worth, but almost beyond all Parallel. And I do withal hereby both allow, and most earnestly desire, and wish him, to lose no Time in taking such Course for his Safety and Preservation by Treaty and Agreement, or Capitulation, as he shall judge most fit and expedient for the Good of his Person, Family, and Estate, since inevitable and invincible Necessity hath forced us to lay aside this War. And I can now no other Way express my Respects to him, nor contribute my Endeavour to do him Honour and Service. In Testimony whereof I have signed and sealed these Presents at Dunveagave, the last Day of March, 1655.

John Middleton.

Another Letter from the Earl of Middleton, to the same Purpose.

Paris, April 17, 1655.

My noble Lord,

I AM hopeful, that the Bearer of this Letter will be found one who has been a most faithful Servant to your Lordship, and my kind Friend, and a Sharer in my Troubles. Indeed I have been strengthened by him to support and overcome many Difficulties. He will acquaint you with what hath past, which truly was strange to both of us, but your own Re-encounters will lessen them. My Lord, I shall be faithful in giving you that Character which your worth and Merit may justly challenge. I profess it is, next to the Ruin of the Service, one of my chiefest Regrets that I could not possibly wait upon you before my going from Scotland, that I might have settled a Way of Correspondence with you, and that your Lordship might have understood me better than yet you do; I should have been plain in every thing, and indeed have made your Lordship my Confessor: And I am hopeful the Bearer will say somewhat for me, and I doubt not but your Lordship will trust him. If it shall please God to bring me safe from beyond Sea, your Lordship shall hear from me by a sure Hand. Sir Ro. M. will tell you a Way of corresponding. So that I shall say no more at present, but that I am, without Possibility of Change,

My noble Lord,

Your Lordship's most faithful,

and most humble Servant,

John Middleton.

A Letter from the Earl of Glencairn, testifying his Esteem for this Noble Person, and the Sense he had of his Loyalty to the King, when few had the Courage to own him.

My Lord,

LEST it may be my Misfortune, in all these great Revolutions, to be misrepresented to your Lordship, as a Person unworthy of your favourable Opinion (an Artifice very frequent in these Times) I did take Occasion to call for a Friend and Servant of yours, the Laird of Spanie, on whose Discretion I did adventure to lay forth my Heart's Desire, to obviate in the Bud any of these Misunderstandings. Your Lordship's true Worth and Zeal to your Country's Happiness being so well known to me, and confirmed by our late Suffering-Acquaintance: And now finding how much it may conduce to these great Ends, we all wish that a perfect Unity may be amongst all good and honest-hearted Scotchmen, though there be few more insignificant than myself: Yet my Zeal for those Ends obliges me to say, that if your Lordship's Health and Affairs could have permitted you to have been at Edinburgh in these late Times, you would have seen a great Inclination and Desire, amongst all here, of a perfect Unity, and of a mutual Respect to your Person, as of chief Eminence and Worth. And I here shall set it under my Hand, to witness against all my Informers, that none did with more Passion, nor shall with more continued Zeal, witness themselves to be true Honourers of you, than he who desires infinitely to be esteemed,

My Lord,

Your most humble Servant,

GLENCAIRN.

What I cannot well write, I hope this discreet Gentleman will tell you, in my Name: And I shall only beg leave to say, that I am your most noble Lady's humble Servant.

After the reading of which Order and Letters, which yet the Court refused to record, the Earl's Advocate, or Council, Sir George Lockhart said in his Defence as follows.

Sir George Lockhart's Argument and Plea for the Earl of Argyle.

SIR George Lockhart for the Earl of Argyle, alledgeth, That the Libel is not relevant, and whereupon he ought to be put to the Knowledge of an Inquest. For,

M m m

It

It is alledged in the general, That all criminal Libels, whereupon any Person's Life, Estate and Reputation, can be drawn in Question, should be founded upon clear, positive and exprefs Acts of Parliament, and the Matter of Fact which is libelled, to be the contravention of those Laws, should be plain, clear, and direct Contraventions of the same, and not argued by Way of Implications and Inferences. Whereas in this Case, neither the Acts of Parliament founded upon, and libelled, can be in the least the Foundation of this Libel: Nor is the Explication which is pretended to be made by the Pannel, at the Time of the taking of his Oath (if considered) any Contravention of those Laws; which being premised, and the Pannel denying the Libel, as to the whole Articles and Points therein-contained, it is alledged in special:

That the Libel, in so far as it is founded upon the 21st Chap. Stat. 1. Robert I. and upon 83d Act, Par. 6. James V. the 43d Act, Par. 2. James I. and upon the 83d Act, Par. 10. James V. and upon 84th Act, Par. 8. James VI. and upon the 10th Act, Par. 10. James VI. and upon the 2d Act, Par. 1. Sec. 2. of his Sacred Majesty; and inferring thereupon, that the Pannel, by the pretended Explication given in by him to the Lords of his Majesty's Privy-Council, as the Sense of the Oath he had taken, doth commit the Crime of Leasing-making, and depraving his Majesty's Laws: The Inference and Subsumption is most unwarrantable, and the Pannel, though any such thing were acknowledged and proved, can never be found guilty of contravening these Acts of Parliament. In respect it is evident, upon perusal and Consideration of these Acts of Parliament, that they only concern the Case of Leasing-making tending to Sedition, and to beget Discord betwixt his Majesty and his Subjects, and the Dislike of his Majesty's Government, and the Reproach of the same. And the said Laws and Acts of Parliament were never understood or libelled upon, in any other Sense. And all the former Acts of Parliament, which relate to the Crime of Leasing-making in general Terms, and under the Qualification foresaid, as tending to beget Discord betwixt his Majesty and his Subjects, are explained and fully declared, as to what is the true Meaning and Import thereof, by the 134th Act, Par. 8. James VI. which relates to the same Crime of Leasing-making, and which is expressly described in these Terms, to be wicked and licentious, publick and private Speeches, and untrue Calumnies to the Disdain and Contempt of his Majesty's Council and Proceedings, and to the Dishonour and Prejudice of his Highness and his Estate, stirring up his Highness's Subjects to Mifliking and Sedition, and Unquietness, which being the true Sense and Import of the Acts of Parliament made against Leasing-makers, there is nothing can be inferred from the Pannel's alledged Explication, which can be wrested or construed to be a Contravention of these Laws: In respect,

I. It is known by the whole Tenor of his Life, and graciously acknowledged by his Sacred Majesty, by a Letter under his Royal Hand, that the Pannel did ever most zealously, vigorously, and faithfully promote and carry on his Majesty's Service and Interest, even in the worst and most difficult Times: Which is also acknowledged by a Pass under the Earl of Middleton's Hand, who had then a special Commission from his Majesty, for carrying on his Majesty's Service in this Kingdom, as Lieutenant-General under his Majesty; and by a Letter under the Earl's Hand, of the Date, both which do contain high Expressions of the Pannel's Loyalty, and of the great Services he had performed for his Majesty's Interest. And his Majesty, as being conscious thereof, and perfectly knowing the Pannel's Loyalty, and his Zeal and Faithfulness for his Service, did think fit to entrust the Pannel in Offices and Capacities of the greatest Trust of the Kingdom. And it is a just and rational Presumption, which all Law makes and infers, that the Words and Expressions of Persons, who by the Tenor and Course of their Lives have expressed their Duty and Loyalty to his Majesty's Interest, are ever to be interpreted, and understood in meliorem partem. And by way of Implication and inference, to conclude and infer Crimes from the same, which the Ufer of such Words and Expressions never meant nor designed, is both unreasonable and unjust.

II. As the foresaid Acts of Parliament made against Leasing-makers, and Depravers of his Majesty's Laws, only proceed in the Terms foresaid, where the Words and Speeches are plain, tending to beget Discord between the King and his Subjects, and to the Reproach and Dislike of his Government, and when the same are spoke and vented in a subdulous, pernicious, and fraudulent Manner: So they never were, nor can be understood to proceed in the Case of a Person offering in the Presence of a publick Judicature (whereof he had the Honour to be a Member) his sincere and plain Meaning and Apprehension of what he conceived to be the true Sense of the Act of Parliament imposing and enjoining the Test: There being nothing more opposite to the Act of Parliament made against Leasing-making, and venting and spreading abroad the same upon Seditious Designs, than the foresaid Plain and open Declaration of his Sense and Apprehension, what was the Meaning of the said Act of Parliament. And it is of no Import to infer any Crime, and much less of any of the Crimes libelled, albeit the Pannel had erred and mistaken in his Apprehension of the Act of Parliament. And it were a strange Extension of the Act of Parliament made against Leasing-makers, requiring the Qualifications foresaid and the Acts against depraving his Majesty's Laws, to make the Pannel, or any other Person guilty upon the Mistakes and Misapprehensions of the Sense of the Laws, wherein Men may mistake and differ very much, and even eminent Lawyers and Judges. So that the Acts of Parliament against Leasing-making, and depraving his Majesty's Laws, can only be understood in the exprefs Terms and Qualifications foresaid. Like as it neither is libelled, nor can be proven, that the Pannel, before he was called and required by the Lords of his Majesty's Privy-Council to take the Oath, did ever, by Word or Practice, use any reproachful Speeches of the said Act of Parliament, or of his Majesty's Government; but being required to take the Oath, he did humbly, with all Submission, declare what he apprehended to be the Sense of the Act of Parliament, enjoining the Test, and in what Sense he had Freedom to take the same.

III. The Act of Parliament enjoining the Test does not enjoin the same to be taken by all Persons whatsoever, but only prescribes it as a Qualification, without which Persons could not assume or continue to act in publick Trust: Which being an Oath to be taken by so solemn an Invocation of the Name of Almighty God, it is not only allowable by the Laws and Customs of all Nations, and the Opinion of all Divines, and Casuists, Popish or Protestant, but also commended, that where a Party has any Scrupulosity, or Unclearness in his Conscience, as to the Matter of the Oath, that he should exhibit and declare the Sense and Meaning in which he is willing and able to take the Oath. And it is not at all material, whether the Scruples of a Man's Conscience, in the Matter of an Oath, be in themselves just or groundless, it being a certain Maxim, both in Law and Divinity, that Conscientia etiam erronea ligat: And therefore though the Pannel had thought fit, for the clearing and Exoneration of his own Conscience, in a Matter of the highest Concern as to his Peace and Repose, to have expressed and declared the exprefs Sense in which he could take the Oath, whether the said Sense was consistent with the Act of Parliament, or not, yet it does not in the least import any Matter of Reproach or Reflection upon the Justice or Prudence of the Parliament in imposing the said Oath: But allenarly does evince the Weakness and Scrupulosity of a Man's Conscience, who neither did, nor ought to have taken the Oath but with an Explanation that would have saved his Conscience to his Apprehension. Otherwise he had grossly sinned before God, even though it was Conscientia errans. And this is allowed and prescribed by all Protestant Divines, as indispensably necessary, and was never thought to import any Crime, and is also commended even by Popish Casuists themselves, who though they allow, in some Cases, of Mental Reservations and Equivocations, yet the exprefs Declaration of the Sense of the Party is allowed and commended, as much more ingenuous: And tutius Remedium Conscientiæ ne illaqueetur, as appears by Bellarmino de Juramento, and upon the same Title de Interpretatione Juramenti; and Lessius, that famous Casuist, de Justitia & Jur. Dubitatione 8, 9. utrum si quis salvo animo aliquid Juramento promittat obligetur, & quale peccatum hoc sit. And which is the general Opinion of all Casuists, and all Divines, as may appear by Amesius, in his Treatise de Conscientia, Sanderfon de Juramento, Prelectione secunda. And such an exprefs Declaration of the Sense and Meaning of any Party when required to take an Oath, for no other End but for the clearing and Exoneration of his own Conscience, was never in the Opinion of any Lawyer, or any Divine, construed to be the Crime of Leasing-making, or of defamatory Libels, or depraving of publick Laws, or reproaching or misconstruing of the Government: But on the contrary, by the universal Suffrage of all Protestant Divines, there is expressly required, in Cases of a scrupulous Conscience, an Abhorrence and Detestation of all reserved Senses, and of all Amphibologies and Equivocations, which are in themselves unlawful and reprobate, upon that unanswerable Reason, that Juramentum being the highest Act of Devotion and Religion, in eo requiritur maxima simplicitas; and that a Party is obliged, who has any Scruples of Conscience, publickly and openly to clear and declare the same.

IV. Albeit it is not controverted, but that a Legislator, imposing an Oath, or any publick Authority, before whom the Oath is taken, may, after hearing of the Sense and Explication which a Person is willing to put upon it, either reject or accept of the same, if it be conceived not to be consistent with the genuine Sense of the Oath: Yet though it were rejected, it was never heard of, or pretended, that the Offering of a Sense does import a Crime, but that notwithstanding thereof, Habetur pro Rasantante, and as if he had not taken the Oath, and to be liable to the Certification of Law, as if he had been a Refuser.

V. The Pannel having publickly and openly declared the Sense in which he was free to take the Oath, it is offered to be proved, that he was allowed, and did accordingly proceed to the taking the Oath, and did thereafter take his Place, and sit and vote, during that Sederunt of Privy-Council. So as the pretended Sense and Explication, which he did then emit and give, can import no Crime against him.

VI. It is also offered to be proved, That before the Pannel was required to take the Oath, or did appear before his Royal Highness, and Lords of the Privy-Council, to take the same, there were a great many Papers spread abroad from Persons, and Ministers of the Orthodox Clergy; and, as the Pannel is informed, some thereof presented to the Bishops of the Church, in the name of Synods and Presbyteries, which did, in downright Terms, charge the Test and Oath with alledged Contradictions and inconsistencies. And for Satisfaction whereof, some of the learned and Reverend Bishops of the Church did write a learned and satisfying Answer, called, A Vindication of the Test, for clearing the Scruples, Difficulties and Mistakes that were objected against it. And which Vindication and Answer was exhibited, and read before the Lords of his Majesty's Privy-Council, and allowed to be printed: And from which the Pannel argues,

1. That it neither is, nor can be pretended in this Libel, that the alledged Explication, wherein he did take the Oath, does propose the Scruples of his Conscience in these Terms, which were proposed by the Authors of these Objections, which do flatly and positively assert, that the Oath and Test do contain Matters of Inconsistency and Contradiction; whereas all that is pretended in this Libel, with the most abominable Violence that can be put upon the Words, is arguing Implications and Inferences; which neither the Words are capable to bear, nor the Sincerity of the Earl's Intention and Design, nor the Course of his by-past Life can possibly admit of. And yet none of the Persons who were Authors of such Papers, were ever judged or reputed criminal or guilty, and to be prosecuted for the odious and infamous Crimes libelled, Treason, Leasing-making, Perjury, and the like.

2. The Pannel does also argue from the said Matter of Fact, that the alledged Explication libelled can neither in his Intention and Design, nor in the Words, infer or import any Crime against him, because, before his being required, or appearing to take the Oath, there were spread abroad such Scruples and Objections, by some of the Orthodox Clergy.

and others; so that the Earl can never in any Sense be construed in his Explication wherein he took the Oath, to have done it animo infamandi, and to declaim against the Government: For the Scruples and Objections that were spread abroad by others, were a fair and rational Occasion why the Earl in any Sense or Explication which he offered might have said, that he was confident the Parliament never intended to impose contradictory Oaths; and this is so far from importing the Insinuations and Inference made by the Libel, that thereby the Parliament were so impious as to impose contradictory Oaths, as on the contrary, considering the Circumstances fore-mentioned, that there were Papers spread abroad, insinuating, that there were Inconsistencies and Contradictions contained therein; the said Expression was an high Vindication of the Honour and Justice of the Parliament, against the Calumnies and Misrepresentations which were cast upon it, and was also a just Rise for the Pannel, for the clearing and Exoneration of his own Conscience, in the various Senses and Apprehensions which he found were going abroad as to the said Test, humbly to offer his Sense, in which he was clear and satisfied to take the Oath.

VII. To the Libel, in so far as it is founded upon the Act of Parliament, viz. Act. 130. Par. 8. James VI. declaring, That none should presume to impugn the Dignity or Authority of the three Estates of Parliament, or procure any Invasion or Diminution thereof, under the Pain of Treason; as also, in so far as it is pretended in the Libel, That the Pannel, by offering the Sense and Explication libelled, has assumed the Legislative Power, which is incommunicable, and has made a Law, or Part of a Law.

It is answered, The Libel is most groundless and irrelevant, and against which the Act of Parliament is opposed, which is so plain and evident upon the reading thereof, that it neither is nor can be subject to the least Cavillation: And the plain Meaning whereof is nothing else but to impugn the Authority of Parliaments, as if the King and Parliament had not a Legislative Power, or were not the highest Representative of the Kingdom; or that any of the three Estates were not essentially requisite to constitute the Parliament. And besides there is nothing more certain, than that the Occasion of the said Act, it's being made was in relation to the Bishops and Clergy: And there is nothing in the pretended Explanation, that can be wrested to import the least Contravention of the said Act, or to be an impugning of the three Estates of Parliament, or a seeking any Innovation therein. And it is admired, with what Shadow of Reason it can be pretended, that the Pannel has assumed a Legislative Power, or made a Part of a Law, seeing all that is contained in the alledged Explication libelled, is only a Declaration of the Earl's Sense in which he was satisfied to take the Oath, and so respected none but himself, and for the clearing of his own Conscience, which justly indeed the Word of God calls a Law to himself, without any inroaching upon the Legislative Power. And where was it ever debated, but that a Man in the taking of an Oath, if as to his Apprehensions he thought any thing in it deserved to be cleared, might declare the same, or that his exhibiting, at the Time of the taking of the Oath, his Sense and Explication wherein he did take it, was ever reputed or pretended to be the assuming of a Legislative Power, it being the universal Practice of all Nations to allow this Liberty; and which Sense may be either rejected or accepted, as the Legislator shall think fit, importing no more but a Party's private Sense, for the Exoneration of his own Conscience? And as to that Member of the Libel founded upon Act 19. Par. 3. Queen Mary, it contains nothing but a Declaration of the Pain of Perjury, and there is nothing in the Explication libelled, which can in the least be inferred as a Contravention of the said Act, in respect if it should be proved, that the Pannel, at the Time of the taking of the Oath, did take it in the Words of the said Explication, as his Sense of the Oath, it is clear that the Sense being declared at the Time of taking the Oath, and allowed as the Sense wherein it was taken, the Pannel can only be understood to have taken it in that Sense. And although public Authority may consider whether the Sense given by the Pannel does satisfy the Law or not, yet that can import no more, though it was found not to satisfy, but to hold the Pannel as a Refuser of the Oath: But it is absolutely impossible to infer the Crimes of Perjury upon it, being, as is pretended by the Libel, the Pannel did only take it with the Declaration of the Sense and Explication libelled.

VIII. As the Explication libelled does not at all import all, or any of the Crimes contained in the said Libel, so by the common Principles of all Law, where a Person does emit Words for the clearing and Exoneration of his own Conscience, although there were any Ambiguity, or Unclearness, or Involvedness in the Tenor or Import of the Expressions or Words, yet they are ever to be interpreted, Interpretatione benigna & favorabili, according to the general Principles of Law and Reason. And it never was, nor can be refused to any Person to interpret and put a congruous Sense upon his own Words, especially the Pannel being a Person of eminent Quality, and who hath given great Demonstration, and undeniable Evidences of his fixt and unalterable Loyalty to his Majesty's Interest and Service, and at the Time of emitting the said Explication, was invested and entrusted in public Capacities. And it is a just and rational Interpretation and Caution which Sanderfon, that judicious and eminent Casuist gives Prælect. 2. That dicta & facta principum, parentum, rectorum, are ever to be looked upon as benigna Interpretationis, and that Dubia sunt interpretanda meliorem partem. And there is nothing in the Explication libelled, which without Detortion and Violence, and in the true Sense and Design of the Pannel, is not capable of this benign Interpretation and Construction, especially respect being had to the Circumstances wherein it was emitted and given, after a great many Objections, Scruples, and alledged Inconsistencies, were owned, vented, and spread abroad, which was a rise to the Earl for using the Expressions contained in the pretended Declaration libelled.

IX. These Words whereby it is pretended the Pannel declares, he was ready to give Obedience as far as he could, first, do not in the least import, that the Parliament had imposed any Oath which was in itself unlawful: But only the Pannel's Scrupulosity and Unclearness in Matter of Conscience, and it is hoped it cannot be a Crime, because all Men cannot go the same length. And if any such Thing were argued, it might be argued ten Times more strongly from a simple refusing of the Oath, as if any Thing were enjoined which were so hard that it is not possible to comply with it: And yet such Implications are most irrational and inconsequential, and neither in the Case of a simple and absolute refusing of the Oath, nor in the Case of an Explication of the Party's Sense wherein he is willing to take the Oath, is there any Impeachment of the Justice and Prudence of the Legislator, who imposeth this Oath, but singly a Declaration of the Scrupulosity and Weakness of the Party, why he cannot take the Oath in other Terms: And such Explications have been allowed by the Laws and Customs of all Nations, and are advised by all Divines, of whatsoever Principles, for the Solace and Security of a Man's Conscience.

II. As to that Point of the Explication libelled, That I am confident the Parliament never intended to impose contradictory Oaths; it respects the former Answer, which, considering the plain and downright Objections which were spread abroad, and made against the Oath, as containing Inconsistencies and Contradictions, was an high Vindication of the Justice and Prudence of the Parliament.

III. As to these Words, And therefore I think no Body can explain it but himself. The plain and clear Meaning is nothing else but that the Oath being imposed by Act of Parliament it was of no private Interpretation: And that therefore every Man who was to take it, behoved to take it in that Sense which he apprehended to be the genuine Sense of the Parliament. And it is impossible, without impugning common Sense, that any Man could take it in any other Sense, it being as impossible to see with another Man's Eyes as to see with his private Reason. And a Man's own private Sense and Apprehension of the genuine Sense, was the only proper Way wherein any Man could rationally take the Oath.

And as to these Words, That he takes it as far as it is consistent with himself and the Protestant Religion. The Pannel neither intended nor expressed more, but that he did take it as a true Protestant, and he hopes all Men have taken it as such.

And as to that Clause wherein the Pannel is made to declare, That he does not bind up himself in his Station, in a lawful Way, to wish and endeavour any Alteration he thinks to the Advantage of Church or State, not repugnant to the Protestant Religion and his Loyalty.

It is answered, there is nothing in this Expression that can import the least Crime, or give the least Umbrage for any Mistake. For,

1. It is most certain, it is impossible to elicit any such thing from the Oath, but that it was the Intention of the Parliament, that Persons, notwithstanding of the Oath, might concur in their Stations, and in a lawful Way, in any Law to the Advantage of Church and State. And no rational Man ever did, or can take the Oath in other Terms, that being contrary to his Allegiance and Duty to his Sacred Majesty and Prince.

2. There is nothing in the said Expression which does in the least Point at any Alteration in the Fundamentals of Government, either in Church or State; but, on the contrary, by the plain and clear Words and Meaning, rather for it's Perpetuity, Stability and Security. The Expression being cautioned to the utmost Scrupulosity as that it was to be done in a lawful Manner; that it was to be to the Advantage of Church or State; that it was to be consistent with the Protestant Religion, and with his Loyalty, which was no other but the Duty and Loyalty of all faithful Subjects; and which he has signally and eminently expressed upon all Occasions. So that how such an Expression can be drawn to import all or any of the Crimes libelled, passeth all natural Understanding.

And as to the last Words, And this I understand as a Part of my Oath, which is libelled to be a treasonable Invasion, and assuming of the Legislative Power. It is answered, it is most unwarrantable; and a Party's declaring the Sense and Meaning in which he was free to take an Oath, does not at all respect or invade the Legislative Power, of which the Pannel never entertained a Thought, but has an absolute Abhorrence and Detestation of such Practices. But the plain and clear Meaning is, that the Sense and Explication was a Part of his Oath, and not of the Law imposing the Oath, these being as distant as the two Poles: And which Sense was taken off the Earl's Hands, and he accordingly was allowed to take his Place at the Council-Board, and therefore repeats the former general Defences.

And to convince the Lords of Justiciary, that there is nothing in the pretended Explication libelled which can be drawn to import any Crime, even of the lowest Size and Degree, and that there is no Expression therein contained that can be detorted and wrested to import the same, is evident from that learned Vindication published and spread abroad by an eminent Bishop, and which was read in the Face of the Privy Council, and does contain Expressions of the same Nature, and to the same Import contained in the pretended Explication libelled, as the Ground of this Indictment libelled against the Pannel. And it is positively offered to be proven that these Terms were given in, and read, and allowed to be printed, and (without taking Notice of the whole Tenor of the said Vindication, which the Lords of Justiciary are humbly desired to peruse, and consider, and compare the same with the Explication libelled) the same acknowledged, that Scruples had been raised and spread abroad against the Oath; and also acknowledged, that there were Expressions therein that were dark and obscure; and likewise takes Notice, that the Confession ratified, Par. 1. James VI. to which the Oath relates, was hastily made, and takes Notice of that Authority that made it, and acknowledges in plain Terms, that the Oath does not hinder any regular Endeavour to regulate or better the established Government; but only prohibits irregular Endeavours and Attempts to invert the Substance or Body of the Government; and does likewise explain the Act of Parliament anent his Majesty's Supremacy, that it does not reach the Alteration of the external Government of the Church. And the Pannel and his Proctors are far from insinuating in the least, that there is any Thing in the said Vindication but what is consistent with the exemplary Loyalty, Piety, and Learning, of the Writer of the same. And though others perhaps may differ in their private Opinion, as to this Interpretation of the Act of Parliament anent the King's Supremacy, yet it were most absurd and irrational to pretend, that whether the Mistake were upon the Interpretation of the Writer, or the Sense of others, as to that Point, that such Mistakes or Misapprehension hensions, upon either Hand, should import or infer against them the Crimes of Leasing-making, or depraving his Majesty's Laws: For if such Foundations were laid, Judges and Lawyers had a dangerous Employment, there being nothing more ordinary than to fall into Differences and Mistakes, of the Sense and Meaning of the Laws and Acts of Parliament. But such Crimes cannot be inferred, but with and under the Qualifications abovementioned, of malicious and perverse Designs, joined with licentious, wicked and reproachful Speeches spread abroad, to move Sedition and Dislike of the Government. And the said Laws were never otherwise interpreted, nor extended in any Case. And therefore the Explication libelled, neither as taken complexly, nor in the several Expressions thereof, nor in the Design of the Ingiver of the same, can in Law import against him all or any of the Crimes libelled.

In like Manner the Pannel conjoins with the Grounds abovementioned, the Proclamation issued forth by his Majesty's Privy-Council, which acknowledges and proceeds upon a Narrative, that Scruples and Jealousies were raised and spread abroad against the Act of Parliament enjoining the Test. For clearing and Satisfaction whereof, the said Proclamation was issued forth, and is since approved by his Sacred Majesty.

The King's Advocate's Argument and Plea against the Earl of Argyle.

HIS Majesty's Advocate, for the Foundation of his Debate, does represent, that his Majesty, to secure the Government from the rebellious Principles of the last Age, and the unjust Pretences made use of in this, from Popery, and other Jealousies; as also to secure the Protestant Religion, and the Crown, called a Parliament; and that the great Security resolved on by the Parliament was this excellent Test, in which, that the old juggling Principles of the Covenant might not be renewed, wherein they still swore to serve the King in their own Way, the Parliament did positively ordain, that this Oath should be taken in the plain genuine Meaning of the Words, without any Evasion whatsoever. Notwithstanding whereof, the Earl of Argyle, by this Paper, does invent a new Way, whereby no Man is at all bound to it. For how can any Person be bound, if every Man will only obey it as far as he can, and as far as he conceives it consistent with the Protestant Religion, and with itself, and reserve to himself notwithstanding thereof, to make any Alteration that he thinks consistent with his Loyalty? And therefore his Majesty's Advocate desires to know, to what the Earl of Argyle, or any Man else, can be bound by this Test? What the Magistrate can expect, or what Way he can punish his Perjury? For if he be bound no farther than he himself can obey, or so far as this Oath is consistent with the Protestant Religion or itself, quomodo constat, to whom or what is he bound? And who can determine that? Or against what Alteration is the Government secured, since he is Judge of his own Alteration? So that that Oath, that was to be taken without any Evasion, is evaded in every single Word or Letter; and the Government as insecure as before the Act was made, because the Taker is no farther bound than he pleases. From which it cannot be denied, but his Interpretation destroys not only this Act, but all Government, since it takes away the Security of all Government, and makes every Man's Conscience, under which Name there goes ordinarily in this Age Humour and Interest, to be the Rule of the Taker's Obedience. Nor can it be conceived to what Purpose Laws, but especially Oaths, needed to be made, if this were allowed; or how this cannot fall under the 107th Act, Par. 7. James VI. whereby it is statuted, That no Man interpret the Statutes otherwise than the Maker understood. For what can be more contrary to the taking of them in the Maker's Sense, than that every Man should obey as far as he can, and be allowed to take them in a general Sense, so far as they are consistent with themselves, and the Protestant Religion, without condescending wherein they do not agree with the Protestant Religion? And that they are not bound not to make any Alteration which they think good for the States? For all these make the Rule of Obedience in the Taker, whereas the positive Law makes it to be in the Maker. Or how could they be punished for Perjury after this Oath? For when he were quarrelled for making Alterations against this Oath, and so to be perjured; he might easily answer, that he took this Oath only so far as it was consistent with the Protestant Religion, and with a Salvo, that he might make any Alteration that he thought consistent with his Loyalty. And as to these Points, upon which he were to be quarrelled, he might say, he did not think them to be inconsistent with his Loyalty, think we what we pleased, and so needed not be perjured, except he pleased to decide against himself: For in these Generals he reserves to himself to be still Judge. And this were indeed a fine Security for any Government. And by the same Rule that it loses this Oath, it shews a Way of losing all Oaths and Obedience: And consequently strikes at the Root of all Laws, as well as this: Whereas to shun all this, not only this excellent Statute 107, has secured all the rest, but this is common Reason: And in the Opinion of all Divines, as well as Lawyers in all Nations, Verba juramenti intelliguntur secundum mentem & Intentionem ejus, cui fit juramentum. Which is set down, as the Grand Position, by Saunderson, (whom they cite) Page 137, and is founded upon that Mother-Law, Leg. 10. cui interrogatus f. f. de interrogationibus in Jure faciendis; and without which no Man can have Sense of Government in his Head, or practise it in any Nation. Whereas on the other Hand there is no Danger to any tender Conscience, since there was no Force upon the Earl to take the Oath, but he took it for his own Advantage, and might have abstained.

1. It is inferred from the above-written Matter of Fact, that the Earl is clearly guilty of Contravention of the 10th Act, Par. 10. James VI. whereby the Lieges are commanded not to write any purpose of Reproach of his Majesty's Government, or misconstrue his Proceedings, whereby any Misliking may be raised betwixt his Highness, his Nobility, or his People. And who can read this Paper, without seeing the King and the Parliament reproached openly in it? For who can hear, that the Oath is only taken as far as it is consistent with itself and the Protestant Religion, but must necessarily conclude, that in several Things it is inconsistent with itself, and the Protestant Religion? For if it were not inconsistent with itself, and the Protestant Religion, why this Clause at all, but it might have been simply taken? For the only Reason of hindering it to be taken simply, was because of the Inconsistency. Ergo there behoved necessarily to be an Inconsistency. And if there be any Inconsistency with the Protestant Religion, or any Contradiction in the Oath itself, can there be any Thing a greater Reproach on the Parliament, or a greater Ground of Mislike to the People? And whereas it is pretended, that all Laws and Subsumptions should be clear, and these are only Inferences: It is answered, that there are some Things which the Law can only forbid in general: And there are many Inferences which are as strong and natural, and reproach as soon, or sooner, than the plainest Defamations in the World do: For what is openly said of Reproach to the King, does not wound him so much as many seditious Insinuations have done in this Age and the last: So that whatever was the Earl's Design (albeit it is always conceived to be unkind to the Act, against which himself debated in Parliament) yet certainly the Law in such Cases is only to consider what Effect this may have amongst the People: And therefore the Acts of Parliament that were to guard against the misconstruing of his Majesty's Government, do not only speak of what was designed, but where a Disliking may be caused; and so judgeth ab effectu: And consequentially to the same emergent Reason, it makes all Things tending to the raising of Dislike to be punishable by the Act 60. Parl. 6. Queen Mary; and the 9th Act Parl. 20. James VI. So that the Law designed to deter all Men by these indefinite and comprehensive Expressions: And both in this and all the Laws of Leasing-making, the Judges are to consider what falls under these general and comprehensive Words; nor could the Law be more special here, since the Makers of Reproach and Slander are so various that they could not be bound up or express in any Law: But as it evidently appears, that no Man can hear the Words express, if he believe this Paper, but he must think, the Parliament has made a very ridiculous Oath, inconsistent with itself and the Protestant Religion, the Words allowing no other Sense, and having that natural Tendency; even as if a Man would say, I love such a Man only in so far as he is an honest Man, he behoved certainly to conclude that the Man was not every Way honest; so if your Lordships will take Measures by other Parliaments, or your Predecessors, ye will clearly see, that they thought less than this a defaming of the Government, and misconstruing his Majesty's Proceedings. For in Balmorino's Case the Justices find an humble Supplication made to the King himself to fall under these Acts now cited. Albeit, as that was a Supplication, so it contained the greatest Expressions of Loyalty, and Offers of Life and Fortune that could be express; yet because it insinuates darkly, that the King in the preceding Parliament had not favoured the Protestant Religion, and they were sorry he should have taken Notes with his own Hands of what they said, which seems to be most innocent, yet he was found guilty upon those same very Acts. And the Parliament 1661 found his Lordship himself guilty of Leasing-making, though he had only written a Letter to a private Friend, which requires no great Care nor Observation (but this Paper, which was to be a Part of his own Oath, does) because after he had spoken of the Parliament in the first Part of this Letter, he thereafter added, that the King would know their Tricks: Which Words might be much more applicable to the private Persons therein designed, than that the Words now insisted on can be capable of any such Interpretation. And if either Interpretations, upon Pretence of exonerating of Conscience, or otherwise be allowed, a Man may easily defame as much as he pleases: And have we not seen the King most defamed by Covenants entered into upon Pretence to make him great and glorious by Remonstrances made to take away his Brother and best Friend, upon Pretence of preserving the Protestant Religion, and his sacred Person? And did not all who rebelled against him in the last Age declare, that they thought themselves bound in Duty to obey him, but still as far as that could consist with their Respect to the Protestant Religion, and the Laws and Liberties, which made all the rest ineffectual? And whereas it is pretended, that by these Words I take the same in as far as it is consistent with itself and the Protestant Religion, nothing more is meant, but that he takes it as a true Protestant: His Majesty's Advocate appeals to your Lordships, and all the Hearers, if upon hearing this Expression they should take it in this Sense, and not rather think that there is an Inconsistency. For if that were possible to be the sense, what need he say at all, as far as it is consistent with itself? Nor had the other Part, as far as it is consistent with the Protestant Religion, been necessary. For it is either consistent with the Protestant Religion, or otherwise they were Enemies to the Protestant Religion, that made it. Nor are any Lawyers or others in Danger, by pleading or writing: For these are very different from, and may be very easily pleaded without defaming a Law, and an Oath, when they go to take it. But if any Lawyer should say, in pleading or writing, that the Test was inconsistent, which is all one, that it were not to be taken by any Man, but so far as it was consistent with itself, and the Protestant Religion, no doubt that would be a Crime even in pleading, though pleading has a greater Allowance than deliberate swearing has. And as there is nothing wherein there is not some Inconvenience, so the Inconvenience of defaming the Government is much greater than that of any private Man's Hazard, who needs not err except he please.

Whereas it is pretended, that before the Earl gave in this Explication, there were other Explications spread abroad, and Answers read to them in Council: and that the Council itself gave an Explication. It is answered, that if this Paper be Leasing-making, or misconstruing his Majesty's Proceedings, and treasonable, as is contended, then a thousand of the like Offences cannot excuse it. And when the King accused Nobles, Ministers, and others, in the Year 1661, for going on in the Rebellions of that Age, first with the Covenanters, and then with the Usurpers, it was found no Defence, that the Nation was overgrown with Crimes, and that they were thought to be Duties in those Days, yea, that were to invite Men to offend in Multitudes. And albeit sometimes those who follow the Examples of Multitudes may thereby pretend this as an Excuse to many, yet this was never a formal Defence against Guilt, nor was ever the chief of the Offenders favourable on that Head. And it is presumed, that the Earl of Argyle would rather be followed by others than that he would follow any Example. But his Majesty's Advocate absolutely decline to debate a Point that may defame a constant and standing Act of Parliament, by leaving upon Record a Memory of it's being opposed. Nor were this relevant, except it could be said, the Council had allowed such Explications which reflected upon the King and the Government: For the writing an Answer is no Allowance, but a condemning: Nor can the Council allow any more than they can remit: And though it may justly be denied that the Council heard even the Earl's own Explanation, yet the hearing or allowing him to sit is no relevant Plea, because they might very justly have taken a Time to consider how far it was fit to accede upon that Head. And it is both just and fit for the Council to take Time; and by express Act of Parliament the Negligence of the King's Officers does not bind them. For if this were allowed, leading Men in the Council might commit what Crimes they pleased in the Council, which certainly the King may quarrel many Years after. And though all the Council had allowed him that Day, any one Officer of State might have quarrelled it the next Day. As to the Opinion of Bellarmine, Sanderfon, and others, it is ever contended, that the Principles of the Covenant agree very well with those of the Jesuits, and both do still allow Equivocations and Evasions: But no solid orthodox Divine ever allowed, that a Man who was to swear without any Evasion, should swear so as he is bound to nothing, as it is contended the Earl is not, for the Reasons represented. And as they still recommend, that when Men are not clear they might abstain, as the Earl might have done in this Case, so they still conclude, that Men should tell in clear Terms, what the Sense is by which they are bound to the State: Whereas the Earl here tells only in the general, and in most ambiguous Terms, that he takes it as far as he can obey, and as far as it is consistent with the Protestant Religion, and that he takes it in his own Sense, and that he is not bound by it from making Alterations, but as far as he thinks it for the Advantage of Church or State: Which Sense is a thousand times more doubtful than the Test, and as in Effect nothing but what the Taker pleases himself.

As to the Treason founded on, his Majesty's Advocate founds it first upon the fundamental and common Laws of this and all Nations, whereby it is Treason for any Man to make any Alteration he shall think for the Advantage of Church or State: Which he hopes is a Principle cannot be denied in the general. And whereas it is pretended, that this cannot be understood of mean Alterations, and of Alterations to be made in a lawful Way: It is answered, that as the Thing itself is Treason, so this Treason is not taken off by any of these Qualifications; because he declares, he will wish and endeavour any Alteration he thinks fit: And any Alteration comprehends all Alterations that he thinks fit: nam propositio indefinita equipollet universali. And the Word any is general in its own Nature, and is in plain Terms reserving to himself to make Alterations, both great and small. And the Restriction is not, all Alterations that the King shall think fit, or are consistent with the Laws and Acts of Parliament: but he is still to be Judge of this, and his Loyalty is to be the Standard. Nor did the Covenanters in the last Age, nor do these who are daily executed, decline that they are bound to obey the King simply, but only that they are bound to obey him no otherwise than as far as his Commands are consistent with the Law of God, of Nature, and of this Kingdom, and with the Covenant: And their Treason lies in this. And when it is asked them, who shall be Judge in this, they still make themselves Judges. And the Reason of all Treason being, that the Government is not secure, it is desired to be known, what way the Government can be secured after this Paper, since the Earl is still Judge how far he is obliged, and what is his Loyalty. And if this had been sufficient, the Covenant had been a very excellent Paper: For they are there bound to endeavour, in their several Stations, to defend the King's Person: But when the King challenged them, how they came to make War against him? their great excuse was, that they were themselves still Judges as to that. And for illustrating this Power, the Lords of Justiciary are desired to consider, quid juris, if the Earl, or any Man else should have reserved to himself in this Oath a Liberty to rise in Arms, or to oppose the lineal Succession, though he had added in a lawful manner: For the Thing being in itself unlawful, it is but sham, and Protestatio contraria facto. And if these be unlawful, notwithstanding of such Additions, so much more must this general Reservation, of making any Alterations, likewise be unlawful, notwithstanding of these Additions: For he that reserves the general Power of making any Alteration, does, a fortiori, reserve Power to make any Alteration, though never so fundamental. For all Particulars are included in the general; and whatever may be said against the Particulars, may much more strongly be said against the General.

2. The 130th Act, Par. 8. James VI is expressly founded on, because nothing can be a greater Diminution of the Power of the Parliament, than to introduce a Way or Mean whereby all their Acts and Oaths shall be made insignificant and ineffectual, as this Paper does make them, for the Reasons represented. Nor are any of the Estates of Parliament secure at this Rate, but that they who reserved a general Power to make all Alterations, may, under that General, come to alter any of them.

3. What can be a greater impugning of the Dignity and Authority of Parliaments, than to say, that the Parliament has made Acts for the Security of the Kingdom, which are in themselves ridiculous, inconsistent with themselves and the Protestant Religion?

And as to what is answered against invading the King's Prerogative, the Legislative Power in Parliaments, in adding a Part to an Oath or Test, is not relevantly inferred, since the Sense of these Words, and this understood as a Part of my Oath, is not to be understood as if any thing were to be added to the Law, but only to the Oath, and to be an Interpretation of the Oath. It is replied, that after this no Man needs to add anything to the Oath in Parliament. But when he comes to take the Test, do the Parliament what they please, he will add his own Part. Nor is this Part to be looked upon as a Sense: For if this were the Sense before the Paper, he needed not understand it as a Part of it, for it wanted not a Part. And in general, as every Man may add his own Part, so the Government can be secure of no Part. But your Lordships of Justiciary are desired to consider, how dangerous it would be in this Kingdom, and how it would found in any other Kingdom, that Men should be allowed to reserve to themselves Liberty to make any Alteration they thought fit in Church or State, as to the Legality of which, they were themselves to be Judges: And how far, from Degree to Degree, this at last may come to absolute Anarchy, and how scandalous a thing, as well as unsecure, this new Way may look in an Age wherein we are too much tracing the Steps of our rebellious Progenitors in the last, whose great Defection and Error was, that they thought themselves, and not the King, the Authors of Reformation in Church and State. And no Man ever was barred by that, that the Way he was upon was not a lawful Way: For if it be allowed to every Man to take his own Way, every Man will think his own Way to be the lawful Way.

As to the Perjury, it is founded on this, first, That Perjury may be committed, not only by breaking an Oath, but even in the swearing of it, viz. to swear it with such Evasions as make the Oath ineffectual: For which Sanderfon is cited, Pag. 138. Alterum Perjurii genus est novo aliquo excogitato Commento Juramenti vim declinare, aut eludere, & Jurans tenetur sub pœna Perjurii implere Secundum Intentionem deferentis; both which are here. For the Earl being bound by the very Oath, to swear in the genuine Meaning, without any Evasion, he has sworn so as he has evaded every Word, there being not one Word to which it can be said particularly he is bound, as is said. And it is undeniable, that he has not sworn in the Sense of the Makers of the Law, but in his own Sense, which is Perjury, as is said. And consequentially, whatever Sense may be allowed in ambiguous Cases, yet there can be none where the Paper clearly bears Generals: And where he declares, that he takes it in his own Sense, his Majesty's Advocate declares, he will not burden himself, that Copies were dispersed, though it is certain, since the very Paper itself by the giving in is chargeable with all that is above charged upon it.

Sir John Dalrymple's Defence and Plea for the Earl of Argyle, by Way of Reply upon the King's Advocate.

SIR John Dalrymple replies for the Pannel, That since the solid Grounds of Law adduced in the Defences have received no particular Answers, in Relation to the common Consent of all Casuists, viz. That a Party who takes an Oath is bound in Conscience to clear and propose the Terms and Sense in which he does understand the Oath: Nor in Relation to the several Grounds adduced concerning the legal and rational Interpretation of dubious Clauses. And since these have received no Answers, the Grounds are not to be repeated: But the Proctors for the Pannel do farther insist on these Defences.

1. 'Tis not alledged, that any Explanation was given in by the Pannel to any Person, or any Copy spread, before the Pannel did take the Test in Council: So that it cannot be pretended, that the many Scruples that have been moved concerning the Test, did arise from the Pannel's Explanation: But on the contrary, all the Objections that are answered, and obviated in the Pannel's Explication, were not only privately muttered, or were the Thoughts of single or illiterate Persons, but they were the Difficulties proposed by Synods and Presbyteries, long before the Pannel came from home, or was required to take the Test: So that the general Terms of the Acts of Parliament founded upon in the Libel are not applicable to this Case: For as these Laws, in relation to leading-makers, are only relative to atrocious wilful Insinuations, or Misconstructions of his Majesty's Person or Government, or the open depraving of his Laws, so the restrictive Clause, whereby Sedition or Misconstructions may be moved, raised, or engendered betwixt his Majesty and his Leiges, cannot be applied to this Case, where all these Apprehensions and Scruples were on Foot, and agitated long before the Pannel's Explanation.

As it cannot be pretended, that any new Dust was raised by the Pannel's Explanation, so it is positively offered to be proved, that there is not one Word contained in this Explanation, but that either these individual Words, or much worse, had been publicly proposed, and verbatim read in Council, without the least Discouragement, or the least Objection made by any Member of the Council. And where a Writing, ex proposito read in so high a Court, was universally agreed upon, without the Alteration of a Syllable, how can it be pretended, that any Person thereafter using the said individual Terms in any Explanation, and far easier Terms, that they shall incur the high and infamous Crimes libelled? And the Question is not here, whether the Council was a proper Judicature to have proposed, or imposed a Sense, or allowed any Explanation of the Test to be published; but that is impossible that a Sense they allowed, or being publicly read before them, and which the King's Advocate did not controul, that this should import Treason, or any Crime: And though the Pannel's Advocate will not pursue or follow the Reply that has been made to this Point, yet certainly no Man of sober Sense will think that it is fit to insinuate, that so high a Judicature might have authorized or acquiesced in such Explanations as the Leiges thereafter should be entrapped to have used.

If the Pannel had officiously or ultroneously offered a Sense or Explanation of his Majesty's Laws, which the Laws themselves could not have born, it might justly have been alledged, that he was extra ordinem, and meddling in a Matter he was not concerned in, but where the Act of Council did enjoin, and he was required and cited to that Effect, it could neither be construed as Ostentation, or to move or encourage Scruples, or Resistance, but it was absolutely necessary, either for to have refused the Test, or else to have declared what he thought to be the true and genuine Meaning of it. And there being so many Objections publicly moved and known, his Explanation was nothing else but to clear, that he did not look upon these Scruples and Objections, moved by others, as well founded and rational in themselves; and therefore he was able to take the Test in that Sense the Council had heard or allowed. And it is not controverted, that the Sense of the Legislator is the genuine Sense both of Laws and Oaths: And if a Person were only interpreting the Meaning of either a Law or an Oath imposed, he should deprave and misconstrue the Law and Oath, if he rendered it wittingly and willingly in Terms inconsistent with the Meaning of the Imposer: But there is a great Difference betwixt taking of Oaths, and interpreting Oaths; for when a Man comes to take an Oath, except his particular Sense did agree with the genuine Meaning of the Imposer, he cannot take that Oath, though he may very well interpret and declare what is the Sense of the Legislator, which he may know, and yet perhaps not be able to take the Oath.

And therefore when there is any Doubtfulness in an Oath, and a Party is bound to take it, if then he gives in an Explication of the Sense which he in his private Judgment doth apprehend to be the genuine Meaning, if that private Sense be disconform to the Legislator's Sense in the Oath, then the Imposer of the Oath, or he that has Power to offer it to the Party, if he consider the Party's Sense disconform, he ought to reject the Oath, as not fulfilling the Intent of the Law imposing it.

But it is impossible to state that as a Crime, that a Party should neither believe what is proposed in the Oath, nor be able to take it; and he can run no farther Hazard, but the Penalty imposed upon the Refuser. And therefore in all Oaths there must be a Concourse both of the Sense imposed by Authority, and of the private Sense, Judgment, or Conscience of the Party. And therefore if a Party should take an Oath in the Sense proposed by Authority contrary to his own Sense, he were perjured: Hereby it is evident that the Sense of Authority is not sufficient, without the Acquiescence and Consent of the private Person. And therefore it is very strange, why that Part of the Pannel's Explanation should be challenged, that he takes it in his own Sense, the posterior Words making it as plain as the Light, that that Sense of his own is not what he pleases to make of the Oath, for it bears expressly, that no body can explain it but for himself, and reconcile it as it is genuine, and agrees in it's own Sense: So that there must be a Reconciliation betwixt his own Sense and the genuine Sense, which upon all Hands is acknowledged to be the Sense of Authority. And if the Pannel had been of these lax and debauched Principles, that he might have evaded the Meaning and Energy of the Oath, by imposing upon it what Sense he pleased, certainly he would have contented himself in the general Refuge of Equivocation, or Mental Reservation, and he would never have exposed his Sense to the World, in which he took this Oath, whereby he became absolutely fixed and determined to the Oath, in that particular Sense, and so had no Latitude of shuffling off the Energy or Obligation of the Oath: And it is likewise acknowledged, that the Cases alledged in the Reply are true, viz. That the Person is guilty of Perjury, si aliquo novo Commento he would elude his Oath, or who doth not fulfil the Oath in the Sense of the Imposer. But that does not concern this Case: For in the forefaid Citation, a Person, after he has taken an Oath, finding out some new Conceit to elude it, he is perjured: But in this Case, the Pannel did at and before his taking the Test, declare the Terms in which he understood it; so that this was not novo aliquo Commento to elude it. And the other Case, where a Party takes it in the Sense of Authority, but has some subterfuge, or concealed Explanation, it is acknowledged to be Perjury. But in this Case there was no concealed Explanation; but it was publicly exprest, and an Explanation given, which the Pannel designed, and understood as the Meaning of Authority, and had Ground to believe he was not mistaken, since upon that Explanation he was received and allowed to sit and vote in Council.

And as to that Part of the Reply, that explains the Treason, there can be no Treason in the Pannel's Case, because the express Act of Parliament founded upon, doth relate only to the Constitution of the Parliament: And I am sure his Majesty's Advocate cannot subsume in these Terms: And therefore in the Reply he recurs to the general Grounds of the Law, that the usurping of his Majesty's Authority, in making a Part of the Law, and to make Alterations in general, and without the King, are high and treasonable Words or Designs, and such as the Party pleases, and such Designs as have been practised in the late Times. And that even the Adjection of fair and safe Words, as in the Covenant, does not secure from treasonable Designs; and that it was so found in Balmerino's Case, though it bear a fair Narrative of an humble Supplication.

It is replied, that the Usurpation of making of Laws is undoubtedly treasonable, but no such Thing can be pretended or subsumed in this Case: For albeit the Pannel declares his Explanation to be a Part of his Oath, yet he never meant to impose it as a Part of the Law, or that this Explanation should be a Thing distinct, or a separate Part even of his Oath, for his Explanation being exegetick of the several Parts of the Oath, it is no distinct Thing from the Oath, but declared to be a Part of the Oath de natura rei. And it was never pretended, that he that alledged any thing to be de natura rei, did say, that that was distinct and separate, which were a Contradiction. And therefore the Argument is retorted, the Pannel having declared, this Explanation was, de natura rei, implied in the Oath, he necessarily made this Explanation no Addition or Extension of the Oath. So that for all this Explanation, the Oath is neither broader nor longer than it was.

And as to these Words, I do not mean to bind up myself in my Station, and in a lawful Way, to wish and endeavour any Alteration I think to the Advantage of Church or State, not repugnant to the Protestant Religion, and my Loyalty. It is a strange thing how this Clause can be drawn in Question, as treasonable, when it may with better Reason be alledged, that there is no good Subject but is bound to say it. And albeit the Words to endeavour in my Station, be Words contained in the Covenant, yet that is no Reason why two Words in the Covenant may not be made use of in another very good and loyal Sense. And there is no Man that shall have the Honour either to be entrusted by his Majesty in his Council, or any other Judicature, or to be a Member of Parliament, but he is bound by his Loyalty to say the same thing. And there was never a Clause more cautiously exprest; for the Words run, to endeavour any Alteration I shall think to the Advantage of Church and State. And though that was sufficient, yet the Clause is so cautiously conceived, that it contains another Restriction, not repugnant to Religion and his Loyalty. So that except it could be alledged, that a Man by lawful Means, to the Advantage of Church and State, consistent with his Religion and Loyalty, could make treasonable Alterations, and Invasions upon the Government and Monarchy, which are the highest Contradictions imaginable, there can be nothing against the Pannel. And albeit the Clause, any Alterations, might, without the Restrictions and Qualifications forefaid, be generally extended, yet the preceding Words of lawful Way, and the rational Interpretation of the Emission of Words, especially before a solemn Judicatory, leaves no Place or Shadow to doubt, that these Alterations were no fundamental or treasonable Alterations, but such as the Frailty of human Affairs and Constitutions, and Vicissitude of Things and Circumstances, do constantly require in the most exact Constitutions under Heaven. And the Clause does not so much as import, that there is a present Necessity of Alteration, but it was a necessary and rational Prospect, that albeit at present all things under Heaven had been done to secure the Religion and Government, yet there might occur Cases that would require new Helps, Alterations, and Remedies. And it is not pretended in this Case for the Pannel, that he desires to alleviate, or take off Words truly treasonable, or having an ill Design, by the mixing of fair and safe, dutiful and submissive Expressions, which indeed are Protestations contrafacta. For there is nothing in his Explanation, that either in his Design, or in the Words themselves, being rationally and naturally interpreted, can infer the Crimes libelled, or any of them. And the Pannel's known Principles and known Practices, do not only clear that Loyalty that he has professed before the Lords of Justiciary, and instructed by unquestionable Documents, but they put him far from the Suspicion of these damnable Principles related in the Reply, of which the whole Tract of his Life hath been an entire Evidence of his Abhorrency and Detestation. And in the last Place, it is thought strange, why that should be represented as an Affront or Disgrace to the Government, that the Parliament imposed a Test which the Pannel is not able to take simply. And it is not pretended, that he hath defamed, written or spoken against the Test itself, or for the Inconvenience of it; but only that he hath not been able to see the good Ground upon which it may be simply taken. And this were to condemn him for want of Sight or Sense, when the Law hath punished no Man for not taking the Test, but only turned him out of the Government. And it is as strange an Inference, that because the Pannel declares, he believes the Parliament meant no Contradiction and would take the Test, in as far as it is consistent, that therefore he said, the Parliament imposed Contradictions: Which is so far from a rational Induction, that the Contradiction of these Subsumptions, in all Congruity of Language and Sense, is necessarily true. And therefore the last Part of that Clause, in so far as it is consistent, is a Consequence inferred upon the former, viz. I believe the Parliament designed to impose no Contradictions: Ergo, I take the Test as consistent, and in so far as it must be consistent, if the Parliament did not impose Contradictions, as certainly they have not; and to convince the World, that in this Sense this Explanation is receivable it was proposed in Council, and allowed, and therefore without the highest Reflection it cannot now be quarrelled.

Sir George Lockhart's second Plea for the Earl of Argyle, by way of Reply upon the King's Advocate.

SIR George Lockhart duplies, That the Defender repeats and opposes his former Defences, which are no ways elided, nor satisfied by the Reply made by his Majesty's Advocate. And although it be easy for the King's Advocate, out of his Zeal, to pretend and argue Crimes of the highest Nature upon Inferences and Consequences, neither consistent with the Pannel's Design, nor with his Words and Expressions; yet there cannot be a more dangerous Foundation laid, for the Security and Interest of the Government, and the Security and Protection of the Subjects, than that Crimes should be inferred but from clear, evident, and express Laws, and plain, palpable Contravention of these Laws: It being both against the Laws of God and Man, that a Man should be made an Offender for a Word, and especially for Expressions which, according to Sense and Reason, and considering the Time and Place where they were spoken by the Pannel, viz. as a Member of his Majesty's Privy Council, and in Presence of his Royal Highness and the Members of Council, and when required to take the Test, were safe and innocent: And it were against all Law and Reason, to suppose that the Pannel either did, or designed to do any thing which may, or did import the Crimes libelled against him. And whereas it is pretended, that the Oath required and imposed by Act of Parliament was for the Security of the Government; and that the Pannel, by his Explication, does evade the Oath, by taking it only so far as it is consistent with the Protestant Religion, and his own Loyalty, whereof he was Judge. It is answered, that the Pretence is unwarrantable, and the Security of his Majesty's Government is not at all endangered (as God forbid it should) though the Pannel, and a thousand more had simply refused the Test, or had taken it in a Sense which does not satisfy the Law; it being competent to publick Authority to consider, whether the Pannel's Oath, in the Terms of the Explication wherein he did take it, does satisfy the Act of Parliament or not; and if not, there can be no rational Consequence inferred thereupon, but that he is holden as a Refuser of the Oath, and liable to the Certification of the Act of Parliament, of not assuming and continuing in any publick Trust: And no more was intended or designed by the Act of Parliament itself, than strictly to make the oath in the true and genuine Sense and Meaning of the Parliament, an indispensable Qualification of Persons admitted to publick Trust: So that it is not at all material to dispute, whether the Pannel's Explication can be looked upon as a full Satisfaction of the Act, which whether it should or not, it can import no Crime against him, it not being consistent with Sense and Reason, that a Person who absolutely refused the Test, upon the Scrupulosity of his Conscience, albeit he be incapable of publick Trust, should be, notwithstanding, looked upon as guilty of no Crime: And yet another who was willing to go a great Length, albeit he did demur and scruple as to the full Length, that he should be reputed criminal and guilty of a Crime.

II. The Pannel repeats, and conjoins with this the Grounds above-mentioned contained in his Defences, viz. That neither the Crimes libelled, nor any other Crime, were ever pretended or made use of against any others, who did not abroad Objections of an high Nature, which yet were so favourably considered upon, as to be construed only to proceed from Scrupulosity of Conscience.

science, as also the Satisfaction endeavoured, is in such Terms, and by such Condescensions, as do take in and justify the whole Terms of the Explication libelled.

It is of great Moment, and whereof the Lords of Justiciary are desired to take special Notice, both for clearing the absolute Innocence of the Pannel's Meaning and Intention, and to take off all possible Misconstruction that can be wrested or detorted from the Tenor and Expressions of the libelled Explication, that the Pannel was put to, and required to take the Oath, before the Lords of his Majesty's Privy-Council did pass and publish their Proclamation explaining the Oath, and declaring the genuine Sense and Meaning thereof, namely, that it did not tie to the whole Articles of the Confession of Faith, ratified by Act of Parliament, James VI. and which, as to several Articles thereof, had occasioned the Scruples and Difficulties, and alledged Inconsistency and Contradiction betwixt the last Part of the Oath and the said Confession, and betwixt some of these Articles, and the Current of the Protestant Doctrine, received and contained in the Synagma of the Protestant Confessions. And therefore if the Pannel at that Time did think fit, for the clearing and Exoneration of his own Conscience, to use the Expressions in the Explication libelled, and yet with so much Duty and Confidence of the Parliament's Justice, as to their Meaning and Intention, that the Parliament never intended to impose contradictory Oaths; and that he did take it so far as it was consistent with itself, and the Protestant Religion, not knowing then, whether the whole Confession was to be reputed a Part of the Oath, and doubting thereanent; and which the Lords of his Majesty's Privy-Council and his sacred Majesty by his Approbation since, have thought a Difficulty of so great Moment, as it was fit to clear the same by a publick Proclamation; how now is it possible, that any Judicatory under Heaven, which proceeds upon the solid Grounds of Law and Reason, and who (it cannot be doubted) will have a just Regard to the intrinsic Principles of Justice, and to all Men's Security, that they can now believe all, or any of the Crimes libelled, should be in the least inferred from all, or any of the Expressions contained in the said Explication? But that on the contrary it was a warrantable Allowance, and Christian Practice, condemned by the Law and Custom of no Nation, that having Scruples in the Matter of an Oath which should be taken in Truth, Judgment, and Righteousness, and upon full Deliberation, and with a full Assurance and Sincerity of Mind, that he did plainly, openly, and clearly declare the Sense in which he was willing to take it; and if Authority did allow it as the genuine Sense of the Oath, the Pannel to be holden as a Taker of the Oath: And if upon farther Consideration, Authority think not, that habetur pro Recusante, and a Refuser of the Oath, but no Ways to be looked upon as a Criminal or guilty Person.

And the Pannel repeats and conjoins with this Point of the Reply, that Point in his Defence whereby he positively offers to prove, 1. That his Explication, and the Sense wherein he took the Oath, was heard, and publicly given and received in Council, and the Pannel thereafter allowed to take his Place, and sit and vote in that Sederunt.

2. The Pannel also offers positively to prove, That the Tenor and Terms of his Sense and Explication wherein he did take the Oath, is contained in that solid, learned, and pious Vindication, written by the Bishop of Edinburgh, in answer to the Objections and alledged Inconsistencies and Contradictions in the Oath, and which Vindication was publickly read in Council, and so far approved, that it was allowed to be printed and published, and was accordingly dispersed and spread abroad. And it is not of the least Import, that the Proclamation of the Lords of Privy-Council, although it does only allow the same to be taken by the Clergy, yet at the same Time they expressly declare the genuine Sense and Meaning of the Parliament not to comprehend the whole Articles of the Confession, which was not cleared before the Pannel's taking his Oath.

And whereas it is pretended, That the Acts of Parliament libelled upon, against Leasing-makers, Depravers of his Majesty's Laws, do obtain and take place, where-ever there are any Words or Expressions that have a Tendency in themselves, or by a natural Consequence, and rational Inferences, to reflect upon the Government, or misconstrue his Majesty's Proceedings; and that the Explication libelled is such, and that it was found so in the Case of Balmerino, albeit it was drawn up by way of humble Petition and Address to his Majesty, and with great Protestations and Expressions of Loyalty. It is answered, the Acts of Parliament libelled upon are opposed, and the 43d Act. Par. 8. James VI. and the other Acts, making the depraving of his Majesty's Laws to be Crimes, do expressly require, that Speeches so judged be perverse and licentious Speeches, ex natura sua probrosa and reproachful, and spoke animo defamandi, and which could not receive any other rational Construction, which cannot in the least be applied to, or subsumed upon the Words, or Explication given in by the Pannel. And Law and Reason never infers or presumes a Crime, where the Thing is capable of a fair and rational Construction, and where it was done palam and publickly, and in Presence of his Majesty's High Commissioner, and Lords of his Majesty's Privy-Council, whereof the Pannel had the Honour to be a Member, Persons committing and designing to commit Crimes making use of Times and Places, and Companies of another Nature, on whom their Suggestions and Insinuations may prevail. But it is a Violence to the common Reason of Mankind, to pretend, that a Person of the Pannel's Quality, having the Honour to serve his Majesty in most eminent Capacities, and devoted to his Majesty's Interest and Service, beyond the strictest Ties of Duty and Allegiance, by the transcendent Favours he had received, that the Pannel in those Circumstances, and in Presence of his Royal Highness and Lords of Privy-Council, should design to declaim, and de facto, declaim against and blame his Majesty's Government: To suppose this is absolutely contradictory to the common Principles and Practices of Law, and common Topics of Reason.

And as to Balmerino's Case, it is answered, that the Lords of Justiciary are humbly desired to call for and peruse the said Petition and Books of Journal, which was certainly a defamatory Libel of his Majesty's Father, blessed Memory, and of the States of Parliament in the highest Degree, and expressly, that there was nothing designed but an Innovation of the Protestant Religion, and the Subversion and over-turning the Liberties and Privileges of the Parliament, and the Constitutions of the Articles, and other Things of that Kind, which made certainly of itself a most villainous and execrable Libel, containing the highest Crimes of Treason and Perduellion, and was not capable of any good Sense or Interpretation, but was absolutely pernicious and destructive: So that it is in vain to pretend, that the said Libel did contain Prefaces and Protestations of Loyalty, which no Law regards, even in simplici injuria & maledicto, though committed by a private Person, cum præfatione salvo honore, or the like, and which were certainly ridiculous to sustain in a Libel concerning Crimes of Treason.

And whereas it is pretended, that though others were guilty of these Crimes, it does not excuse the Earl: And that the Lords of Privy-Council cannot remit Crimes; and the Negligence of the King's Officers cannot prejudice his Interest. It is answered, The Pannel is very confident, that neither the Lords of his Majesty's Privy-Council, consisting of Persons of eminent Loyalty and Judgment, nor his Majesty's Officers, were capable of any such Escape as is pretended: And if the Tenor of the Pannel's Explication did in the least import the high and infamous Crimes libelled, as beyond all peradventure it does not, it were strange, how the same being contained in the forefaid Vindication, and the whole Clauses thereof justified, that this should have been looked on as no Crime, and allowed to be published. And the Pannel neither does, nor needs to make farther Use thereof, but to convince all disinterested Persons, that his Explication can import no Crime.

And whereas it is pretended, That the Crime of Treason is inferred from the fundamental Laws of the Kingdom, and from that Clause of the Pannel's Explication, whereby he declares, he is not bound up by any Thing in this Oath not to endeavour any Alteration in a lawful Way: Which being an indefinite Proposition, is equipollent to an universal, and is upon the Matter coincident with a Clause which was rebellious in its Consequences, contained in the solemn League and Covenant. It is answered, that it is strange, how such a plain and innocent Clause, whereby, beyond all Question, he does express no more than was naturally imported in the Oath itself, whether express or not, should be made a Foundation to import the Crime of Treason, which no Lawyer ever allowed, except where it was founded upon express Law & Luce Meridiana Clarior: And indeed if such Stretches and Inferences can make Men guilty of Treason, no Man can be secure. And the Words in the Pannel's Declaration are plain and clear (yet non sunt cavillanda) and import no more, but that, in his Station, and in a lawful Way, and consistent with the Protestant Religion and his Loyalty, he might endeavour any Alteration to the Advantage of Church and State. And was there ever any loyal or rational Subject, that does, or can doubt, that this is the natural import of the Oath? And indeed it were a strange Oath, if it were capable of another Sense, and being designed for the Security of the Government, should bind up Men's Hands to concur for its Advantage. And how was it possible, that the Pannel, or any other in the Capacity of a Privy-Councillor, or a Member of the Parliament, would have satisfied his Duty and Allegiance in other Terms? And whereas it is pretended, That there was the like Case in the pretended League and Covenant, it is answered, the Assertion is evidently a Mistake; and though it were, the Argument is altogether inconsequential: For that League and Covenant was treasonable in itself, as being a Combination entered into without his Majesty's Authority, and was treasonable in the Glosses that were put upon it, and was imposed by absolute Violence on the Subjects of this Kingdom, and how can the Pannel be in the least supposed to have had any Respect to the said League and Covenant, when he had so often taken the Declaration, disowning and renouncing it, as an unlawful and sinful Oath, and concurred in the many excellent Laws and Acts of Parliament made by his Majesty, condemning the same as seditious and treasonable? And whereas it is pretended, that the Pannel is guilty of Perjury, having taken the Oath in another Sense than was consistent with the genuine Sense of the Parliament, and that by the Authority cited, he doth commento cludere Juramentum, which ought always to be taken in the Sense of him that imposeth the Oath: It is answered, the Pretence is most groundless, and Perjury never was, nor can be inferred, but by the Commission, or Omission of something directly contrary to the Oath. And although it is true, that where an Oath is taken, without any Declaration of the express Sense of the Persons who take it, it obliges sub pœna Perjurii, in the Sense, not of the Taker, but of the Imposer of the Oath, because expressing no Sense, Law and Reason presumes there is a full Acquiescence in the Sense and Meaning of the Imposer of the Oath: And then if an Oath be not so taken, he that takes it is guilty of Perjury. Yet there was never Lawyer nor Divine, Popish or Protestant, but agree in this, that whatever be the Tenor of the Oath, if before the taking thereof, the Party in express Terms does publickly and openly declare the Sense in which he takes it, it is impossible it can infer the Crime of Perjury against him in any other Sense, this not being Commentum excogitatum, after the taking of the Oath. And if this were not so, how is it possible, in Sense and Reason, that ever any Explication or Sense could solve the Scruples of a Man's Conscience? For it might be always pretended, that notwithstanding of the express Sense wherein he took it, he should be guilty of Perjury from another Sense. And that this is the irrefragable Opinion of all Divines, of whatever Persuasion, is not only clear from the Authority above-mentioned, even those who allow of reserved Senses, but more especially by the universal Suffrage of all Protestant Divines, who though they do abominate all Thoughts of Subterfuges or Evasions, after taking of the Oath, yet they do always allow and advise, for the Safety and Security of a doubting and scrupulous Conscience, that they should express and declare, before the taking of the Oath, the true Sense and Meaning wherein they have Freedom to take it; and for which Sanderfon de Juramento is cited. Prelect. 6. Sect. 10. Page 75. where his Words are, sane ut inter Jurandum omnia recte fiant, expedit ut de verborum sensu inter omnes partes quarum interest liquido constet, quod veteribus dictum, liquido Jurare. And an Oath being one of the highest Acts of Devotion, containing Cultum Patriæ, there is nothing more consonant to the Nature

Nature of all Oaths, and to that Candour, Ingenuity, and Christian Simplicity, which all Law and Religion requires in such Cases.

The King's Advocate's third Plea against the Earl of Argyle.

HIS Majesty's Advocate conceives he has nothing to answer, as to Depraving, Leasing-making, and Misinterpreting, &c. save that this Oath was only designed to exclude Recusants; and consequently the Pannel may thereby be debarred from his Offices, but not made guilty of a Crime. To which he triplies, 1. If ever the Earl had simply refused, that had been true; but that did not all excuse from defaming the Law, for a Defamer is not punished for refusing, but for defaming.

2. If he had simply refused, the Government had been in no more Hazard; but if Men will both retain their Places, and yet take the same in such Words as secure not the Government, it were strange to think, that the Design of the Law being to secure against Men's possessing who will not obey, that yet it should allow them Possession who do not obey. Nor is the Refuser here in a better Case than the Earl, and others, who offered to obey, because it is the defaming the Law, as ridiculous and inconsistent with that Protestant Religion, and Leasing-making betwixt the King, the Nobility, and the People, the misconstruing, and misrepresenting, as hath been formerly urged, that puts the Earl in a worse Condition. And all those Arguments might be as well urged for any who had uncontrovertedly contravened these Acts, as for the Pannel.

Whereas it is pretended, That the King emitted a Proclamation to satisfy Dissenters; it is answered, That the Proclamation was designed for none who had been Members of Parliament, and so should have known the Sense; but it was designed for meer Ignorants, not for such as had defamed the Law, which is still here charged upon the Pannel.

As to the Article of Treason, it is conceived, That it is unanswerably founded upon the Common-Law, discharging all Men to make Alteration of the Government. As to which there needs no express Statute, that being the very Essence of Government, and needing no Laws. Like as it falls positively under all the Laws that discharge the assuming the Royal or Legislative Power; for to alter the Government is inseparably united to the Crown. Like as the Subsumption is as clear, the express Words not bearing, That the Earl reserves to himself a Power to propose to his Majesty any Alterations, or to concur to serve his Majesty in making Alterations; but owning in most general and arbitrary Terms, to wish and endeavour any Alteration he should think fit for the Advantage of Church or State, and not determining any Thing that could bind him otherwise than according to his own Pleasure: For the Word [lawful] is still subjected to himself, and has subjoined to it, as he should think fit, which governs the whole Proposition; and in that Sense, and as the Words are here set down, the greatest Rebel in Scotland will subscribe that Explanation: For there is no Man but will restrict himself to a lawful Obedience, providing he be Judge of the Lawfulness. And seeing all Oaths proposed for the Security of Government require a certain depending upon the Legislature, and not upon the Taker, it is impossible that that End could be attained by any Qualification, how special soever, which is made to depend absolutely upon the Taker, and not upon the Legislator. And we have often seen, how little Security there is in those specious Words, the very Covenant itself having not only the very Words above-repeated, but attesting all the World to be Witnesses to their Loyalty and Sincerity. And as to the former Instances, viz. rising in Arms, or opposing the lawful Successor, there is no Covenant in Scotland, but will say, he will do neither, but in a lawful Way, and in his Station, and in a Way consistent with his Loyalty, for a Man were mad to say otherwise: But yet when they come to explain this, they will only do it as they think fit, and will be Judges themselves; and then will tell us, that defensive Arms are lawful, and that no Popish Successor should succeed, nor no Successor, unless he subscribe the Covenant. And whereas it is pretended, that no Clause in the Test does exclude a Man from making Alterations; it is answered, that the Alterations which the Test allows are none at all but in Subordination to Authority. And as to the two Points above-mentioned, it excludes all Alterations as to these Points. And as to the making fundamental Alterations, this Reservation allows to make any Alteration, and consequently fundamental Alterations; to preclude which Libertinism, this excellent Law was invented.

Whereas it is pretended, that the Pannel designs not to add any Thing as a Part of the Law, but as a Part of his Oath, it is duplied, since the Oath is a Part of the Law, whoever adds to the Oath, adds to the Law.

Whereas it is pretended, that the Crime of Perjury cannot be inferred here, because all Divines allow, that the Taker of an Oath is still allowed to declare in what Sense he takes the Oath; and that this is clear from Sanderfon, Page 175. It is triplied, that where there are two dubious Senses, Lawyers and Divines allow, that the Taker should clear himself, which of the two he should take; which is very just, because to which soever of the two he determines himself, the Legislator in that Case is sure of him. But here it is not pretended, that there are two Senses; nor does the Pannel declare in which of the two he takes it, or in what clear Sense at all he takes it, which is indeed liquido furare. But here the Pannel neither condescends, what particular Clause of the Test is unclear; nor after he has condescended upon the Articles, does he condescend upon the Sense, but in general mysterious Words, where he can neither be followed nor found out, he only takes it in so far as it is consistent with itself and the Protestant Religion, reserving the squaring all by his own Loyalty, as he did in the beginning declare, that he took it in his own Sense; by which general Sense, neither is the Government secure of any Thing it does enjoin, nor could he be punished if he transgressed. Nor can it be doubted, but Perjury may be inferred by any equivocal or evading Sense, inter Jurandum, as well as by breaking an Oath afterwards: Which is very clear from Sanderfon, Pag. 138. The Words whereof are, alterum Perjurii genus est inter Jurandum detorquere verba; and which is farther clear by the 28th Page; but above all, from the Principles of Reason, and the Necessity of Commerce and Government: For if Men may admit such Glosses, even whilst they swear, as may make the Oath useless, what Way will either Government or Commerce be maintained? And he deceives as much that deceives in swearing salvis verbis, as he who after he has sworn, does break the Oath, nay and more too, because the Breaking may come from Forgetfulness, or other Accidents: But the evading by general Clauses, which bind no Man, does from the first Instance originally make all Oaths useless and dangerous, and that this Interpretation eludes the Oath absolutely is very clear from what hath been formerly debated. For it may be argued, that the Earl broke the Oath in so far as the first Day he swears the Oath, which bears to be without any Evasion (and must be so, notwithstanding of whatever he could say:) and the next Day he gives in this Evasion, which is a downright Violation of that Oath, and inconsistent with it. Nor was this Oath forced, but voluntarily emitted, to keep his own Places. And it was the greater Crime that it was done in the Council, because that was to make it the more publick, and consequently the more to misrepresent the Government.

After this Debate, which, according to the Custom of the Court, was verbatim dictated by the Advocates of either Side, and written by the Clerk, and so took up much Time, and the Court having sat at least twelve Hours without Intermission, it adjourned till the next Day, being Tuesday the 13th of December, at two of the Clock in the Afternoon: And then the Earl being again brought to the Bar, the following Interloquutor (that is Judgment and Sentence) of the Lords of Justiciary, on the foregoing Debate, was read, and pronounced in open Court.

Edinburgh, December 12. 1681.

The Interloquutor of the Lords of Justiciary.

THE Lords, Justice-General, and Commissioners of the Justiciary, having considered the Libel and Debate, they sustain the Defence proposed for the Earl of Argyle, the Pannel, in relation to the Perjury libelled, viz. That he emitted this Explanation at, or before his taking the Test, first before his Royal Highness, his Majesty's High Commissioner, and the Lords of his Majesty's Privy-Council, relevant, to elude that Article of the Libel.

The Lords sustain the Libel, as being founded upon the Common-Law, and Explication libelled, and upon Act 130. Parl. 8. James VI. to infer the Pain of Treason.

They likewise sustain the Libel, as founded upon the 10th Act, Parl. 10. James VI. to infer the Pain of Death, and likewise sustain that Part of the Libel anent Leasing-making, and Leasing-telling, to infer the particular Pains mentioned in the several Acts libelled.

And repel the whole other Defences, Duplies, and Quadruplies, and remits the Libel, with the Defences anent the Perjury, to the Knowledge of an Assize.

Thereafter the Assize, that is the Jury, being constitute and sworn, viz.

List of the Assizers.

Marquis Montrose,	E. Roxburgh, P. C.	Lord Bruntisland,
E. of Middleton,	E. Dumfries.	Laird of Gosford,
E. of Airlie.	E. Linlithgow, P. C.	Laird of Claverhouse,
E. of Perth, P. C.	Lord of Lindors,	Laird of Balmalcolm,
E. of Dulhoufie.	Lord Sinclair,	Laird of Park Gordon.

HIS Majesty's Advocate adduced four Witnesses to prove the Points of the Indictment, remitted to the Knowledge of the Assize, viz. John Drummond of Lundie, then Governor of the Castle of Edinburgh, now Treasurer-depute, Sir William Paterson, and Mr. Patrick Menzies, Clerks of the Privy-Council, and H. Stevenson, their under Clerk; who deposed, That on the 4th of November, the Earl did give in an unsubscriber Explanation of the Test, which he refused to sign; one of the Witnesses also adding, that he heard him make the same Explanation the Day before in Council, and that it was there accepted.

Then his Majesty's Advocate asked, if the Earl would make Use of his Exculpation for eliding the Perjury libelled, to wit, that he had emitted the same Explanation, before taking the Test, in Presence of his Royal Highness and the Council. To which the Earl answered, that, seeing they had sustained the Libel, as to the alleged Treason, he would not trouble them about the Perjury: Especially the Matter of Fact, referred by the Interloquutor to his Probation, being of itself so clear and notour.

Upon this Silence, the Advocate, taking Instruments, Protests, for an Assize of Error, in Case the Assizers should assai or acquit. Whereupon the Assize removing was inclosed: And, after some Time, returned their Verdict, which was read in open Court of this Tenour.

The Verdict of the Assize.

THE Assize having elected and chosen the Marquis of Montrose to be their Chancellor, they all in one Voice find the Earl of Argyle Guilty, and culpable of the Crimes of Treason, Leasing-making, and Leasing-telling, and find, by Plurality of Votes, the said Earl Innocent and not Guilty of Perjury.

And then the Court again adjourned: And the Privy-Council wrote the following Letter to his Majesty.

Halyrudhouse, December 14, 1681.

The Council's Letter to the King, desiring Leave to pronounce Sentence against the Earl of Argyle.

May it please your Sacred Majesty,

IN Obedience to your Majesty's Letter, dated the 15th of November last, we ordered your Majesty's Advocate to insist in the Process, raised at your Instance, against the Earl of Argyle: And having allowed him a long Time for his Appearance, and any Advocates he pleased to employ, and Letters of Exculpation, for his Defence: He, after full Debate, and clear Probation, was found guilty of Treason, Leasing-making betwixt your Majesty, your Parliament, and your People, and the reproaching of your Laws and Acts of Parliament. But because of your Majesty's Letter, ordaining us to send your Majesty a particular Account of what he should be found guilty of, before the pronouncing of any Sentence against him, we thought it our Duty to send your Majesty this Account of our and your Justices Proceedings therein; and to signify to your Majesty, with all Submission, that it is usual and most fit for your Majesty's Service and the Advantage of the Crown, that a Sentence be pronounced, upon the Verdict of the Assize, without which the Process will be still imperfect. After which, your Majesty may, as you in your Royal Prudence and Clemency shall think fit, ordain all farther Execution to be fisted, during your Majesty's Pleasure: Which shall be dutifully obey'd by

The King's Answer to the Council's Letter.

C. R.

18 Decemb. 1681.

MOST dearly, &c. having this Day received your Letter of the 14th Instant, giving an Account that our Advocate having been ordered by you to insist in that Process raised at our Instance against the Earl of Argyle, he was, after full Debate and clear Probation, found guilty of Treason, and Leasing-making, betwixt us, our Parliament, and our People, and the reproaching our Laws and Acts of Parliament: We have now thought fit, notwithstanding of what was ordered by us in our Letter to you of the 15th of November last, hereby to authorize you to grant a Warrant to our Justice General, and the remanent Judges of our Justice Court, for proceeding to pronounce a Sentence, upon the Verdict of the Jury, against the said Earl; nevertheless it is our express Pleasure, and we do hereby require you, to take Care, that all Execution of the Sentence be stopped, until we shall think fit to declare our further Pleasure in this Affair: For doing whereof, &c.

Which Answer being read in Council on the Thursday, and the Court of Justiciary, according to it's last Adjournment, being to meet upon the Friday, after a little Hesitation in Council, whether the Court of Justiciary could proceed to the Sentence of Forfeiture against the Earl, he being absent, it was resolved in the Affirmative; and what were the Grounds urged, either of Hesitation or Resolution, I cannot precisely say, there being nothing on Record that I can learn. But that you may have a full and satisfying Account, I shall briefly tell you what was ordinarily discoursed, a Part whereof I also find in a Petition given in by the Countess of Argyle to the Lords of Justiciary, before pronouncing Sentence, but without any Answer or Effect. It was commonly said, that by the Old Law, and Custom, the Court of Justiciary could no more in the Case of Treason than of any other Crime proceed further against a Person not appearing, and absent, than to declare him Out-Law and Fugitive: And that, albeit it be singular, in the Case of Treason, that the Trial may go on, even to a final Sentence, though the Party be absent, yet such Trials were only proper to, and always reserved for Parliaments: And that so it had been constantly observed until after the Rebellion in the Year 1666: but there being several Persons notoriously engaged in that Rebellion, who had escaped, and thereby withdrawn themselves from Justice, it was thought, that the Want of a Parliament, for the Time, ought not to afford them any Immunity; and therefore it was resolved by the Council, with Advice of the Lords of Session, that the Court of Justiciary should summon, and proceed to Trial, and Sentence, against these Absents, whether they appeared or not, and so it was done: Only because the Thing was new and indeed an Innovation of the old Custom, to make all sure, in the first Parliament held thereafter, in the Year 1669, it was thought fit to confirm these Proceedings of the Justiciary, in that Point, and also to make a perpetual Statute, that, in Case of open Rebellion, and rising in Arms against the King and Government, the Treason, in all Time coming, might, by an Order from his Majesty's Council, be tried, and the Actors proceeded against by the Lords of Justiciary, even to final Sentence, whether the Traitors appeared or not. This being then the present Law and Custom, it is apparent in the first Place, that the Earl's Case, not being that of an open Rebellion, and rising in Arms, is not at all comprehended in the Act of Parliament, so that it is without Question that, if in the Beginning he had not entered himself Prisoner, but absented himself, the Lords of Justiciary could not have gone further, than, upon a Citation, to have declared him fugitive. But others said, that the Earl having both entered himself Prisoner, and appeared, and after Debate having been found guilty, before he made his Escape, the Case was much altered. And whether the Court could, notwithstanding of the Earl's intervening Escape, yet go on to Sentence was still debatable; for it was alledged for the Affirmative, that seeing the Earl had twice appeared, and that, after Debate, the Court had given Judgment; and the Assize returned their Verdict, so that nothing remained but the pronouncing of Sentence, it was absurd to think that it should be in the Power of the Party, thus accused, and found guilty, by his Escape to frustrate Justice, and withdraw himself from the Punishment he deserved. But on the other Hand it was pleaded for the Earl; that first, it was a fundamental Rule, that until once the Cause were concluded, no Sentence could be pronounced: Next that it was a sure Maxim in Law, that in criminal Actions there neither is nor can be any other Conclusion of the Cause than the Party's Presence and Silence; so that, after all that had past, the Earl had still Freedom to add what he thought fit, in his own Defence, before pronouncing Sentence, and therefore the Lords of Justiciary could no more proceed to Sentence against him being escaped, than if he had been absent from the Beginning, the Cause being in both Cases equally not concluded, and the Principle of Law uniformly the same, viz. that in Criminals (except in Cases excepted) no final Sentence can be given in Absence: for, as the Law, in Case of Absence from the Beginning, doth hold that just Temper as neither to suffer the contumacious to go altogether unpunished, nor, on the other Hand, finally to condemn a Party unheard. And therefore doth only declare him fugitive, and there stops: So in the Case of an Escape, before Sentence, where it cannot be said the Party was fully heard, and the Cause concluded, the Law doth not distinguish; nor can the Parity of Reason be refused. Admitting then that the Cause was so far advanced, against the Earl, that he was found Guilty; yet, 1. This is but a declaring of what the Law doth as plainly presume against the Party absent from the Beginning, and consequently, of itself, can operate no further. 2dly, The finding of a Party Guilty is no Conclusion of the Cause. And, 3dly, As it was never seen nor heard that a Party was condemned in Absence (except in excepted Cases) whereof the Earl's is none, so he having escaped and the Cause remaining thereby unconcluded, the general Rule did still hold, and no Sentence could be given against him.

It was also remembered, that the Diets and Days of the Justice Court are peremptory; and that in that Case, even in Civil far more in Criminal Courts and Causes, a Citation to hear Sentence is constantly required: Which induced some to think, that at least the Earl should have been lawfully cited to hear Sentence before it could be pronounced. But it is like this Course, as confessing a Difficulty, and occasioning too long a Delay, was therefore not made use of. However, upon the whole, it was the general Opinion, that seeing the denouncing the Earl Fugitive would have wrought much more in Law than all that was commonly said, at first, to be designed against him: And that his Case did appear every way so favourable, that impartial Men still wondered how it came to be at all questioned, it had been better to have fisted the Process, with his Escape, and taken the ordinary Course of Law, without making any more Stretches.

But, as I have told you, when the Friday came, the Lords of Justiciary, without any Respect, or Answer given to the Petition above-mentioned, given in by the Countess of Argyle to the Court for a Stop, pronounced Sentence, first in the Court, and then caused publish the same, with all Solemnity, at the Mercat Cross of Edinburgh.

FOR as much as it is found by an Assize that Archibald Earl of Argyle is guilty and culpable of the Crimes of Treason, Leasing-making, and Leasing-telling, for which he was detained within the Castle of Edinburgh, out of which he has now since the said Verdict made his Escape: Therefore the Lords Commissioners of Justiciary discern and adjudge the said Archibald Earl of Argyle to be execute to the Death, detained as a Traitor, and to underlye the Pains of Treason, and other Punishments appointed by the Laws of this Kingdom, when he shall be apprehended, at such a Time and Place, and in such Manner as his Majesty in his Royal Pleasure shall think fit to declare and appoint: And his Name, Memory, and Honours, to be extinct: And his Arms to be riven forth, and delete out of the Books of Arms, swa that his Posterity may never have Place nor be able hereafter to bruick or joyse any Honour, Offices, Titles, or Dignities, within this Realm in Time coming and to have forfeited, amitted, and tint, all and sundry his Lands, Tenements, Annual-Rents, Offices, Titles, Dignities, Tacks, Steedings, Rowmes, Possessions, Goods, and Geere whatsoever pertaining to him, to our Sovereign Lord, to remain perpetually with his Highness in Property. Which was pronounced for Doom—23 December 1681.

After the reading and publishing whereof, the Earl's Coat of Arms, by Order of the Court, was also torn and ranvered, both in the Court and at the Mercat-Cross: Albeit some thought that this was rather a Part of the Execution, which his Majesty's Letter discharges, than a necessary Solemnity, in the Publication; and the Advocate himself, says, p. 61. of his printed Criminals, that it should only be practised in the Crime of Perduellion but not in other Treasons.

He was afterwards retaken upon his Invasion of Scotland, 1 Jac. II. and without any further Trial was executed by virtue of the above-mentioned Sentence*.

CXI. The Trial of George Borosky alias Boratzi, Christopher Vratz, and John Stern, and Charles-John Count Coningsmark, at the Old-Baily, for the Murder of Thomas Thynn, Esq; February 28, 1681. 34 Car. II.

THERE having been an Indictment found at Hick's Hall by the Grand-Jury for the County of Middlesex against Charles-George Borosky, Christopher Vratz, and John Stern, for murdering Thomas Thynn, Esq; and against Charles-John Count Coningsmark, as accessory before the Fact, the said Persons being in Newgate, were brought to the Bar to be arraigned and tried: And they being Foreigners, an Interpreter was sworn to acquaint them, in a Language they understood, what they were accused of.

O o o

Clerk

Clerk of the Crown. Charles Borofky, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) Christopher Vratz, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) John Stern, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) Charles-John Coningsmark, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.)

You stand indicted in the County of Middlesex by the Names of Charles-George Borofky, late of the Parish of St. Martin's in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex, Labourer; otherwise called George Boratzki, of the same Parish and County, Labourer; Christopher Vratz of the same Parish and County, Gentleman; John Stern of the same Parish and County, Gentleman; and Charles-John Coningsmark, of the same Parish and County, Esq; otherwise called John Coningsmark, of the same Parish and County, Esquire: For that you the said Charles-George Borofky alias Boratzki, Christopher Vratz, and John Stern, not having God before your Eyes, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, upon the twelfth Day of February, in the thirty fourth Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord King Charles the Second, with Force and Arms in the Parish of St. Martin's in the Fields in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, in and upon Thomas Thynn, Esquire; in the Peace of God, and our said Sovereign Lord the King, then and there being, feloniously, wilfully, and of your Malice aforethought, did make an Assault. And that thou the said George Borofky alias Boratzki, a certain Blunderbuss of the Value of five Shillings, the said Blunderbuss being then charged with Gunpowder, and four Leaden Bullets; which said Blunderbuss thou the said George Borofky alias Boratzki in both thy Hands so as aforesaid, loaden to and against the said Thomas Thynn then and there hadst and heldest. And that thou the aforesaid George Borofky alias Boratzki, knowing the Blunderbuss aforesaid, to be so as aforesaid, charged with Gunpowder and Leaden Bullets, to and against the said Thomas Thynn then and there, with Force of Arms, feloniously, wilfully and of thy Malice aforethought, didst discharge and shoot off. And that thou the said George Borofky alias Boratzki, with the said Leaden Bullets shot and sent out of the Blunderbuss aforesaid, by the Violence and Force of the Gunpowder aforesaid: And by thee the said George Borofky alias Boratzki so as aforesaid discharged and shot off, the said Thomas Thynn in and upon the right-side of the Body of the said Thomas Thynn, near the short Ribs of the right-side of the Body of the said Thomas Thynn, then and there feloniously, wilfully, and of thy Malice aforethought didst strike and wound; giving unto him the said Thomas Thynn then and there with the Leaden Bullets aforesaid, so as aforesaid shot and sent out of the Blunderbuss aforesaid by Force and Violence of the Gunpowder aforesaid, by thee the said George Borofky alias Boratzki, so as aforesaid discharged and sent out, in and upon the right side of the Body of him the said Thomas Thynn, near the short Ribs, on the right-side of him the said Thomas Thynn four mortal Wounds, every one of them of the Breadth of one Inch, and of the Depth of six Inches; of which said mortal Wounds, he the said Thomas Thynn from the said twelfth Day of February in the thirty fourth Year aforesaid, unto the thirteenth Day of the same Month of February, at the Parish of St. Martin's in the Fields aforesaid, did languish and lived languishing: On which said thirteenth Day of February, in the thirty fourth Year aforesaid, he the said Thomas Thynn at the Parish of St. Martin's in the Fields aforesaid, of the mortal Wounds so as aforesaid given, died. And that you the said Christopher Vratz and John Stern, then, that is to say at the Time of the Felony and Murder aforesaid, by the said George Borofky alias Boratzki; so as aforesaid feloniously, wilfully, and of your Malice aforethought, done and committed, then and there feloniously, wilfully, and of your Malice aforethought, by Force and Arms were present, aiding, comforting, abetting, assisting and maintaining the said George Borofky alias Boratzki, the Felony and Murder aforesaid feloniously, wilfully, and of his Malice aforethought, to do and commit. And so you the said George Borofky alias Boratzki, Christopher Vratz and John Stern, the said Thomas Thynn in Manner and Form aforesaid, feloniously, wilfully, and of your Malice aforethought didst kill and murder, against the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity. And that thou the said Charles-John Coningsmark before the Felony and Murder aforesaid, by the said George Borofky alias Boratzki, Christopher Vratz and John Stern in Manner and Form aforesaid, feloniously, wilfully, and of their Malice aforethought, done and committed, to wit, the said twelfth Day of February, in the thirty fourth Year aforesaid, at the Parish of St. Martin's in the Fields aforesaid, them the said George Borofky alias Boratzki, Christopher Vratz and John Stern the Felony and Murder aforesaid, in Manner and Form aforesaid feloniously, to do and commit, feloniously, wilfully, and of thy Malice aforethought, didst stir up, counsel, persuade and procure, against the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity.

Sir Francis Pemberton. L. C. J. Why you must read this to them now in their Language, or else they can't understand it.

L. C. J. North. You that are the Interpreter, tell them that you are going to interpret the Indictment to them by Degrees.

Mr. Vandore. Yes, my Lord, I will.

L. C. J. Don't read all the Circumstantial, but only the Substance of the Indictment.

Then the Clerk of the Crown went near the Bar, and dictated to the Interpreter deliberately, who interpreted it to the Prisoners.

L. C. J. Well, you have told them the Substance of it, that they are indicted for killing Mr. Thynn.—Mr. Vandore, Yes.

L. C. J. Well, what says the first Man?

Cl. of Cr. I asked him if he be Guilty of the Murder whereof he stands indicted, and he says he is Not Guilty.

L. C. J. Does he say so?—Mr. Vandore. Yes, he says he is Not Guilty.

L. C. J. Why now tell him the Formality, that he must put himself upon the Jury here.

[Then Sir Nathanael Johnson was sworn Interpreter.]

L. C. J. Ask him this Question. Tell him he is accused of the Murder of Mr. Thomas Thynn; ask him if he be Guilty or Not Guilty.

Mr. Vandore. He says he is Not Guilty, my Lord. I asked him just now.

L. C. J. Then Sir Nathanael Johnson, if you can make him to understand it, tell him, that our Manner of Trial here is by Twelve-Men, and that is by putting himself upon the Country, and therefore ask him, how he will be tried. Tell him that the Method is by saying, By God and the Country.

Sir N. Johnson. My Lord, he is a very dull kind of Man; he knows not how to answer, nor what to say; nor won't say any thing; that is the Truth of it.

L. C. J. Ask him if he be willing to be tried after the Manner of the English.

Sir N. Johnson. Yes, he says he is willing to be tried according to the Fashion of the English.

L. C. J. North. He hath pleaded Not Guilty, and the other follows of course.

L. C. J. Ask the other, the Captain, the same thing.

Sir N. Johnson. He desires a French Interpreter, for he speaks French.

L. C. J. Surely here are enough People that understand French, but ask him if he does not understand English.

Sir N. Johnson. He can understand some, he says.

L. C. J. Then ask him, whether he be Guilty, or Not.

Sir N. Johnson. He says he is Not Guilty, my Lord.

L. C. J. Now ask Mr. Stern, but first ask the Captain how he will be tried.

Sir N. Johnson. He says he will be tried by God, and half his own Country, and half English.

L. C. J. He shall have his Request.

Sir N. Johnson. He desires one thing further.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir Nathanael Johnson, you must tell him this; he shall be tried by half Foreigners and half English; that is it, I suppose, he desires.

Sir N. Johnson. My Lord, he desires that there may be none of the Jury that are any thing a Kindred or Relation to Mr. Thomas Thynn, nor any particular Friend of his, and he is satisfied.

L. C. J. No, there shall not, we will take Care of that. Now ask Mr. Stern then the like Question.

Sir N. Johnson. My Lord, he says he is Not Guilty.

L. C. J. Ask him too, how he will be tried; whether by a Jury?

Sir N. Johnson. He says, he's content to be tried as the others are, by half Strangers and half English.

L. C. J. Now then ask my Lord Coningsmark what he says.

Mr. Thynn. He speaks English, my Lord.

L. C. J. But not well enough, may be, to understand the whole.

L. C. J. North. Sir Nathanael, what does he say?

Sir N. Johnson. My Lord, he says it is a Concern of his Life, and therefore he desires he may have not only one Interpreter, but others: He desires he may have two or three, that they may make no Mistake.

L. C. J. Very well.

Sir N. Johnson. He says that I understand the Dutch Language; but his Life and Honour are concerned, and therefore he would have three or four.

L. C. J. Who would he have?

Sir N. Johnson. Sir Thomas Thynn said they had one that was brought by them.

Mr. Thynn. That is Vandore, who is sworn already.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir Nathanael, tell my Lord, if he pleases, he shall have a French Interpreter; for I know he speaketh that Language very well.

Sir N. Johnson. My Lord, he says, that High-Dutch is his natural Language, and he can express himself best in that.

[Then one Vanbaring was called for by the Count, but did not appear.]

L. Ch. Bar. Sir N. Johnson, you must ask the Count whether he be Guilty of the Indictment, as accessory before the Fact.

Sir N. Johnson. I have asked, my Lord, and Not Guilty he answers.

Cl. of the Cr. How will you be tried?

Sir N. Johnson. He says he will be tried by God and half his own Country, or half Foreigners and half English; and he desires they may be Persons of some Quality, as they use to treat Persons of his Quality, and Strangers.

L. C. J. There shall be such Strangers, tell him. You have Merchants of good Account, I suppose, upon this Pannel?

Under-Sheriff. Yes, my Lord, they are all such.

Sir N. Johnson. He desires he may be tried distinctly from the others.

L. C. J. That cannot be: But look you, Sir, Pray tell my Lord this, that though the Evidence must be given, and the Jury must be charged all together, yet in this Case we will distinguish his Case to the Jury, if there be Occasion.

L. C. Bar. And his Evidence will come distinct.

Mr. Vandore. My Lord, he asks this Question of your Lordship and this Honourable Court, if it be agreeable, and according to the Justice of this Nation, that my Lord may be allowed two or three Days Delay, because he is to prepare himself and Witnesses for his Trial.

Sir N. Johnson. My Lord, he says this; his Witnesses are not prepared, and he not having had Time to recollect himself, so as to fit himself for his Defence, therefore he begs the Favour of the Court, that he may have a Day or two's Time to recollect himself. He says he is to answer Circumstances with Circumstances, my Lord; he says he has some Witnesses as to Circumstances that are very material to answer such Circumstances as are brought against him; he does not understand the Law, my Lord, nor has had no Time to have any Counsel to inform himself.

L. C. J. You must tell him this, that which he is charged with is Matter of Fact, that none can instruct him in but himself; Counsel can do him no good in such a Case as this.

Sir N. Johnson. My Lord, he says, the Matters that are objected against him are only Circumstances, my Lord, and they require an Answer, which he can do by other Circumstances, and he desires Time to recollect himself, two or three Days Respite; he desires, if it were but a little Time, a Day or two.

Mr. Thynn. My Lord, our Witnesses are all ready, and the Counsel instructed, and wait here to go on.

L. C. J. North. Look you; pray will you tell him, when the Trial is once begun, the Jury can neither eat nor drink till they have given their Verdict; that is the Law, and we can't change the Law, therefore we cannot allow him the Time he desires. He knows what he is accused of, and has known it a good while, and has had Time to recollect himself and prepare himself.

Sir N. Johnson. My Lord, he says, the Jury are not yet together, he charged with him, and therefore till the Jury are charged, he thinks he may have Time, if your Lordship please to allow it.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Look you, you must tell him, that he is to understand that here is but one Indictment against the Principals and himself, and we cannot try this by Piece-Meals; we cannot try the Principals now, and my Lord Coningsmark another Time.

Sir N. Johnson. If it must be so, he says, he must throw himself upon your Lordship; he hopes he shall have nothing but what is just and fair, and he hopes your Lordship will be of Counsel to him, as the Fashion of this Country is; if any Thing arises of Matter of Law, he desires he may have the Advantage of it: And if he can't have a Day or two, he says the Innocency of his Case will protect him. Count Coningsmark knowing how Innocent he is, won't stick for a Day or two, but he will be ready to be tried as your Lordship shall think fit; he has Innocence on his Side, and that will protect him.

L. C. J. Let my Lord know, that we will be careful in examining all Things that concern him.

Sir N. Johnson. He says he does not fear it, my Lord, having to do with such honourable Persons, nor doubt it at all.

L. C. J. Then swear a Jury. But look you my Lord Coningsmark, consider this; as the Gentlemen of the Jury come to be sworn, if you do dislike any of them, you may except against them.

Sir N. Johnson. My Lord, he says, being altogether a Stranger here in England, and not knowing any of the Persons, he begs the Favour of the Bench that he may have the Names of those that are returned of the Jury, and a little Time to consider of it.

L. C. J. That we cannot do: All we can do for you is, we will take as much Care as we can, that you may have indifferent Persons, and Persons of Quality.

L. C. J. North. Pray tell him, the Law gives him the Privilege of a peremptory Challenge.

Sir N. Johnson. He says, my Lord, he does not know who they are, but they may be Persons that are touched, and may have something of Evil-Will or Spleen against him. His Father served against the King of Denmark, and against the Poles and the Papists, and his Father was a Protestant, and served the Protestant Cause.

L. C. J. What Countrymen are they, Mr. Sheriff?

Under-Sheriff. They are French and Dutch most of them, I do not believe there is ever a Dane amongst them.

L. C. J. We will call all Frenchmen, if he had rather have them than Dutch.

Sir N. Johnson. He would very gladly have them all High-Dutch; if not, that he may have some.

L. C. J. I thought he had excepted against the Dutch.

Sir N. Johnson. No, against the Danes; for his Father in the Wars burnt their Towns.

L. C. J. Examine them, as they come to the Book, if there be any of the Roman Catholick Religion, and don't let any such be sworn.

Mr. Sheriff Pilkington. There is none such amongst them, I dare say.

L. C. J. Sir N. Johnson, tell my Lord, he shall have no Roman Catholicks at all.

Sir N. Johnson. He thanks your Lordship. He desires he may have the Pannel to look upon, and he hopes that is an easy Favour.

L. C. J. Let him have the Pannel, if it will do him any good. He is a Stranger, satisfy him in what we can.

[Which was delivered to him, and he looked it over.]

L. C. J. Tell him, as the Jury is called, he shall have every one of the Outlandishmen and Englishmen brought before him.

Sir N. Johnson. My Lord, he thanks you for this Favour.

L. C. B. Sir N. Johnson, tell the Count, they call first an Englishman, then a Foreigner, and they shall be brought to view.

L. C. J. Pray, have you told the other Persons, that their Time to Challenge is before the Jury is sworn?—Sir N. Johnson. The Polanders say he can challenge none, because knows none.

L. C. J. What say the rest?—Mr. Vandore. They say they know no Body, and can except against no Body.

Cl. of Cr. Call Sir Will. Roberts. [Who appearing, stood up.]

L. C. J. My Lord Coningsmark, there is the Foreman.

Sir N. Johnson. He has nothing to say against him.

L. C. J. Then hold him a Book, and swear him. [Which was done.]

Cl. of Cr. Call Mr. Downing.

Interpret. He says he is no Foreigner.

L. C. J. Then he must not be sworn.

Cl. of Cr. Moses Charas. [Who appeared.]

Interpret. He has nothing to say against him. But he himself says, he does not speak English, but he desires to speak French.

Cl. of Cr. Then tell him in French, he must lay his Hand on the Book and be sworn, and harken to his Oath.

Sir Fr. Winnington. We challenge him for the King.

L. C. J. For what Cause?

Sir Fr. Winnington. My Lord, we take it that we need not shew any Cause, unless there be any Want of the Number in the Pannel.

L. C. J. Then we must do him right, and tell him what Advantage the Law gives him. Tell my Lord, you that understand English, that this Gentleman is challenged for the King; and if the King shew any good Cause for it, he must not be sworn, else he must. And the Way for him to cause the King's Counsel to shew their Cause, (if he desire it) is to challenge all the rest.

Mr. Williams. We waive our Challenge: for the Reason why we challenged him was, because he did not understand English, which will be no Reason at all. [Then he was sworn.]

Cl. of Cr. Sir Henry Ingoldby.

Sir N. Johnson. He challenges him, my Lord.

Cl. of Cr. Sir William Gullston.

Sir N. Johnson. He excepts against him, my Lord.

L. C. J. Does he challenge him in respect of what I said to him about the Outlandish Gentlemen, that the King is to shew Cause? Or how does he challenge him?

Interpret. My Lord, he says he hears he is a Friend to Mr. Thynn.

L. C. J. Well, let him be passed by then.

Cl. of Cr. Sir John Musters. [Who did not appear.]

Sir N. Johnson. He says, my Lord, he only desires indifferent Persons:

Cl. of Cr. Henry Herbert, Esq;—Sir N. Johnson. He challenges him:

Cl. of Cr. Richard Paget, Esq;—Sir N. Johnson. He desires to see him:

L. C. J. Let him be brought into the Middle, that he may look upon the Prisoners.

Interpret. He has nothing to say against him. [Then he was sworn.]

Cl. of Cr. James Buigone.—Interpret. He excepts against him.

Cl. of Cr. Claudius Derolee.—Interpret. He excepts against him too:

Cl. of Cr. Charles Beelow.—Interpret. He says he looks like a Man, and he does not except against him. [And he was sworn.]

Cl. of Cr. Ralph Bucknall, Esq;—Interpret. He challenges him.

Cl. of Cr. Thomas Earlsby, Esq;—Interpret. He challenges him too.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir Nath. Johnson, pray tell him he can challenge but twenty.

Sir N. Johnson. He says very well; he will not do any more. He desires the Favour, that those that he challenges may not come near those that are sworn.

L. C. J. Well, it shall be so; we will take Care of it:

Cl. of Cr. Richard Gowre, Esq;

Sir N. Johnson. He excepts against him.

Cl. of Cr. George Hocknall, Esq;

Interpret. He challenges him. [But then the Count looking in his Paper, retracted the Challenge, and he was sworn.]

Cl. of Cr. Peter Vandenberg.

Interpret. He says nothing to him. [Then he was sworn.]

Cl. of Cr. Walter Moyle, Esq;

Interpret. He does not challenge him. [He was sworn.]

Cl. of Cr. Christopher Ripkey.

Interpret. He does not challenge him. [He was sworn.]

Cl. of Cr. Thomas Henflow, Esq;

Interpret. He does not except against him. [Then he was sworn.]

Cl. of Cr. Lewis Doncarr.—Interpret. He challenges him.

Cl. of Cr. Peter Lecane. [He did not appear.]

David Collivaux.

Interpret. He challenges him, because he knew Mr. Thynn, they say:

Cl. of Cr. Andrew Lodderley.—Interpret. He challenges him.

Cl. of Cr. James Burk.—Interpret. He challenges him.

Cl. of Cr. Daniel Griggion.

Interpret. He does not challenge him. [So he was sworn.]

Cl. of Cr. Robert Jordan, Esq;—Interpret. He challenges him.

Cl. of Cr. Lucy Knightley, Esq;—Interpret. He challenges him.

Cl. of Cr. John Haynes, Esq;

Interpret. He does not except against him. [He was sworn.]

Cl. of Cr. Lewis le Count.—Interpret. He challenges him.

Cl. of Cr. John Belliew.—Interpret. He challenges him.

Cl. of Cr. James Frontein.

Mr. Williams. We challenge him for the King:

Cl. of Cr. John Massey.—Interpret. He challenges him.

Cl. of Cr. Andrew Primow.—Interpret. He challenges him.

Cl. of Cr. Nicholas Beufor.—Interpret. He challenges him. He says they are all Walloons, and therefore he challenges them.

L. C. J. Why does he except against Walloons?

Interpret. Because they have always served against the Swedes.

Cl. of Cr. John Lebar.

Interpret. He does not except against him. [And so he was sworn.]

Cl. of Cr. Cryer, reckon these, &c.

Sir Will. Roberts, Bart.

Moses Charas, Gent.

Richard Pagett, Esq;

Charles Beelow, Gent.

Geo. Hocknall, Esq;

Pet. Vandenberg, Gent.

Walter Moyle, Esq;

Chr. Ripkey, Gent.

Tho. Henflow, Esq;

Dan. Griggion, Gent.

John Haynes, Esq; and John Lebar, Gent.

Then Proclamation for Information and Prosecution was made: And a Chair was set for the Count, at his Request.

Cl. of Cr. G Entlemen, Look upon the Prisoners, you that are sworn, and hearken to their Cause, they stand indicted prout in the Indictment, mutatis mutandis—against the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity. Upon this Indictment they have been arraigned, and thereunto have severally pleaded, Not Guilty: And for their Trial, have put themselves upon God and their Country; which Country you are. Your Charge is to enquire, whether they, or any of them are Guilty of the Offences whereof they stand indicted, or Not Guilty. And if you find them, or any of them Guilty, you are to find what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements they had at the Time of the Felony and Murder committed, or at any Time since. If you find them or any of them Guilty, you are to enquire, whether they or any of them fled for it: If you find that they, or any of them fled for it, you are to enquire of their Goods and Chattels, as if you had found them Guilty; if you find them or any of them Not Guilty, nor that they did fly for it, you are to say so, and no more, and hear your Evidence. But if you acquit any one of the Principals—

L. C. J. That is a Mistake, it must be all the Principals.

Cl. of Cr. If you acquit the Principals, you are not to enquire of Charles-John Coningsmark as Accessary before.

Mr. Keene. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen that are sworn of this Jury, George Borosky alias Boratzi, Christopher Vratz, and John Stern, the Prisoners at the Bar, stand here indicted; for that they not having the Fear of God before their Eyes, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, the 12th Day of February, in the 34th Year of the Reign of this King, feloniously and voluntarily, and of their Malice afore-

* Most certainly they might, and it is frequently done, although there be but one Indictment, as in the Case of the Regicides and many other Cases; but it was more for the Interest of the Count to try him then, though he was not aware of it himself.

thought

thought, did make an Assault upon Thomas Thynn, Esq; at the Parish of St. Martin's in the Fields in this County; and that the said George Borofky having in his Hands a Blunderbuss, which he knew to be charged with four Leaden Bullets, did discharge it at Mr. Thynn, and gave him four mortal Wounds, of which Wounds he languished till the 13th Day of February, and then died: And that they the said Christopher Vratz and John Stern were there present, aiding, assisting and abetting him to commit the said Felony and Murder; and so that they the said George Borofky, Christopher Vratz, and John Stern, did of their Malice aforethought, in Manner aforeaid, murder the said Thomas Thynn. And Charles-John Coningsmark, the other Prisoner at the Bar, stands indicted, for that he before the Felony and Murder aforeaid, so done and committed, to wit, the 12th Day of February aforeaid, did of his Malice aforethought, move, incite, counsel, persuade, and procure the said Borofky, Vratz, and Stern, to do that Murder, against the Peace of the King, his Crown and Dignity. To this Indictment they have severally pleaded Not Guilty; and you are to enquire, whether they are Guilty, as they are charged, or no.

Sir Francis Withens. My Lord and Gentlemen, I am of Counsel in this Case for the King, against the Prisoners at the Bar. There are three of them indicted as Principals in this Murder, the fourth as Accessary before. In this Case that is now before you, Gentlemen, I cannot choose but take Notice unto you, that a Murder of this nature has never been heard of to be perpetrated upon English Ground, both in respect of the Person murdered, and in respect of the Circumstances of the Fact. For the Person murdered, was a Gentleman of that Quality and Estate, that he hath left but few Equals behind him. That this Man being in his Coach, should be way-layed, surprized, and murdered, and this Murder committed in the midst of our Streets, is that which works Amazement in all English Hearts. And our only Comfort upon this sad Occasion is, that there is not one Native of this Country found amongst all those that are accused to be Instruments in this barbarous Fact.

I did observe to you, Gentlemen, before, that there are three named to be Principals; Borofky, whom for Distinction sake, I shall call by the Name of the Polander, Vratz, who is called the Captain, and Stern, who is called the Lieutenant. Borofky the Polander, we say, was the Man that discharged this Blunderbuss against this worthy Gentleman that was slain; but though he was the only Man that discharged it, yet if we can satisfy you that Vratz and Stern were with him at the same Time, aiding and assisting him when he gave the Blow, they are as much Principals as he that shot off the Gun. It will be natural to open to you what is said against this Captain Vratz, he is a Swede by Birth, and did formerly belong to Count Coningsmark; he was a Retainer to him. Afterwards, I think in the War he was made a Captain. This Gentleman had been formerly in England, but at the last Time he came, which was three Weeks, or thereabouts, before the Murder was committed, his Lodging was in King-Street at Westminster. This Captain Vratz, we shall prove, did often discourse that he had a Quarrel with Mr. Thynn, that several Times before this Murder was actually done, he ordered his Servant to way-lay his Coach; and upon that very fatal Day, the 12th of February, when this unhappy Accident fell out, having Information that Mr. Thynn was gone out in his Coach, immediately he puts on his Boots, gives Order to his Servant to bring his Clothes to him at such a Place, because he should remove his Lodging, he said, that Night, that he should bring his Clothes to the Black-Bull Inn in Holborn, and bring his Horse thither too. When he went from his Lodging, the Polander went along with him, and they came to the Black-Bull in Holborn, where they met with Stern. We shall shew you, that these three Gentlemen being thus armed, one with a Blunderbuss, the second with Pistols, and the other very well provided, rid out about six of the Clock, the Murder being committed about seven or eight. At their going out, they enquired which was their Way to Temple-Bar; they were seen to ride through the Strand to St. James's, the Fact was done in the Pall-Mall, and we shall shew you the Way of it was thus; Mr. Thynn passing through the Street to go home in his Coach, three Persons came riding up to the Coach Side, and while the one stopped the Horses, immediately the Blunderbuss was discharged into the Coach against Mr. Thynn, and gave him those Wounds, of which the next Morning he died, Presently these three Men ran away, but one of them let fall a Pistol upon the Place, which I shall observe as a material Circumstance against these Persons, because we shall prove whose the Blunderbuss was. These Things being done, this Murder committed, and they gone away, it began to work in People's Thoughts, and Circumstances began to come out, that this Blunderbuss should be ordered to be brought by Captain Vratz, who had discoursed with many Persons about the Quarrel he had with Mr. Thynn, and given Order to his Servant to way-lay his Coach; and these Persons being rid out at that Time, there was a great Suspicion that they did it. Great Care there was taken, and great Means used, as no doubt there would be, to apprehend the Malefactors; and by great Providence it was found out at last, that this Captain Vratz, according to his Word, had altered his Lodging, and was got to a Doctor's House, that lived, I think, in Leicester-Fields. Being there surprized, and coming upon his Examination, he did not deny but he was there one of the three that was at the Place when and where Mr. Thynn was murdered, but he pretended, he did intend to fight him in a Duel, and kill him fairly, as he called it. But, Gentlemen, I must observe this to you, in my small Time of Experience of the World, I never knew a Man go to fight a Duel, and carry out with him a Second with a Blunderbuss. 'Tis not possible he should go with such a Design as he would insinuate, but rather with an Intention of Murder. For the Polander, he came into England but the Friday before, and so we shall prove to you that which will stick hard upon the Count. Upon Friday, he being landed, he enquires for the young Count's Tutor, which was at an Academy of one Monfieur Faubert's; and there he enquires for the Count's Secretary; he lay there, I think, that Night, and upon Saturday he was conveyed to the Count's Lodgings. There also he was lodged for one Night. The Count was pleased to bespeak him a very good Sword, and a Coat for him, that he might be well armed, and there he lay on Saturday Night, as I said, the Night before the Murder was committed. Upon Sunday, Gentlemen, there being a Message sent to this Doctor, where Vratz lay, the Night following that the Count would speak with the Doctor, the Doctor came, and the Doctor and the Polander went away to Captain Vratz's Lodging, and from thence to Holborn, to the Black-Bull, and the Captain was carried in as much Secrecy as he could, for he was carried in a Sedan; and I think we shall be able to prove, by the Persons that carried him, that this was the Man. For the other Gentleman, Stern, the Lieutenant, as they call him, he was an ancient Acquaintance of Captain Vratz's, had known him long ago in England, and complained to him, that Lodgings might be very dear; but the Captain told him, he had a Design; and if he would assist him as a brave Fellow, would maintain him, and he should not want Money to bear all his Charges. But we shall prove that this was the third Person that rid out with the Polander, and the Captain in this Garb that I told you of, this Night that the Fact was done. And indeed, Gentlemen, upon their Examination, they have every one confessed the Fact; even the Polander confessed that he did shoot off the Blunderbuss; and Vratz confessed that he was there, and the Lieutenant Stern; so that if there had been no more Evidence, it would have been sufficient to maintain the Issue, and in our Circumstances, it is more perhaps than could be expected. This, Gentlemen, is the principal Sum of the Evidence, that will be given against the three Principals. For the fourth, Gentlemen, Count Coningsmark, he is a Person of great Quality, and I am extraordinary sorry to find the Evidence so strong against him, as my Brief imports; I wish his Innocence were greater, and our Evidence less; for he is a Person of too great Quality, one would hope, to be concerned in a Thing of this Nature; but that he was the main Abettor and Procurer of this barbarous Business, we shall prove upon these Grounds: First, That he had a Design upon Mr. Thynn's Life; for, Gentlemen, coming into England about three Weeks before this Matter was transacted, first he lies in Disguise, and lives private, and removes his Lodging from Place to Place frequently; that he sent a Person to enquire of the Swedish Resident, whether, or no, if he should kill Mr. Thynn in a Duel, he could by the Laws of England afterwards marry the Lady Ogle? So that Mr. Thynn's Death was in Prospect from the beginning. Gentlemen, we shall prove to you, as I did in some Measure open before, that the Count himself was pleased to give express Order, that the Polander should have a good Sword bought him; that before he came into England, he was very much troubled, by reason of the stormy Weather, for fear he should be cast away; that he lodged him in his own Lodging the Night before this Act was perpetrated; and that Captain Vratz was the Morning before, and immediately after, with the Count. Another thing, Gentlemen, that I had almost forgot: The Count was willing to be instructed in the Laws of England, and enquired, Whether a Man might lawfully ride out upon a Sunday? And being told, That after Sermon he might; he was very well satisfied; and the Day he enquired of it, was the Day that the Murder was committed. After the Thing was done, Count Coningsmark, the next Morning, pretended he was to go to Windsor, and leaves his Lodging; but instead of going to Windsor, (being still in his Disguise) he goes to Rotherhithe, by the Water-side, and there, I think, he continues two or three Days in a black Peruke, (and that is Disguise enough for such a Gentleman) and afterwards he goes to Graveyard, but, I think, he was upon the Water some Time, before he thought it convenient to land; and there he was surprized in this Disguise. And when he was surprized and taken, he shewed himself to be in great Disorder; but being charged with the Fact, acknowledged nothing of the Matter. But how it should come to pass, that he should lie so long disguised, upon no Pretence that can be known, and afterwards to pretend that he had a Business to effect, and then he was to go into France, that will lie upon him to answer. But these are the inducing Evidences that we give to you; his keeping the Polander in his House, his disguising of himself, and his enquiring, Whether if he killed Mr. Thynn, he might not marry my Lady Ogle? His flight the next Day, and pretending to go to Windsor, when he went quite the other Way, and all in a Disguise; and these Persons not having any Appearance, or any Reason whatsoever, for any particular Quarrel to Mr. Thynn, but the Count having some Dispute to him, upon the Terms that the Witnesses will tell you of by and by, and being related to the Count, we must leave it to you to judge, whether these Gentlemen did it singly and purely upon their own Heads, or whether they were not set upon it by the Count.

Sir Fra. Winn. My Lord, I shall not trouble you with repeating of our Evidence, but we will begin and call our Witnesses, directly to prove the Murder done by these Gentlemen; we will prove the Fact downright upon them, and then we shall afterwards come to the Count.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, first we will direct Evidence to the Principals, and then to the Accessary. Call William Cole and William Ellers.

L. C. J. Swear some Person to interpret the Evidence that shall be given: I do it for the sake of the Aliens that are of the Jury; for some of them understand no English, and they will not know what to make of the Evidence, if they do not repeat it to them in their own Language.

Then Vandore and Wright were sworn for the King.

Sir N. Johnson. My Lord desires that the Doctor and the Taylor that are in Prison may be sent for, to be here, for they are Witnesses for him.

Sir Fra. Winn. We desire they may be here too, for they are Witnesses for the King, and I believe they are here, my Lord.

Sir N. Johnson. Mr. Vandore does not speak French.

Sir Will. Roberts. Mr. Craven speaks Dutch and French very well.

Mr. Craven was sworn.

Sir N. Johnson. The Count desires the Favour of Pen and Ink.

L. C. J. Let the Count have Pen and Ink.

Mr. Williams. Call William Cole and William Ellers.

(Who appeared, and were sworn.)

Which is William Cole? Set him up. Acquaint my Lord and the Jury how Mr. Thynn was assaulted, and the Manner of it.

Cole. My Lord, my Master was coming up St. James's-street from the Countess of Northumberland's.

Sir Fra. Winn. Name your Master.

Mr. Williams. Who was your Master?

Cole. Mr. Thynn. And I had a Flambeau in my Hand, and was going before the Coach, and coming along, at the lower End of St. Alban's-street, I heard the Blunderbuss go off; so upon that I turned my Face back, and saw a great Smoke, and heard my Master cry out he was murdered: And I see three Horsemen riding away on the right-side of the Coach, and I pursued after them, and cried out, Murder: I ran to the upper End of the Hay-market, till I was quite spent, and was able to go no further; and turning back again, my Master was got into the House, and I understood he was wounded: That is all I know.

Mr. Williams. You say you heard a Blunderbuss go off, and turning back, you saw three Men riding away from the Coach?—Cole. Yes.

Mr. Williams. Look upon the Prisoners at the Bar: Can you say all of them, or any of them were the Men?

Cole. No, I cannot; I did not see their Faces, but I saw the Horse of one of them was a little Bay Horse.

Mr. Williams. But do you take any of them Men to be one of the three?

Cole. I did not see any of their Faces.

Sir Fra. Winn. What Time of Night was it?

Cole. A Quarter after Eight.

Sir Fra. Winn. Pray what Day of the Week?—Cole. Sunday.

Sir Fra. Winn. What Day of the Month?

Cole. The 11th or 12th of February.

Sir Fra. Winn. Then, where is William Ellers? Pray do you tell the Court and Jury how Mr. Thynn was wounded, and by whom, and what you know of it.

Ellers. My Lord, I came with my Master from St. James's-street, from my Lady Northumberland's, and as I came at St. Alban's-street, there came three Men riding by the right-side of the Coach, and as they rid, one of them turned about, and bid me stop, you Dog; and just as I looked about, the Fire was let into the Coach upon my Master, and the Men ran away as fast as they could.

Sir Fra. Winn. How many were there of them?

Ellers. There were three.

Sir Fra. Winn. Were those Men at the Bar, or any of them the Persons?

Ellers. I cannot tell.

Sir Fra. Winn. What were the Words they said when the Coach was stopped? Hold, hold, or stop, you Dog?

Mr. Williams. What Condition was your Master in then? Was he shot then?—Ellers. Yes.

Mr. Williams. We will give you some Evidence now out of their Examinations.

L. C. J. You had best give some Evidence of his Wounds.

Mr. Williams. Yes, we will. Call Mr. Hobbs the Surgeon.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Craven, you hear what these Witnesses say, tell it to the Gentlemen of the Jury that are Outlandish Men, That these Witnesses swear, there were three Men did do this Thing; the one of them stopped the Coach, and the other shot into it, but it was at that Time of Night, they could not know their Faces, and they all rid away.

Mr. Craven. My Lord, if you please, the Witnesses may speak by Degrees, and between every Witness I will give the Jury an Account.

L. C. J. Well, it shall be so; but they say no more than what I tell you, That three Men did do this.

Then he interpreted it to the Jury.

L. C. J. What says that Gentleman to you?

Mr. Craven. He says he hears that three Men did do it, but he says, he does not hear that they knew any of them.

Then Mr. Hobbs was sworn.

Mr. Williams. Had you the searching of Mr. Thynn's Body after it was hurt?—Mr. Hobbs. Yes.

Mr. Williams. How did you find him?

Mr. Hobbs. I was with him, Sir, that Night he was wounded, and I found him shot with four Bullets, which entered into his Body and tore his Guts, and wounded his Liver and his Stomach, and his Gall, and wounded his great Guts, and his small Guts, and broke one of the Ribs, and wounded the great Bone below.

Sir Fra. Winn. What Time came you to him?

Mr. Hobbs. About nine or ten of the Clock.

Sir Fra. Winn. Did he die of those Wounds?

Mr. Hobbs. Yes he did die of those Wounds.

Mr. Williams. Did you apprehend them all mortal, or any, or which of them?

Mr. Hobbs. I believe there was never a Wound but it might prove mortal.

Sir Fra. Winn. Now tell us what Day of the Week, and what Day of the Month it was.

Mr. Hobbs. It was Sunday Night, the 12th of February, I think.

L. C. J. What did you observe of the Bullets; was there any thing done to them more than ordinary?

Mr. Hobbs. I could not see any thing, I have them here, my Lord.

L. Chief Baron. Were they Iron or Lead?

Then Mr. Hobbs delivered them into Court.

Mr. Hobbs. Two of them, the little ones, may be Iron; for one of them went through a thick Bone, and yet there was no Impression on it.

L. C. J. And this that has the Impression, you think might be done against the Bones.—Mr. Hobbs. Yes.

L. C. J. Was this left ragged on purpose to do the more Mischief?

Mr. Hobbs. Which, my Lord?

L. C. J. This that is left at the End here. Would this be more mortal than another Bullet, or harder to heal?

Mr. Hobbs. No, but as they take up a greater Space in flying.

L. C. J. Would not the Raggedness hinder the Healing?

Mr. Hobbs. No, only bruise the Flesh, which bruised Flesh must come away before it can be healed. All Bullets wound by bruising of the Flesh.

* These Examinations are inserted at the End of this Trial, the Chief Justice, out of Favour to Count Coningsmark, not permitting them to be read in Court, as he thought to have done; for the Examinations are indeed no Evidence against any but the Examinant, yet are they not to be suppressed because naming others, but ought nevertheless to be read, though with the aforesaid Caution to be given to the Jury, otherwise the most material Evidence might be quite neglected, since all Confessions must be taken entire, or not at all.

L. C. J. Well, these were the four Bullets that were found in Mr. Thynn's Body?

Mr. Hobbs. I verily believe they are. Dr. Lower had them out of my Hands for a Day or two, but I believe them to be the same.

L. C. J. Was there any lodged in the Stomach?

Mr. Hobbs. Yes, one of the little ones.

L. C. J. Had they broke the great Bone?

Mr. Hobbs. Yes, the great Bone in the Bottom of the Belly.

L. C. J. Two of them?

Mr. Hobbs. A great one and a little one; two of them passed through that Bone, and lodged in the Back-bone.

L. C. J. Was any of them gone through the Body?

Mr. Hobbs. One of them lay between the Ribs and the Skin.

L. C. J. None were got quite through then?—Mr. Hobbs. None.

Sir Fra. Winn. Call the Coroner, Mr. White.

L. C. J. Tell the Jury, Mr. Craven, what this Witness has said.

[Then he interpreted it.]

L. C. J. What says that Gentleman?

Mr. Craven. He says 'tis very well, he understands part of it.

L. C. J. Do the rest of them understand it?

Sir N. Johnson. He told it in French to the others.

L. C. J. Let Mr. Hobbs have the Bullets again when the Jury have seen them.

Then Mr. White was sworn.

Sir Fra. Winn. Now we will ask the Coroner a Question or two. Pray will you acquaint my Lord, what you know of this Murder of Mr. Thynn.

Mr. White. On the thirteenth of February, in the Afternoon, I sat upon the Body of Thomas Thynn, Esq; and I found he had four Holes on his right-side, behind his short-ribs, and they seemed to be like Holes made with Bullets. And I gave Order to open the Body.

L. C. J. And there the Bullets were found?

Mr. White. There the Surgeon found them.

L. C. J. Were you by?

Mr. White. I was at the taking them out.

L. C. J. 'Tis fit that the Polander should have one to interpret what is said against him.

Mr. Williams. Captain Vratz, you hear what is said, and understand it.

Interpreter. He says he does understand it.

Mr. Williams. Pray tell the Polander what is said. That is, the two first Witnesses say, Three Persons assaulted the Coach, and one shot into the Coach, and by that Means Mr. Thynn was killed, by the Shot out of the Blunderbuss: And the Surgeon does say, that these four Bullets were found in his Body.

[Then it was interpreted to the Polander.]

Interpreter. He says, my Lord, he cannot tell how many Bullets were in, he did not charge it himself, but he fired it, he says.

Sir Fra. Winn. He confesses he fired then.

Sir W. Roberts. My Lord, the Jury desire to know if the Pole can tell who did charge it?—L. C. J. North. Ask him who charged it.

Interpreter. He can tell, my Lord, he says.

L. C. J. It will not be very material that, for his Evidence can charge no Body but himself.

Sir Fra. Winn. Now, my Lord, if you please, we will call those Persons, the Justices of the Peace that examined these Men upon their Apprehension, for the Murder of Mr. Thynn. Call Mr. Bridgman and Sir John Reresby.

[Who were sworn standing upon the Bench.]

Interpreter. My Lord, he says the Blunderbuss was given him by the Captain.

Sir Fra. Winn. Mr. Bridgman, were you by at the taking of the Examination of these Persons?

Mr. Bridgman. Yes, I was. And these were the Examinations that were taken.

Sir Fra. Winn. Were you by all the while?

Mr. Bridgman. Sir John Reresby and I did take these Examinations*. And I will read them if you please.

L. C. J. As to that, let it alone, if you please. Mr. Bridgman, when the Polander was examined concerning this Murder, what did he say?

Mr. Bridgman. He owned it, to the best of my Remembrance; but I refer to the Examination if I mistake.

L. C. J. Look upon it to refresh your Memory, Sir, and then tell us.

Mr. Williams. Look first what the Polander said, and then we will go on to the others.

Sir Fra. Winn. Now, Sir, will you please to acquaint my Lord and the Jury what he or any of them confessed of the Fact.

L. C. J. What the Polander confessed first.

Mr. Bridgman. The Polander, upon his Examination before Sir John Reresby and me, did own that he came into England at the Desire of Count Coningsmark.

L. C. J. Speak only as to himself; for it is Evidence only against himself.

Sir Fra. Winn. My Lord, his Confession is entire, and we can't separate it.

L. C. J. But we must direct what is just and fitting. His Evidence can charge no body but himself; and that is the Reason I would not have his Examination read; for it cannot be read but only against himself.

Mr. Bridgman. Upon his Examination he confessed, that he was present when the Captain stopped the Coach; that he fired the Musquetoon by the Captain's Order; and that before he did it, the Captain bid him, as soon as ever he had stopped the Coach to fire.

Sir Fra. Winn. Did he confess he did fire?

Mr. Bridgman. Yes, he did.

L. C. J. North. As he does now.

L. C. J. Look you, now do you tell the Polander, that the Evidence against him is, That he did fire this Musquetoon, or Blunderbuss, or what ayow will call it.—Interpreter. He does confess it.

L. C. J. Tell him what I say, that this Evidence is given against him: That he did formerly acknowledge he discharged the Blunderbuss into the Coach, when Captain Vratz stopped the Coach.

Interpreter. Yes, my Lord, he says 'tis true, he fired according to his Order.

Sir Fra. Winn. Pray, Sir, consider what was confessed by the Captain.

Mr. Bridgman. He confessed he had a Design to fight with Mr. Thynn, and Mr. Thynn having several times refused to fight with him, he resolved to oblige him to fight by Force, and therefore he had taken these Persons along with him; that if he should fail in his Revenge, or after the thing done he should be pursued, he might make his Escape. He confessed he was there, and stopped the Coach, but the Polonian fired by Mistake; for he did not bid him fire, but only in case he should be hindered from Fighting or making his Escape.

L. C. J. He confessed he came to fight Mr. Thynn?

Mr. Bridgman. Yes, he did so.

L. C. J. And that he stopped the Coach? Mr. Bridgman. Yes.

Sir Fra. Winn. You said after the thing was done, what was that thing?

Mr. Bridgman. After he had fought, in case he should be stopped in his Escape, he bid the Polander fire.

Sir Fra. Winn. Did he confess any thing of the Delivery of the Gun to him?

Mr. Bridgman. He confessed the Polander had the Gun, but he said nothing from whom he had it.

L. C. J. Now Captain Vratz, you hear what is said against you by this Gentleman; that you owned you came thither with a Design to fight Mr. Thynn, and force him to fight if he should not be willing; and you brought these Men with you to carry you off, in case you should kill him; that you did stop the Coach, and you said you did not give him Order to fire, unless he refused to fight you.

Mr. Bridgman. No, unless he could not make his Escape.

L. C. J. Now what say you to this?

Sir N. Johnson. He desires to understand it.

L. C. J. Why then speak it to him, you that are the Interpreter?

[Then Mr. Craven interpreted it to him in French.]

L. C. J. Now speak aloud, and tell us what he says.

Mr. Craven. He says 'tis very true, that he was there, and had that Gentleman and the Polander along with him as his Servants, Mr. Thynn being a Gentleman that had always a great many Servants about him. And he says, my Lord, that he had received an Affront from Mr. Thynn; upon that, he challenged him, and sent Letters out of Holland to desire him to give Satisfaction by Fighting, but could have no Satisfaction; and therefore because in England Duels were forbid, he thought to make a Rencounter of it, and took these Gentlemen along with him, that if so be Mr. Thynn's Servants should assault him, or knock him on the Head, or hinder him from escaping, that they might get him off.

Sir Fra. Winn. I beg one Favour of you, Sir, that you would ask him one Question, and that is, What the Affront was that Mr. Thynn gave him?

L. C. J. That he apprehends he gave him?

[The Interpreter asked him.]

Mr. Craven. My Lord, he says, That at Richmond he heard he spoke and gave out very ill Language of Count Coningsmark, who was his Friend, and a Man he had many Obligations to, and so of himself too, and he would never acquaint Count Coningsmark with it, but would have Satisfaction, and take the Quarrel upon himself, being a Gentleman; he says, that he heard that he called him Hector, and gave such ill Language as was never to be suffered.

Sir N. Johnson. And the Fashion in Germany is, if they won't fight, to shoot them.

Sir Fra. Winn. How can you tell that, Sir? the Interpreter that asked the Question says no such thing.

L. C. J. Pray will you ask him this, Whether ever he saw Mr. Thynn, and how many Times?

Mr. Craven. He says he has seen him several Times in the Playhouse, and riding in his Coach; he did not see him at Richmond, for if he had, he would not have put it up so long.

Mr. Williams. I believe he never spoke to him in his Life.

L. C. J. Ask him that Question, whether he ever spoke to him?

Mr. Craven. He says he had no Friend to send to Mr. Thynn, and he could not speak with Mr. Thynn himself; for Mr. Thynn might think that he was not a Gentleman good enough to fight with him.

L. C. J. Ask him this, about what Time he saw him at the Play-house?

Mr. Craven. He says he does not remember exactly the Time when he did see him at the Play-house.

L. C. J. Ask him whether this Affront that he pretends, was given him since he last came over, or when he was in England before?

Mr. Craven. He says 'tis eight Months ago since he received the Affront.

L. C. J. That was before he went out of England?

Mr. Craven. Yes, it was before.

Sir Fra. Winn. He says he writ to Mr. Thynn out of Holland; we desire to know by whom he sent his Challenge?

L. C. J. Ask him if he sent a Challenge to Mr. Thynn, and by whom?

Mr. Craven. He says he could send no less than a Gentleman; and he had never a Gentleman to send by, and so he sent his Letter by the Post.

Mr. Williams. Mr. Bridgman, now we would ask you concerning Mr. Stern, the third Man.

Mr. Bridgman. Let me have the Examination, and I will look upon it and tell you.

Mr. Williams. Pray, do Sir, tell us what he said?

Mr. Bridgman. Upon his Examination he confessed, that the Captain told him, he had a Quarrel with a Gentleman, and that if he would assist him in it, he would make his Fortune. And that the Captain gave him Money to buy the Blunderbuss.

Sir Fra. Winn. Stern did confess that, did he? Mr. Bridgman. Yes.

L. C. J. Did he confess he was at the Fact?

Mr. Bridgman. Yes, he confessed he was at the Fact; and he said, when he came beyond Charing-Cross, he was about ten Yards before, and he heard the Captain say, Stop, to the Coach, upon which he turned about, and presently saw the Shot made, and he saw the other Persons ride away, and he made away after them: And the Captain further told him, that he would give two or three, or four hundred Crowns, to find a Man that would kill Mr. Thynn.

Sir Fra. Winn. What did he speak about stabbing, or about an Italian?

Mr. Bridgman. He said that the Captain desired him to get an Italian that would stab a Man, and that he would get two Poniards for that Purpose; and that it was before the Polonian came over.

L. C. J. This is no Evidence against the Captain; but pray will you tell Stern the Lieutenant what it is that Mr. Bridgman does testify against him; that he acknowledged thus and thus before him. And pray speak it again, Mr. Bridgman.

Mr. Bridgman. The Captain told that Gentleman, that he had a Quarrel with a Gentleman, with whom he was resolved to fight; that he wanted a good Servant, and if he would assist him, he would make his Fortune; that he gave him Money to buy the Musquetoon, and owned he was there; that he went out with the Captain and Polander on Horseback, about five or six o'Clock on Sunday; that they went towards Charing-Cross, and when they were gone beyond Charing-Cross into the Pail-Mall, he heard the Captain say to the Coachman, Stop; and turning immediately, he saw the Shot go off; and that they riding away, he followed them: And that before the Polander came over, the Captain desired him to get an Italian to stab a Man.

[Then that was interpreted to Stern.]

Mr. Craven. My Lord, he denies that he spoke any thing of four hundred Pounds, or about the Italian.

L. C. J. Tell him it is testified, that he confessed he was at the Shooting of this Gentleman.

Mr. Craven. He says he was there, and being about ten Yards off, he heard one say, Hold to the Coach, but he cannot say it was the Captain.

Sir Fra. Winn. But was he there?—Mr. Craven. Yes, he says he was.

Sir Fra. Winn. Who caused him to be there?

L. C. J. Ask him upon what Occasion he was there?

Mr. Craven. He says the Captain entreated him to be there to be his Second, to fight with a Gentleman, and that was the Reason.

L. C. J. Pray tell him 'tis testified here, that he bought the Musquetoon and charged it.

Mr. Craven. He says, he did assist at the Loading of it, he was by.

Sir Fra. Winn. Pray, my Lord, let us know who it was assisted him?

L. C. J. Why, that is no Evidence against any body.

Sir Fra. Winn. But, my Lord, it was delivered to the Polander charged, and we desire to know who loaded it?

L. C. J. North. That is no Evidence; but yet the Question may be asked, and the Jury may be told 'tis no Evidence.

L. C. J. But we must not let the Jury be possessed by that which is not Evidence:

L. C. J. North. Pray will you ask him, Mr. Craven, who helped him to load the Gun?

Mr. Craven. The Captain was by, he says, and the Captain and he did it together.

Sir Fra. Winn. Now we will ask Sir John Reresby the same Questions: You were by, Sir, at the Examinations of these three Men, pray what did the Polander say upon his Examination?

Sir John Reresby. My Lord, I cannot charge my Memory with the Particulars; but if your Lordship pleases, I will read it.

L. C. J. No, refresh your Memory with it, and then tell us the Substance of it.

Sir John Reresby. In general, he did confess to me, that he was the Person that did discharge the Blunderbuss into Mr. Thynn's Coach, and that he was commanded so to do by Captain Vratz.

L. C. J. That is the Substance of all.

Sir Fra. Winn. That is as to him; but what did Captain Vratz say?

L. C. J. He said that he did go out with an Intention to fight with Mr. Thynn, and did take these Persons with him; that he did not order the Polander to discharge, but he mistook him when he bid the Coachman stand, the other apprehended he bid him shoot, and he did so.

Mr. Williams. What said Stern?

Sir John Reresby. Stern did say this, that the Captain told him he had a Quarrel with an English Gentleman, and desired him to go along with him and assist him in it, and be his Second; but, said he, I was chiefly carried out to keep off the People, in case there should be a Crowd about them when they were fighting; this is the chief Part of what they did confess.

L. C. J. We would not trouble you with more than is material. Did he acknowledge he was there at the Time when he was shot?

Sir John Reresby. Yes, he did, about nine or ten Yards off, I think.

L. C. J. All three confessed they were there?

Sir John Reresby. Yes, they did so.

L. C. J. North. They had a Design of killing, which was unlawful.

Sir John Reresby. They said they came on Purpose to fight.

Sir Fra. Winn. Call Michael Fenderoston. My Lord, we would willingly spare your Time, and offer only what is proper in this Case, and now we shall produce our Evidence against the Count, and if any thing fall out in that Evidence that touches these three Men (which we think will be but the killing of dead Men) your Lordship will take Notice of it. Now we shall not go to open the Heads of our Evidence against the Count, Sir Francis Withins has given an Account of the general, and our Witnesses will declare it.

Mr. Williams. We will begin with Frederick Hanson.

[Who was sworn and stood up.]

Mr. Hanson. How long have you known Count Coningsmark?

Mr. Hanson. A matter of four Years.

Mr. Williams. Pray do you remember his last coming into England?

Mr. Hanson. Yes, my Lord, I do remember it.

Mr. Williams. Then let us know the Time.

Mr. Hanson. I think 'tis above a Month since.

Mr. Williams. Where was his Lodging first?

Mr. Hanson. The first Time I saw him was in the Post-House.

Mr. Williams. Did he come privately or publicly?

Mr. Hanson. Privately, to my best Knowledge.

Mr. Williams. Which was his first Lodging?

Mr. Hanson. In the Hay-Market.

Mr. Williams. Where there?—Mr. Hanson. At the Corner House.

Mr. Williams. How long did he continue there?

Mr. Hanson. A matter of a Week.

Mr. Williams. Pray in all that Time did he keep privately at home, or did he go abroad sometimes?

Mr. Hanson. I believe he kept his Chamber all the Time.

Mr. Wil. Were you with him at any Time there?—Mr. Hanson. Yes, I was.

Mr. Wil. What Company did use to be with him to your Knowledge?

Mr. Hanson.

Mr. Hanſon. To my Knowledge I have ſeen Dr. Frederick in his Company.

Mr. Williams. One Dr. Frederick, you ſay, who elſe?

Mr. Hanſon. When I came from Whitehall on a Sunday in the Evening, when my Lord was going to Bed, I called, if I could be admitted to ſee him, ſo I went in to him, and a little after the Doctör came.

Sir Fr. Winn. Pray, Sir, at that Time that he was in that Lodging, did he wear his own Hair, or was he in a Diſguiſe?

Mr. Hanſon. That Sunday Night he was in his Night-Cap and Night-Gown, ready to go to Bed.

Mr. Williams. When you firſt came to him to the Poſt-houſe, did you go of your own Accord, or were you ſent for?

Mr. Hanſon. Count Coningsmark ſent for me.

Mr. Williams. Was it ſent in his own Name, or the Name of another?

Mr. Hanſon. It was in a ſtrange Name, Carlo Cuſk.

Mr. Williams. Have you the Note by you?—Mr. Hanſon. No.

Mr. Williams. In whoſe Character was it writ?

Mr. Hanſon. In the Count's own Character.

Sir Fr. Winn. What was his Name in his firſt Lodging? What Title was he called by, Captain, or what?

Mr. Hanſon. I know of no other Name but only the Stranger.

Sir Fr. Winn. Was it known to any Perſon in the Family?

Mr. Hanſon. No.

Mr. Williams. When did he remove from thence?

Mr. Hanſon. I know not.

Sir Fr. Winn. You ſay the firſt Place of his Lodging was in the Hay-market, where did you ſee him the ſecond Time?

Mr. Hanſon. At a Corner Houſe, I know not the Name of the Street.

Sir Fr. Withens. Did he direct you to come to him?

Mr. Williams. Had you any Diſcourſe with him, what his Buſineſs was here in England?

Mr. Hanſon. I aſked him, if we ſhould have his Company here ſome Time? He told me he was come over about ſome Buſineſs, and was afterwards to go into France.

Mr. Williams. Then he never told you what that Buſineſs was?

Mr. Hanſon. No.

Mr. Williams. Where was his ſecond Lodging, do you ſay?

Mr. Hanſon. It was at a Corner-Houſe, not above two Streets off from the former.

Mr. Williams. How long did he continue in his ſecond Lodging?

Mr. Hanſon. A few Days, becauſe the Chimney did ſo ſmoke, that he could have no Fire made in it.

Sir Fr. Winn. Then I aſk you in his ſecond Lodging, was he there publicly or privately?

Mr. Hanſon. He was there after the ſame Manner that he was in his firſt Lodging.

Mr. Williams. Whither went he afterwards?

Mr. Hanſon. To St. Martin's-Lane, I think it is called.

Mr. Williams. How long did he continue there?

Mr. Hanſon. There I ſaw him the laſt Time before he went away.

Mr. Williams. When was that?

Mr. Hanſon. It was Sunday Evening, after I came from Whitehall.

Mr. Williams. Was it near the Time of killing Mr. Thynn?

Mr. Hanſon. It was about two or three Hours afterwards.

Mr. Williams. Was he as private there as he was in his other Lodgings?

Mr. Hanſon. Yes.

Mr. Williams. What Company came to him thither?

Mr. Hanſon. The ſame that came to him in the other.

Sir Fr. Winn. Who were they?

Mr. Hanſon. The Doctör was in his Company.

Sir Fr. Winn. And who elſe?

Mr. Hanſon. I ſaw one Captain Vratz there.

Sir Fr. Winn. Sir, I aſk you upon your Oath, you are a Man of Underſtanding, Did you frequently ſee Captain Vratz in his Company? How often do you remember you ſaw him at his Lodging?

Mr. Hanſon. I do not remember that I ſaw Captain Vratz at that Lodging above one ſingle Time.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Sir, thus: Did Captain Vratz come with the Count into England this laſt Time?

Mr. Hanſon. To my beſt Remembrance he did.

Mr. Williams. You ſay Captain Vratz came with the Count to England.

Mr. Hanſon. I believe he was before the Count, but not long before: I can't exactly tell.

Mr. Williams. How long before the Count?

Mr. Hanſon. Truly I can't tell, but I believe not long.

Mr. Williams. What makes you think he came into England with him?

Mr. Hanſon. Becauſe I ſaw him in Company with the Count, as ſoon as I ſaw the Count.

Mr. Williams. Were they in Company at the Poſt-Houſe?

Mr. Hanſon. Yes.

Sir Fr. Winn. And you ſaw him once at his firſt Lodging?

Mr. Hanſon. Yes.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Sir, have you carried any Meſſage from the Count to the Swediſh Reſident?

Mr. Hanſon. My Lord, I can ſay this upon my Oath, to my beſt Remembrance, Count Coningsmark never charged me, or gave me any poſitive Order to go to the Swediſh Envoy, but he did name the Swediſh Envoy to me, as if he were willing to know his Advice; and ſo I being obliged to pay my Reſpects to the Swediſh Envoy, who had treated the young Count and myſelf very civilly before; and ſo paying my Reſpects to the ſaid Envoy, I did remember the Converſation I had with the Count, and ſpoke with the ſaid Envoy about this Buſineſs, and that is all that I can ſay.

Sir Fr. Winn. What was that Meſſage?

Mr. Hanſon. I ſay there was no direct Meſſage: But I ſay this was the Buſineſs: Count Coningsmark told me in private familiar Diſcourſe, that he had heard that Eſquire Thynn had ſpoken ſome abuſive Language of him, and he would fain know what the Conſequence of this would be, if he ſhould call him to Account about this Buſineſs: And he named the Swediſh Envoy to me: And I ſaw his Deſire was to know his Opinion about the Buſineſs, what the Conſequence of it would be. So I ſpoke to the Swediſh Envoy, and he gave me this Answer, That if the Count ſhould any way meddle with Eſquire Thynn, he would have but a bad Living in England; but what the Law would ſay in that particular Caſe he could not answer, but he would enquire, and afterwards would give me an Account; but I never ſpoke with him after.

Sir Fr. Winn. I aſk you, becauſe you have been formerly examined in another Place, about this Matter; Do you remember any Thing that ever you heard the Count ſpeaking of fighting with Mr. Thynn?

Mr. Hanſon. Count Coningsmark ſpoke to me in the German Language; I ſpoke to the Swediſh Agent in French; and when I was before the King and Council I ſpoke in Engliſh; therefore I deſire no evil Conſtruction may be made of it. I cannot remember the Count ſpoke of killing or duelling. On the contrary I can ſwear for Count Coningsmark this, That I am confident he never told me that he had reſolved or would fight with Mr. Thynn or would call him to Account, but if he ſhould call him to Account, what would be the Conſequence of it.

Sir Fr. Winn. Call him to Account, about what?

Mr. Hanſon. The Count in familiar Diſcourſe with me did tell me, that he had heard Eſquire Thynn had ſpoke abuſively of him.

Sir Fr. Winn. How had he ſpoken abuſively of him?

Mr. Hanſon. He reflected upon his Perſon and upon his Horſe.

Mr. Williams. Was there any Thing in that Meſſage about marrying my Lady Ogle?

Mr. Hanſon. That was the laſt Part of the Queſtion, That if he ſhould meddle with Eſquire Thynn, what the Conſequence might be, if the Laws of England would be contrary to him in the Hopes or Pretenſions he might have to my Lady Ogle.

Mr. Williams. You mince your Words mightily; pray remember yourſelf; Did he ſpeak of killing Mr. Thynn, or that Mr. Thynn ſhould be deſtroyed?

Mr. Hanſon. No, his Phraſe was, if he ſhould have an Advantage of him, when he ſhould meddle with him, or call him to an Account, what the Conſequence might be; I can ſay this upon my Conſcience.

Sir Fr. Winn. Sir, you are in a Place where you are ſworn to ſpeak the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth: What Relation have you to Count Coningsmark's Family?

Mr. Hanſon. I have no Relation to the Family at all.

Sir Fr. Winn. Are not you Governor to the young Count?

Mr. Hanſon. The Counteſs has given me her younger Son, for me to be his Companion in his Travels.

Sir Fr. Winn. Sir, I aſk you a plain Queſtion, let it lie at your own Door, if you won't tell the Truth; had you any Converſation with Count Coningsmark, wherein he did deſire you to aſk Advice of the Swediſh Envoy or Reſident here, about duelling Mr. Thynn, or in Caſe he ſhould kill Mr. Thynn, or upon any ſuch Account?

Mr. Hanſon. My Lord, I ſay this was ſpoken in ſeveral Languages, by the Count in Dutch, by myſelf to the Envoy in French; and I do know I ſwore before the King and Council, but I cannot lay this to Count Coningsmark's Charge, for then I muſt forſwear myſelf.

Sir Fr. Winn. Sir, you can answer me all my Queſtions in Engliſh, if you pleaſe, what the Diſcourſe was.

L. C. J. Pray, Sir, thus: What was the Diſcourſe, as near as you can remember it, between Count Coningsmark and you, relating to Mr. Thynn.

L. C. J. North. Tell the whole, Sir, for you are bound to tell the whole indifferently.

Sir Fr. Winn. And pray remember what you ſwore in another Place.

Mr. Hanſon. The Count ſent to me a Note, that he had a Mind to ſpeak with me, and he entertained me with a familiar Diſcourſe about his Travelling, and about the ſettling of his Buſineſs, and thereupon he fell upon other Diſcourſe about Mr. Thynn, and, not to miſtake, having had Time in my own Chamber, I have put it down in Writing, to ſatisfy my Lord and all this honourable Court, what I can ſay about this Matter.

[Mr. Hanſon reads—'Tis very hard to give a true Account.]

L. C. J. Read it to yourſelf, if you will, and tell us the Subſtance.

Mr. Hanſon. If my Words may not turn to the Prejudice of my Lord Count Coningsmark; but this is the Subſtance of the Thing. My Lord Count Coningsmark did tell me in a familiar Diſcourſe, that Eſquire Thynn had ſpoken ſome reflecting Words upon him; he did deſire to know if he did call him to Account, whether in this Caſe the Laws of England might not go contrary to his Deſign, in his Pretenſions that he might have upon my Lady Ogle. And in that familiar Diſcourſe, he ſeemed to think that Monſieur Lienburgh could give him Advice. In a little while afterwards, I was paying my Reſpects to the Envoy, and reflecting upon the Count's Converſation, I ſpoke to him about this Buſineſs, and his answer was this; he told me, that if he ſhould meddle with Mr. Thynn, he would have no good Living in England: But as to the particular Queſtion, what the Conſequence of the Law might be, he did not know, but would enquire and tell me; but I never aſked him any Queſtion about it afterwards. And if my Converſation with this Count, or with Monſieur Lienburgh, ſhould turn to the Count's Prejudice, I ſhould be answerable for it to God and my own Conſcience, all the Days of my Life. I deſire Mr. Thynn's Blood might be revenged, but I deſire alſo that innocent Blood may be ſpared.

Sir Fr. Winn. Pray, Sir, will you look upon that Paper; you ſigned it.

L. C. J. North. Only to recollect your Memory.

[Then he was ſhewed his Examination before the Council.]

L. C. J. Now you have read it over; that there is under your own Hand? Do you now again deliver the Subſtance of your Diſcourſe you had with Count Coningsmark, as you will ſtand by it.

Mr. Hanſon. I ſee that there are Expreſſions in this Paper.

L. C. J. Speak not what is in that Paper, but what Diſcourſe (as near as you can) you had with Count Coningsmark.

Mr. Hanſon. My Diſcourſe with Count Coningsmark was this: In a familiar Diſcourſe amongſt other Things, he ſpoke, that he heard Eſquire quire Thynn had affronted him, I don't know upon what Subject; but I believe it was Words reflecting upon him and his Horse; he did not tell me that he desired me to go, nor did he give me any positive Charge to go to the Swedish Envoy, but by the Discourse I had with him, I did understand that he was desirous to have his Advice; I thought his Inclinations were, that I should go and ask his Advice; I did not go on purpose to do the Message, nor did I receive any Order that can be called a Message, in my Life, to my Remembrance; but when I came to pay my Respects in a familiar Discourse, I did propose this to the Envoy; what might be the Consequence, if the Count should call Mr. Thynn to Account; and he told me the same Answer that I have already told you. Now this I desire only to consider, that it was spoken in divers Languages; and if a Man should write down my Expressions now, as they came from me, they would upon reading, perhaps, appear not so well; so if these Expressions of mine should turn to Count Coningsmark's Prejudice, as that I should swear that this Phrase of killing or duelling was used, or that ever Count Coningsmark told me that he resolved to call, or that he would call him to an Account, I might do him Wrong, perhaps; but if he should call him to Account, what might be the Consequence of it.

Sir Fra. Winn. I would not entangle you, but only I would seek after the Truth. I do not ask you positively, whether he did bid you go to ask Advice of the Swedish Envoy, that he did resolve so and so; but did he discourse it thus, if he should duel him, or fight him?

Mr. Hanson. As I am before God Almighty, I cannot say I heard such Expressions.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Sir, you confess you acquainted the Envoy with it?

Mr. Hanson. Yes.

Mr. Williams. Did you bring the Envoy's Answer to the Gentleman, or no?

Mr. Hanson. If I should be upon the Gospel, I am sure I cannot exactly tell what was the Expression.

L. C. Baron. What was it that you discerned he doubted, if he did call Mr. Thynn to Account?

Sir Fra. Winn. He spoke in Relation to a Marriage, pray what was it?

Mr. Williams. What did that relate to?

Mr. Hanson. If he should ask him Satisfaction about it, having heard that he had spoken abusive Words of him.

Sir Fra. Winn. What then was to follow?

Mr. Hanson. If he should call him to Account then how the Laws of England might do in this Point.

Mr. Williams. To whom?—Mr. Hanson. To the Count.

Mr. Williams. What should befall him?

Mr. Hanson. Whether the Law should be contrary to him in the Design and Proposals he might have concerning the young Countess of Ogle.

Mr. Williams. Well, I see you will give no reasonable Answer to that; but now when came the Polander over into England?

Mr. Hanson. I cannot say positively I can tell when he came.

Mr. Williams. But when did you see him first?

Mr. Hanson. Upon the Friday he came and asked me for the Count at Monsieur Faubert's Academy. Now the young Count Coningsmark's Chamber and mine joins together, next to one another, and there came a Man with him, I do not know his Name, but if I see the Man I know him.

Mr. Williams. You say the Polander came over on Friday.

Mr. Hanson. He came to me on Friday.

Mr. Williams. And he came to you to the French Academy, to enquire for Count Coningsmark?—Mr. Hanson. Yes, he did so.

Mr. Williams. Had he any Letters?

Mr. Hanson. Yes, he had two Letters.

Mr. Williams. From whom, and to whom?

Mr. Hanson. I asked him if he had any Letter for Count Coningsmark, and he said no; but he told me he had two Letters, and the one was to the Count's Secretary, and the other was to the Count's Steward in London. So I gave him back his Letters, and asked him whence he came? He told me he was just come into England. I asked him whether he had been a great while at Sea? And he told me yes; and that it was stormy, and he had like to have been cast away: said I, I hear you are expected, therefore have you paid your Lodging? No, said he; then, said I, go and pay your Lodging, and come to me in the Morning early.

Sir Fra. Winn. You say you heard he was expected, pray who expected him?

Mr. Hanson. The Count; for he had spoken formerly twice of the Polander, and in the great Storm thought he had been drowned. To the best of my Remembrance, I have heard the Count speak twice of this Polander.

Sir Fra. Winn. Of this Man?

Mr. Hanson. I suppose it is the same.

Sir Fra. Winn. You say you saw him on Friday?

Mr. Hanson. Yes, I did.

Mr. Williams. When did he speak of the stormy Weather, and that he was afraid the Polander might miscarry?

Mr. Hanson. About twelve or thirteen Days before.

Mr. Williams. Now say as near as you can what the Count said.

Mr. Hanson. He said the Polander was a mighty able Man, and understood Horses, and the Count had a Mind to buy English Horses, and intended to have had this Polander as a Groom, to dress them after the German Way, and no Man was abler than the Polander to do it; and when he spoke of it, I went once to the 'Change, and enquired whether the Ship was lost?

Sir Fra. Winn. By whose Direction did you go to enquire whether the Ship was lost?

Mr. Hanson. I had no Direction, but only Count Coningsmark's speaking about it.

Sir Fra. Winn. He seemed to be concerned at it, did he?

Mr. Hanson. Yes, he was afraid that the Polander would be drowned.

Mr. Williams. You say you directed him to clear his Quarters?

Mr. Hanson. Yes, I did so.

Mr. Williams. Did you see him again the next Day?

Mr. Hanson. Yes, he came the next Day.

Mr. Williams. Was he the next Day in Company with the Count, or no?

Mr. Hanson. I brought him to the Count.

Sir Fra. Winn. Where?

Mr. Hanson. It was a little before Noon; because I went the Back way, and left him at the Count's Lodging.

Mr. Williams. Did you leave him with the Count?

Mr. Hanson. Yes, I did.

Mr. Williams. Pray as long as you were there, what passed between the Count and the Polander?

Mr. Hanson. I remember very well what passed between the Count and him, for I have thought of it. He spoke to him, and called him Thou, as to his Servant, and asked him where he had been all the while? And he answered, he had been at Sea, and tossed up and down.

Sir Fra. Withens. Pray what Directions had you given about a Sword for that Polander?

Mr. Hanson. I went to the Count's Lodgings, and being desired by him to stay, I desired he would excuse me, for I could not stay, because I was to go about another Business; he told me the Fellow was all naked, and he had no Man to send to buy him a Riding-Coat; I told him I would very willingly and heartily do it. And after I had dined I went to an House near the Hay-Market, and bought a Riding-Coat, and brought the Riding-Coat to the Count's Lodgings. I delivered it to the Count. Then the Count told me his Man had never a Sword, and I asked him how much his Lordship would please to bestow on a Sword, he told me a matter of 10s. or thereabouts; I told him I did not know where I should get such a Sword, nor how to send for it, because I was to meet his Brother; but I withal said, it is no Matter for that, I will take Care you shall have it this Evening; I went into St. Martin's-Lane, but could not find ever a Sword worth a Groat. Then I went as far as Charing-Cross to a Cutler whom I knew, so I told him, Sir, said I, I have a Commission to bestow ten Shillings upon a Sword for a Servant, therefore, said I, I leave it to your Discretion, use my Friend well, and use yourself favourably too. I asked him when I should have the Sword, he told me in the Evening; I told him I would call for it when I came from the Play, where I was to be with the Count's Brother. When I came back with the young Count Coningsmark from the Play, I called for the Sword, but he told me it was not ready. I seemed to be a little angry, and told him that it was strange, a Gentleman could not get a little Sword ready for him in an whole Afternoon. Well, Sir, said he, pray do not be impatient, I will send you the Sword, and afterwards he sent it to the Academy, and I afterwards sent the Sword to Count Coningsmark's Lodgings.

Mr. Williams. Pray had you this Direction for the Sword after you had brought the Polander to the Count, or before?

Mr. Hanson. Count Coningsmark did never give me any Direction or charge to buy a Sword for him, but I did offer my Service, if he pleased, because he said he had no Body to send.

Mr. Williams. Sir, you do not know the Question, or you won't apprehend it; pray, when had you this Direction from the Count to buy this Sword?

Mr. Hanson. On Saturday in the Afternoon.

Mr. Williams. When was it you brought the Polander to the Count?

Mr. Hanson. In the Morning.

Mr. Fra. Winn. Pray let me ask you another Question. When was it you first heard Mr. Thynn was killed?

Mr. Hanson. I heard it, I believe, about Eight o'Clock in the Evening on Sunday.

Sir Fra. Winn. Had you any Discourse with the Count about the Murder?

Mr. Hanson. Yes, I had.

Sir Fra. Winn. Pray tell what that Discourse was?

Mr. Hanson. I was at Whitehall till ten of the Clock, and then I went to the Count; but I desire this may not be taken as an extraordinary Visit, because I used to go to him on Sundays in the Evenings, and those three Sundays before he was taken, I used to come to him in the Evening, after I had been at Whitehall. When I came into his Lodgings, I found him in his Night-Cap, and his Night-Gown; he asked me what News, I told him I could tell him great News, and that was of the killing of Esquire Thynn, who was shot in his Coach: The Ambassador of Sweden had told me all that he had heard about it, and I told it him. After I had spoken of this Business, he asked me where his Brother was; I told him, his Brother was at the Duke of Richmond's. And after some Discourse I went away.

Sir Fra. Winn. When you told him of the Murder of Mr. Thynn, did he make no Answer, nor say any thing about it?

Mr. Hanson. He did not make me any Answer, by which I could conclude that Count Coningsmark was any Way concerned in the Business.

Sir Fra. Withens. Pray, Sir, I ask you upon your Oath, the Count is a Man of great Quality himself; when you told him of such an horrible Murder, what, did he say nothing about it?

Mr. Hanson. He asked me several Questions what the People did say, but I would not make any Mistake.

Sir Fra. Winn. Tell all he said, Sir, about it.

Mr. Hanson. I told him the greatest News I had was, the killing of Mr. Thynn; and I told him who brought the News; and I told him the Count was heartily angry at it, that such an Accident should happen; and I told him it was an Italian Trick, not used in England.

Sir Fra. Winn. What said he then?

Mr. Williams. Pray do you remember what he said?

Mr. Hanson. What I have answered now. He made me such Questions upon this Story as I have told you.

L. C. J. Let him explain himself: Pray, as near as you can, relate what Discourse you had with Count Coningsmark that Sunday Night, after you came to him and told him of the Murder.

Sir Fra. Winn. What did he say to you?

Mr. Hanson. I will tell you, my Lord; the Count was surprised every Man would be, to hear of so sad an Accident, and so the Count asked me what the People said, so I told him what I heard at Whitehall; I cannot call to my Memory all the Particulars; but I said the King was heartily sorry, and all the Court, for so sad an Accident, and I must wrong myself, or Count Coningsmark, if I should undertake to relate exactly what passed, for I cannot remember it.

Mr. Williams. But you said just now, that you told the Count it looked like an Indian Trick, not used in England.—Mr. Hanson. Yes, I did so.

Mr. Williams. What did he reply to that?—Mr. Hanson. Not a Word.

Mr. Williams. Did he mention any thing of Fortifications to you then?

Mr. Hanson. Yes, he gave me a Plan, or a Draught of a Fortification done with his own Hand, and that was all the Discourse.

Mr. Williams. So then he diverted the Discourse to the Business of Fortification.

L. C. J. The Evidence is heard; what it is that he ended all the Discourse with, shewing him a Paper of Fortifications.

Sir Fr. Winn. But this he does say, he asked him what the People did say of it?

Mr. Hanson. For my Life, I dare not say I remember any more than I have told.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir, now will you in French deliver this for the Benefit of those Jurymen that don't understand English.

Mr. Williams. We pray, my Lord, that our Interpreter may do it.

L. C. J. When a Man can speak both Languages, he needs no Interpreter, he is his own best Interpreter.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I will tell you why I ask it; there is a great deal of Difference, I find, where you examine a Man with the Hair, and where you examine him against the Hair: Where you find it difficult to make a Man answer, you will pump him with Questions, and cross-interrogate him, to sift out the Truth; now if you leave this Man to the Interpretation of what he hath said himself, he will make a fine Story of it, and we shall be never the wiser.

L. C. J. You may examine him in French, if you will.

Mr. Williams. And I understand none but Pedlar's French.

Sir Fr. Winn. The Truth of it is, what your Lordship says cannot be opposed regularly; but I do appeal to your Lordship, and all the Judges, and all the Court, whether this Man does answer like an ingenuous Man; you see he shifts.

L. C. J. I do not see it, nor do I believe any see he shifts in any thing you ask of him; either he tells you what the Question is, or the Reason of it; how far that is a Reason, is left to the Jury to consider.

Sir Fr. Winn. Certainly it can do no Hurt to have an Interpreter.

L. C. J. North. My Lord, if there be two Ways to take, 'tis best to take that which will give Satisfaction to all Persons; let him be asked by the Interpreter, what Questions the Counsel would have answered, and then let him tell his Answer in French.

L. C. J. If that be liked better, let it be so. Mr. Craven, can you tell the Substance of the Evidence that this Gentleman hath given?

Mr. Craven. No, I cannot, his Evidence has been so long, and so many cross Questions have been asked.

Sir Fr. Winn. I would spare your Time—

L. C. J. But this is the way to spend our Time.

Sir Fr. Winn. I know your Lordship does not value Time in such a Case as this, but you would have the Truth found out.

L. C. J. You must repeat first the Discourse you had with Count Coningsmark.

Sir Fr. Winn. My Lord, we will reduce it to two or three Questions. Mr. Craven, will you please to ask him what Discourse he had with Count Coningsmark.

Mr. Craven. He says, the Discourse he had with Count Coningsmark about the Polander, was, that he came over as a Groom to serve him to look after his Horses; that he had Occasion for several English Horses, and English Servants to look after them as Grooms; and among the rest of his Grooms, he intended the Polander should be one, to dress his Horses after the German Way.

Sir Fr. Winn. So far he goes as to that, That the Polander came over to serve the Count.

L. C. J. Look you Sir, does not he tell you, the Count had a Purpose to buy Horses here?

Mr. Craven. He says there was a Discourse about Bills of Exchange of 7000 Pistoles to buy Horses.

Sir Fr. Winn. Pray then will you ask him, what Discourse he had with Count Coningsmark about the Death of Mr. Thynn, and what the Consequences in Law might be?

Mr. Craven. My Lord, he says, that the Discourse with Count Coningsmark, concerning the Swedish Agent, was, That in Case he should ask Satisfaction of Mr. Thynn, for the Affronts that he had given him, not understanding the Customs of the Nation, if he should call him to Account, what Prejudice it might be to him; for he did not hear, he says, that Count Coningsmark designed any thing, or resolved upon killing him, or any thing of that Nature; but whether if he should call him to Account, what the Laws of England might be.

Mr. Williams. Call John Wright.

Sir N. Johnson. My Lord, the Count desires to know if he may be permitted to make his Defence against these Witnesses?

L. C. J. No, he is not to make his Defence now. But pray tell him, if my Lord have a Desire to ask any Questions of this Witness, he may ask what he pleases.

L. C. J. North. Let the Question be put to the Interpreter, that we may know what the Question is before the Witness gives an Answer.

Mr. Craven. He asks him, if he has not seen him often in his Lodging undressed than dressed, and whether he was not to take Physick from his Physician?

Mr. Hanson. I do not remember, that in all the Time I saw Count Coningsmark, I saw him dressed four times in his Coat, I cannot say I remember three times in all. The first time when he came, he was in a Campaign Coat; but all the time he was in his Lodging, as I remember, he was in his Night-Gown and Cap. As to the other Part of his Question, whether I heard that he took Physick? I say this, When I saw Count Coningsmark first at his Lodging, when I came to him, on the Sunday Evening, I was told the Count was in Bed: It was late, but I ventured to go into his Room, and sat a Quarter of an Hour there; and afterwards the Doctor came in,

Dr. Frederick, I saw him oftentimes at his Lodging; and at the same Time the young Count was sick of an Ague: And when he came one Evening to see the young Count, I asked him what was the Distemper the Count had? The Doctor answered me, that he had not told any body that the Count was sick, or what he was sick of, but he hoped in God, in a short time, he would be recovered.

Mr. Craven. He asks him if he gave any positive Order, that he should go of any Message to the Swedish Envoy?

Mr. Hanson. This I have answered before, and I say now, if this Discourse that I had with the Swedish Envoy, turn to the Lord Count Coningsmark's Prejudice, it would grate upon my Conscience all my Life: Count Coningsmark never gave me any positive Order to carry any Message; but I did gather, by his Discourse, that the Count might be desirous to know the Envoy's Opinion about this Question; and therefore I thought, the Count desiring it, I would do it to please him, rather than by Order. But I do not know that ever the Count had a Mind to give me such an Order, but I did it voluntarily.

L. C. J. In plain English, Did he ever direct you to go to the Swedish Envoy?

Mr. Hanson. No, my Lord, he never did direct me.

L. C. Bar. How came you to choose a Foreigner on know what the Laws of England are?

Mr. Hanson. I thought it would please the Count to know his Opinion.

L. C. Baron. But how came you to chuse a Foreigner, I ask?

Mr. Hanson. He has been 19 Years here in England, and sure he should know.

Mr. Craven. My Lord, he asks him if ever he told him that he had a Design to fight Mr. Thynn, or do him any Prejudice, or send him a Challenge?

Mr. Hanson. My Lord, I am upon my Oath, and this I say, I speak it before God and the Court, Count Coningsmark did never tell me that he had any Mind, or did resolve to call Esquire Thynn any ways to Account.

Mr. Williams. Call John Wright. [Who stood up and was sworn.]

Sir Fr. Winn. We shall ask him but a Question or two, my Lord.

Mr. Williams. Pray tell me the Time when this Polander came into England; that Man at the Bar?

Mr. Wright. He came the Tenth Day of this Month.

Mr. Williams. Pray what Ship did he come in? Where did you first meet with him?—Mr. Wright. Here in Town.

Mr. Williams. Where was it?

Mr. Wright. At the Cross-Keys in Throgmorton-Street.

Mr. Williams. Pray, when you first saw him, what did he ask you?

Mr. Wright. He asked me where Count Coningsmark's Lodgings were? I told him I thought he was at Oxford, I meant the young Gentleman, for I did not know the other was in Town; but I went and enquired, and they told me it was at Faubert's Academy.

Mr. Williams. Whither went you with the Polander then?

Mr. Wright. I went to my Lord's Lodgings.

Mr. Williams. What Lord?—Mr. Wright. The young Count's Lodgings.

Mr. Williams. Well, and what then?

Mr. Wright. And I came to Mr. Hanson, and he did deliver a Letter to Mr. Hanson, and I staid there about Half an Hour, or thereabouts.

Mr. Williams. When was this?

Mr. Wright. Upon Friday the tenth Day of this Month.

Mr. Williams. How long was Mr. Hanson and the Polander together?

Mr. Wright. About Half an Hour.

Mr. Williams. What said Hanson to him in your Presence?

Mr. Wright. Mr. Hanson said nothing.

Mr. Williams. Was there any thing said about going back and paying his Lodging, and coming back?

Mr. Wright. Mr. Hanson came down to me, and told me he was glad to see me, and bid me take the Polander back with me, and bring him to him to-morrow betimes, for he must dispatch him about his Business.

Sir Fr. Winn. Then he said nothing to the Polander?

Mr. Wright. No, but to me.

Sir Fr. Winn. Well, what did you do the next Morning?

Mr. Wright. I came to him the next Morning, to this Polander, and he took his Things with him, which was a Sea-bed that he had, and a Gun with a Wheel-Lock, and some other Things.

Sir Fr. Winn. And whither did you bring him?

Mr. Wright. I brought him to the Upper-End of the Hay-Market, Monsieur Faubert's School.

Mr. Williams. To what Place did you come in the Morning, say you?

Mr. Wright. Sir, if it please you, I brought him within a Door or two of Mr. Faubert's the Horse-master, that teaches to ride the great Horse; for he did desire that we might go to an House hard by, because he would not carry his Carriage to my Lord, he had a Sea-bed, a Portmanteau, a Gun, and other Things; and so I brought him to an House, and there I called for a Pot of Ale; and he put down his Things and went out, I thought he had gone to make Water, but within a little while after returns again, and Mr. Hanson comes in with him: He asked me why I did not come sooner; I told him I had some other Business, I was with some French Merchants to look upon some Goods. So he bid the Pole pay me for my Trouble, and take up his Things, and go along with him; and he did do so, and I never saw the Pole afterwards.

L. C. J. You that are the Interpreters, repeat what he hath said to the Jury. [Which was done.]

Sir Fr. Winn. We have done with this Man, the Use we make of him is to follow this Polander, and we shall bring him to the Count by and by.

Call Dr. Frederick Harder. [Who was sworn.]

L. C. J. The Doctor understands English, don't he?

Sir Fr. Winn. Yes, we are told he does.

Mr. Williams. How long have you known the Count that stands there at the Bar?

Dr. Harder. I have known him a good while, it may be this four or five Years. I have known him four or five Years.

Mr. Williams. How long have you known Capt. Vratz?

Dr. Harder. About a Year and a half, or two Years

Mr. Williams. Was my Lord and Capt. Vratz acquainted then?
 Dr. Harder. Yes.
 Mr. Williams. Was he in Employment under my Lord? Was he in the Count's Service?
 Dr. Harder. He was with the Count, but whether he was his Companion I cannot tell.
 Mr. Williams. Did he live with the Count?—Dr. Harder. Yes.
 Mr. Williams. Did Captain Vratz, when the Count came last over into England, come over with him?
 Dr. Harder. Yes, by my Knowledge.
 L. C. J. Do you know it or not?
 Dr. Harder. Captain Vratz came to me, and told me, my Lord desired to speak with me, and I went with him to my Lord.
 Sir Fr. Winn. Was that the first Message you received from the Count?
 Dr. Harder. Yes, it was.
 Mr. Williams. How long was that ago?—Dr. Harder. The same Day the Morocco Ambassador did exercise in Hyde-Park.
 Sir Fr. Winn. How long is that ago?
 Dr. Harder. About a Month ago.
 Sir Fr. Winn. What was that his first Lodging after he came last into England?—Dr. Harder. It was in the Hay-Market.
 L. C. J. Was it a Corner-House, as the other Witnesses faith, or not?
 Dr. Harder. Yes, it was.
 Mr. Williams. Was the Count a private Lodger there?
 Dr. Harder. He lay in his Bed when I came to him; he came as a Traveller privately.
 Mr. Williams. Did he go by his own Name, or another Name?
 Dr. Harder. No body did question him about his Name, but when I did come to him, I did discourse him about his Body.
 Mr. Williams. Pray Sir, thus: You went often to visit him, pray did you enquire for him by his own Name, or any other Name?
 Dr. Harder. He desired that he might be private, because he was to take some Medicines, and he would not have it known.
 Mr. Williams. Now, Sir, I would ask you, did you observe him to be in any Disguise? Did he wear a Perriwig, or how?
 Dr. Harder. He had a Perriwig.
 Mr. Williams. Was it a fair Perriwig, or what Colour?
 Dr. Harder. It was brown or black.
 Sir Fr. Winn. Sir, was he in a Disguise, or no?
 Dr. Harder. He had his own Clothes, but he had a Perriwig.
 Sir Fr. Winn. Pray what Name did he go by, his right Name, or any particular Name?
 Dr. Harder. In the first Beginning I gave him no Name; but, said he to me, if any Body ask you about me, I would not be known; for if they know that I lie privately thus, they will think I am some ill Distemper, therefore I would have you call me by the Name of Carlo Cuski.
 Mr. Williams. Were you with him, pray Sir, upon the Sunday Morning that Mr. Thynn was murdered?
 Dr. Harder. I cannot certainly tell, but I was with him in the After-noon.
 Sir Fr. Winn. Pray call yourself to Mind, Sir.
 Dr. Harder. I cannot certainly tell.
 Sir Fr. Winn. What Time were you with him in the Evening?
 Dr. Harder. At Nine o'Clock at Night, or thereabouts.
 Mr. Williams. Did you receive any Letter from Capt. Vratz at any Time?
 Dr. Harder. I did upon Saturday Morning, the Saturday before Mr. Thynn was murdered.
 Sir Fr. Winn. Have you that Letter about you?—Dr. Harder. No.
 Sir Fr. Winn. What was in the Letter?
 Dr. Harder. He desired me to go to the Count, who had a Desire to speak with me. I came there, and had some Speech with him about his Indisposition. I told him he had better stay till next Day before he took Physick, because it was cold Weather. And after that, went with the Polander to my Lodging, and the Captain's Man came in, and then said, here is a Man that will direct you to Captain Vratz's Lodging; which I did not know.
 Mr. Williams. Look you, Sir, you say you went to the Count, did you shew the Count that Letter from Capt. Vratz, or no?
 Dr. Harder. The Count saw it.
 Mr. Williams. Then hear a little, When was it you shew'd the Letter to the Count? Was it Saturday or Sunday?
 Dr. Harder. It was Saturday.
 Mr. Williams. Now, was the Polander then in the Count's Lodgings, or no?—Dr. Harder. Yes, he was.
 Mr. Williams. Was there any Discourse about him then?
 Dr. Harder. I had never seen him in my Life.
 Mr. Williams. But was there any with the Count?
 Dr. Harder. No, not at all.
 Sir Fr. Winn. Then, upon your Oath, I ask you once more, Was the Polander ever in Company with you and my Lord at any Time?
 Dr. Harder. No.
 Sir Fr. Winn. Upon the Sunday, upon your Oath?—Dr. Harder. No.
 Sir Fr. Winn. Nor the Saturday Evening?
 Dr. Harder. No, I have not seen him since that Morning when the Captain's Man took him along with him to his Master.
 Mr. Williams. Pray, how came the Polander into your Company on Saturday Morning?
 Dr. Harder. I had him from my Lord's that Morning.
 Mr. Williams. Then my Lord and the Polander were together?
 Dr. Harder. No, they were not together.
 Mr. Williams. Was the Polander in my Lord's Lodgings?
 Dr. Harder. Yes, the Polander was below Stairs.
 Mr. Williams. And did you take him from the Lodging?
 Dr. Harder. Yes, I did.
 Mr. Williams. How long did he continue with you?
 Dr. Harder. Not at all, I went home with him.
 Mr. Williams. Had you no Discourse with him?
 Dr. Harder. No, none at all.
 Mr. Williams. Where did you part with him?

Dr. Harder. I brought him to my House; and when he came in-a-doors, the Captain's Man being there, I told him there was a Man would shew him the Captain's Lodgings; and he took him away along with him.
 Mr. Williams. You say, the Captain's Man had the Polander from you; pray name that Man?—Dr. Harder. I cannot tell his Name.
 Mr. Williams. Was his Name Berg?
 Dr. Harder. I believe it was.
 Sir Fr. Winn. You say you delivered a Letter from Captain Vratz on Saturday Morning to the Count?—Dr. Harder. Yes.
 Sir Fr. Winn. Did the Count read the Letter, and tell you the Contents of it?—Dr. Harder. No, it was not sealed.
 Sir Fr. Winn. Did not you know the Contents of it then?
 Dr. Harder. No.
 Sir Fr. Winn. Pray, when you delivered the Letter from Captain Vratz to the Count, what did the Count say to you?—Dr. Harder. The Letter was not written to the Count, but it was writ to me.
 Mr. Williams. What was the Reason that you shewed it to him then?
 Dr. Harder. I received a Letter from Captain Vratz, that the Count desired to speak with me; and afterwards I was desired to direct this Man, the Polander, to Captain Vratz; and so I directed him to Captain Vratz, and nothing more I know.
 Sir Fr. Winn. Well, Sir, one thing more and I have done with you; for you will not, I see, give a reasonable Answer: pray, when the Polander came along with you from the Count's, did you observe he had any thing about him?—Dr. Harder. He had a great Campaign Coat.
 Sir Fr. Winn. Did he seem to have any thing under it?
 Dr. Harder. He had a Portmanteau under it, I think, or some such thing.
 Mr. Craven. My Lord, the Count desires to ask him some Questions.
 L. C. J. Let him ask what Questions he will.
 Mr. Craven. My Lord, he asks him whether he does not remember, when he first came to Town, he had not his Body full of Spots?
 Dr. Harder. Yes, my Lord, when he came from Tangier, he had Spots over all his Breast; and it was feared they might get up higher towards his Neck, and endanger him very much.
 Mr. Craven. He says, if my Lord pleases, he will shew it openly.
 L. C. J. No, there is no need of that, Doctor. Did you give him Physick for that?
 Dr. Harder. Yes, for that I did administer Physick to him.
 Mr. Craven. He says, my Lord, he over-heated himself in riding to Tangier, thinking to do the King and the Nation Service, and the Heat broke out in Spots over his Breast.
 L. C. J. The Doctor knows nothing of that.
 Mr. Craven. He asks whether the Doctor was not desired by him to cure him? whether he did not tell him he would cure him of those Spots?
 Dr. Harder. He desired me to administer Physick unto him.
 Mr. Craven. He says he went to Straßburgh, and when he came back he was in the same Condition he was in before; and he asks whether the Doctor did not undertake to cure him?
 Dr. Harder. Yes, I did administer Physick unto him; and this my own Man can testify and be Witness of; because my Lord bid me take Care that he might be private, for he would not have it known that he did take Physick; but I told my Man, said I, 'tis my Lord Coningsmark, and therefore pray take Care of him, and see that the Physick be made very well up.
 L. C. J. You seem to intimate, as if he lay private to take Physick; pray let me ask you this Question, Did you give him Physick all this Time?
 Dr. Harder. Not always purging Physick, but some Sort of Physick all the Time.
 L. C. J. What every Night and Morning?
 Dr. Harder. Yes, every Day.
 Mr. Craven. The Count desires to ask him where he was that unhappy Day this Business was done?
 Dr. Harder. I found him that Day ill, lying down upon the Bed, I asked him how his Physick had worked: he told me he was afraid he had got some Cold; and indeed I found him very much disordered, and I went home and fetched him some Physick to take that Night.
 L. C. J. By the Oath you have taken, was there any other Occasion, or had you any other Discourse with him, when you came on the Sunday Night but concerning his Physick?
 Dr. Harder. My Lord, I will tell you the Truth; I never heard the Count speak any Word in my Life, that he had any Concern, or Design of any Quarrel at all, nor any Discourse, but about the Administration of his Physick.
 L. C. J. Let me ask you this Question, for they desire it here, What was the Occasion? and whether you know the Occasion, why my Lord altered his Lodgings so often?
 Dr. Harder. The first Occasion was this; Because it was in the Hay-market; and his Man said it would be quickly known if he did continue there; so he would take another Lodging, which was in Rupert-street, and there he lodged three Days; but the Chimney did so smoke, that my Lord could not stay, because he could have no Fire in his Chamber, and the Weather was very cold, for it did snow, and therefore I told my Lord, it was not so proper for taking of Physick: Thereupon he desired me to take him another Lodging in Queen-street, which I did look about for, but it was not ready, so he had a Lodging taken for him in St. Martin's-Lane, where he lodged till he went away.
 Mr. Williams. Pray, Sir, the Physick that you gave the Count, did it require his keeping within Doors? might not he walk abroad with it, upon your Oath?—Dr. Harder. It did require him to keep in.
 Mr. Williams. Pray then, how comes it to pass that the Count so suddenly could go by Water to Gravesend?
 Dr. Harder. I do not know what was done afterwards.
 Sir Fr. Winn. I would ask you one Question, and I would fain have you give me a fair Answer to it, What became of the Letter that Captain Vratz writ to you, and you shewed to the Count?
 Dr. Harder. It remained there upon the Table.
 Sir Fr. Winn. Did not you keep your own Letter?
 Dr. Harder. It was not of any Concern.
 Sir Fr. Winn. If the Letter were written to you, it is not so long since, but you can tell us the Contents of it; Pray, what were the Contents?
 L. C. J.

L. C. J. Can you remember what were the Contents?
 Dr. Harder. He desired me to go to Count Coningsmark, who would speak with me, and that I would give his Man an Answer when I came from him.
 Sir Fr. Winn. But what were you to go to the Count to do?
 Dr. Harder. Nothing; but the Count discoursed to me about his own Body and Indisposition.
 Sir Fr. Winn. But Captain Vratz was no Physician; why should he send you a Letter to talk about Physick?
 Dr. Harder. It was nothing but my Lord would speak with me.
 Mr. Williams. We need not trouble ourselves with this Fellow, he confesses he found the Polander in the Count's House.
 Sir Fr. Withens. Pray, Sir, let me ask you, who was with the Count on Sunday Night?
 Dr. Harder. Mr. Hanson was there, I think.
 Sir Fr. Withens. Who else?
 Dr. Harder. The Captain came in, and went out again.
 Sir Fr. Winn. What Time of Night was it that Vratz came into the Count's House?
 Dr. Harder. It was at the same Time that I was with him.
 Sir Fr. Winn. That he swears to be about nine o'Clock: Was it after Mr. Thynn was killed?
 Dr. Harder. We had not heard it.
 Sir Fr. Winn. Sir, was it nine of the Clock?
 Dr. Harder. Yes, it was.
 Mr. Williams. You say you found the Polander at the Count's Lodgings?
 Dr. Harder. Yes, upon Saturday Morning.
 Mr. Williams. Then he came along with you from the Count's Lodgings?
 Dr. Harder. Yes, to my House.
 Mr. Williams. And you parted with him there?
 Dr. Harder. Yes, the Captain's Man took him away with him.
 Mr. Williams. That was Berg, wa'nt it?
 Dr. Harder. Yes.

Then this Evidence was interpreted to the Jury.

Mr. Craven. He desires the Jury should know what the Doctor said about his Sickness.

L. C. J. Let it be repeated to them.

Mr. Craven. He desires to know whether he may not speak it in French himself?

L. C. J. No, the Interpreter must do it; (which was done.) My Lord, would you ask any more Questions of the Doctor?

Count Con. No more Questions but them I have asked.

Sir Fr. Winn. Call Thomas Howgood. [Who was sworn.]

Mr. Williams. Pray, did you sell any Sword to the Count?

Mr. Howgood. I sold a Sword to the Governor; a broad Horseman's Sword.

Mr. Williams. When was this?

Mr. Howgood. On Saturday was Fortnight.

Mr. Williams. What Time was it that he bespoke it?

Mr. Howgood. He bespoke it half an Hour after Six at Night.

Mr. Williams. What did he say to you when he bought it?

Mr. Howgood. He said he would call for it about eight o'Clock at Night, when he came from the Play.

Mr. Williams. What Kind of Sword was it?

Mr. Howgood. An Horseman's Sword, as broad as two Fingers, such as the Gentlemen of the Guards wear.

Sir Fr. Winn. When he came for the Sword, what said he?

Mr. Howgood. He was angry it was not done, and I told him that I would send it to him quickly.

Sir Fr. Winn. Where was it sent?

Mr. Howgood. To the Governor's Lodgings at the Accademy.

Mr. Williams. Now, my Lord, we will call several Persons that were privy to the concealing of this Gentleman, that can give you a better Account, Richard Hays and Robert French.

[Robert French appeared, and was sworn.]

Sir Fr. Winn. Pray will you tell my Lord what you know of the Count's concealing himself and changing his Habit.

Mr. French. I never saw him, my Lord, before I came here in Court; but it seems he did lodge in my House three or four Days.

Sir Fr. Winn. How long is it since?-----Mr. French. Between three Weeks and a Month ago, just ten Days before the Murder.

Sir Fr. Winn. What Name did he go by then?

Mr. French. I did not know his Name.

Sir Fr. Winn. Who used to resort to him at that Time?

L. C. J. You say, Sir, you saw him not, what Company did come to him?
 Mr. French. I did not see him indeed.

Sir Fr. Winn. Pray did Captain Vratz come to him to your House?

Mr. French. He lodged with him all the Time.

Sir Fr. Winn. You say you know Capt. Vratz was there?

Mr. French. Yes.

Mr. Williams. Did Dr. Harder use to come to him?

Mr. French. Yes, several Times a Day.

Mr. Williams. What Name did he enquire for him by?

Mr. French. The Doctor took the Lodging, and it was for a Stranger; I heard no Name at all.

Interpret. My Lord desires to know, whether you did not suspect he took Physick in the House?
 Mr. French. I suppose the Doctor did give you an Account of that; I don't know that he did.

Interpret. Did not your Maid know of any such Thing?

Mr. French. My Maid is here, she will give you an Account.

Sir Fr. Winn. Call Ann Prince: (Who was sworn.) Pray do you acquaint my Lord what you know of Count Coningsmark; whether ever you saw him at your Master's House in the Hay-market?

Prince. Yes, he lodged there.

Mr. Williams. When?

Prince. He came thither last Friday was a Month.

Mr. Williams. How long did he stay there?

Prince. Till Wednesday.

Mr. Williams. At that Time, who used to frequent his Company?

Prince. I know no body but the Doctor that used to come to him.

Mr. Williams. What Name did he go by?

Prince. No Name at all; as I know of; they did not ask for him by any Name.

Mr. Williams. Did the Captain use to come to him?

L. C. J. Her Master says he did lie there.

Prince. Yes, he used to lodge there.

Mr. Williams. Did the Captain give him any Physick?

L. C. J. No, but the Doctor did.

Sir Fr. Winn. He only asks a merry Question.

L. C. J. But we are now upon the Life and Death of a Man, pray let us have those Questions asked that are serious, not such light Things as are permitted in ordinary Cafes.

Sir Fr. Winn. Now, my Lord, we will call Francis Watts.

Mr. Craven. Maid, my Lord asks, whether he did not take a Vomit in your House?
 Prince. Not that I know of.

Then Francis Watts was sworn.

L. C. J. How old is the Child?

Fr. Watts. Fifteen Years old last Christmas.

L. C. Baron. Ask him whether he understands what an Oath is?

Mr. Thynn. He was sworn before the King and Council.

L. C. Baron. If he were sworn before the Council, he may give Evidence here sure.

Sir Fr. Winn. Were you at the Count's Service at any Time?

Watts. Yes.

Sir Fr. Winn. How long?

Watts. I was with him eleven Days: I came to him upon the Friday.

Sir Fr. Winn. How long was it before the Death of Mr. Thynn?

Watts. I think it was ten Days before the Death of Mr. Thynn.

Sir Fr. Winn. What was your Employment with him?

Watts. His Boy to wait upon him.

Sir Fr. Winn. Did you lie in the same Lodging?

Watts. No, at my Father's.

Sir Fr. Winn. What was the Agreement between your Father and the Count?
 Watts. Six-pence a Day and my Diet.

Sir Fr. Winn. What Company did you observe came to the Count's Lodgings?

Watts. That Gentleman there in the black Perriwig.

Sir Fr. Winn. Was he often with your Master?

Watts. Yes, every Day.

Sir Fr. Winn. How many Lodgings had he while you were with him?

Watts. Three: One in the Hay-market, and one in Rupert-Street, and then the last in St. Martin's.

Mr. Williams. Thus, Child; do you remember the Time of killing Mr. Thynn?
 Watts. Yes.

Mr. Williams. Were you in your Master's Service then?

Watts. Yes, I was.

Mr. Williams. Who was in your Master's Company that Morning before Mr. Thynn was killed?

Watts. I came up, as I used to do in the Morning, to my Master, and he asked me what was the Matter with the Buffle in the Street? And I told him some body was taken upon Suspicion for killing Esquire Thynn.

Sir Fr. Winn. That was on Monday Morning; but the Sunday Morning before, what Company did you observe there then?

Watts. I cannot tell any Thing exactly of the Sunday Morning.

Sir Fr. Winn. Was Captain Vratz there?

Watts. I can't exactly remember.

Sir Fr. Winn. What Time in the Evening was it reported Mr. Thynn was killed?
 Watts. About eight o'Clock.

Sir Fr. Winn. Can you tell who brought the first News?

Watts. One of my Lady Seymour's Maids, who was telling the People of it below.

Sir Fr. Winn. Did you observe any Body come to your Master's Lodgings afterwards?
 Watts. Yes.

Sir Fr. Winn. Pray who came?

Watts. That Gentleman in the black Perriwig.

Mr. Williams. Pray in what Habit was he? And how came he in?

Watts. He came in a great Coat; I can't tell whether it was Cloth or Camblet.

Mr. Williams. And what, did he speak to any Body, or go strait up?

Watts. No, he spoke to no Body, but went strait up Stairs.

Mr. Williams. Did he go up to your Master's Lodgings?

Watts. Yes, I believe so, but I stayed below in the Shop.

Mr. Williams. How long did you stay in the Shop?

Watts. I stayed there about half an Hour.

Mr. Williams. Did you leave him there?
 Watts. Yes, I did.

Mr. Williams. Did he continue there all the Time that you were in the House?
 Watts. Yes.

Mr. Williams. What Time did you go away?

Watts. About three Quarters of an Hour after that Gentleman came in.

Sir Fr. Withens. Do you remember you had any Discourse with the Count, about riding on Sunday?

Watts. He asked me on Sunday in the Forenoon, whether People were suffered to ride about the Streets on Horseback on Sundays?

Sir Fr. Winn. This was that Sunday Morning, was it?

Watts. Yes: He asked if they might be suffered to ride about the Streets on Sunday? I told him yes, before Sermon-time and after Sermon-time.

Sir Fr. Winn. About what Time of the Day was it that he had heard this Discourse?

Watts. About ten or eleven o'Clock.

Sir Fr. Winn. Are you sure it was Sunday?
 Watts. Yes.

Sir Fr. Winn. Then I ask you another Question: Upon Sunday Morning, or any other Time, do you remember that the Polander was with the Count, your Master?

Watts. He came in on the Saturday Morning.

Mr. Williams. Was he in the Company or Presence of the Count?

Watts. I was above Stairs when he came in.

Sir Fr. Winn.

Sir Fr. Winn. What do you know of any Sword that was delivered to him?
 Watts. Upon the Sunday Morning there was a Sword brought to my Master's Lodgings, and my Master's Man took it of me, and carried it up Stairs, and this Man, the Polander, afterwards had it below Stairs.

Mr. Williams. When was this Sword brought to your Master's House?

Watts. It was on the Sunday Morning.

Mr. Williams. What, the Cutler brought the Sword?

Watts. No, it was sent by a Porter from Mr. Hanson.

Mr. Williams. What Room was it carried into when it was brought?

Watts. I think I did not carry it up: Yes, truly, now I remember, I did, and delivered it to my Master?

Mr. Williams. Pray what did the Count say to you?

Watts. I asked him if there needed an Answer to the Note I carried with it, and he said no.

Mr. Williams. To whom was the Sword delivered afterwards?

Watts. It was brought down, and afterwards this Polander had it.

Mr. Williams. That Man there?—Watts. Yes.

Mr. Williams. You say that the Sword was given to the Polander: Pray speak that the Jury may hear. Who brought down the Sword?

Watts. I saw it in the Polander's Keeping when it was below, but I cannot say who brought it down.

Sir Fr. Winn. Where did the Polander dine on Saturday?

Watts. He dined with my Master's Man and I on Saturday.

Sir Fr. Winn. Where did he lie that Night? At whose Chamber?

Watts. At our Lodgings in the Garret, in my Master's Man's Chamber.

Sir Fr. Winn. What Day was this, do you say?—Watts. Saturday.

Mr. Williams. When the Polander had the Sword, do you remember any Boots that he had under his Arm?

Watts. Yes, he had Boots under his Arm.

Mr. Williams. And he had the Sword with him when he went away?

Watts. Yes.

Mr. Williams. Had he any Coat?—Watts. Yes, a new Coat.

Mr. Williams. Well, I ask you once more, what Time of Day was it that he went away with the Sword and the Boots?

Watts. It was in the Forenoon.

Mr. Williams. What Day of the Week?—Watts. Sunday Morning.

L. C. J. Ay, but your Doctor that you examined before, says, the Polander went away with him, and he was not there on Sunday Morning.

Sir Fr. Winn. It is true, my Lord, it was too tender a Point for the Doctor, he lies under some Suspicion; and 'tis proximus ardet with him.

L. C. J. Well, call him again: Look you, Doctor, you were asked before, and now you are asked again, Were you at Count Coningsmark's Lodging's on Sunday Morning?

Dr. Harder. I cannot certainly tell.

L. C. J. When did you see the Polander at the Count's Lodgings, and whether was it on Sunday Morning?

Dr. Harder. On Sunday Morning I did not see him. The only Time was when I fetched him from my Lord's; I have not seen him before nor since.

L. C. J. Then call the Boy again. Where did the Polander dine on Saturday?

Watts. He dined with me and my Master's Man.

L. C. J. Where?—Watts. Below in the Kitchen of our Lodgings.

L. C. J. Where lay the Polander that Night?

Watts. He lay in our Garret.

L. C. J. When went he from your Master's Lodgings?

Watts. On Sunday Morning.

Mr. Williams. Had he an old Coat or a new Coat upon him?

Watts. He had a new Coat.

L. C. J. Was the Doctor with him?

Watts. Yes, the Doctor went away with him.

Dr. Harder. I have not seen the Polander above once in my Life.

Sir Fr. Winn. But were you at the Count's on Sunday Morning, or no, I ask you?

Dr. Harder. I do not know whether it was Saturday or Sunday.

L. C. J. But when you fetched him away, was it Saturday or Sunday Morning?

Dr. Harder. My Lord, I cannot very well remember.

L. C. J. Had the Polander a Sword when you went away with him?

Dr. Harder. I cannot positively say, but (as Travellers commonly have) he might have a Sword.

Sir Fr. Winn. Now come to yourself, and deal honestly, for you are upon your Oath; I ask you, Friend, this, You say he might have a Sword, do you remember a Pair of Boots?—Dr. Harder. No, I do not.

Sir Fr. Winn. Do you remember the Coat he had uppermost?

Dr. Harder. Yes, he had something under his Coat, but I don't know it was Boots.

L. C. Baron. Had he a Buff-Coat under his Campaign?—Watts. Yes.

Sir Fr. Withens. Let me ask you one Question, young Man; Do you remember you saw any Musketoon in your Master's Lodging?

Watts. I did see a Gun there.

Sir Fr. Withens. When was that?—Watts. I saw it upon Saturday.

Mr. Williams. The Musketoon or Gun that was in your Master's Lodgings, was it that which was brought by the Polander, or no.

Watts. I can't tell that.

Mr. Williams. Was it a long Piece or a short Piece?

Watts. It was not a short Piece.

L. C. J. Did the Polander take it away with him?

Watts. No, not that I know of.

Mr. Williams. Now, young Man, I would ask you as to Monday Morning: About what Time on Monday Morning did you come to your Master's Lodgings?

Watts. It was between seven and eight o'Clock, a little after seven.

Mr. Williams. What Condition was he in? Was he in Bed, or up?

Watts. He was up.

Mr. Williams. What was he doing? Was he packing up?

Watts. Not that I see.

Sir Fr. Winn. It was when he asked you about the Hubbub in the Street; pray tell what he said to you?

Watts. He asked me what the Matter was with the Bustle in the Street, and I told him that some were taken that had killed Esquire Thynn; and I told him all the Story, as near as I could: He asked me when Esquire Thynn was murdered; I told him the Night before; but I did not mind any thing that was done: But as I went down Stairs, I met with a Stranger, and he went up Stairs, but I never saw my Master after, till he was taken.

Sir Fr. Winn. Did he ask you what Mr. Thynn was?

Watts. Yes, and I told him I heard he was a Man of a great Estate, and well beloved, and that the Duke of Monmouth was in the Coach but a little before, and if he had not gone out, he had been killed too.

Sir Fr. Winn. What said the Count to you, when you told him Mr. Thynn was well beloved?—Watts. He said nothing.

Sir Fr. Winn. Can you remember who it was came to your Master then?

Watts. I know the Man if I see him again.

Sir Fr. Winn. Do you know his Name?

Watts. No, I do not know his Name.

Mr. Williams. Were any of your Master's Goods carried away then?

Watts. Yes.

Mr. Williams. What Goods were carried away then?

Watts. Two Portmantles.

Mr. Williams. Who carried them away?

Watts. My Father carried them away.

Mr. Williams. What Time was it?

Watts. Between eight and nine of the Clock.

Sir Fr. Winn. It was time to be gone. How parted you and your Master?

Watts. The Stranger did come in, and I never saw my Master afterwards.

Sir Fr. Winn. What, did your Master take no Leave, nor say any Thing to you?—Watts. No.

Sir Fr. Winn. What Kind of Perriwig had he when he went away?

Watts. He had a black Perriwig.

Sir Fr. Winn. What Clothes?

Watts. A light-coloured Suit, with Gold Buttons.

L. C. Baron. Will the Count ask the Boy any Questions?

Mr. Craven. Did you see the Gun in the Room after the Polander was gone?—Watts. Yes.

L. C. J. 'Tis very plain that this Gun was none of the Gun that did this Mischief, but the Gun the Polander brought over from beyond Sea.

Sir Fr. Winn. Call the Boy's Father, Thomas Watts, (who was sworn.) How long have you known the Count?

T. Watts. I do not know him, but as I have seen him.

Sir Fr. Winn. Were you employed to carry any Thing for him?

T. Watts. Two or three Times I was.

Mr. Williams. When were you last employed by him?

T. Watts. The Morrow after the Murder was committed.

Mr. Williams. What Time in the Morning was it?

T. Watts. It was between eight and nine of the Clock in the Morning.

Mr. Williams. What was it you did for him?

T. Watts. I carried a Portmantle, and a Portmantle-Trunk, and some other Things.

Mr. Williams. Where were you directed to deliver these?

T. Watts. His Man told me they were to go to Windfor.

Mr. Williams. Well, tell the whole Story.

T. Watts. He bid me carry them to Coaring-Crofs, that they might be put into the Coach there. But when he came to Charing-Crofs, a Coachman and he had some Words, and he bid him open his Boot, and then he took the Things from me, and put them into the Coach.

L. C. J. Who was it that told you they were to go to Windfor?

T. Watts. It was his Man.

Sir Fr. Winn. I would ask you, Sir, when was the first Time you knew the Count?

T. Watts. It was ten or eleven Days before.

Sir Fr. Winn. What was the Occasion that brought you acquainted with him?

T. Watts. I was Dr. Frederick's Porter, and he sent me to carry some Things to the Count.

Mr. Williams. Was it your Son that waited upon him?

T. Watts. Yes. For when I brought the Things, they said they had forgot to give me a Sword which I was to carry with the Things; and I said, that I had a Boy that I would send, and I did so, and so they took a Liking to the Boy.

Mr. Williams. What was the Agreement for your Son's Service.

T. Watts. Six-pence a Day and his Victuals.

Sir Fr. Winn. What was the Man's Name (as you remember) that gave you the Things to carry to the Coach, which were said to go for Windfor?

T. Watts. I can't tell his Name.

Mr. Williams. He that pinched and pushed you back, and took the Things from you, and put them into the Coach?

L. C. J. Did you see the Count that Morning?

T. Watts. No, I did not see him.

Mr. Williams. Have you been laboured and fought to by any Body to conceal your Boy, that he should not be brought at this Trial?

T. Watts. No, Sir.

Mr. Williams. Had you no Endeavours used with you about it?

T. Watts. No.

Mr. Williams. Did no Body speak of any such Thing to you?

T. Watts. No.

Mr. Williams. Did any Merchant or any Body send to you about this Boy, to take him into Service?

T. Watts. There was a Merchant that would have helped the Boy to a Place on Saturday last, but the Persons that would have procured it, were about it a good while ago.

Mr. Williams. Call Derick Raynes and Richard Chappel, (who were sworn, and Raynes stood up.) When did you see the Count, the Prisoner at the Bar?

Raynes. On Monday in the Afternoon.

Mr. Williams. What Time was it in the Afternoon?

Raynes.

Raynes. In the Evening.
 Mr. Williams. Where was it?—Raynes. At my House.
 Mr. Williams. Where is that?—Raynes. At Rotherbith.
 Mr. Williams. How came the Count to your House?
 Raynes. I know not; I was not at Home when he came.
 Mr. Williams. Pray when you saw him, had he his own Hair or a Perriwig, or how was he habited?
 Raynes. He had black Hair then.
 Mr. Williams. How long did he continue at your House?—Raynes. From Monday till Thursday Morning.
 Mr. Williams. Was he privately there or publickly?
 Raynes. He walked up and down the House.
 Sir Fr. Winn. What Countryman are you?—Raynes. I am a Swede.
 Sir Fr. Winn. What became of him after Thursday?
 Raynes. On Thursday Morning he took Water and went to Deptford.
 Sir Fr. Winn. What Way did he go, by Boat, or how?
 Raynes. A Waterman carried him.
 Mr. Williams. Pray what did the Count say to you about his coming in a Disguise to your House?
 Raynes. I knew nothing at all. I came late home, and when I came to know of him what he was, then he told me that he was Count Coningsmark.
 Mr. Williams. What did he say to you when you discovered that he was the Count? What did he tell you of his Business?
 Raynes. He said nothing; but that he was desirous to go to Gravesend.
 Sir Fr. Winn. Upon your Oath, Sir, did you furnish him with any Clothes?
 Raynes. Yes, I lent him a Coat.
 Sir Fr. Winn. What say you to a black Suit?
 Raynes. The black Suit did not belong to me.
 Sir Fr. Winn. What say you to a Velvet Cap?
 Raynes. I helped him to a Coat, Stockings, and Shoes.
 Sir Fr. Winn. Then I ask you, what did he declare to you?
 Raynes. Why, he did desire to have those Clothes.
 Sir Fr. Winn. You are an honest Man, tell the Truth.
 Raynes. He declared nothing to me.
 Sir Fr. Winn. When you dressed him, why did he put on that Habit?
 Raynes. He thought his own Clothes were too cold to go upon the Water.
 Sir Fr. Winn. Had he no Clothes before?
 Raynes. Yes, he had.
 Mr. Williams. You had the warmer Coat, had you?
 Sir Fr. Winn. Did he desire you to let him have your Clothes, because he was in Trouble?
 Raynes. He desired a Coat of me, and a Pair of Stockings to keep his Legs warm; and when he had got them, his own Shoes would not come on, so I lent him a Pair of Shoes.
 Sir Fr. Winn. I do ask you, did he declare the Reason why he would have those Clothes was, because he would not be known?
 Raynes. He said he was afraid of coming into Trouble.
 Sir Fr. Winn. Why were you unwilling to tell this?
 Raynes. As soon as I came to know he was the Man, I told him he should not stay in my House.
 Sir Fr. Winn. Did you lend him those Clothes, or sell them?
 Raynes. I lent him them.
 Sir Fr. Winn. Had you them again?—Raynes. No, I had not.
 Sir Fr. Winn. Are you paid for them, or no?
 Raynes. No, my Ship lies at the Key, and I came home late in the Evening, and found him there.
 Sir Fr. Winn. Set up Richard Chappel.
 Mr. Williams. When did you first see that Gentleman?
 Chappel. On Thursday Morning, at Ten of the Clock.
 Mr. Williams. Where?
 Chappel. At Rotherbith.
 Mr. Williams. How came you to him? Who brought you?
 Chappel. That Man.
 Mr. Williams. What were you to do with him?
 Chappel. To carry him to Gravesend.
 Mr. Williams. Do you row in a Pair of Oars, or a Sculler.
 Chappel. A Sculler.
 Mr. Williams. Whither did you carry the Count that Day?
 Chappel. To Deptford.
 Mr. Williams. Whither the next Day?—Chappel. To Greenwich.
 Mr. Williams. And whither then?
 Chappel. To Greenbith, and then the next Day to Gravesend.
 Mr. Williams. Was he in the same Clothes all the while?
 Chappel. Yes, all the while.
 L. C. Baron. Were you hired to wait upon him all that time?
 Chappel. Yes, I was to have five Shillings every 24 Hours.
 L. C. Baron. Was he alone?—Chappel. No, this Man was with him.
 L. C. J. Did he go in the Sculler with him?
 Chappel. Yes, to Deptford.
 Mr. Williams. Well, now we will call the Gentleman that seized him at the Water-side at Gravesend.
 Sir Fr. Winn. What did the Count call himself? What Profession did he tell you he was of?
 Chappel. He told me he was a Merchant.
 Sir Fr. Winn. Did he say he was a Jeweller, upon your Oath?
 Chappel. Yes, he said he had bought Jewels.
 Sir Fr. Winn. Where is Mr. Gibbons, and Mr. John Kid?
 [Who were sworn, and Mr. Kid stood up.]
 Mr. Williams. Mr. Kid, pray, Sir, will you acquaint my Lord and the Jury in what Condition you found the Count at Gravesend? Tell the whole Story, and speak aloud, that all may hear you.
 Mr. Kid. I had some Information upon Friday Night of him.
 Mr. Williams. Of whom and what?
 Mr. Kid. Of the Count where he was. So I made it my Business to enquire into it. On Saturday in the Afternoon a Gentleman came to me, and gave me certain Information where he thought that Gentleman the Count was. This Gentleman coming to me, said, Mr. Thynn is a Stranger to me, but said he, I would not have Mr. Thynn's Blood lie at my Door. This same Person who is put out in the Gazette, I believe, is at a Neighbour's House of mine. Says he, I desire you to be private in it, because it may do you a Prejudice; so we went into a Coach at Charing-Cross to go to a Justice of Peace; I did not know where Sir John Reresby lived, but enquired of Mr. Gibbons, who told me, but he was not at home, and Mr. Bridgman was not at home; so we went to the Recorder, and there we had a Warrant, and then I came by Water to Rotherbith, and this same Raynes that was examined, and his Wife where he lay, were gone to Greenwich to carry his Clothes, a grey Suit, and other Clothes that he had left. So going down to Greenwich, we called every Boat that was upon the River aboard of us, to know whence they came. And we had taken her Sister along with us, and she called out her Sister's Name, Mall Raynes, and her Brother's Name, Derick Raynes, and so at last we got the Boat wherein they were, on board us. And we asked the Man what he had done with the Gentleman that lay at his House? He declared he was gone away, he did not know whither. So I went back again to this Gentleman that gave me this first Information, who did go to him as a Neighbour, to know whither he was gone, and where he was to be found, and where he would land. So he declared the Particulars: That if we missed him that night, we should have him in the Hope upon Monday Morning, upon a Vessel that was to be cleared on Monday Morning. So upon Sunday Night coming to Gravesend about Eight or Nine or Nine o'Clock, or thereabouts, there he landed. There were 13 or 14 Swedes at the same House where he was to land; so we thought it convenient to take him at his first landing, for fear of further Danger. So I staid at the Red-Lion Back-stairs, and he landed at the Fore-stairs, where the Watermen were. As soon as he was laid hold of, I came to him; said I, your Lordship shall not want for any thing that is convenient: He desired to know whether I knew him; I told him yes; and that his Name was Count Coningsmark. That is my Name, says he; I do not deny it. So the Mayor came, and the Custom-House Officers searched him, and found nothing at all of any Arms about him. He desired he might be used like a Gentleman, and so he was; for there was no Abuse given to him, as I know of. Coming up the River, the most of my Discourse was about martial Affairs; a Serjeant that had the Command of a File of Musqueteers, which the Deputy Governor sent to guard the Count to Whitehall, a Gentleman sitting there by me, was asking me concerning Mr. Thynn's Murder; I told him, that I was at Newgate on Friday, and there I saw those that had done that barbarous Fact. With that, my Lord, asked what Lodgings there were in Newgate? And whether the Captain had a good Lodging? I told him a very good one. He asked me whether he confessed any thing? I told him he had confessed some Particulars. And, said I, 'tis the most barbarous Thing that ever was done. Certainly, says my Lord, this Mr. Thynn must have Correspondence and Commerce with some Lady that this Captain knew, that belonged to the Court, or he would never have done it. As for the Polander, I told him that he had confessed, he wept mightily. With that my Lord seemed very much concerned, and took up his Clothes and bit them, and sat awhile up, but was very much discomposed, and then desired to lie down.

Sir Fr. Winn. That was, when you told him, the Polander had confessed?

Mr. Kid. Yes; my Lord was mightily altered in his Countenance.

Sir Fr. Winn. Did you at the first Time that you seized him charge him with the Murder?—Mr. Kid. No, I did not.

Sir Fr. Winn. Was he in a Black Perriwig?

Mr. Kid. His Cap fell off, and his Perriwig, just as I came to him.

Sir Fr. Winn. Set up Mr. Gibbons. Pray will you tell what passed?

Mr. Gibbons. My Lord, as soon as ever he came to shore, I walked by him, and gave him a little kind of a Juffle; and my Reason was, to see whether he had not a black Coat under his Campaign: I walked close to him just in this Manner, as he walked along, so he turns about again and went down to the Water-side, and asked the Watermen; Watermen, Have you stowed your Boat? They answered, Yes. Then come away, said he; so soon as he came back again, I caught him fast hold by the Arm, and the first Word he said to me was, What do you come to rob me? Said I, my Lord, you are my Prisoner, and I told him I was the King's Messenger, that had waited there several Days for him; and holding of him very hard, whether that was the Occasion of it, or the Watermen that were on the other Side of him, he dropped down his Sword between his Legs; but when I named his Name, he gave a little Start, and his Perriwig dropped off his Face. We went up the Street to the Mayor, and the People crowding about us, were very rude and very rugged, and he desired he might be well used. We did all we could to keep the People from him: We went up to the Mayor's House, and when we came there, I desired he might be searched, whether he had any Arms: He said he had none, and there was none.

Sir Fr. Winn. When you had the Custody of him, whither did you carry him?

Mr. Gibbons. We carried him to the Mayor's House, and afterwards we removed him from his House to an Inn.

Sir Fr. Winn. What did you do the next Day?

Mr. Gibbons. We staid there about some two or three Hours. After an Hour, or half an Hour's Time, near upon an Hour, my Lord came to me, and asked me my Name; and he said, the Reason was, that after his Trouble was over, he would give me Thanks for my Civility to him. Captain Sinkler, who stood by, gave him my Name before I could, that it was Gibbons. Yes, said I, my Name is Gibbons, and I belong to the Duke of Monmouth: Why, says he, the Duke of Monmouth has no Command now, and therefore how could I take him by his Order? My Lord, said I, I do not apprehend you by his Order; you have killed a very good Friend of mine, and had not Providence ordered it otherwise, you had like to have killed a more particular Friend, and a Master: So, my

R r r

my Lord, he seemed to be very sorry at that; but, says he, I don't think they would have done any Harm to the Duke of Monmouth.

Sir Fr. Winn. What else did he say?

Mr. Gibbons. I think I have told you all that is material.

Sir Fr. Winn. Were you in the Boat at any Time, and gave him any Account of the Man's having confessed; what did he say to it?

Mr. Gibbons. Sir, I was not there, nor I did not come up in the same Boat with him.

Mr. Williams. Did he mention any thing about a Stain to his Blood?

Mr. Gibbons. I ask your Pardon, he did so.

Mr. Williams. What did he say?

Mr. Gibbons. Says he, it is a Stain upon my Blood; but one good Action in the Wars, or one Lodging upon a Counterfcarp will wash away all that.

L. C. J. What did he say was a Stain upon his Blood?

Mr. Gibbons. My Lord, if you please, I will tell you: As I said, he asked me my Name, because he would come to give me Thanks for my Civility after his Trouble was over; the Captain, being quicker than I, told him my Name: Yes, Sir, said I, 'tis Gibbons, and I belong to the Duke of Monmouth; said he, he has no Command now, how could you come upon his Order? Said I, I do not come upon his Command, but you have killed a very good Friend of mine, and a Countryman; and if Providence had not ordered it otherwise, you had killed a more particular Friend of mine, and a Master, that I had served many Years; said he, I don't think they would have done the Duke of Monmouth any Injury: After that he walked up and down a-while, and then said he, 'tis a Stain upon my Blood; but one good Action in the Wars, or a Lodging upon a Counterfcarp, will wash away all that. The Mayor was in the Room, and several others.

Sir Fr. Winn. Pray, Sir, one Thing more; when you did speak to him of Confession, did he say any thing to you about Captain Vratz?

Mr. Gibbons. Sir, he was only asking of me how Things were, what the People said, or some such Thing? I was not forward to tell him at first, but afterwards I did tell him, that the Captain had made a Confession, though it was a Thing I did not know then. Says he, I do not believe the Captain would confess any Thing.

L. C. J. Did he say so?

Mr. Gibbons. Yes, he did, to the best of my Remembrance.

Sir Fr. Winn. We have done with our Evidence, my Lord.

L. C. J. My Lord Coningsmark, will you ask him any thing?

Count Coningsmark. No.

L. C. J. Then the next Thing is, you heard the Evidence that is given against you. Now you must come to your Defence: I will put you in mind of some Things, my Lord, which Things it will concern you to give some Account of. It is here laid to your Charge, That you were accessory to this Murder of Mr. Thynn, and that you were the Person that directed and designed it. And these Evidences there are against you, That you were cognizant of this, and that you were the Person that designed this: That you came into England about a Fortnight or three Weeks before the Death of Mr. Thynn; that Captain Vratz, who was one of them that killed him, came with you, that he lay at your Lodging, that he was constantly with you, that you lay incognito there, and private, would not be known what your Name was, that you shifted Lodgings from Time to Time, that Borosky the Polander came over by your Order, was brought to your Lodging, was provided for there, that he had Clothes, and he had a Sword provided by your Lordship for him, and that there was Care taken that it should be an extraordinary good Sword, that you did discourse to Mr. Hanson about your calling Mr. Thynn to Account, and this much about the Time, or a little before the Time of his Death, and what the Laws of England would be in case you should call Mr. Thynn to Account; and particularly you desired to know what Monsieur Lienberg's Opinion might be concerning it, and especially what in Relation to my Lady Ogle. And that after all this, Mr. Borosky was not only clothed by you, but was sent by you to Vratz, (that the Doctor says) and after Vratz him, that he lay in your Lodging that Night before this evil Thing was done, and that after the Thing was done, the same Night Vratz came to your Lodging and was with you, and had private Conference with you, that the next Morning you got up and went away, though you had taken Physick the Night before, and though you yourself, nor your Doctor, thought you fit to go abroad, and you go away incognito, in a Perriwig, disguised, you direct your Servant to carry your Clothes one way, while you go another; then you go down to the Water-side, and lie private near the River, at a Swede's House at Rotherhithe for several Days together; you afterwards take great Care to conceal yourself, by changing your Clothes, and putting yourself in a Garb not like your own, and giving out you were a Merchant or a Jeweller, or some other Trade; that afterwards you trifled away the Time and went two or three Miles, and then struck in upon one Side of the River, and afterwards on the other Side of the River, suspiciously up and down not to be known, and this not like yourself in any manner, but in a pitiful poor Disguise, and hire a Sculler to carry you, from whom you concealed yourself, and so all along you trifled away the Time 'till you were taken at Gravesend: That afterwards when you were taken, you were inquisitive about the Captain, whether he did confess; that you should likewise say some such suspicious Words as these, That you believed those that killed Mr. Thynn had no Design against the Duke of Monmouth; that you believed the Captain would not confess; that you seemed to be concerned when you were told the Polander had confessed; that afterwards you should say, my Lord, this is a Stain to my Blood; but one good Action in the Wars, or a Lodging upon a Counterfcarp, will take away all this, or wash it clean. And then, which is also testified against you, that you should ask the Boy that very Morning of the Day the Murder was committed, whether they used in London here to permit Men to ride up and down on Horse-back upon a Sund-y? Now these Things, my Lord, it will import you to give some Account of.

Sir N. Johnson. My Lord says, he desires he may answer all these Things one after another.

L. C. J. Let him do so. And first let him answer what his Reason was to come into England in such a Manner incognito, at this Time, and lie concealed, when he had been in England before, and lived in a mighty good Equipage and Condition?

Mr. Craven. My Lord, he says that hearing there was a Peace between Swedeland and England, and Holland designed, and like to be confirmed suddenly against the French, he came with a Design to serve England, and to raise a Regiment of Horse here for the Service of the King of England.

Count Coningsmark. If any such Peace should be, if any Appearance of an Alliance between England and Holland, and Swedeland, I had a Design to propose, if I could have a Regiment.

L. C. J. Why did he come unknown, and in a Disguise?

Sir N. Johnson. Secondly he says, my Lord, the Reason of his coming incognito was, because he had a Distemper upon his Arms and Breast, and having formerly tried and employed this Physician, and having Experience that he was an able Man, he was resolved to lie privately till he had cured himself; for he could not drink Wine nor keep Company, having this Distemper upon him, and he was afraid, if he had kept Company, it would have hinder'd his Cure, and he should not have been so soon cured, as if he kept in the House; and he says, that this Equipage could not come 'till after, and he would not willingly appear 'till he had his Equipage as a Man of his Quality ought to do; and these were the Reasons that made him keep private.

L. C. J. Pray ask him upon what Occasion he did change his Lodgings so often?

Sir N. Johnson. He says that his first Lodging was changed because it was too cold for him; and he says, the next Lodging, where he was, those that were there can tell, the Room where he was smoked so cruelly, that he was not able to endure it. And he says, he liked the House so well, that he sent to see if the Chimney could be mended, and it was not to be done, otherwise he had gone back to that House, and he has the Man and his Wife to bear Witness of it, if you please.

L. C. J. Let him call them.

Count. Call Joseph Parsons and his Wife. [But they did not appear.]

L. C. J. Then ask my Lord this, To what Purpose he did bring over this Polander here? He ought to consider of that, and give an Account why he brought him hither.

Interpreter. He says this Pole was taken into his Service when he went to Tangier, when he went several Thousand Miles to do the King's Service, and he had designed at that Time to bring him into England to dress his Horses after the German Way.

L. C. J. Had the Polander been a Groom formerly?

Interpreter. He says, he thinks he had been Groom to his Uncle before.

L. C. J. But to what Purpose did he bring him hither?

Interpreter. He says there was a great Discourse about Strafsburgh's being besieged, he did design to buy some Horses, for every one did arm themselves; and he says he sent over 1000 Pistoles to be answered by the Merchants here, to buy Horses.

L. C. J. Hath he any body to prove it?

Count. There is Mr. Risby, Mr. Hanson, and my Brother.

Young Count. My Lord, I had a Bill of Exchange.

L. C. J. For how much Money, my Lord?

Young Count. For 1000 Pistoles, to buy Horses, and he has bought one Horse, and was to buy more.

L. C. J. Do you hear, Gentlemen, what he says? He came over to buy Horses, and he returned 1000 Pistoles for that Purpose; and his Brother does attest there was such a Sum returned by Bills of Exchange, for the buying of Horses.

Interpreter. My Lord, he says he does fear that the Jury that do not understand English, do not understand his Reasons for being in a Disguise.

L. C. J. Can't he give an Account of it himself?

Mr. Williams. No, my Lord, his Evidence must be interpreted to them by the Interpreter.

L. C. J. The Doctor's Evidence hath been heard already about the same Matter.

Sir N. Johnson. He desires, my Lord, to know this; whether he may not say the same Things over again to the Jury in French? there are a great many Persons of Quality that understand it, and they will see whether he speak true.

L. C. J. Let him, if he pleases.

Sir Fr. Winn. But then, my Lord, I hope that your Lordship will tell the Jury it goes for nothing without Proof.

[Then the Count spoke to the Jury in French.]

L. C. J. My Lord, I do not know whether the Gentlemen that are of your Right-Hand heard you or not.

Juryman. We understand not French. [Then the Count spoke it in Dutch.]

Interpreter. He says, if it had not been for the great stormy Weather, the Polander had been sooner in London, for he sent for him before. He says, the Letters go from Strafsburgh to Hamburg in seven Days, and that most commonly Ships do come from thence in Eight Days, but in a great deal less Time than the Polander came over in. And he says, that he writ four Months before to fetch the Polander over, and he might have been here long ere now, if it had not been for the Weather.

L. C. J. Then, my Lord, I would ask you some more Questions, which it concerns you to answer. Upon what Occasion did you make your Discourse of Mr. Thynn's Death to Mr. Hanson? Had you any Discourse with him? And upon what Occasion?

Sir N. Johnson. My Lord, he says in common Discourses, 'tis impossible to give an Account of the Discourse, or remember the Occasion of it so long ago.

L. C. J. Ask him if he had any Quarrel with Mr. Thynn? Or knew Mr. Thynn?

Sir N. Johnson. He says, my Lord, that he never had any Quarrel with Mr. Thynn, nor to the best of his Remembrance, with his Eyes, never saw Mr. Thynn.

L. C. J. Then I ask you this, my Lord, did you ever hear Mr. Thynn had married my Lady Ogle before you last came into England?

Interpreter

Interpreter. He says, he never heard of it 'till he was going to Straßburg, and then all the whole Town did talk of it.

L. C. J. How long is that ago?—Interpreter. Half a Year ago.

L. C. J. Then it was before his last coming into England.

Sir Fr. Winn. My Lord, his Discourse with Mr. Hanson, was not when he was last in Town, but before.

L. C. J. Then pray ask him this, What Occasion he had to ask the Boy upon Sunday, Whether Horfes might ride about the Town of a Sunday?

Interpreter. He says, my Lord, this is a very strange Thing, That he should go and ask a Scullion-Boy, whether People might ride on Sundays, when he himself, over and over again, has rid upon Sundays to Hyde-Park, as many Persons of Quality do.

L. C. J. Has he any Body to prove it?

Sir N. Johnson. Here is Major Oglethorp, (who, with divers other Gentlemen, testified they had seen him riding divers Times, on Sundays, in Hyde-Park).

L. C. J. Then that Question signifies nothing; there could be nothing in that Question.

Sir N. Johnson. My Lord, he desires that I may be examined concerning the Boy, of what I heard by Chance from the Boy himself, and I will give you an Account of it upon my Faith and Reputation.

L. C. J. Do so, Sir Nathaniel, say what you can say.

Sir N. Johnson. My Lord, I having had the Honour to serve a-while under my Lord's Father, I was desirous, knowing the Honour of the Family, and bearing a great Respect to it, to do my Lord all the reasonable Service I could. So hearing my Lord was taken, and in Newgate, I went to wait upon him; and coming there, Mr. Richardson told me, there was a little Boy waited at the Count's Door for his Wages, as he said. So I spake to the Boy, and asked him, what do'st thou stay for? He told me for his Wages. Said I, certainly my Lord will pay you your Wages; how long have you served him? He said, a little while; and then said I, if you lived with him, what do you know of his Business? And then of himself he began and told me: Only this I know, That Vratz was in my Master's Chamber that Night, and the Polander that Night went out with a Pair of Boots under his Arm, and more than this I do not know. Said I, Boy, Who do you serve? Says he, I have no Master at present; but then of his own Accord he told me, Sir Thomas Thynn had promised him a Place, and in the mean Time, I am, says he, to go to serve my Lord Priest-Seal; so my Lord gave him twenty Shillings for his Wages.

Interpreter. My Lord desires the Boy may be asked, whether he did not go to fetch Physick.

L. C. J. Ask him; where is the Boy?

Watts. No, I do not remember it.

L. C. J. Now, you should put the Count in Mind.

Sir Fr. Winn. We observe what a Sort of Interpreter Sir N. Johnson is: He speaks more like an Advocate than an Interpreter; he mingles Interpreter, and Witnesses, and Advocate together, I don't know what to make of him.

L. C. J. The Count had taken Physick that Day.

Sir Thomas Thynn. My Lord, I desire to be heard, I never spake to the Boy in all my Life.

Mr. Thynn. Nor I. But he gave the same Testimony he gives now, before the King and Council.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir Thomas, it does not concern you at all to speak to that, there is no Reflection made upon you in it. But my Lord Coringmark, it will concern you a little, to shew upon what Occasion Captain Vratz came to you that Night that Mr. Thynn was killed.

Interpreter. He says, my Lord, he can't tell why he came there; 'tis a proper Question to ask Captain Vratz himself.

L. C. J. That can't be.

Interpreter. He says, my Lord, he kept his Chamber at that Time; he had taken Cold upon his taking Physick, and the Captain came to give him a Visit, and he never reflected what any one came for; he was lying upon his Bed.

L. C. Baron. Pray ask my Lord this: Why this Man, that was sent over to attend Horfes, should come upon the Friday, and a Campaign Coat be bought him on the Saturday, and he furnished with a Sword on the Sunday?

Interpreter. My Lord, the Noise is great, but I suppose your Lordship desires to know what was the Reason why he bought a Sword for him and a Coat?

L. C. Baron. Ay, and how he came by the Buff-Coat?

Interpreter. He says he had that before.

L. C. Baron. But why must he have such a strong Basket-hilted Sword furnished him in a Day's Time.

Interpreter. He says, my Lord, as to the Clothes, when he saw him with all his Clothes torn, he must of Necessity get him a Coat, or else he was a Shame to him and his Service. And as for the Sword, it was no more (he says) than what Servants of his Bulk and Making used to wear.

Sir N. Johnson. And he says all the Servants of Gentlemen in Germany wear such broad Swords.

L. C. J. You know it yourself, Sir Nathaniel Johnson, you have travelled there.

Sir N. Johnson. Yes, my Lord, they do; and the Poles much broader and greater Swords than the others. Here is one in Court that hath a great broad Sword now by his Side.

L. C. J. Now, my Lord, it will import you to give some Account, now, you having brought over this Polander (as you say) to choose Horfes, and help you in the Management of them, to take Care of them in the Nature of a Groom, how you came to part with him to Captain Vratz as soon as he came over?

Interpreter. My Lord, he says, being that he was sick himself, and there was no Hopes of the Alliance between England and Holland, he had no such Occasion for him, as when he wrote for him, and therefore saw no Reason to keep him.

L. C. J. How long was it before that he wrote for him?

Count. My Lord, after the Siege of Straßburg, when every Body thought there would have been a War, but it was not so; therefore I had not Need of him, but he had been seven Weeks at Sea; and, my Lord, 'tis a common Thing in Germany.

Interpreter. He says, 'tis a common Thing in their Country, to give Servants away, if there be no Occasion for them.

Count. My Lord, it is a common Thing in Germany, it may be, it may not be so much used in England to give a Servant away.

L. C. Baron. What, the next Day that he comes over?

L. C. J. What say you, Sir Nathaniel Johnson?

Sir N. Johnson. Yes, my Lord, 'tis very frequent in Germany to give a Servant away if there be no use of him, for these Polanders are like Slaves.

Interpreter. And, my Lord, he says, that Mr. Ruffel does know, that the Merchant that sent him over hither is a Man of good Repute; and if this Man had had an ill Reputation in Germany, he would not have sent him.

Witness. My Lord, I know very well he is a Man of very great Credit in Hamburg, and of great Estate.

L. C. J. Did he send over this Polander?

Witness. Yes, my Lord, so I understand.

L. C. J. Can you speak of his Credit, Sir Nathaniel Johnson?

Witness. Of the Merchant's Credit I can, my Lord; I know him to be a Man of considerable Estate and Credit. He is a Man of such Reputation, that he would not send a Man of an ill Reputation.

L. C. Baron. Oh, Sir, Nemo repente fit turpissimus. He could not be so ill a Man at the first Dash; he must be a Man probable for such a Service.

Sir Fr. Winn. You may observe, my Lord, how Sir Nathaniel Johnson, who is Interpreter in the Case, is a Witness, and argues for the Prisoner too.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Sir Nathaniel, is a Rencounter the killing of a Man after this Manner?

Sir N. Johnson. A Rencounter is another Sort of thing, Sir; you don't speak as if you were a Soldier.

Mr. Williams. My being a Soldier or not is nothing to the Business; but the Captain said, he intended to have made a Rencounter of it.

Sir Fr. Winn. But, my Lord, we desire to take Notice of Sir Nathaniel's Forwardness; for it may be a Precedent in other Cases.

L. C. J. What do you talk of a Precedent? When did you see a Precedent of a like Trial of Strangers, that could speak not a Word of English; but you would fain have the Court thought hard of, for doing Things that are extraordinary in this Case.

Mr. Craven. My Lord, he desires he may inform the Jury what he sent for this Polander for.

L. C. J. Let him.

[Then the Count spake it in French and Dutch.]

L. C. J. My Lord, another Thing is this, how came your Lordship presently to go away in such a private secret Manner, and to direct your Clothes to be sent as it were to Windsor? And yourself to go away, and to make such a private withdrawing of yourself down the River in this Manner?

Mr. Craven. My Lord, he says, that one Markham, that is here, came and told him, that upon the killing of this Man by the Polander and the Captain, who were taken in such a Fact, there was a Discourse of it that it might turn to his Prejudice, and that the common People do commonly fall upon Strangers; that his Taylor told him, that he heard the common People name him as concerned in it, and that he believed, if the common People did catch him, they would tear him to Pieces, and so his Friends did counsel him that he would withdraw himself.

L. C. J. Is the Taylor here? Call him.

Interpreter. Call Markham the Taylor. [who stood up.]

Sir N. Johnson. My Lord, he says, that he was afraid the People might tear him to Pieces, before he could come to justify himself.

L. C. J. Look you, Friend, did you come to Count Coringmark's Lodgings after Mr. Thynn was killed, on the Monday Morning?

Markham. Yes.

L. C. J. What did you tell him?

Markham. I told him nothing, but I was sent there by Mr. Hanson; says he, tell the Count that the Duke of Monmouth and several Noblemen have been here: Now I had not seen the Count at that Time before, but he told me where he lodged; when I came there I told the Count of it, but he told me he knew nothing of it; but, said he, I am sorry if any such Thing be done.

L. C. J. But what did you say his Friends advised him to about it?

Markham. I did say nothing of it.

[Then the Count spake to him in Dutch.]

Markham. That was afterwards.

L. C. J. What was that afterwards?

Markham. I was told, the People said, if he were taken, he would be knocked on the Head.

L. C. J. What Time afterwards was it?

Markham. After he went away.

L. C. J. Who told you so then?

Markham. Mr. Hanson told me so then; I would not tell a Lie for all the World.

Count. He can tell also when I went away—the rest he spake in Dutch.

Interpreter. He says this Man can witness, that he asked his Man what Money he had left, and he told him that he had not above 10 or 11*l.* so he put his Hand in his Bag and took out some, and put it into his Pocket.

Count. So ill was I provided for an Escape.

L. C. J. Ask him that Question; do you know any Thing of what Money he took with him?

Markham. No, I saw him take an handful of Silver, but what it was I can't tell.

Mr. Thynn. He had 7 or 8*l.* about him when he was taken.

Interpreter. He desires Leave to tell it to the Jury, (which he did.)

L. C. J. Now, my Lord, this will require some Answer; how came you to tell those Gentlemen that took you, that you believed Mr. Vratz and the rest would have done the Duke of Monmouth no harm?

Interpreter. He says, the People told, when he was taken, that the Duke of Monmouth was in the Coach, and that they did follow the Coach a great way, and would not do the Action 'till the Duke of Monmouth was out of the Coach.

Count.

Count. They did tell me, the Croud that were about me, that those that were taken said they would not do it till the Duke was out.

Interpreter. And he says, that gave him sufficient Reason to say to Mr. Gibbons that he did believe they had no Design upon his Grace the Duke of Monmouth.

L. C. J. He heard it so commonly, it seems. Now, my Lord, there is one Thing more that you should explain yourself in, what you meant by this, when you said it would be a Stain upon your Blood, yet one noble Act in War, or the Lodging upon a Counterscarp, would wash it off.

Interpreter. He says, my Lord, that though he knew himself not Guilty of any Thing, yet his being taken upon Suspicion, and clapped up in Prison, would be a great Disgrace to him, and would be worse re- spected in his own Country than the Thing itself was: It being not the Custom in his Country to take Persons of his Quality Prisoners in that Manner.

L. C. J. Now, my Lord, is there any Person that you would have called to ask any Questions of? If you have, they shall be called.

Count. No, my Lord; but if you please to give me Leave to tell some- thing that may be necessary.

Sir N. Johnson. My Lord, he says, if you will give him Leave, though it does not come very well from himself, yet he desires to say something for his own Reputation,

Mr. Williams. He should be armed with Witnesses to make his Defence.

L. C. J. 'Tis fit for Men that stand here to say any Thing that is rea- sonable for themselves. My Lord, if you can speak any thing that you apprehend the Jury can understand, speak to them what you please, so as they understand it, but do not be too long.

Mr. Craven. My Lord, if your Lordship please, he says he would speak it first in French, and then in German.

L. C. J. Ay, but then the Englishmen of the Jury will not understand a Word of it; he had better speak in English to the Jury.

L. C. J. North. My Lord, it is an indifferent Thing, it may be inter- preted, not being Matter of Fact.

Sir N. Johnson. My Lord, he says it is a great Happiness in all his Trouble, that he was in a Country where he was to appear before a Pro- testant Judicature, himself being a Protestant, and his Fore-fathers also. He says, that his Fore-fathers, under Gustavus Adolphus, were Soldiers, and did there, with their Swords in their Hands, and the Loss of their Blood, endeavour to settle the Protestant Religion in Germany, and protect it there: He says, that it has been the Honour of himself and his Family, that they have always been ready to venture their Blood and their Lives for the advantage of the Protestant Religion, as the Examples of his Grandfather and Father do shew; and there never was any thing done by his Family but what was done for the Honour of his Country, and his Religion: And he says, that if any of his former Actions can give any the least Suspicion of his being Guilty of this, or any foul Fact, he is very willing to lay down his Life, and very willing to have it cut off immedi- ately.

Count. Immediately.

Sir N. Johnson. He says, that he is very ready, upon all Occasions, to serve the King of England; and that he loves the English Nation so well, as always to be ready to do any Thing to serve them.

Count. Without any Interest in the World, against the Will of all my Relations; and I have brought my Brother into England to be brought up into the Protestant Religion, to shew my Inclinations to the Religion, and the English Nation.

L. C. J. Have you done?

Sir Fr. Win. Yes, my Lord, we have done with our Evidence, and we have no Matter of Fact to reply unto; but we think it is our Duty, considering the Defence my Lord has made, that we should take some Care to put the King's Evidence a little together, it being a Case of such Nature, and so cruel and horrid a Murder.

My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counsel here for the King, and you are Gentlemen upon an Enquiry to find out the Of- fenders in a very great, a barbarous, and a wilful Murder. And, my Lord, in relation to the Principals, I need not spend your Lordship's and the Jury's Time about them; for all those three Men, that are indicted as Principals, do, my Lord, confess the Fact, though they do it in a diffe- rent Manner, and though in Form of Law they have pleaded Not Guilty; yet when they come to be asked the Question, their Guilt flies in their Faces, and they cannot deny it. So then for those three Men there is no Need to spend Time in repeating the Evidence.

But, my Lord, that seems to require the Consideration of the Jury is, whether this wicked and horrid Murder be only circumscribed in the Guilt of it to those three Men that have confessed it, or whether any rati- onal Man in the World will believe, upon the Account they give them- selves, that they had only a Design, a Study, or a Delight to kill this in- nocent Gentleman. No, my Lord, the Thing must lie a little deeper, and there must be some other Reason why this barbarous Murder was committed, I would crave your Pardon for what I say. My Lord, I would not speak any Thing that should mislead a Jury in Matters of Blood, and I think it was rightly said by your Lordship, that when a Man is tried for his Life, we ought all to behave ourselves seriously, as in a Matter of Weight and Moment. And so it is, I think, a very serious Thing, and a Matter of Concernment to us all to enquire who hath shed innocent Blood; for such was this poor Gentleman's Blood that was killed, inno- cent Blood.

My Lord, this Count is a very unhappy Person to have such a Relation as has been proved to be of the Principals: I will do my Lord no Wrong in the Repetition, if I do, and am mistaken, I crave your Direction, I am sure you will correct me in it. Two of the Persons that are Princi- pals, that was Captain Vratz and the Polander, happened to be Persons re- lating to my Lord's Family as his Servants. For it is agreed by the Wit- nesses that were that Count's Friends, that they came over into England with the Count, the last Time he came over in that private Manner; and 'tis likewise proved, and not denied by him, that Captain Vratz was frequently with him, not only to the very Day when this bloody Fact was done; but after that great Crime was committed: I say, my Lord, 'tis a very unfortunate Thing for this Lord, that those Men should have so near a Relation to him, who have had their Hands in it, and can give no Account why they did it.

My Lord, I do know, (and your Lordship has justly directed us) that no Evidence from one Prisoner, or the Confession of one can charge the others in point of Evidence; but I cannot but take Notice, that Captain Vratz could give no Reason in the World for it, but as it were for some Affront to the Count and himself. But, my Lord, the Evidence that lies heavy upon this Lord at the Bar, is made up of these Particulars.

First, That here is a Murder committed is plain, then that this Lord did fly, is also plain; and when he did fly, Gentlemen, he kept himself in Disguise before that Fact was committed, and whether or no the Reasons be sufficient that he has given to your Lordship, and the Jury, must be left to Consideration. He says, that he had not his Equipage, that he was not very well, and that he could not drink Wine: Those I take to be the Reasons given, why my Lord Coningsmark did conceal himself, 'till the Time after the Fact was committed.

L. C. J. He was taking of Physick, and he thought it might be preju- dicial to him to drink Wine, or keep Company.

Sir Fr. Winn. But, my Lord, these Kind of Shifts, we think, are not able to balance the Evidence; for that which is truly the Evidence is this, Mr. Hanson, who is very much conversant in that Family, and who did give his Evidence very unwillingly; yet, he did really confess that which will go very far in this Case; for after he was pressed several Times (your Lordship, and the Court, and the Counsel pressed him) to tell what was the Reason of that Discourse he had with the Swedish Resident, and he was asked, Had you any Command from my Lord Coningsmark? He answered no: but, says he, I thought it would please him, if I could have the Opinion of the Agent or Resident to know what the Laws of England were, if so be he called Mr. Thynn to Account, and what the Con- sequence would be in Reference to his Design upon my Lady Ogle, and upon this he does go, and ask the Question of the Resident.

Now, What does he mean by this calling to Account? We must take Things according to the Reason of them. Certainly it was some Offence that he had taken to Mr. Thynn, and that is plain in regard when he was asked what the Prejudice did refer to, Mr. Hanson was pleased to name that great Lady, my Lady Ogle, and said she was mentioned, and he did desire to know what the Influence of the Laws of England would be in that Matter, if he should call him to Account.

My Lord, I think, with Submission, it carries this in it, as if he had a Purpose in his Mind to call Mr. Thynn to Account by quarrelling with him and hazarding him in his Life; I do not undertake, nor would not, of myself, to expound it, but this I will say, it must signify something, and must have some Consideration; and without all Doubt, a Person of this Lord's Quality would not let fall such an Expression, but for some End and Purpose.

My Lord, after Mr. Hanson had given his long Evidence, which came so difficultly from him, we traced it down by several Witnesses, Wright, Harder, and others; that this Polander came over, as it happened, on the Friday, (which is a Thing comes mighty close) upon the Saturday he is provided with a Coat and a Sword; on the Sunday he committed this in- human bloody Fact. Now, it is a mighty unfortunate Circumstance upon this Lord, that this should be a Man whom my Lord Coningsmark should be so very much concerned for, that because he was not come, he should be afraid he had miscarried in the Weather; to that his Answer was this, that he was sent for over by him to look after his Horses, and he had come a great deal sooner, if it had not been for the stormy Weather. But, your Lordship observes, that it was not above three or four Months before, and then by his own shewing the Business of Mr. Thynn, and his Marriage with my Lady Ogle was talked of far and near; and so, my Lord, it makes the Suspicion of the Malice the greater, that he who has done this bloody Murder, and has been so much under the Command of this Lord's Family, that he should come but two Days before, and the Count provide him with a Sword that very Day, and then that Letter from Cap- tain Vratz to Dr. Harder, which he carried to the Count, and the Count read, but of which he can tell you none of the Contents; that speaks some- thing in regard when the Doctor went away, this Polander was sent to the Captain by the Doctor; but this is certain, however, there was a Sword that was brought by the Cutler, that Sword was carried up to the Count's Chamber, that Sword was delivered afterwards to the Polander; for he had it on the Sunday Morning when he went away with the Boots under his Arm, and the Campaign Coat upon his Back, with a Buff-Coat under it; and he went out, and never returned 'till the Fact was committed.

I say, my Lord, it carries a vehement Suspicion, that he was privy to this Murder, because this was a Servant at his Devotion, and your Lord- ship and the Jury see what Kind of a Creature he is, likely to do any thing, being at the Command of so great a Person.

But then, my Lord, to come closer to the Matter, (for I will only re- peat that which is most material) there is the Evidence of the Boy, who I must say, tells you a very sensible Story; he tells you upon what Ac- count he came to him, that he was there ten Days before the Murder was committed; he swears expressly, that the Polander lay there the Night be- fore, was there that Morning, went away with the Sword, and Dr. Harder with him; that this Murder was committed about eight o'Clock at Night, that Captain Vratz came bustling into the Count's Lodgings, where he lay concealed, and the Boy, by Agreement, being to go home every Night, staid 'till half an Hour past nine, and left the Captain there at that Time, and the Captain had been there in the Morning.

My Lord, surely it is a strange Thing, and much to be won- dered at, that the Captain, who had the Management of the Murder, had no where to go for a Refuge, but to his Patron my Lord Coningsmark, reeking hot with Mr. Thynn's Blood, when the Blow was given, within an Hour after the Murder committed, to the Boy swears expressly, for the Blow was given at a-Clock) and afterwards he went to the Doctor's to Bed, about ten a-Clock at Night, as the Doctor hath confessed; I take that for a mighty Evidence. And then, my Lord, upon the Monday Morning, when the Boy comes in, the Count asks him, What was the Matter with the Bustle in the Street the last Night? Will any Man in England believe, but that he had had earlier News of it? And for what Reason should he ask the Question, if Mr. Hanson speaks true, who brought the News in from Whitehall?

But the great Question that we wonder should be asked the Boy, is, What Mr. Thynn was? Which certainly was a very odd Expression, if we consider what Mr. Hanson says, That the Count had mentioned him in his Discourse, and my Lady Ogle too. One of the Count's Answers was, It could not be imagined that he could speak to a Scullion-Boy; but you see the Boy swears it, and tells it so, as that it is very probable.

We now come, my Lord, to give an Account of his Flight.

The Father of the Boy comes in the Morning: And I would observe, though he pretended his Business and his Distemper brought him over, and that he was ill and under Cure; yet this Matter made the Place too hot to hold him; stay here he durst not; immediately he forgot his Physician's Prescriptions, and gave Order to his Man to send away his Things. Then the Boy's Father was sent for, and the Portmantles are given him, and he is told my Lord was going to Windsor; but when he came to Charing-Cross, the Things are put into a Coach in the Strand, and from thence they went for Rotherhithe.

Then came the Man at whose House he lay, and he was a Swede, and by the Way I would observe, the Witnesses are most of them my Lord's own Friends, unwilling to tell the Truth till we get it (and that very hardly) from them. This Man was very unwilling to tell his Knowledge, but he got him the Clothes, which Clothes, by the Bulk of the Man, one would think would hardly fit the Count; but the more he was disguised, the more was his Security; and when he was asked this Question, Why he desired to have those Clothes to secure him? He said at last, It was to prevent Trouble.

Now let us consider, my Lord, whether the Count has given any Answer to that. My Lord, there is nothing in what he said, under Pardon. He says, He went away, because he was afraid the People would tear him in Pieces, before he could justify himself. If he were innocent, he knew where to go to be secure from any Hurt from the People; he might have applied himself to your Lordship, or to any other Magistrate. He is so ingenious he could not but know he might have protected himself under the Government, which protects and secures any Man whatsoever if he be innocent.

I have these two Things more to mention, and then I shall leave it to your Lordship, and the Jury; and one is the Evidence of Mr. Gibbons, and Mr. Kid.

Mr. Kid gives that which to me is a very material Evidence of what passed when they seized him: As they were coming up the River, the Count asks him, Whether there were any good Lodgings in Newgate? and particularly expressed his Care of the Captain, to ask whether he were well lodged. And when he was told that the Polander had confessed, he says he seemed on the sudden to be very much concerned, bit his Clothes, and threw himself along with some Agony. My Lord, an innocent Man needed not to use any such Actions.

Then comes Mr. Gibbons, who was very instrumental in the pursuing of him, and is known to be an honest Man, he gives this Evidence, That when there was a Discourse about Mr. Thynn, and his old Master the Duke of Monmouth, the Count presently replied, They meant to have done the Duke of Monmouth no Harm; and walking about the Room on a sudden, burst out into this Expression, This is a Stain upon my Blood; but one good Action in the Wars, or lodging upon a Counterfeits, will wash it all away.

Now, my Lord, as to what he answers to this, I say any Man may make that Evasion which he would excuse it by, to say that the Accusation is a scandal or a Stain, may be worse than the Guilt of the Action: But your Lordship and the Jury see plainly, if so be the Thoughts of a Man's own heart be that he is Guilty, it will break out some way or other. These things I only repeat, I leave them to the Consideration of the Jury. But when I have said this, there is one Thing more, and that is, above all, relating to the Captain: Says Mr. Gibbons, I did not know that the Captain had confessed, but I did venture to say he had; but the Count replied, He did not believe the Captain had confessed. My Lord, you see how the Captain appears before you, and if the Count will take upon him to say, he does not believe the Captain would confess; it doth strongly argue he knew as much of the Captain's Mind as he himself. Then look upon the absolute Behaviour of the Captain, the Familiarity he lived in with the Count, that he had always been a Dependunt upon his Family, it shews the Reason for his Assurance of Secrecy from the Captain, that he would confess the Author of this most notorious Murder, and it lies heavy upon him. My Lord, I look upon the Discovery of this as a very miraculous thing: And pray consider, Gentlemen, where shall a Man go to settle his Thoughts for the Original Business? Do you (or can you) think it begun, invented and contrived by yonder three Men? To what End Purpose, or for what Advantage to them? You have heard the Evidence that I have repeated to you; you have heard what this Lord has said for himself; how he has fled, and what has been done. My Lord, I will use any thing of Argument to persuade the Jury; but I cannot chuse to say, we know no where to go for the Author of this villainous Fact, to whom to accuse as the prime Contriver, but this Count before you. I leave the God of Heaven to direct you in your Enquiry; and if I have said any thing amiss, I beg your Pardon for it.

[Then a great Shout was made, which the Court rebuked the People for.]

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I did not think to have said any thing more in this Case; but I must crave your Lordship's and the Jury's Patience a few Words. As for the three Persons at the Bar (the Pole, the Captain, and the Lieutenant) it is, Gentlemen, very notorious they are Guilty of this most hellish Murder. But all the Labour and Difficulty of the Matter is, how far this Count is Guilty or Not Guilty.

Pray, Gentlemen, do but observe the Nature of this Crime, and the Manner of our Evidence that has been given you. The Crime he is accused of, is, for being accessary to a wilful Murder: accessary before the Fact; contriving of it, and laying the Train, which these Persons were made use of to fire. This being so, it is almost impossible to give you that clear Light and pregnant Proof against an Accessary, as against the Principals. The Principal is he that doth the Fact; that is notorious and open. The Accessary is the Person that prepares the Scheme, contrives the Management, first sets the Wheel on work, gives the necessary Instructions, who lies behind the Curtain. Now, considering that, and the Nature of the Thing, it is impossible to give a clearer Evidence than what you have had.

Pray, Gentlemen, do but first consider who hath been the Privadoes and the Intimates of this Count, with whom he has had Conference since he came into England, Hanson and Dr. Frederick, who are brought as Witnesses (though unwilling ones) against him: the Boy that was employed by him; he is in no other Hands; I cannot hear he was among any other Persons but these, and Captain Vratz, and the Polander. These are his Company and those alone with whom he had Conversation. Now, Gentlemen, that we should be able to produce these very Men (that were his only Companions) against him as Witnesses, is a mighty Thing, considering the Privacy he lay in.

As for Vratz, his most intimate Privado, he came over with him into England, lived with him in his first Lodging, and was continually with him during his Stay. So then, What can we expect about this Man, Gentlemen, when he had laid his Design with all the Privacy he could, would have as little Conversation with Englishmen as he could. It was very craftily laid, that he would converse with none but those that were privy to his Design, or had an Hand in it in a great Measure. Then pray consider how it was carried on, Gentlemen; Vratz, who was the great Commander, and the Polander, who was the immediate Actor in it, had been his own Servants. Vratz, I say, he had a great Confidence in; he came over with him; and will not any Man believe, that this Man, who eat of his Bread, who lay in his Family, was a likely Man to do this for his sake, that thus cherished him? For whose sake, pray, can it be thought to be? Not for his own sake; for the Captain tells you he never had any Communication or Conversation with this unhappy Gentleman, Mr. Thynn. So that if it were as they would have it, that they did it out of Respect to this Count, who was the Captain's Friend, it will turn upon the same Point, and confirm the Suspicion. Why should the Polander do it, if he had no Reason to do it upon his own Account? For he never saw the Face of Mr. Thynn, but was brought Hood-wink'd, in a Manner, to the Fact.

Therefore whether it were not done for his sake, is that which you are to consider; and as a Proof that for the Count it was done, I shall pitch upon one Circumstance that will bring it home to his Door, and that is, the Evidence of Hanson, his Brother's Tutor: And, by the Way, I cannot but repeat it, that this Thread goes through all the Cloth, we have no Witnesses but those of his own familiar Acquaintance and Dependance. Now Hanson has (though very shufflingly) told you, the Count and he had some Discourse about my Lady Ogle; and tho' we cannot come to know all the Circumstances, yet he does acknowledge so much, as that there was Mention made of requiring Satisfaction of Mr. Thynn, or some Account of him, and what might be the Consequences of the Laws of England, in Reference to my Lady Ogle, in case he should call him to Account. So far he is plain, though he will not tell what the Discourse was; that there was a Discourse of my Lady Ogle, of Mr. Thynn, of asking Satisfaction of Mr. Thynn, or calling him to Account, and what the Consequences in Law might be. And pray, Gentlemen, observe, being to take Advice about this Matter, they would not consult an English Lawyer, though I see one behind him now, but a Foreigner, the Swedish Agent; not ask the Opinion of one Man of this Kingdom. And then he gives you a mighty Reason for it, That the Swedish Resident knew very well how to advise him in this Affair, because he had lived in England about 19 Years: So that all his Acquaintance and Friends, the Managers of the Business, and those consulted with about it, all Outlandishmen; I cannot say they are all Guilty, but I will say this makes our Proof more difficult.

Gentlemen, This being taken Notice of as a mighty Circumstance, I would bring it a little more home to this Gentleman, whom we accuse as accessary before the Fact. Pray consider how all along he lay skulking, and hiding himself in Disguise, and shifting his Lodging from Place to Place. I need not repeat it, but I would desire you to think of what was concurrent with that very Day, and, as it were, concomitant with the very Murder, and that will appear to be sufficient to satisfy any rational Man. We are not picking up an Evidence upon flying Word, or unconcluding Circumstances, but we offer Facts to you, and Facts are to guide you, you being to compare Facts with Facts. As to his lurking and hiding, this Gentleman gives you no Manner of rational Account, that he had any Business with any Man in England that should occasion his lying private; but only he tells you, he laboured under a Distemper that he would not have discovered; and yet take him in that very Distemper, and in the Process of his Cure, as soon as this Fact is over, the next Morning he values neither his Disease nor his Physick, but goes by Water, and made an Attempt to fly abroad. Will any understanding Man believe that he came privately into England, that he lay skulking here, that he made use of another Name, and other Clothes, that he should do all these Things, and run away so immediately after the Fact was done, and all only because of a little Distemper of Spots on his Breast?

But then, says he, it was reported in the World, and told him the next Morning, that the People, the Rabble, would tear him in Pieces. He was asked where he had this Report, and he brought up a Taylor, and depended mightily upon it, but the Taylor denied it; and, Gentlemen, he that fails in one Thing he says, is not to be credited in another without good Proof. He says, that he said no such Thing, so that, Gentlemen, this fictitious Argument of his Fear falls to the Ground.

S f f

Then

Then observe what follows upon this villainous Fact; he flies away privately, he goes to a Swedish House at Rotherhithe, from thence by a Swede he must be put into a Sculler, and that Sculler must be towing of him for several Days together, till he come to Gravesend, from whence he was to have gone over Sea. Pray lay all this together, and weigh it well, and see if you can imagine any other Reason for it all, than what we alledge.

I would observe it to you, Gentlemen, and pray think of it, what the Count has said to you in his own Defence in so many Languages, without Proof, must pass for nothing. The Court has had a great deal of Patience to hear him, and shewn him a great deal of Favour in permitting it; but without Proof, I say, it all passeth for nothing. And what Proof he hath made of it, I must submit to you; for I will not spend your Time in running into Particulars: And where he has proved any Things, pray compare Facts with Facts, especially that concerning the Captain, Vratz, which is not, in my Opinion, to be answered; that he lived with him, that he should be with him on the Sunday Morning, that in the Evening he should come thither again after the Fact done, that he should be left in his Chamber, and continue in the House so long. Will any one believe, that when Vratz came over with the Count from abroad, lodged with him here, was every Day with him in familiar Conversation, should come that Morning before, and in the Evening immediately after, and stay with him so long, and yet the Count be innocent? Nay, will not any Man rather absolutely conclude him an Accessory to the Murder?

Then, Gentlemen, take into your Consideration his Flight, and Endeavours to escape out of the Hands of Justice; if there were no more, that is a great Evidence of his Guilt, but you have much more, and as strong as you can desire or expect. He says he was afraid of the People; alas! he needed not to fear that, he finds a very fair and generous Treatment here; he knew the Temper of our English Nation well enough, to know they do not presently fly in Men's Faces; and he could not but know, he might, without Danger, resign himself up to the Law if he were innocent.

Gentlemen, we have given you a fair and a full Evidence; we have offered you sufficient Proof in Fact, and have offered no Shams to you; and I do not doubt but you will do Right to the Honour of England, and the Justice of the Nation, which are deeply concerned in this Case.

[Then there was a great Noise made.]

L. C. J. Look you, Gentlemen, the Counsel for the King have been very large in the repeating of the Evidence, therefore you must not expect from me, that I should go over it again in the same Method that they have done. I will direct you a little as to some Points in Law as to this Case: Here is, as they tell you truly, a Murder as horrid and barbarous as peradventure can be committed upon any Subject. It is a Murder of a very bad Nature, so that the repeating of it is enough to make all Men abhor it; it needs no Aggravation, it is in its own Nature so very barbarous; and those Gentlemen that had a Hand in it, must certainly needs be ashamed, and look upon themselves as not fit to be accounted Men, whoever they be that had any Hand in it, so barbarous and inhuman, and base in its own Nature, and so unworthy of a Man.

I must tell you, Gentlemen, when one Man shoots another, and two are with him, though they do nothing but come on purpose to countenance that evil Fact, that is Murder in them all; all that were present are guilty whenever such an Act is done: And three or four come together, and one does the Fact, and the others stand by to countenance it, whether they be there to bring the Party off, or to animate him, and put him into a Condition that he may murder and kill, it is Murder in all, and they are all as equally guilty as he that shot, or actually gave the Blow.

Now as to these three Persons here, the Polander that shot, Vratz who was with him and stop'd the Coach, and Stern that was by with them, they do all acknowledge themselves to be there at this Murder; the least they say for themselves, is, that they came to countenance a fighting with Mr. Thynn, that is the least any of them say; for Captain Vratz makes this his Excuse, that he intended to kill him (as he calls it) fairly, and the others were to stand by to let him make the best of it; so that they all came with a murderous Intent, and a Murder followed. And I must declare this for Law to you, that this is Murder in them all, if you believe themselves; so that I think there is little, very little for you to consider concerning these three Men, but according to what they have acknowledged of themselves both before the Council, and here likewise in your own Presence, they seem all to be guilty of this Murder.

The more doubtful Question is concerning Count Coningsmark, that stands here before you, for he was not at the Murder, nor is he charged as Principal; and the Question will be as to him, Whether he commanded, or gave any Authority or Direction to have this Murder committed? That is the Thing that is now charged upon him, and without that, he cannot be Accessory in this Case.

Now, Gentlemen, you must consider as to that, several Things are certain and positive; That this Polander was once his Servant; That he was brought over from beyond Sea by his Order; That he was given by him to Captain Vratz; That Vratz was his great Acquaintance, and lay in his Lodging some Time, though not at this very Time. These Things are plain: Now what Answer is given to this? You hear, he says, the Polander was taken for him, and hired as a Servant beyond Seas, knowing that he had skill in Horses; and the Count having remitted Money to buy Horses, he was willing to have him manage the Horses, and to have his Judgment in them, and sent for him three Months before for that Purpose, and that he came for that Purpose; but knowing that the Occasion for which he was to buy his Horses was passed over, there being like to be no War, and therefore there would be Occasion for Horses, he was willing to part with the Polander, as he says, is usual for Persons of Quality in his Country to do upon such Occasions, to give their Servants to one another; and so, having clothed him first, he gave him to Captain Vratz: And you hear how much of this is made good by Witnesses, and how far this is satisfactory to you as an Excuse and Reason for this, I leave to you.

There is more too that is very plain: It is apparent that the Count bid him come to his Lodging after this Murder was committed. According to the Calculation of the Time, it must be after the Murder, for that was about eight o'Clock, and he was there about Nine. You hear what Answer the Count gives to that; That he came as formerly he had done, he knowing nothing of this, nor of Mr. Thynn's Murder, and that he did not speak to him concerning it.

The next Thing, Gentlemen, is, 'Tis plain the Count did lie private when he came to England; and he tells you (he brings the Doctor to witness it) his Occasion of Privacy was, because he had a Sickness, which he was loth should be known, having been formerly in Splendor in England; but now without his Equipage, he would not publicly appear; and he was afraid, if he appeared in Company, he should be inticed to drink high, and that would retard his Cure. And the Doctor tells you, he was under his Hands for Cure of his Disease, which was some Spots upon his Body.

It is plain too that Count Coningsmark did go away the next Morning after he had heard of the Murder, he acknowledgeth it himself; and that he did conceal himself upon the Water, and was taken in such a Manner as the Witnesses speak. But withal, he tells you the Occasion of this was, a Stranger here, Captain Vratz, as he heard, was accused for the Murder, and seized, and he did not know what this might occasion to him; how the common People might fall upon a Stranger that was of that Man's Acquaintance; and it was through his Fear of the People (lest they should fall upon him before he could vindicate himself) that he withdrew himself, and concealed himself in this Manner. As it was told you by the Counsel it was an unreasonable Fear in him, for there is no such disorderly Proceeding (we thank God) in England; but he tells you he was afraid of it; and if he were, being a Stranger, he might not know our Constitution so well.

But I must tell you another Thing for Law, Gentlemen, which was urged by the Counsel for the King. Captain Vratz doth say, that he, knowing of an Affront that had been given to the Count, and having received an Affront himself, he did, without the Count's Knowledge, do this Murder, for Revenge, upon Mr. Thynn. It has been said by the Counsel, it will be all one whether it were with the Knowledge of Count Coningsmark, or not. Now, I must tell you, Gentlemen, the Law is not so: For if a Gentleman has an Affront given him which he does seem to resent, if any of his Servants officiously, without acquainting him with it, out of too much Zeal, and too forward a Respect to their Master's Honour, will go and pistol and kill him that they apprehend has affronted their Master, he not knowing of it, it will not charge their Master with any Guilt at all. The Law, Gentlemen, is not so as was urged; for if it were without the Count's Knowledge and Direction, if a zealous Captain has gone and over-did himself, out of respect to his Master's Honour, when really it was a Dishonour to himself, and all that were acquainted with it, this cannot lie upon him, to make Count Coningsmark Guilty. But it lies upon me to direct you, for otherwise you might swallow it as a Maxim, to be all one in Law, which it is not.

So that it will return to this, Whether here be any Proof that Count Coningsmark did consent to this Murder, or any ways countenance the killing of Mr. Thynn, or command any of these Persons to do it.

Look you, Gentlemen, there are some suspicious Speeches that are mentioned here of the Count's. One is, that the Boy should say that the Count asked him whether Men might ride in London on Sundays? You hear what Answer is given to that. The Count denieth that he asked any such Question: And to shew and prove that such a Question could not likely be asked, he says and proves, by divers Persons, that it was an ordinary thing for himself to ride on Sundays in Hide-Park, before this Business long.

It is also said, that when he was taken, he should say, That he did believe they intended the Duke of Monmouth no Hurt. Now that he said these Words he doth not here deny; but he says he spoke it upon the common Report, that these Men had watched the Coach till they saw his Grace out of it, and then they did do this Villainy; so that he apprehended they had no Design to hurt the Duke at all. This is the Answer he gives; how satisfactory it is, I leave it to you.

Then as to those other Words; That it would reflect upon his Family, and stain his Blood; but he presently recollected himself, and said, O brave Action in the Wars, or Lodging upon a Counterfarp, would wash it off. You hear what he says to that: He looked upon it as an Injury to his Family, and it would be some Stain to his Blood, that he should be accused of so base and unworthy an Act; but that Accusation he thought might be washed off; and so, though he were innocent, it might be looked upon as a Stain, which a brave Behaviour in the Wars would wipe off.

Gentlemen, Thus, as near as I can, I have given you an Account of the most material Things that are objected against him, and his Answers to them. I must leave it to you, whether upon the Evidence which you have heard, you do believe that this Murder was directed or countenanced by Count Coningsmark. If it were, he then is Guilty as accessory before the Fact, and you must find it; but if you believe he did not know it till after the Murder was done, then he is innocent, and you must acquit him. And upon the whole, Gentlemen, I must leave it to you.

Then, it being late, after an Officer was sworn to keep the Jury, the Court adjourned for a while; and in an half an Hour returned; and then the Jury who came in and answering to their Names, gave this Verdict.

Cl. of Cr. Gentlemen, are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Omnes. Yes.

Cl. of Cr. Who shall say for you?

Omnes. Foreman.

Cl. of Cr. George Borofsky, alias Boratzki, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) Look upon the Prisoner: How say you? Is he Guilty of the Murder and Murder whereof he stands indicted, or Not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Cr. What Goods and Chattels, Lands and Tenements?

Foreman. None to our Knowledge.

Cl. of Cr. Christopher Vratz, hold up thy hand—Is he Guilty, &c.

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Cr. What Goods, &c.

Foreman. None to our Knowledge.

Cl. of Cr. John Stern, hold up thy Hand—Is he Guilty or, &c.

Foreman. Guilty.

Foreman. Guilty.
Cl. of Cr. What Goods, &c. — Foreman. None to our Knowledge.
Cl. of Cr. Charles John Coningsmark, hold up thy Hand, (which he did.)
 How say you, is he Guilty of the Felony whereof he stands indicted as Accessary before, or not Guilty?

Foreman. Not Guilty.
Count Con. God bless the King and the honourable Bench.
Cl. of Cr. Then hearken to your Verdict as the Court hath recorded it, you say that George Borofky, &c. and so you say all.

Then the Jury was dismissed, and the Court ordered a Recognizance to be taken from the Count, with three Sureties, to appear the next Sessions, and to answer any Appeal if brought; after which the Judges went away, and the Recorder, with the Lord Mayor and Aldermen, stayed to pronounce Sentence on the convicted Malefactors.

Cl. of Cr. Keeper, set George Borofky to the Bar, hold up thy Hand, (which he did.) Thou standest convicted of Murder, for killing Thomas Thynn, Esq; what canst thou say for thyself why the Court should not give Judgment upon thee to die according to Law?

Interpreter. He says, he prays God to have Mercy upon him.

Cl. of Cr. Tie him up. Set Christopher Vratz to the Bar----

Interpreter. He says he hears he is condemned, but he was never rightly examined, nor fairly tried*.

Cl. of Cr. Set John Stern to the Bar-----

Interpreter. He says he did it for the Captain's Sake, he went as a Second along with him.

Then the Prisoners being tied all up by the Executioner, Proclamation was made for Silence, during the pronouncing of the Sentence.

Mr. Recorder. You the Prisoners at the Bar, George Borofky, Christopher Vratz, and John Stern, you have been all indicted for the Murder of a Gentleman of great Quality, Mr. Thynn; a great, and heinous and a crying Crime, that cries aloud for Vengeance: You have been brought to your Trial, and tried indifferently by a Jury not consisting only of the Countrymen of the Party slain, but compounded of Foreigners and Freeholders of the County too. These Impartial Men have found you Guilty, and indeed the Plainness of your Guilt is such, that you yourselves have acknowledged yourselves Guilty. For when you were apprehended, your Guilt did so stare in your Faces, and you could give so little an Account how you had bestowed that Time wherein he was murdered, that you were forced to confess your Interest in the Fact.

It is our Duty to pronounce the Sentence of the Law against you upon this Conviction; but it is also our Usage to open the Nature of the Crime for which the convicted Person is to suffer Death, for the Conviction of the Offenders themselves. Now your Crime is one of the deepest Die; it is the wilful shedding of innocent Blood, to which you could be led by nothing but what you are charged with in the Indictment, the Motion and Seduction of the Devil. This Crime of Murder is put into the highest and foremost Rank. When God himself had given Laws to the World under the old Administration, after the Command of honouring Father and Mother, in the next Place he forbids Murder. This Crime you have committed, and that, with the most aggravating Circumstances that I have ever known attend any Crime of this Nature. It was committed upon a Gentleman of great Quality, that was so far from giving you any Provocation to it, that you acknowledge yourselves you never had any Communication with him. It was done upon a Day when you ought to have exercised and busied yourselves in Acts of Piety and religious Worship. It was done in the Streets of the City, near the King's Royal Palace. But the greatest Circumstance of all, is the doing of it in such a Manner, that is, it was done by Way-laying; a Sort of killing the most unworthy, the most base, and the most ungenerous of all other. For that it gives the Party assaulted no Liberty for any Prevention, or any Defence by any Prudence he can use; and the Consequence of it is, as much as lies in the Malefactor, to destroy as well the Soul as the Body; by such an insidious Murder, to take a Man out of this Life, before he can have any Opportunity to prepare for another Life. Therefore in our publick solemn Prayers in our Church it has very justly and worthily been made part of our Liturgy, to pray to be delivered from Murder and sudden Death.

You that are Strangers in this Country, if you had been tried and convicted of a Breach of our municipal Laws, the peculiar Laws of this Kingdom, much Indulgence might be shewn to you because of your little Acquaintance with the Law. But that is not your Case: Your Offence is a Transgression against the Law of God, written in large Characters in the Nature of Man. It is against the Laws of all Nations, even your own Country from whence you come, and any other Country where-ever you could go, are severe in their Laws against that by which you have broken the Law in so foul a Fact. The very Barbarians could say, This Man is a Murderer, and Divine Vengeance will not suffer him to live; so that they all think the Divine Vengeance concerned to revenge it.

You have slain this innocent Gentleman, which is but a single Distemper as it concerns him, but if it should go unpunished, it would turn to a pestilential Contagion. If such Assassinations and Murders of Persons should not be severely punished, it were a greater Woe than ever was brought upon this Kingdom. Therefore it is thought fit by his Majesty, to make his Justice signal and exemplary upon those that have thus basely and inhumanly brought themselves under the Censure of it. That when the Fame of this barbarous Action shall go abroad, his Justice shall also be celebrated upon the Actors, and that this Kingdom is maintained by Justice. I have but one Thing more to say to you, and that is in Tendernefs to you yourselves. You are to consider that you are to receive another Judgment than that you will be condemned by here, and that you may be prepared, for that is your great and your only Care. Now it is Repentance that is the only Antidote against the Sting of Death. You cannot be found innocent, yourselves acknowledge your Guilt; then let it be your care to be found Penitent. For that Purpose you shall have the Assistance of some learned Divines here, and you will do well to hearken to their good Counsels. I pray God you may submit to Justice patiently, and that your Contrition may be correspondent to your Crime, that so you may obtain Pardon and everlasting Favour from God.

It remains only that we pass the Sentence of Law against you, which is this:

That you shall go from hence to the Place from whence you came, from thence to the Place of Execution, where you shall be severally hanged by the Neck until you be dead: And the Lord have Mercy upon your Souls.

Then the Prisoners were carried away, and the Court adjourned.

On the 10th of March following they were all three executed, according to the Sentence, in the Pall-Mall, in the same Place where they had committed the Murder. Stern and Borofky left each of them a Paper signed with their own Hands.

The Confession of Lieutenant John Stern.

ABOUT twenty seven Years ago my Father sent me out of Swedeland to Germanland, where for two Years together I went to School: Two Years after that came the Muscovites, which obliged us to fly back to Swedeland. About twenty three Years ago I left Sweden, and went towards Pomerania, where I served the Elector of Brandenburg a quarter of a Year; from thence I went through Poland towards the German Emperor's Dominions. From Bohemia I travelled into the Netherlands, from thence into France; from France again into the Netherlands with the Army: After the Peace, I went back to Bohemia, Austria, and Hungary, and after that again to the Netherlands, where I stayed eight Years; from thence I went farther, to Holland, Denmark, Sweden, Poland, and then to Holstein, which was in the Year 81. During these thirteen Years I have been a Papist twelve Years, because I was commonly all that Time in Popish Territories; but in Holstein in the Year 81, I turned again to the Lutheran Religion, in which I was born and baptized, and in that, God willing, I mean to die. I could no longer bear with the Popish Religion, because of their many Saints and Intercessors. There is no Religion comes nearer to mine, than that of the Protestants in England; God grant they may live in Peace with the Calvinists, to prevent Quarrels, and in Opposition to the Papists.

And now I will let you know how I came to that late Misfortune here in London. About the end of October last I came to London, and lodged in the City, near the Royal-Exchange in Broadstreet, in the Dutch Ordinary, at the Sign of the City of Amsterdam. When I had been there about a Month, a Gentleman came to lodge there, who called himself Vallichs, but his Name is Vratz: He and I began to be acquainted: At last he told me he had a Request to me; to whom I replied, That to the utmost of my Power he might command me. To this he said, That he had a Quarrel with a Gentleman, and desired me to be his Second. I told him, without any Consideration, I would. A Fortnight after he told me, That it was good Living thereabouts; and if I would take a Lodging in that Place, during the four Weeks he should stay in London, he would pay for me. Hereupon he took four Servants; sometimes he was for marrying, sometimes for fighting; and if he could get one who would kill the Gentleman, he said, he would give him 200, nay 300 Dollars. There it rested for a while. He dismissed two of his Servants, and was going for France, or Holland. The two Servants continued without Places. Six Days after, I took leave of my Acquaintance; and after my Things had been two Days on Shipboard, I went to the Lutheran Church, where I received a Letter from Capt. Vratz. O unhappy Letter! The Contents were as follows.

S I R,

I AM sorry I could not have the Honour to take my leave of you; but be it all to your Advantage. I am going for France, yet have not as yet a certain Commission. In the mean while be pleased to continue either at Mr. Block's, or in the City of Amsterdam, where I will not fail to pay for all. I am, your obliged Servant,

De Vratz, alias de Vallichs.

After I had read this unhappy Letter, I changed my Resolution, and stayed here and fetched my Things from the Ship, and went to lodge in Blackmoor-street. About ten Weeks after he returns to London, sends for me, and I came; and himself took a Lodging in Westminster, where I was with him; and the Count himself lay one Night in the Captain's and my Lodging. The Captain then asked me, How Thynn did? I told him, I could not tell, for I had never seen him. Thereupon he told me, I must see now how to order it, that I may come at him; if I could get but some stout Fellows ----- Do you know no Frenchman about Town, or what other People there is? I said, I would see. Then he added; could not one get an Italian who might dispatch him, I would give him three or four hundred Dollars? I said, I knew none: Hereupon he got four brace of Pistols, three little ones, and one brace of great ones. The great ones, and one brace of little ones, he had by him before, and two long Swords; and then said, Now he is a dead Man. He prayed me to cause two Poniards to be made, whereof he gave me the Draught, but I would not do it. And now he had a Mind to draw in a great many more. At last I had a very strange ominous Dream. He saw I was musing, and then asked me, What I ailed? I told him, and he laughed, saying, There was no need to be given to Dreams; yet the Dream proved too true. Now, I say, he was resolved to kill him; when therefore he importuned me to engage more Men in the Business; I told him, What can you do with so many People, cannot you take three Horses, you will have use for no more? Hereupon he fetched out Money, and on the Friday, before the Murder was done, he bought three Horses. On Sunday following he told me, I shall get a brave Fellow, (that was the miserable Polonian) who came to Town on Friday, and the Sunday after he killed the Gentleman, (according to Order from his Master, and you know who his Master was) myself being then, alas! in the Company. Half an Hour past four, the Gentleman went by in his Chariot before our Window. Thereupon we went for the Horses, and afterwards rid toward the Pall-Mall, where we met the Gentleman in his Chariot, I rid before the Coach, the

* This was because when the Evidence for the King was finished, he was never asked what he had to say for himself, which ought to have been done, as is usual in all cases, but is not unlikely the Court were apprehensive he might lay the Guilt on the Count.

Captain went close by it, and then cried, Hold, and shewed the Polonian the Man in the Coach; who thereupon gave Fire, and shot four or five Bullets into his Body. They say, he lived till next Morning, and then died. On Monday following we were all taken Prisoners, and must now die too; we have yet four Days to live: The Great God pardon us this Sin, for Christ his sake. Amen. For I repent, from the bottom of my Heart, that in my old Age, to which I was advanced with Honour, I should come to this Disaster: But 'tis done, and cannot be remedied. It is written, The Days of our Years are few, and when we come to our best Age, it is then but Labour and Sorrow.

Memorandum.] The Letter the Captain shewed me one Day, was to this Purpose.

I have given Captain Vratz full Commission to dispose of the Places of Captain or Lieutenant, to whomsoever he shall find capable of it. So far I read the Letter; five Lines lower stood these Words, 600 Dollars, which was not the Captain's Hand, or writing; it was High-Dutch. I seeing the Letter, threw it down upon the Table, but he put it up, and underneath the Letter was signed Coningsmark. Thus much I saw, but made no farther Reflections upon the Letter, because, God knows, I was blinded.

Another Memorandum, I have forgot in the Papers, which, after my Death, are like to be published, viz. It hath been twice in my Thoughts, when Captain Vratz was in Holland, to go and tell Mr. Thynn what the Captain intended against him, but I still forgot.

I desire the Doctor, in case any Thing of the Captain's Writing should come abroad, to compare what he saith with my Confessions, and to consider one with the other, Give unto Cæsar the Things that are Cæsar's, and unto God the Things that are God's. I hope I shall go with the Publican into the Temple of God: I am a great Sinner, yet God's Mercy is greater, wherein I trust; nor will Christ therefore refuse a Soul, though the Body is hanged up by the World. My Lords, ye Judges, I do with you all Happiness; I confess you have a weighty Office, God give you his Grace, that you may neither add to, nor diminish from a Cause. You have seen how I have exposed all my Failings, and that openly to God, and to the whole World, because others may take Warning by me, whom I leave behind me in the World. I beg of God, that People may consider this my poor Writing, the Effect of the Assistance of God's Spirit, and the Desire of a pious Soul.

The Captain desired me that I would cause two Daggers to be made, because at first it was resolved, we should fall upon Mr. Thynn on Foot; and he would have had some Italian or another to thrust them into Mr. Thynn's Body; yet I neither looked out for a Man fit for that Purpose, nor would I cause those Daggers to be made. The Musquetoon, or the Gun, I fetched indeed; but it was out of a House, which the Captain described to me.

I must now die for a Man's Fortune, with whom I never changed Word all my Life; for a Woman, which I never saw; nay, for a Man that is dead, whom I never had a view of; and are not these three very great Things, I leave it to every Man's Consideration? It would grieve a Man; I confess, it is a little hard, yet be it as God pleases? I have entirely resigned myself to his Will. O Jesu, receive my poor Soul into thy Hands, then shall I die thy Servant; my Soul I commend to thee, and then shall I feel no Pain nor Sorrow. Amen, Amen.

The Confession of George Borodzyecz the Polonian.

I George Borodzyecz do here, in few Words, intend to make known to the World, how I came into the Service of Count Coningsmark. About eighteen Months ago I was recommended, by Letters, to the Quartermaster General Kemp at Staden; and from thence I was to be sent to the Count at Tangier; but by reason of the hard Winter I was stop'd, for the Ship in which I was to go stuck in the Ice in the River Elbe; this made me stay till farther Order. In March last I received a Letter, which ordered me to go and stay in a Manor belonging to the Count in the Bishoprick of Bremen, and there expect new Orders from the Count. At last I received a Letter, with Orders to come by Land for Holland; but destitute of an Opportunity, I staid till the 12th of November 1681, and then new Orders came, that I should come for England to the Count's Brother, where I should fetch Horses, and convey them to Strasburgh. And accordingly I left Hamburg the 24th of December 1681, and was at Sea till the 4th of February 1682. When I came to London, I lay the first Night in the City, hard by the Royal Exchange, at one Black's; and from thence I was conducted to the Count's Brother, and from thence to the Count himself, who was to be my Master: When I came to him, Captain Vratz being with him, my Lord told me, I should be with Capt. Vratz three Days, till his i. e. the Count's Baggage and Goods he had on Shipboard came. Whereupon the Captain said, He would send his Man for me next Day, which was Sunday, which he did accordingly. I went with his Man, and my Lord charged me, I should do what Capt. Vratz should order me to do. I went thereupon to my Chamber, and said the Lord's Prayer. On Sunday, about one of the Clock, came up the Captain's Man for me, and brought me to the Captain. When I saw him, he told me, It's well you are come, for I have a Quarrel with an English Gentleman; I did formerly send him two Challenges, but he answered them not; whereupon Count Coningsmark and myself went for France; but that Gentlemen sent six Fellows after us, who were to kill the Count and me. Accordingly they came on us, the Count received two Wounds, we killed two of them, and I am now come hither to attack that Gentleman in the open Streets as a Murderer; and as he hath begun, so I will make an end of it. Whereupon he gave me the Gun, which I should make use of to kill him. When hereupon I pleaded with Captain Vratz, and shewed myself unwilling, saying, That if we were taken we should come to a very ill End. He answered, I need not trouble myself about that, if we should be taken Prisoners, it was he that must suffer for it, not I; and for my Service, he would recommend me to Count Coningsmark; whereupon I thought with myself, that it might be here as it is in Poland, viz. where a Servant does a Thing by his Master's Order, the Master is to suffer for it, and not the Servant.

We went therefore soon after for our Horses, and rid toward the Pall-

Mall. The Captain told me, I will stop the Coach, and do you fire upon the Gentleman; which was done accordingly. Lord have Mercy upon me.

I am heartily sorry that my honest Parents must receive this unwelcome News of me; the Almighty God take care of my Soul. I have great confidence in Almighty God, and know that he hath offered his Son upon the Cross for the Sins of all Mankind. Therefore I believe that Satisfaction was also made for my Sins; and in this Faith, in the Name of God I will live and die. Lord Jesu give me a happy End, for thy bitter Death and Passion sake. Amen.

What pity is it, that I should be about the Space of Seven Weeks upon the Sea, betwixt Hamburg and London, and in great Danger Day and Night, and yet should fall at last into this unexpected Misfortune! I can bear Witness, with a good Conscience, that I knew nothing of the Business aforehand: The great God pardon those Men that have brought me to this Fall; God keep every Mother's Child from all such Disasters, for Christ his sake. Amen.

And I desire the Doctor to pray for me, and to let all the World know my Innocence after I am dead, that Men may see and fear.

GEORGE BORODZYECZ.

Captain Vratz would make no Confession, but persisted in denying what the others had owned; never Man died with more Resolution, and less Signs of Fear or Disorder; his Carriage in the Cart both as he was led along, and at the Place of Execution, was astonishing; he was not only undaunted, but looked cheerful, and smiled often: When the Rope was put about his Neck he did not change Colour, nor tremble; his Legs were firm under him; he looked often about on those who stood in Balconies, or at the Windows, and seemed to fix his Eyes on some particular Persons; three or four Times he smiled; he would not cover his Face as the rest did, but continued in an undaunted Manner, looking up to Heaven with a cheerfulness in his Countenance, and a little Motion of his Hands. Being asked, if he had any Thing to say to the People, he said no. When they had stood about a quarter of an Hour under the Gibbet, after they had been tied up, they were asked, when they would give the Signal for being turned off; they answered they were ready; so a little while after the Cart was driven away; and thus they ended their Lives.

Captain Vratz was permitted to be buried, but Stern and Borofsky were hanged in Chains.

The Examination of Lieutenant John Stern, taken before Sir John Rereby, Bart. and William Bridgman, Esq; two of Majesty's Justices of the Peace of the County of Middlesex, Feb. 17, 1681.

THIS Examinee saith, that seven Months ago he came into England, and lodged at the Amsterdam Ordinary. That about five Weeks after Captain Vratz came and lodged in the next Room to him, and in a few Days made an Acquaintance with him, and said to him, It is dear living here, but as long as I stay it shall cost you nothing. This Place is dear, I will go and lodge at another Place. Accordingly they went to an House in St. Nicholas Lane, where the Captain paid for him. That the Captain told him, he had a Quarrel with a Gentleman with whom he would fight, and that he wanted a good Servant or two. That about fourteen Days after the Captain went out one Morning, saying, he would return in the Afternoon, but that he sent for his Boots and came not again; that a certain Taylor (who wrought for the Captain) came and discharged the Lodgings. That the Sunday following he received a Letter from the Captain, excusing his going away, and saying he would return in eight Days, (but he came not in nine or ten Weeks) that in the said Letter the Captain directed him to go and lodge at the Amsterdam Ordinary, or one Back's, saying, he would defray his Charges. That the Captain came to Town again a Day or two after the Morocco Ambassador had been to see the Guards in Hide-Park. That the Examinee then meeting the above mentioned Taylor (who is now Prisoner) with the Captain's Sword (which he knew,) the Taylor told him the Captain desired he would come and see him; that he accordingly went, but nothing past between them then of any Moment. That the next Day the Captain came to him, and began to discourse again about his Quarrel, repeating that he wanted a good Servant or two, for he would fight. That about nine or ten Days ago the Captain told him he should have a good Servant suddenly; and that if he this Examinee would assist him the Captain, he would make his Fortune. That the Captain gave him Money to buy a Musquetoon, which he did accordingly. That this Day Sev'n night the Captain bought three Horses, and the Day after said to this Examinee, I must have the Rogue now. Next Day, being Sunday, about Noon, when the Polander came, the Captain said to this Examinee, Now I have got a brave Fellow; and so the Captain went to the Polander into another Room, and when he came back to this Examinee, he said to him, This is a brave Fellow indeed, for he says those that will not fight must be killed. That after Dinner the Captain sent out one of his Servants to know whether the Gentleman (with whom he had a Quarrel) went out; that the Servant brought Word he was gone out, whereupon the Captain put on his Boots, and sent this Examinee for two Horses, to be brought to the Black-Bull in Holborn; soon after which another Person brought a third Horse, and then the Captain, the Polander, and this Examinee, got on Horseback, and went towards Charing-Cross, and having gone further in the Pall-Mall, this Examinee being about ten Yards behind the Coach (which he had met and passed) heard the Captain say, Stop or halt to the Coachman, and presently heard a Shot, and saw the Fire, upon which he turned about, and saw the other two Persons ride away, whom he followed.

The Examinee being gone out of the Room, and desiring to be brought in again, further said, that the Captain hath often told him, that he would give two, three, or four hundred Crowns to find a Man to kill Mr. Thynn.

His further Examination taken Feb. 19, 1681.

He saith that he had it in his Thoughts twice to go to Mr. Thynn and acquaint him that the Captain was resolved to kill him. That the Captain desired him to get an Italian that would stab a Man, and that he this Examinee would get two Poniards made: And asking the Captain how he would have them made? The Captain took Pea-

Ink, and Paper, and made a Draught of them, adding, that if he could find such an Italian, he would give him three or four hundred Crowns; that this was before the Polander came over. That upon the same Day when the Murder was committed, the Captain bid him charge the Musquetoon with fifteen Bullets; whereupon he replied, that then they should kill the Footmen, and all about the Coach. The Captain answered, it matters not for that. That this Examinee charged two Pistols more, but put only five or six Bullets in the Musquetoon. That some of the Bullets were wrapt up in Rags, with Rosin powdered, which would burn. That he heard the Captain say (as he thinks to the Polander) that if the Duke of Monmouth were with Mr. Thynn, nothing must be done. That the Captain told him, if he would assist him in this Business, he would procure him the Command of a Company. That as he was sitting one Day melancholy by himself, the Captain came to him, and asked him what he ailed? Whereupon this Examinee said, that he had dreamt that four Dogs did fly at him, but that two were chained, and the other caught hold of him; upon which the Captain seemed concerned, but presently plucked out a Letter which was signed Coningsmark, in which was expressed that the Count gave the Captain full Power to dispose of the Captain-Lieutenant's Place of his Regiment, saying at the same Time (this Examinee not being willing to receive the Letter at first) What do you think I would be one of the Dogs to bite or deceive you? That he afterwards saw, towards the End of the Letter, the Figures of six hundred (which he thinks was to express Six Dollars) but what they concerned or related to, he knows not, for being he had seen the Power to dispose of the Company, he read no further.

The Examination of George Borosky, a Polander, the seventeenth of February, 1681-2. before Sir John Reresby, Bart. and William Bridgman, Esq; two of his Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the County of Middlesex, who saith,

THAT he came into England by the Desire of Count Coningsmark (expressed to him by his Merchant at Hamburg) but knew not for what Cause; but after he came, Count Coningsmark told him on Saturday the 11th Instant, that he had a Quarrel with an English Gentleman that had set six Persons upon him upon the Road, in which Conflict he was wounded, and two of the Assailants were killed. Therefore since the said Mr. Thynn did attempt for to kill him, he would make an End of it. He further said, To-morrow will come a certain Servant to conduct you to the Captain, and what he bids you to do, that you are to observe. That a Person came on Sunday Morning about eleven o'Clock accordingly, and carried him to another House, where he found the Person that conveyed him to the Captain, who told him that he must do what he bid him do, giving him a Musquetoon, a Case of Pistols, and a Pocket-Pistol, he having a Sword before given him by the Count; and the Captain further added, repeating it five or six times, when we go out together, if I stop a Coach, do you fire into it, and then follow me. They accordingly took Horse, and when they met the Coach, the Captain having a Pistol in his Hand, cried to the Coach, Hoid, and at the same Time bid this Examinee fire, which he did accordingly. That he being further examined as to Mr. Hansen's knowing any thing of this Matter, he saith he doth not know that he doth. That as to the Arms, there was a Blunderbuss, two Swords, two Pair of Pistols, three Pocket Pistols, two Pair of Boots tied up together in a kind of Sea-Bed, and delivered to Dr. Dubartin, a German Doctor, who received them at his own House.

The INFORMATION.

FOR that in Hillary Term, in the 30th and 31st Years of this King's Reign, in the Court of King's Bench at Westminster, by a Jury of the County of Middlesex were indicted, Robert Green, — Gerald, Clerk, Henry Berry, Lawrence Hill, Dominick Kelly, and Philbert Vernatt; for that they by the Instigation of the Devil, &c. the 12th of October, in the 30th Year of this King's Reign, at the Parish of St. Mary le Strand in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, with Force and Arms, in and upon Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, Kt. in the Peace of God and the King then and there being, feloniously, wilfully, and of their Malice aforethought, did make an Assault, and kill and murder him in this manner, viz. Green did fold and fasten a Linen Handkerchief about his Neck, and therewith choked and strangled him, of which choking and strangling he instantly died: And the others, viz. Gerald, Berry, Hill, Kelly and Vernatt were present, aiding, abetting, comforting, assisting and maintaining the said Green to kill and murder the said Sir Edmundbury Godfrey in Form aforesaid; and so they the said Green, Gerald, Berry, Hill, Kelly and Vernatt, in Manner and Form aforesaid, him the said Sir Edmundbury Godfrey feloniously, wilfully, and of their Malice aforethought, did kill and murder, against the Peace of our said Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity: To which Indictment afterwards, the said Term, the said Robert Green, Henry Berry, and Lawrence Hill severally pleaded, Not Guilty, and put themselves upon the Country; and after in the said Term of St. Hillary, in the said Court of King's Bench at Westminster, for the Felony and Murder aforesaid, by a Jury of their Country in due Manner were tried, and thereof lawfully convicted and attainted, as by the Record thereof in the said Court of King's Bench at Westminster remaining more fully appears; which said Robert Green, Henry Berry and Lawrence Hill, were afterwards executed and suffered Death, according to the Form and Effect of the Judgment and Attainder aforesaid. And whereas one Miles Prance, upon the Trial of the Indictment aforesaid, was produced a Witness and sworn for the King, and gave material Evidence against the said Green, Berry and Hill, to prove them Guilty of the Felony and Murder aforesaid: And one William Bedloe, John Brown, Elizabeth Curtis, Zachary Skillarne, and Nicholas Cambridge, upon the Trial aforesaid, were Witnesses in like Manner produced and sworn for the King, and gave divers material Evidences against the said Green, Berry and Hill, to prove them Guilty of the said Felony and Murder. And whereas also the said — Gerald, Robert Green, Lawrence Hill, Dominick Kelly, and Philbert Vernatt, at the Time of the Felony and Murder aforesaid, were Papists, and Maintainers of the Romish Superstitions: And the said — Gerald, Dominick Kelly, and Philbert Vernatt have fled, and not yet appeared to the said Indictment. And whereas also by the Coroner's Inquest taken upon the View of the Body of the said Sir Edmundbury Godfrey lying dead before John Cooper, Gent. one of the Coroners of the said County of Middlesex, by the Oaths of honest and lawful Men of the same County, above the Number of twelve Persons, it was found that certain Malefactors unknown, feloniously, and of their Malice prepense, him the said Sir Edmundbury Godfrey did strangle and choak, of which he died. The said Nathaniel Thompson, William Pain and John Farwell, well knowing the Premises, and being Persons devilishly affected, devising, practising, and with all their Strength intending the Peace and common Tranquillity of this Kingdom of England to disturb, and as much as in them lay the due Course of the Law to destroy, and subvert and elude, and the Justice of this Kingdom of England to defame and scandalize, and as well the said Miles Prance, William Bedloe, John Brown, Elizabeth Curtis, Zachary Skillarne, Nicholas Cambridge, as the said John Cooper, and the honest and lawful Men sworn upon Inquest aforesaid, upon view of the Body aforesaid, to bring into the greatest Hatred, Contempt, and vile Esteem with all the King's Subjects, and to deter the King's Subjects from finding, detecting, and proving the Designs of Papists against our Lord the King, and the true Religion now by Law established, and impiously and wickedly devising and intending them the said — Gerald, Dominick Kelly, and Philbert Vernatt, from undergoing the Pains and Sentences by Law upon them to be inflicted, for the Murder aforesaid, and to aid and assist them (although they be Guilty) to be found Not Guilty thereof; and to deceive and beguile the King's Subjects in the Premises with their false Affirmations and Arguments, and cause and procure that it should be believed and esteemed, that the said Green, Berry, and Hill, the Persons for the Murder of the said Sir Edmundbury Godfrey as aforesaid convicted and executed, had been convicted, and executed unjustly; and that the said Sir Edmundbury Godfrey was felo de se, and himself had feloniously murdered. They the said Thompson, Pain, and Farwell, their most impious, wicked, and diabolical Intentions to fulfil and perfect afterwards, to wit, the 23d of February, in the four and thirtieth Year of the Reign of our now Sovereign Lord the King, at the Parish of St. Mary le Bow, London, with Force and Arms, &c. falsely, unlawfully, unjustly, wickedly, and diabolically, made, composed, and caused to be printed, a certain false, scandalous, and defamatory Libel, entitled, A Letter to Mr. Miles Prance, in relation to the Murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey: In which said Libel, amongst other Things, it is contained as follows, And hearing that the Coroner's Jury or Inquest were first of Opinion, and accordingly declared, he was felo de se, and that there was much Art and Skill used to procure their Verdict to the contrary, more particularly the refusing of the Body, at their Instance and Request, to be opened. And in another Place of the same Libel, it is farther contained as follows, They say, that if a Man or any other Creature be strangled or hang'd, and his Body cold, and the Blood settled in the Veins (as he must needs be, if your Evidence be true) (meaning the Evidence of the said Miles Prance) run twenty Swords through such a Body, not one drop of Blood will come out; but on the contrary, his Body, when found, was full of Blood, in so much that (over and above the Cakes or great Goblets of congealed putrified Blood found afterwards in his Clothes) the Constable when he pulled the Sword out of his Body, it crashed against his Back Bone, and Goblets of Blood and Water gushed or gubbed out of that Wound in abundance, not only in that very Place where the Sword was pulled out, but in all his Passage to the White-house; especially, there where his Body was lifted over two high Stumps, and also when he was laid upon the Table, the Blood and Water so issued out of that Wound, that it ran from off the Table upon the Floor, and from thence into the Cellar: So that they do aver, that that Wound that he received by that Sword, must of Necessity be the Cause of his Death. And in another Part of the same Libel, it is further contained as follows, They observe that Bedloe's, before the Committee of Lords, and your Evidence in relation to this Gentleman's Death, are as different as the East is from the West; for you dog him out of St. Clement's, the other decays him from Charing-Cross; you swear he was strangled with an Handkerchief near the Stables going to the Water-side; Bedloe, that he was smothered with a Pillow in a Room in the great Court in Somerset-house; you say, he took Horse at Soho; Bedloe says, that he took Coach at Clarendon-house, with many more such like Contradictions; and considering the old Proverb, fore-warned, fore-armed; a further and fuller Account of the whole Matter expect. And that the said Nathaniel Thompson, William Pain, and John Farwell, their most impious, wicked and diabolical Intentions to fulfil and perfect, afterwards, to wit, the third Day of March, in the said four and thirtieth Year of the Reign of the said late Lord the King, at the said Parish of St. Mary le Bow, London, aforesaid, with Force and Arms, &c. falsely, unlawfully, unjustly, evilly, maliciously, scandalously, and diabolically, made, composed, and caused to be printed, another false, scandalous, and defaming Libel; entitled, a second Letter to Miles Prance, in Reply to the Ghost of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey. In which last mentioned Libel, amongst other Things, it is further contained as follows, Next, whereas my Letter saith (and that truly) that the Coroner's Jury were first of Opinion, and accordingly declared he was felo de se; and that much Art and Skill was used to procure their Verdict to the contrary. And in another Place of the same last mentioned Libel, amongst other Things, it is further contained as follows: And it would be very material, if the Coroner would declare, what he received for that Job, and of whom; and what Evidence he had to induce the Jury to find (as the Inquisition imports) that he was strangled with a Linen Cloth, a Matter of Fact never so much as spoken of until you came in with your Evidence, which was not in some Weeks after; and I do again aver, that the Body was required by the Jury to be opened, and was refused; and if the Body was in their and the Coroner's Power (as the Ghost insinuates) such Power was concealed from and denied the Jury. And in another Place of the same last mentioned Libel, it is, amongst other Things, contained as follows: He is to understand, that Mr. Brown, the two Surgeons (meaning the said Zachary Skillarne and Nicholas Cambridge) and Mrs. Curtis, are no competent (nor can be material) Witnesses in this Case. And in another Place of the same last mentioned Libel, it is further contained as follows: But Mr. Prance, it will be fully proved, that the Body was full of Blood, and that there were Cakes or Gobbets of dry Blood, found in his Clothes, which, with his Body, stunk extremely: And it will be also fully and effectually proved that his Eyes, Nostrils, and Corners of his Mouth were Fly-blown. And in another Place of the same last mentioned Libel, amongst other Things, it is contained as follows: And as the seventh and last Paragraph, which relates only to the Difference betwixt you and Mr. Bedloe's Evidence, I must take Notice, that what you and he swears is very contradictory. And in another Place of the same last mentioned Libel, amongst other Things, it is further contained as follows: But I cannot omit to take further Notice of Mrs. Curtis's Affidavit, in relation to the Wax found upon the Clothes, in which I cannot say but she may swear true; but this I do aver, that if it be so, those Drops were put upon the Clothes long after he was found, and after the Jury had sat on the Body; for there was no such thing then on the Clothes. And, I suppose, this was some Artifice used by those, who either out of Interest or Design, were desirous to confirm his being murdered at Somerset-House. And the said Attorney-General for the same Lord the King, gives the Court here to understand and be informed; That the said Nathaniel Thompson, William Pain, and John Farwell, in their further Prosecution aforesaid, falsely, wickedly, and maliciously, their Contrivances and Intentions aforesaid, afterwards, to wit, the 7th Day of March, in the four and thirtieth Year of our said Lord the King, at the Parish of St. Mary le Bow, London, with Force and Arms, &c. falsely, unlawfully, unjustly, wickedly, maliciously, scandalously, and devilishly, composed, made, and caused to be printed, a certain other false, scandalous, and defamatory Libel, entitled, The Loyal Protestant and True Domestic Intelligence, or News both from City and Country. In which last mentioned Libel, it is contained as follows: That there is not in the said Letter (meaning the said false, scandalous, and defaming Libel) entitled, a Letter to Mr. Miles Prance, in relation to the Murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, before first mentioned, the least Item or Circumstance, but what will be by undeniable Evidence made out to be the Truth: So the said Mr. Prance, having not as yet vouchsafed an Answer to that Letter, he will speedily receive a further Letter relating to that Murder, wherein the further Truth will not only be fully set forth, and other Circumstances set out. And further, that the said Nathaniel Thompson, William Pain, and John Farwell, in their further prosecuting, falsely, wickedly, and maliciously, their Contrivances and Intentions aforesaid, with Force and Arms, &c. falsely, unlawfully, wickedly, maliciously, and devilishly, composed, and caused to be printed, a certain other false, scandalous, and defamatory Libel, entitled, The Loyal Protestant Intelligence, &c. In which last mentioned Libel, amongst other Things, it is contained as follows: Whereas Dick Janeway, in this Day's Mercury, promises an Answer to the late Letter to Mr. Prance, &c. This is to give him and all the World Notice, that such an Answer is impatiently expected by the Author of that Letter; who questions not but to prove every Title of that Letter, to the Satisfaction of all Mankind: And besides, he is very desirous that the Courantier (according to his last Pacquet of Advice from Rome) would go on, and use his Interest, to procure the Lord Mayor, Court of Aldermen, and Common Council of London, to inspect the Truth of that Letter; whereby it will appear inevitably, that there is not one Papist or Popishly affected Person concerned in that Letter, or in the Proof of the Particulars thereof; but the same (with divers other material Circumstances relating to the Murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, and the Fraud and Blind put upon the World in relation thereto) will be more fully, plainly and manifestly proved, without giving ill Words, or scurrilous Language, or Reflections to any Persons that really are, or supposed to be therein concerned in any Circumstance whatsoever. And that the said Nathaniel Thompson, William Pain, and John Farwell, in their further Prosecution aforesaid, falsely, wickedly, and maliciously, their Contrivances and Intentions, after, to wit, the first Day of April, in the four and thirtieth Year of the Reign of our said Lord the King, with Force and Arms, &c. at the Parish of St. Mary le Bow, London, aforesaid, falsely, unlawfully, unjustly, wickedly, maliciously, scandalously, and devilishly, made, composed, and caused to be printed, a certain other false, scandalous, and defamatory Libel, entitled, The Loyal Protestant Intelligence, &c. In which last mentioned Libel, amongst other Things, it is contained as follows: Last Wednesday, Nathaniel Thompson, upon Summons, appeared before the Lords of his Majesty's most honourable Privy Council, about the Letters to Mr. Miles Prance, concerning the Death of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, where he justified the Matter, and produced the Authors, who are ready to prove (by undeniable and substantial Witnesses, not in the least accused or suspected of Popery, as the malicious Party do suggest) that every Title and Iota of those Letters are true. And that in another Part of the last mentioned Libel, amongst other Things, it is contained as follows: Mr. Thompson and the Gentlemen his Friends are to attend the next Wednesday at Council, where they do not doubt, but that honourable Board will put them into a Method to prove the whole, or any Particular, which their Honours in their great Wisdom shall think convenient to be brought to the Test or Examination. And further, that the said Nathaniel Thompson, &c. the twenty third Day of February, in the aforesaid thirty fourth Year of our said Lord the King; and divers other Days and Times betwixt the said twenty third of February, and the aforesaid thirty fourth Year, and the Day of the exhibiting of the said Information at the Parish of St. Mary le Bow, London, aforesaid, knowingly, and every of them knowing the said several Libels to be false, malicious, scandalous, and seditious, with Force and Arms, &c. falsely, unlawfully, unjustly, wickedly, maliciously, scandalously, seditiously, and devilishly, the said false, malicious, scandalous and seditious Libels uttered and published, and each of them uttered and published in manifest Contempt of the Laws of this Kingdom of England, and the Scandal and Defamation of the publick Justice of the same, to the evil Example of all others in like Case offending; and against the King's Peace, his Crown and Dignity, &c.

Then Proclamation for Information being made, Mr. Thompson acquainted my Lord and the Jury with the Effect of the Information, as follows:

Mr. Thomps. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, this is an Information against Nathaniel Thompson, William Pain, and John Farwell, and it is for writing and printing several scandalous Libels, about the Death of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey: In which we set forth, that Green, Berry, and Hill, were indicted for the Murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, and thereof convicted and attainted; and that the said Green, Berry, and Hill, were executed for it: That upon their Trial for that Matter several Witnesses were examined, namely, Mr. Prance, Bedloe, and Curtis, and several others to prove, Sir Edmundbury Godfrey murdered at Somerset-house. And before the Trial there was an Inquest taken by the Coroner of Middlesex, by which it does appear, that Sir Edmundbury Godfrey was murdered by several Persons unknown; and that the Defendants, to reflect upon the Justice of the Nation, and scandalize the Witnesses produced at that Trial, and to make it believed that these Persons died wrongfully, did write and print several scandalous Libels and Letters, one of them entitled, A Letter to Miles Prance, concerning the Murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey; and in these Letters did suggest, as if he had been felo de se, and do reflect upon every one of the Witnesses, as if they had contradicted themselves; and also do reflect upon the Coroner, as though he had bribed the Jury; and do undertake by these Arguments, and several others (that you will hear) to prove, that Sir Edmundbury Godfrey murdered himself. And that in another Libel that Thompson printed, called his Loyal Protestant Intelligence, he says, he will make it out by a cloud of Witnesses. This we lay is against the Peace of the King, and defaming of the Justice of the Nation: If we prove this Matter upon them, you are to find them Guilty.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. My Lord, the Matter which you have now before you, is as impudent a Thing as ever was done. Gentlemen, Sir Edmundbury Godfrey was murdered, and Green and the Contrivers of it have been executed for it; the Matter hath passed the Examination of the Parliament, and the King and Council and all: Now this Thompson is a Printer, I may as well say a Printer of Libels, for he does constantly print Libels against the Religion established, and the Justice of the Nation. The Jury that were impannelled upon the Coroner's Inquest, he says of them, that they at first did agree that he murdered himself, and afterwards did return, and find that he was murdered by others. Gentlemen, it is plain that he was murdered by others, and the particular Persons have been tried for it, and found Guilty. Now this Person after all this, What does he do? He takes upon him to write a Letter to Prance (Prance was one of the Witnesses in that Case) he writes it by the Name of a Letter, but it is a foul and wicked Libel; and therein 'tis too long for me to mention the Particulars) he scandalizes the publick Justice of the Nation, he undertakes to vindicate the Murderers, and to accuse the Proceedings of the Nation. But, Gentlemen, we will prove these Men guilty of framing and publishing of these wicked Libels, and that is all that is needful to be done upon the point of Evidence. We will call our Witnesses.

Then Mr. Clare was sworn, and produced a Copy of the Record of the Conviction and Attainder of Green, Berry, and Hill, for the Murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey. As also a Copy of the Inquisition, taken by the Coroner of Middlesex, upon the View of the Body of the said Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, whereby it is found that he was murdered by them, strangled with a Cord by Persons unknown. Both which (Mr. Clare having sworn to be true Copies) were read.

* L. C. J. This Matter of his being thus strangled, was found before it was discovered who did the Murder. It was upon the Sight of the Body, and they supposed it to be done by a Cord, but afterwards it came to Light that it was done with an Handkerchief.

Mr. Thomps. (To the Counsel of the Defendants) If you will put to prove all, we must prove that these Men were executed.

Then Captain Richardson was sworn.

L. C. J. Were these Men executed for this Murder?
Capt. Rich. Yes, I saw them executed.

Then Mr. Prance was sworn.

Mr. Thomps. Did you give Evidence upon the Trial of Green, Berry, Hill, for the Murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey?—Mr. Prance. Yes.

Mr. Thomps.

Mr. Thompf. Do you remember that Brown was a Witness too?

Mr. Prance. Yes, Brown was.

Mr. Thompf. Was Curtis a Witness, and Mr. Bedloe?

Mr. Prance. That Curtis was, I don't remember; Mr. Bedloe was.

Then Curtis was sworn.

Mr. Thompf. Were you a Witness at the Trial of Green, Berry, and Hill?
Mrs. Curtis. Yes, I was.

Then Sir John Nicholas, and Sir Philip Lloyd, and William Bridgman, Esq; were sworn, and the two Letters in the Information were shewed to them.

L. C. J. Were these shewed to the Defendants, Thompson, and Pain, and Farwell, at the Council?

Sir Phil. Lloyd. These were the same, I know because they are endorsed by my Hand; Thompson owned the printing of both, and one other of the Defendants owned the writing of one of them, and the other of the other.

L. C. J. But Thompson owned the printing of both?

Sir Phil. Lloyd. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did Pain and Farwell own the bringing of both to Thompson to print?

Sir Phil. Lloyd. One owned the one, and the other the other.

Then Sir John Nicholas and Mr. Bridgman testified the same.

Mr. Saunders, of Counsel for Pain, said to Sir Phil. Lloyd, Did Pain or Farwell own that they brought both, or one the one, and the other the other?

Sir Phil. Lloyd. One the one, and the other the other.

Mr. Saunders. Then pray, Sir, which was that Farwell did own?

Sir Phil. Lloyd. My Lord, my own Memory does not tell me which, but here are Notes say that Farwell owned the first, and that Pain owned the second.

L. C. J. Do you believe them to be true?

Sir J. Nicholas. Yes, Sir, I took the Notes.

Mr. Yalding. Did he readily discover his Authors?

Sir Phil. Lloyd. Yes, he did.

Associat. The Title is thus, A Letter to Mr. Miles Prance, in relation to the Murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey. Shall I read it all?

L. C. J. All of it.

Read it in these Words; Mr. Prance.

A LETTER to Mr. Miles Prance, in Relation to the Murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey.

Mr. Prance.

Perceiving by some late Pamphlets several Rumours rais'd, as if there were Endeavours us'd to asperse your Evidence in Relation to the Death of Sir E. B. G. and to lay that Murder upon himself. And remembering the Confirmation, which then was in all People's Minds, by the Discovery at that Time of a dreadful and most horrid Popish Plot, which occasioned divers to report, and most to believe (even several Days before the dead Body was found) That he was murdered by the Papists at Somerset-house. And hearing that the Coroner's Jury or Inquest, were first of Opinion, and accordingly declared he was felo de se: And that there was much Art and Skill us'd to procure their Verdict to the contrary: More particularly, the refusing of the Body (at their Instance and Request) to be opened; and opposing the Assistance of the Coroner of Westminster, (who is taken notice of to be a knowing and impartial Man in the Execution of his Office;) who was desired to, and did attend for that Purpose, but was dismissed with a Guinea; telling him, they had no need of his Service. I made it my Business, partly for Your's, but chiefly for the Truth's sake, to make a strict Enquiry into the farther Causes of the aforesaid Rumours, and do and these Particulars very much urged, and discoursed of, (viz.)

I.

In Opposition to the Evidence of his being dogged up and down, and lodged in a great House at St. Clement's on Saturday the 12th of October 1678. (being the Day he was first missing.) It is affirmed, he went out of his House that very Saturday Morning about nine o'Clock (which is the last Time he ever returned thither;) and about ten that Forenoon was in the Fields walking towards Marybone (in which Parish his dead Corps was afterwards found) and was there met by a Brewer in St. Giles's, who discoursed with him; and about eleven of the same Day he was seen passing by the Lady Cook's Lodgings near the Cock-pit; after which, he was seen in St. Martin's Lane, went by the Church, and down Church Lane into the Strand; about he passed by the Door of one Mr. Ratcliff an Oilman in the Strand, and soon after was met in the back Court of Lincoln's-Inn by two Gentlemen, who observed him to make a sudden turn, and to go out at the back Door; they went out at that Door also, and did see him turn the corner Wall, between which Place and Turn-stile, he was met by a Barrister at Law; and at a Person living near Primrose-hill, declared before divers Persons, that he saw him about three that Saturday in the Afternoon walking in those fields, his usual Walk being that way.

II.

They say, the Place where, and the Posture wherein he was found, are very remarkable. As to the Place, it was in a Ditch on the South-side of Primrose-hill, surrounded with divers Cheses, fenced with high Mounds and hedges, no Road near, only some deep dirty Lanes made only for the convenience for driving Cows and such like Cattle in and out of the grounds; and those very Lanes not coming near 500 Yards of the Place, and impossible for any Man on Horse-back with a dead Corpse before him at midnight to approach, unless Gaps were made in the Mounds, as the Constable and his Assistants found by Experience when they came on Horseback thither. As to the Posture, his Breast was unbuttoned, his Waistcoat and Shirt put up, his Sword run in under his left Pap next his Skin, the Point coming out at his right Shoulder about six Inches, his left Arm doubled under him, (on which his Head seemed to lean) and his right Arm stiff, stretched out upon the Bank, his Belly and Breast being supported by the Side of the Bank, his Knees knit together, and with his Hips a little bending or doubling under him.

And they infer from thence, that he being a tall raw-boned Man, (after he had been several Days dead) could never be crooked so as to be crammed into a Sedan, (which are very low built, and difficult to be carried with proper Braces, much more as you evidenced, with Cords) then straitened, and his Legs opened, and mounted on Horseback, and then put into the Posture he was found in, and stiffened again.

III.

Now although the Matters aforesaid may be said to be only circumstantial, yet they produce undeniable Arguments against your Evidence, viz. They say, that if a Man, or any other Creature, be strangled, or hanged, and his Body cold, and the Blood settled in the Veins, (as he must needs be, if your Evidence be true) run twenty Swords through such a Body, not one Drop of Blood will come out: But on the contrary, his Body, when found, was full of Blood, insomuch, that (over and above the Cakes or great Gobbets of congealed putrified Blood found afterwards in his Clothes) the Constable when he pulled the Sword out of his Body, it crashed against his Back-bone, and Gobbets of Blood and Water gushed or gubbed out of that Wound in abundance, not only in that very Place where the Sword was pulled out, but in all his Passage to the White house, especially there where his Body was lifted over two high Stumps; and also when he was laid upon the Table the Blood and Water so issued out of that Wound, that it ran from off the Table upon the Floor, and from thence into the Cellar; so that they do aver that that Wound that he received by that Sword, must of Necessity be the Cause of his Death. And they take Notice, that so much of the Sword as was in his Body, was discoloured and blackish; and that Part that came out at his Back was of a dullish Colour, and the Point thereof was rusty; also, that the Clothes, Belt, and Scabbard, were weather-beaten to Rags; his Body stunk extremely; his Eyes, Nostrils, and Corners of his Mouth were Fly-blown; all which must naturally be by his being so long in the Air.

IV.

They say, That when a Man is strangled, or hanged, his Eyes will be extorted, his Face will be swelled and black; whereas his Eyes were shut, his Face was pale, only the left part of his Chin, with his Breast and Bell being next the Earth, were putrified, and looked of a blue and greenish Colour, more especially about the Wound; for that the Blood, when hot, running to the Wound, caused the greater Putrefaction in that Place: whereas, if the Wound had been made after he was dead and cold, the rest of his Body would have putrified as soon, and as much as there.

V.

They say, That the cleanness of his Shoes makes against your Evidence; for his Shoes were cleaned, or rather glazed on the very bottoms of the Soles, occasioned by his walking in the Grass, and Grass-seeds were observed to stick in the Seams of his Shoes: And besides, there was not one speck of Dirt on his Clothes, or Legs, not so much as a Horse-hair sticking thereon; whereas the Constable, and those that went with him, were dirtied and miled up to the very Saddle-skirts, and not easily to be cleaned? and Mr. Prance, you know that a tall dead Man on Horse-back, cannot lift up his Legs to save them from the Dirt.

VI.

As to the looseness of his Neck, and the Rim or green Circle about it, they say they are ridiculous and impertinent Arguments against so many demonstrative ones; especially, when there is not a Nurse, or any Woman of Age, that hath buried any Relations, but will tell you 'tis very common for People to die with Necks as loose as his was. And the Rim about his Neck was so far from being like one made with a Cravat or Handkerchief, that it seems to be occasioned by the great height and stiffness of his Collar, which was fast buttoned about his Neck, and on which his Head rested, and was unbuttoned about ten of the Clock the next Day, before the Coroner or Jury came. But if that Rim, or those Bruises, that your Evidence seems to make the Cause of his Death, were really so; then they alledge, that in such Case, the whole Mass of Blood would have settled there, and his Neck and Bruises would have swelled, and have been perfect black, which was not in his Case.

VII.

They also say, That all these Matters are notorious, and will be proved by divers credible and undeniable Eye and Ear-witnesses: And besides, they observe, that Bedloe's (before the Committee of Lords) and your Evidence, in Relation to this Gentleman's Death, are as different as the East is from the West; for you dog him out of St. Clement's; the other decoys him from Charing-cross: You swear he was strangled with a Handkerchief near the Stables going to the Water-side; Bedloe, that he was smothered with a Pillow in a Room in the great Court in Somerset-house. You say, he took Horse at Sohoe; Bedloe says, he took Coach at Clarendon-house; with many more such like Contradictions: And considering the old Proverb, Forewarn'd, fore-arm'd. A further and fuller Account of the whole Matter expect, I being loath at present to exceed the Bounds of a Letter. I am,

SIR,

Your very loving Friend,

TRUEMAN.

Cambridge,
Feb. 23, 1681.

London, Printed for M. G. at the Sign of Sir E. B. G.'s Head near Fleet-Bridge.

Sir Fr. Winn. Now read the other Letter.

Associat. This is entitled, A second Letter to Mr. Miles Prance, in Reply to the Ghost of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey.

Mr. Prince.

SINCE my last to you of the 23d past, I have seen a prolix, railing, and impertinent Pamphlet, intitled, Sir E. B. G.'s Ghost, and pretended to be an Answer to my said Letter. And conceiving you are better acquainted with Ghosts than myself, I thought fit to direct my Answer to that Ghost to you, you, and thereby shew the Ridiculousness thereof as also vindicate the Truths contained in my said former Letter, and shew you and the World further Circumstances to justify the same; and therefore, according to the Method of my former Letter, I shall now proceed by these Heads.

And first, Not understanding what the Ghost means, by arraigning the Justice of the Nation, unless he would assert that all that are legally, (are likewise justly hanged;) and so consequently, that the Mother and her two Sons were justly hanged in Gloucestershire, for the Murder of the Lady Viscountess Cambden's Steward, though he afterwards appeared alive; and I do not find that ever his Appearance arraigned the Justice of the Nation. And remitting the Consideration of Mr. Brown's, the Surgeons, and Mrs. Curtis's Evidence in relation to the Blood, to it's proper Place; and affirming, (as the Truth is) that Mrs. Celliers, Mrs. Mary Gibbon, the Newgate Priests, James Magrath, and all other Irish Men, or Irish Evidences, or other Papist or Papists, or popishly affected Persons whatsoever; as also those concerned in the late Sham of his having hanged himself, are Strangers to, and had not the least Knowledge or Intimation of the Contents of my said former Letter, nor any Way concerned therein, or in, or with any Part thereof, (as the said Ghost most falsely and maliciously insinuates.) I take notice that the said Ghost seems to admit so much of the Truth of the said Letter, as that it was reported divers Days before the dead Body was found, that he was murdered in Somerfet-house by the Papists, and which Report was made even the next Morning after he was missing, (being Sunday the 13th of October, 1678.) Now I would fain have this Ghost to inform the World who first raised that Report: But as to Mr. Dugdale's Letter of it, I cannot give it any better Answer, than that as his Evidence hath since been disbelieved in Matters of greater Consequence; so he not producing any such Letter, you must give me leave also to suspect him in this. But as to the other Evidences of Mr. Birch and the rest; theirs I believe to be very true; for 'tis no Miracle that a Report so cunningly raised, (without any Ground) might as industriously be promulged to most Parts of the Kingdom, before the respective Days they speak of, especially when the Plot had filled all Mens Heads with Fears and Jealousies, without which it had not been in the Power or Art of the Ghost, or any of his Tribe, to have suggested the least Surmise to contradict his being Felo de se.

Next; Whereas my Letter saith, (and that truly) that the Coroner's Jury were first of Opinion, and accordingly declared, he was Felo de se, and that much Art and Skill was used to procure their Verdict to the contrary. This Ghost, instead of contradicting that Truth, would insinuate, as if that Letter reflected upon the Reputation of the Jurors, when as there was no such Thing implied or intended, they being known to be honest Men, of good Reputation, and free from Fraud or Guile, and consequently the easier to be over-reached by the Cunning of those and that Party, whose Interest it was to deceive them, and who never leave any Stone unturned to attain their Designs. And I cannot but observe how skilful and industrious these People still are, to hide and prevent the Truth of that Man's Death from clearly appearing and shining forth, as without doubt it would, and must do, was not the Matter now (as formerly) puzzled with Legends, and long Stories, nothing to the Purpose. And as to the Coroner's Warrant for burying the Body, and recited in the Ghost, 'tis notorious they are common Tricks, used by Men of his Profession, who (if any Money is like to come) will usually adjourn the Jury, and then make such Warrants (they knowing, that if the Verdict be Felo de se, 'tis then out of their Power to give leave to bury the Corps.) And it would be very material, if the Coroner would declare what he received for that Job, and of whom, and what Evidence he had to induce the Jury to find (as the Inquisition imports) that he was strangled with a Linen Cloth, a Matter of Fact never so much as spoken of, until you came in with your Evidence, which was not in some Weeks after. And I do again aver, that the Body was required by the Jurors to be opened, and was refused; and if the Body was in their and the Coroner's Power, (as the Ghost insinuates) such Power was concealed from, and denied the Jury. And 'tis very probable the Coroner of Westminster's Assistance was refused, for some such indirect Doings, for that there was not the least Difference betwixt the Coroners in relation to their Jurisdictions; and the Westminster Coroner came not voluntarily of himself, but was importuned to be there by Mr. Wigg, and divers others of the chief Inhabitants of St. Martin's Parish: And particularly, the Reverend Dr. Lloyd (who preached the Funeral Sermon) spoke to the Coroner of Westminster before he went, so that it had been proper to have given the Matters mentioned in that Sermon, in Evidence before the Jury. And 'tis observable, the Person mentioned to give the Information to the Doctor of the two Wounds in the Body, and that two Hours before it was found, was never produced; for if he had, and that Sir E. B. G. had been murdered, such Person might have been secured, and thereby the Murderers detected. But I suppose the Ghost will not pretend either that Sermon, or the Pamphlet printed by Nath. Thompson to be legal, or (indeed) any Evidence at all.

And now, Mr. Prance, being come to the several Paragraphs of my Letter, I shall take them in order as they are placed, and give the Ghost particular Answers accordingly.

I.

As to Sir E. B. G.'s Perambulations therein mentioned to be on the Saturday he was first missing, they are true in every Particular, and will be proved by divers able, credible, and undeniable Witnesses. And how vain it is for the Ghost to ask, Why these Witnesses did not come in sooner at the Trial of Green, Berry, and Hill, do you judge, when all the World remembers the great Torrent that carried all before it in favour of the Plot, and the Murder of Sir E. B. G. by the Papists, without which (as T. O. was heard to say) his Plot had failed: And when it is duly considered, that the two Persons that first found the Body, (for no other Cause) suffered much in their Persons and Estates, by a long and chargeable Imprisonment. And all others that then seemed to doubt of the truth of that Man's being murdered by the Papists, were stigmatized with the odious Names of Papists, and Encouragers (if not Promoters) of the Plot: It will appear no wonder, if People were unwilling to discover their Knowledge, or to come voluntarily (without Process) to give their Evidence. And how can it be imagined those three unfortunate Men, being kept close Prisoners, could make enquiry after proper Evidences, or against the common Vogue) draw into Suspicion the Assertion of his being murdered by the Papists?

II.

The Ghost hath so much Ingenuity to grant the second Paragraph of my Letter, as to the Place and Posture he was found in, but would avoid the Inaccessibleness of the Place, pretending a Lane near, when as that Lane is, in effect, unpassable with two on a Horse, and comes not within 500 Yards of the Place, and the Mounds thither very high, and the Constable and his Assistants (though they lived in the Parish, and well knew the Way) were forced to break a Gap in the Mounds, though they were singly horsed. And whereas the Ghost alledges, that you do not depose he was carried to the Place wholly on Horseback, he hath run himself into a worse Dilemma, having made no Provision of Men (either as to Strength or Number) to carry so great and weighty a Corps, in the dead of the Night, over such Mounds and Fences; but let all inquisitive People, desirous of Truth, take the Pains but to go to the Place, (and that without any Burden on their Backs) they will soon be convinced of the Assertion of the Difficulty (if not Impossibility) of the bringing a dead Corps thither, either on Foot or on Horseback. And the Pretensions of the Ghost's, as to the limberness of the Body and Joints, does not answer that Part of my Letter which relates to the Impossibility of his being put into a Sedan. For his Body, when found, was stiff; so that what Limberness happened, or appeared afterwards, hath no relation to the Question. For it's a certain Maxim, a dead limber Body cannot be stiffened. And pray, Mr. Prance, gives us an Account what became of the Sedan, and the Cords? And how you could carry it with Cords; for the meanest Sedan-man in the Town will tell you it is impracticable, or, rather impossible; and you may, if you please, make an Experiment with a Cord.

III.

As to the Body being full of Blood, when found, the Ghost endeavours to disprove that Assertion, by the Evidence of Mr. Brown the Constable, the two Surgeons, and Mrs. Curtis, and produceth the Evidence given at the Trial of Green, Berry, and Hill, and an extrajudicial Affidavit since made by Mr. Brown, and another by Mrs. Curtis, to countenance such his Denial. But, Mr. Prance, (when you see the Ghost) tell him the Matter of the Blood will (and I assure you and all the Word it will) be proved by divers credible and undeniable Evidence; and that I may pacify the Ghost in the mean Time, he is to understand that Mr. Brown, the two Surgeons, and Mrs. Curtis, are no competent (nor can be material) Witnesses in this case. For Mr. Brown, as he did a rash and unaccountable Act (to give it no worse Name) in removing the Body before the Coroner and Jury saw it, (which hath occasioned all this Dispute) so he must not think to help himself by Affidavits, or to justify one ill Act by another: And besides, as he unadvisedly (and contrary to all Law and Practice) removed the Body before the Coroner and Jury came; so he did the same in the dark, (about eight o'Clock at Night) when the Candle was blown out; whereby it was impossible for him to look for any Blood, so as to find it: And neither he or the Surgeons (by any Day-light) saw the Place where the Body was found, or where the Sword was pulled out, until after ten o'Clock the next Day, before which Time much of the Blood was taken up, and the rest trampled out of Sight by the great Concourse of the People which came thither. And as for Mrs. Curtis, she only saw the Body after it was brought home, when as the Body was strip'd at the White-house, and a Blanket borrowed there to wrap the Body in. So the World may judge of the Truth of her Affidavit. But (Mr. Prance) it will be fully proved, that the Body was full of Blood; and that there were Cakes, or Gobbets of dry Blood found in his Clothes, which (with his Body) stunk extremely. And it will be also fully and effectually proved, that his Eyes, Noftrils, and Corners of his Mouth were Fly-blown; though the Ghost (without the least colour of Reason) pretends it to be contrary to Nature and Reason; when as common Experience daily evinces the contrary. And I do observe, that the Ghost omits to take Notice of two material Circumstances in this third Paragraph, (viz.) The first, as to the Sword's crashing against the Backbone. The second, as to that part of the Sword which was in his Body being discoloured. And pray, Mr. Prance, do you (or the Ghost) give the Reasons thereof, and of it's Point being rusty; as also, what was, or could be the Cause of the Spots in the Shirt, Waistcoat, and Drawers, of greenish Colour, mentioned in Mrs. Curtis's Affidavit.

IV.

As to the fourth Paragraph of my Letter, I perceive the Ghost admits that when a Man is strangled or hanged, his Eyes will be extorted; and admits that Sir E. B. Godfrey's Eyes (when found) were shut; only he seems to quarrel with the colour of his Face: And, seeing he admits his Face not black (as all hanged Men's are, when cold) I care not to contend whether his Face was pale or ruddy, or a little swelled, or not, those being very inconsiderable Circumstances. But his denying the Putrefaction charged in that Paragraph, and the Consequences deduced from thence, is not only a great Untruth, but is directly opposite to the Evidence given by Mr. Skillarne, at the Trial before mentioned, Page 37, 38.

V.

As to the fifth Paragraph, the Ghost is so far from answering the Assertions therein, as that he only quibbles at Words; and begging the Question, deduces thence impertinent and ridiculous Arguments. For it will be proved, that his Shoes were glazed at the bottom of the Soles, and that must of Necessity be occasioned by his walking on the Grasse. And (Mr. Prance) if you and the Ghost will walk together, you will easily experience it, and so may any Body else satisfy himself in this Speculation: As to the Grasse-seeds that stuck in the Seams of his Shoes; which is far from being impossible at that time of the Year, (as the Ghost would argue) as that it will be proved by undeniable Evidence. But (Mr. Prance) pray ask the Ghost how he came there without a speck of Dirt; and who pick'd the Horse-hairs off his Clothes; and let him contrive (if he can) a probable or rational way for a dead Man on Horseback to hold up his Legs, or to save them or his Clothes from the Dirt: For though a Man may walk thither very clean, yet 'tis impossible at that time of the Year to ride, either without being dirtied, and some Horse-hairs sticking on his Clothes. But perhaps the next Account from the Ghost will be, that he either rid with Gambadoes, or else a pair of Fishermen's Boots.

VI.

As to the sixth Paragraph, pray, Mr. Prance, tell the Ghost, his railing against Popish Nurses, and Popish Midwives, is no Answer to the Assertions in that Paragraph; for all the Women in the Town are competent Judges thereof, and I hope the Ghost will not say they are all Papists. But pray tell the Ghost he takes no Notice of the Height of the Collar, and it's being fast button'd about his Neck when found; nor the conclusion of that Paragraph; and therefore I suppose he admits it to be true.

VII.

And as to the seventh and last Paragraph, which relates only to the Difference betwixt Your's and Mr. Bedloe's Evidence; I must take Notice, that what you and he swear are very contradictory, and much more than I hinted in my said Letter: And though part of it be as he and you were informed; yet you and he swear the Informations were received from the Persons actually concerned in the Murder, and who had confidence enough in Mr. Bedloe (though he refused 4000*l.* to help to kill him, and 2000*l.* to help to carry him away) as to shew him the dead Body, and so were under no Temptation of mis-informing either him or yourself. And pray, Mr. Prance, will you let the World know what Reward you were to have for that Job; for certainly you deserved as much as Mr. Bedloe, and needed more, you having a Wife and Children, and he a Bachelor?

Thus, Mr. Prance, having gone through each Paragraph of my Letter, and answered the Ghost to your Satisfaction; I should leave off here, fearing I have been too tedious already: But I cannot omit to take further Notice of Mrs. Curtis's Affidavit, in relation to the drops of Wax found upon the Clothes, in which I cannot say but she may swear true; but this I do aver, that if it be so, those Drops were put upon the Clothes long after he was found, and after the Jury had sat on the Body; for there was no such thing then on the Clothes: And I suppose this was some Artifice used by those, who either out of Interest or Design, were delirious to confirm his being murdered at Somerset-house, and to carry on the great Lie, and impertinent Story, then invented, and given out (amongst others) that he was laid under the High-Altar there; and if my Information fail not, there were other such-like Tricks used, which I shall make bold to acquaint those more nearly concerned therein, than yourself; and shall give them to understand, that 'tis no wonder a Man in Sir E. B. G's Circumstances, should kill himself, such Accidents being no News to that Family, wherein Melancholy and Distraction (that often produces such Effects) hath been predominant, and might occasion the Words he spake to Sir Thomas Robinson, as to his being the first Martyr.

And now, Mr. Prance, for a Conclusion, If you were guilty of the Murder of Sir E. B. G. how durst you (as you did) on the Friday after he was found, go to Primrose-Hill to see the Body, and not be afraid it should at your approach have bled afresh? And how came you (after Green, Berry, and Hill, were hanged) to declare, in Answer to a solemn Question, that you knew nothing of the Death of Sir E. B. G.? Pray remember me to your old Friend and Lodger Mr. Renn, my Respects also to your Wife, not forgetting your little Daughter, who gave you so good Advice before you took your Journey into Nottinghamshire, and help'd to take Beddingfield, who was bury'd fourteen Months.

I am,

Your Loving Friend,

TRUEMAN.

Cambridge, March 13, 1681.

London, Printed for N. Thompson. 1682.

Then the Associate read out of a Paper, Intituled, The Loyal Protestant Intelligence, &c. Number 125. Tuesday, March 7, 1681. the following Paragraph.

March 4, 1682. WHEREAS the Mayor of Gotham, in his pretended True Protestant Mercury of Saturday last, seems mightily offended with a Letter, therein mentioned to be sent to Mr. Prance, concerning the Murder of Sir E. B. Godfrey; and endeavours to avoid the Examination of the Truth of the Matter of Fact contained in that Letter, by his old way of railing and stigmatizing all honest Church of England Men with the Name of Papist, or popishly affected: He and his Whiggish Tribe, are hereby desired to take Notice, that there is not in the said Letter the least Item or Circumstance, but what will be by undeniable Evidence made out to be the Truth. So the said Mr. Prance having not as yet vouchsafed an Answer to that Letter, he will speedily receive a further Letter relating to that Murder; wherein the further Truth will not only be fully set forth, and other Circumstances set out; but also it will thereby plainly appear, that the Reputation of that dead Knight is so far from being therein murdered, or the Justice of the Nation from being questioned; as that it will concern Mr. Prance, Mr. M. G. and all Parties on that side, to lay their Heads together more effectually than they did on Wednesday Morning last: For Truth seeks no Corners; and, were it not for a vicious and unchristianized Generation of Vipers, need not require an Advocate. For, though a Lie may prevail for a Time, and eclipse the Truth, yet at length Truth will shine forth, with the Assistance of that God, who is the Author of Truth itself.

Then a Paragraph out of another of the like Intelligences, was read. The Intelligence was Number 127. Saturday, March 11, 1681.

March 9, 1682. WHEREAS Dick Janeway, in this Day's Mercury, promises an Answer to the late Letter to Mr. Prance, &c. This to give him, and all the World Notice, that such an Answer is impatiently expected by the Author of that Letter, who questions not but to prove every Tittle of that Letter, to the Satisfaction of all Mankind: And besides, he is very desirous that the Courantier (according to his last Packet of Advice from Rome) would go on, and use his Interest to procure a Lord Mayor, Court of Aldermen, and Common-Council of London, inspect the Truth of that Letter; whereby it will appear inevitably, that there is not one Papist, or popishly affected Person concerned in that

Vol. III.

Letter, or in the Proof of the Particulars thereof; but the same (with divers other material Circumstances relating to the Murder of Sir E. B. Godfrey, and the Fraud and Blind put upon the World in relation thereto) will be more fully, plainly, and manifestly proved, without giving ill Words, or scurrilous Language, or Reflections to any Persons that really are, or supposed to be therein concerned, in any Circumstance whatsoever.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. You see what they have done; they say, What was testified against the Murderers of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, was a Lie. They go over all the Evidence given against these Fellows, and undertake, by undeniable Witnesses, to prove the contrary.

L. C. J. To the Defendant's Counsel; What say you to it?

Mr. Saunders. I am of Counsel for Pain, my Lord, the Charge against Pain is, That he should own, that he did bring one of these Letters to be printed; I have forgot whether Sir Philip Lloyd said the First or the Second.

L. C. J. The Second he says.

Mr. Saunders. If Pain did own it, I think he did more ingeniously, than when he did make it, or bring it to the Press: But, my Lord, it was a rash, unadvised Act; but not out of any Malice: My Lord, we will prove that Pain was not a Papist, nor any of his Family. My Lord, this cannot justify or excuse them, it will only extenuate their Fault. We will call some Witnesses.

L. C. J. I will hear any thing in this Case, be as large as you will, you shan't say you are flinted; for it is a Business of mighty Concern.

Mr. Gooding. I am of Counsel, my Lord, for Pain: My Lord, we have made Application to Persons to intercede for us; we are sorry for what we have done, and have offered to give any Satisfaction.

L. C. J. To me he said, he would make it out by Five hundred Witnesses: They would make it as plain as the Day.

Mr. Thompson. Since the last Time that was appointed for the Trial, they have printed, That they would prove it by Threescore Witnesses; and were very sorry it did not come on.

Mr. Yalden. I am of Counsel, my Lord, for Thompson, who, I think, was unfortunately drawn into the Business; and that by Pain and Farwell, though they turn all upon him now. It was a great piece of Ingenuity for him to discover his Authors; and it had been very mischievous if they had not been discovered.

L. C. J. What say you to the two Protestant Intelligences?

Mr. Yalden. They are as much the Author of them, as of the other. Thompson says, the Authors would be able to prove it by undeniable Witnesses: Thompson's Intelligence is open to any Man that will put any Thing into it, and he is paid for his Pains.

Mr. Osborne. I am of Counsel for Farwell, my Lord, it was a foolish thing to do as we have done; but that is no Satisfaction: My Client says he hath several Witnesses.

L. C. J. Call them, they shall be heard.

Mr. Farwell. I begin with Hazard, my Lord, he and I went to the Place.

Then Hazard was sworn.

Mr. Hazard. I went along with Mr. Farwell. He was at the Rainbow Coffee-house, it was in the Morning, and he desired me to go to the Place where Sir Edmundbury Godfrey was found.

L. C. J. What Day was it?

Mr. Hazard. I can't tell, I went along with him, and stay'd as long as he did. I saw Sir Edmundbury Godfrey lying upon the Table, his Shoes were clean as if he had been on an Haymow, and his Eyes were closed.

L. C. J. Where was he?

Mr. Hazard. Upon a Table in the White-house. There were Gobbets of Blood (that I will aver, my Lord) by the Ditch-side, and likewise at a Place where there were two or three Things to go over, there was more Blood: I can't tell how he was carried, or how he came there, but I saw him at the White-house.

Mr. Williams. Who went along with you, besides Mr. Farwell?

Mr. Hazard. No Body.

Mr. Williams. Did he bring you the Place where the Body lay?

Mr. Hazard. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. What did Farwell tell you when he desired you to go with him?

Mr. Hazard. Why, Word was brought by one Hancock a Wood-monger, to the Coffee-house, some would not believe him, but sent a Porter to Sir Edmundbury Godfrey's House, and then, when the Porter came, and said the Body was found, and carried to a White-house on Primrose-hill, he spake to me to go and see the Body, and I fetched my Coat and was there quickly.

Mr. Williams. When you came near the Ditch, did Farwell shew you the Place?

Mr. Hazard. He and others that were there.

Mr. Williams. I ask you this, Did any Body shew you the Place where the Body lay, besides Farwell?

Mr. Hazard. No.

Mr. Osborne. Did he go to the Place directly, or about over Ditches?

Mr. Hazard. Truly, I know the way to Primrose-hill as well as he. We went as direct a Way as we could.

L. C. J. The straightest Way to the Place?

Mr. Hazard. Yes: We went over several Ditches.

Sir Fra. Winn. As you were going over several Ditches, there was no Body with you, but Farwell, was there?

Mr. Hazard. No.

Mr. Williams. Did you enquire of any Body as you went along?

Mr. Hazard. I can't remember such a small Circumstance.

Then William Baston was sworn.

Mr. Osborne. What do you know about the Blood that was in the Ditch where Sir Edmundbury Godfrey was found?

Mr. Baston. The Morning after the Murder was discovered, and that Sir Edmundbury Godfrey was found in the Fields, I went with two or three Neighbours, and went to the White-house, and I saw him lie upon the Table in the White-house; and coming back again, they shewed me in a Ditch, where they said he lay, some Blood, I cannot say it was his Blood; and going a little farther, I saw some more whitish Blood, and this all I can swear.

L. C. J. Was it frosty Weather?

Mr. Baston. My Lord, I can't tell whether it was, but I'll assure you the Blood looked to me more like Blood that was laid there, than any thing else.

U u u

One

One Fisher was sworn.

Mr. Farwell. Was you there when Sir Edmundbury Godfrey was stripped?

Mr. Fisher. Yes, I stripped him of his Clothes, pulled off his Hose and Shoes; I was Carpenter to my Lord Wooten, and I was sent for in October, Day or two before, and I came to get the House covered up, and to take Order with my Partner: And as I went, there was a Report that Sir Edmundbury Godfrey was found and laid up in the White-House, and when I came, the Coroner and the Jury were there, and I got into the Room where Sir Edmundbury Godfrey lay upon the Table and took his Hat off; and I saw two Wounds within an Inch and a half one of another, one went no further than his Bone, and the other went through his Back. And, my Lord, immediately there was an Order come down from the Coroner to get him stripp'd. They ask'd me if I would give an Hand, I told them yes. I pull'd off his Shoes, and they were clean, and I pulled off three pair of Stockings, and a pair of Socks, his black Breeches, and his Drawers, and they came off very well; there was a Man in the Company that desired to help, so I got upon the Table, and set him upright with his Breech upon the Table, and his Feet hanging down; we unbutton'd his Coat, and pull'd it off, I came to his Flannel Shirt, and when I came to his Back, there was Blood. But I did not see any Blood till I came to his Back-part. About his Throat there was something that had girt him.

L. C. J. He looked as if he were strangled, did he?

Mr. Fisher. Yes, and his Neck was so weak that you might turn it any where.

L. C. J. To the Defendant Farwell. How do you pretend he murdered himself? That he ran himself through?

Mr. Farwell. I make no Inference, my Lord. But I would only prove that what I write is true; I writ only the first Letter; and there are three Heads I am charged with upon that Letter, and That about the Blood is one. My Lord, I was concerned they should pretend there was no Blood at all; when I came there, there was near my Hat full of Blood.

L. C. J. Can you tell who laid it there?

Mr. Farwell. My Lord, if you will hear two Witnesses more, I will satisfy your Lordship who laid it there. My Lord, this Man was one of them that helped to remove the Body out of the Ditch.

Another Witness, John Rawson, called by Mr. Farwell, and sworn.

Rawson. My Lord, I was there taking him up, we fetched the Constable, and pulled him out of the Ditch, and when we had done, we pulled the Sword out, and removed him to the House, and there was Blood upon some Posts (explaining himself to me, on a couple of Stumps to go over upon) and going into the Door, his Back did sweep a little against the side, and there was some Water and Blood lighted there, and likewise lay upon the Table where he lay, and upon the Floor.

Mr. Farwell. Did the Blood of his Body fall upon the Floor, and go through the Floor into the Cellar?

Mr. Rawson. Some Drops were there, I won't swear whether it were Blood or no, my Lord.

Mr. Farwell. My Lord, I desire the same Question may be put to Mrs. Rawson.

Mrs. Rawson sworn.

Mrs. Rawson. My Lord, if you please, I have not a word to say, but there was Blood and Water ran through the Table, that is all I can say.

Mr. Farwell. My Lord, as to the Difference between Mr. Prance's Evidence, and Mr. Bedloe's, I desire I may prove the Difference between them.

L. C. J. You shall make any Proof you will.

John Stanley called by Mr. Farwell, and sworn.

Mr. Farwell. I call him to prove the Copies of the Journals of the House of Lords.

L. C. J. What would you infer from the Journals?

Mr. Farwell. My Lord, they charge me, that I should say there is a great deal of Difference between the Evidence Mr. Bedloe gave in the House of Lords, and the Evidence that Prance gave at the Trial of Green, Berry, and Hill.

L. C. J. Would you prove any Evidence given by Bedloe out of the Journals?

Mr. Farwell. I can prove he gave that Evidence before the House of Lords.

But Mr. Farwell afterwards went off from that Proof, and called Mr. Hobbs, Mr. White, Mr. Chase the Father, and Mr. Chase the Son, and Mr. Lazineby, who were sworn.

Mr. Farwell. I ask Mr. Chase, what he observ'd about Sir Edmundbury Godfrey?

Mr. Chase the Son. My Lord, on Friday Morning the Day after the Body was found, I went to Primrose-hill, in Company with my Father, to see the Body which they said was found; I came into the Field where the Company in the Field said the Body had been laid; the Body had been then carried into the House, I looked into the Ditch where they said the Body was laid, I could not see Blood in the Ditch, but four or five Yards aside off the Ditch, there seem'd some Blood to me, which the Constable said, followed the Sword when it was pulled out of the Body: I saw the Body in the House, and saw the two Wounds; he had a great Contusion on the left Ear, and his whole Face was very much bruised.

L. C. J. Do you believe there was any Violence offered to him?

Mr. Chase. My Lord, I believe he was strangled, for I don't believe those Injuries that were offered about him, could be after he was dead.

L. C. J. What say you, Mr. Hobbs?

Farwell. I desire he may be asked, Whether he did not propose to Mr. Godfrey, that the Body might be opened, that any Doubt may be laid aside, concerning his being murdered in that Place?

Mr. Hobbs. My Lord.

L. C. J. Had you any doubt, whether he was murdered or not?

Mr. Hobbs. Indeed, my Lord, I thought he was strangled, that was my Opinion, I can't tell whether I was mistaken. I said to Dr. Goodall it would be very well if Mr. Godfrey would send for a Surgeon and a Physician from the Court, and others from the City, to satisfy all Persons.

Mr. Farwell. What Colour was his Face?

Mr. Hobbs. My Lord it was blotted.

L. C. J. Did it look as if Violence had been used to him?

Mr. Hobbs. Ay, my Lord; and the bloody Vessels of his Eyes were so full, as if he had been troubled with sore Eyes.

Mr. Farwell. Did you observe any Fly-blows in his Face?

Mr. Hobbs. No, my Lord, not that I know of.

L. C. J. What say you, Mr. Chase?

Mr. Chase. My Lord, on Friday when I came to see the Body at the White-house, I found a great Contusion; and two Wounds, one yielded towards the right, the other went into the Body. I troubled myself no more at that Time, but the next Day I was desired by Dr. Lloyd, that I would go to his House and see the Body again, and there I found a swelling upon the left Ear, as if a Knot had been tied; there I found him beaten from this place to this, (pointing to the Neck and Stomach) I never saw any Man beaten so in my life. Before this Business was broached, Mr. Farwell did take me aside at Man's Coffee-house, and did tell me what Proof he could make of this Business; I told him, Mr. Farwell, I love you well, don't meddle with the Business, for I know it is impossible any thing can be said against it that hath the Face of Truth. I did so a second time (my Lord) when the Book came out, I found one before I went to New-Market; and the other at New-Market; I was very much troubled to see them. The Night before Easter, the Eve of Easter Day, I met with Mr. Farwell at an House where I had been with a good Friend of his and mine, and Farwell came and asked for me, and he came up to the Room as they called for another Bottle of Wine, I told them it was needless, only since Mr. Farwell is come up, said I, I will drink one Glass with you. And he told me then, that six Months before I had given him good Counsel if he had taken it.

Mr. Farwell. My Lord, I desire Mr. Smith to be called.

L. C. J. Let him. But he came not then.

Mr. Brown is called by Mr. Farwell, and sworn.

Mr. Farwell. I desire Mr. Brown may be asked, whether his Eyes were not Fly-blown?

L. C. J. 'Tis propos'd to you by Mr. Farwell, whether the Eyes of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey were not Fly-blown?

Mr. Brown. No, my Lord, I did not see any Fly-blows.

Mr. Farwell. Whether there were any Specks that one might call Fly-blows?

Mr. Brown. My Lord, I did not see any Specks that one might call Fly-blows.

Mr. Farwell. I desire that I may call two Witnesses to prove that he said so.

L. C. J. What will you get by that, Mr. Farwell, to disparage your Witness?

Mr. Brown. My Lord, Mr. Farwell would have had me say so, but I never said so.

Then Smith came.

L. C. J. What do you ask Smith?

Mr. Farwell. Only about the Blood.

Mr. Brown. My Lord, he came to me another time, and told me I was wrong in my Affidavit, as if he knew what I could make Affidavit of better than myself.

Mr. Farwell. My Lord, I was not the Party that told him so.

Mr. Brown. He was at my House twice at Marybone, at the Sign of the Sun.

L. C. J. Was Pain with him there?

Mr. Brown. My Lord there was a Man with Plate buttons with him there. I don't know Pain.

Mr. Smith sworn.

L. C. J. Well, what say you, Mr. Smith, it is required of you by Mr. Farwell, here to declare whether you took up any of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey's Blood, and brought it home in your Handkerchief?

Mr. Smith. No, my Lord, I know nothing of that.

Mr. Farwell. I desire Rawson and his Wife may be called again.

Rawson appears.

L. C. J. What say you, 'tis required by Mr. Farwell, whether you saw any Fly-blows in Sir Edmundbury Godfrey's Eyes?

Mr. Rawson. There was something like Fly-blows, but I can't say they were Fly-blows.

L. C. J. Did you observe the Flies were busy at that time of the Year?

Mr. Rawson. My Lord, I did not see them.

[Then the People laughed.]

Mr. Farwell. I desire Rawson's Wife may come.

Mr. Rawson. I must fetch her then.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Farwell requires of you to tell us, whether there were any Fly-blows in the Eyes of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey?

Mrs. Rawson. If it please you, my Lord, there were a great many People said there were Fly-blows, I took no great notice of them.

L. C. J. He asks you what you say to his Mouth, and his Nostrils, were there Fly-blows?

Mrs. Rawson. If it please you, my Lord, I can't say nothing to it, I did not much mind it, but they seem'd Fly-blows.

L. C. J. Have you any more Witnesses, Mr. Farwell?

Mr. Farwell. I pray Mr. Lazineby (my Lord) may be asked, whether Men that kill themselves look as Sir Edmundbury Godfrey did?

L. C. J. Mr. Lazineby, Mr. Farwell requires of you, whether you have seen Men that have killed themselves look in such a manner about the Neck and Face?

Mr. Lazineby. My Lord, he appeared to me to be strangled, and the which strangled him was kept about his Neck till he was cold. My Lord, People that are hanged and let down while warm, the Blood drains away the Vessels that are broken, and their Faces are rather less, and their Faces become very pale; but the Thing wherewith he was strangled remained about his Neck, the Blood could not drain away, but it made his Face bloody. The two Mr. Chases, the King's Apothecary, was there when he was there, and the Blood that was some four Yards from the Ditch, I put my Finger in it, and smelt to it, and it smelt like that which comes from a Body after a Fornight's time dead, rather than a Week's; my Lord, it was Blood and Water. The Water will separate from the Blood.

Sir Fra. Winn. But you believe he was strangled?

Mr. Lazineby. Yes; his Neck from this place hither (pointing to the upper part of his Neck, and then to his Stomach and Breast) was so much discoloured and black, and his Mouth was discoloured. Now when ever a Man is bruised whilst he is alive, or whilst he is warm, that Part after the Person is dead, will soonest corrupt.

L. C. J. It stands to Reason that the bruised Part will first corrupt.

Mr. Lazineby.

Mr. Lazinby. My Lord, after Mr. Chafe the Apothecary and I had seen him at the White-House, I went up to drink a Glass of Beer, and Mr. Chafe's Son unbuttoned Sir Edmundbury Godfrey's Collar, which was more than I saw, when I was come in, and unbuttoning the Collar, there were two great Creases both above and below, so they sent for me down for to come and see it, so I put the Collar together, and I perceived the Collar made the Mark like a Strait Ring upon a Finger, the Neck being swelled above the Collar and below, by the strangling with a Cord or Cloth.

Sir Fr. Winn. Do you think he killed himself now, Mr. Farwell?

Mr. Lazinby. There was something in the Cover of his Eyes, like Matter, but I can't say it was Fly-blows. His Eyes were open, my Lord, and his Eyes were Blood-shed, as Mr. Hobb's hath given you an Account, as if he had an extraordinary great Cold, or a Man that had a Blow upon the Temples or Forehead.

Mr. Farwell. Whether were his Eye-lids closed?

Mr. Lazinby. My Lord, his Eyes were open when I saw him.

Mr. Farwell. When I saw him about six a Clock in the Morning, his Eyes were shut.

Mr. Lazinby. I felt upon his Clothes; I admired that his Clothes were not wet, there having been so great a Storm the Afternoon before.

L. C. J. And his Clothes were not wet?

Mr. Lazinby. His Clothes were as dry as mine.

Mr. Farwell. My Lord, they made a great Fire there, and dried his Clothes.

L. C. J. Come, Mr. Farwell, there is no Man so blind as he that won't see. Will you call any more Witnesses?

Mr. Farwell. I will call no more Witnesses; but I suppose they will offer against me that I am a Papist.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. No, no.

L. C. J. Truly your Religion is not worth the enquiring into: 'Tis not much to the purpose what Religion you are of.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Gentlemen, you hear he hath been able to make no Defence for himself; but for the Satisfaction of the World, my Lord hath taken great Pains in hearing him. I shall speak but very few Words, and call a Witness or two of some new Matter; that if it be possible to convince him, we will do it. We need not do it because his own Witnesses tells you of the several Bruises and Wounds he had; that there were no Fly-blows, no putrified Matter. How can a Man that stabs himself, bruise and beat himself in the manner that you have heard? There is never a Witness that hath spoken on his side, but hath spoken against him, to prove himself as malicious a Fellow as can be. What had he to do with this? Sir Edmundbury Godfrey was murdered, was found, inquiry made after it, and prosecution thereupon; now comes this Fellow and permits several Arguments against it, every one of them from Matter of Fact that is false, and yet publishes it to the World, that he will prove it by 500 undeniable Witnesses. We will now call some Witnesses to prove him as wicked a Liar as lives. I say what had he to do with it, only mere Malice; He would have me ask him, what Religion he is of? I shall not ask him, for I don't think he is of any; none of any Religion can be so wicked to own such a Thing. We shall desire the favour to call a Witness or two, to prove something more than hath been proved in this Murder, though there was Evidence enough upon the Trial to prove it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Gentlemen, Mr. Farwell does pretend that he hath only told so many Lies, and hath left the World to make use of it. And hath brought Witnesses to colour this Matter over, in hopes to make you believe the Matter is true, But Mr. Farwell hath forgot himself, his Paper is quite otherwise, for he hath argued upon it, and made Inferences, that therefore Sir Edmundbury Godfrey murdered himself, therefore he is guilty of the highest Malice in the World. He tells a great many Falsities, and from those Falsities hath inferred others. The Paper is full of Arguments.

L. C. J. Gentlemen, I did give him leave to go into what Evidence he would in this Case, not that I thought it material; for if he could have proved never so much, yet his Malice had never been the less to have gone and aspersed the Government. What had he to do to meddle with it? To what purpose should he write Books concerning the Matters of Government, to traduce the Justice of the Nation? The People had suffered as Malefactors, and what had he to do with it? If they had suffered innocently, he ought to have done no such thing as this is.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. My Lord, but one Witness.

L. C. J. Pray call whom you will.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. John Oakley. We will prove that he was way-layed that very Day he was strangled.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We have no need to call any Witnesses now, to over-do a thing. We may leave it here.

Jury-Man. Pray, my Lord, if they have any more Witnesses, let us hear them.

L. C. J. 'Tis nothing to this purpose to call any for the King, nor hath Farwell's Evidence signified any thing to this. He did design, and would (no doubt of it) have been very much satisfied if he could have made but some probable Evidence that Sir Edmundbury Godfrey killed himself, and I was desirous to hear what they would say for themselves. But you hear what a kind of Evidence it is; not a Witness he hath called, but is as much against him as can be, and does evince it plainly, that the Man was killed, and that he was killed by strangling; and so the Evidence was upon the Trial of Green, Berry, and Hill. If he could have raised a doubt about it, yet his Offence had not been mitigated by it, for a private Person is not to arraign the Justice of the Nation; but I was willing to hear what could be said in the Case, whether a doubt could be made in the World, that Sir Edmundbury Godfrey was not murdered. And you see how his very Evidence hath, in all Things, confirmed the Evidence Prance hath given that he was killed, and that he was killed by strangling. I must leave it with you, Gentlemen, they are all three in this Mischief, 'tis a Combination of them to affront the publick Justice of the Nation, and what is the End of it? The End of it is to make People believe there is no Popish Plot; but it is plain he was killed by the Popish Party; as Prance, upon his Evidence against Green, and the others, attested. But if they could have made it out that he killed himself, all of them would have cried out the Popish Plot was a Sham, nothing but a thing raised by the Protestants against the Papists, and all the Plot must have gone for nothing. Gentlemen, I do leave it to you, whether upon this Evidence you do not believe them all to be Guilty of this Design, of traducing the Justice of the Nation.

The Jury thereupon, without going from the Bar, found them all three Guilty of the Information.

And the People gave a great Hum.

Monday, July 3, 1682.

Nathaniel Thompson, William Pain, and John Farwell, were brought up by Rule, to the Bar of the Court of the King's Bench to receive their Judgment: Mr. Thompson, the Counsellor, moved for Judgment, and particularly pray'd they might have some corporal Punishment, acquainting the Court, that since their Trial (though they had as much Time and Liberty given them by the Lord Chief Justice, to call their Witnesses, and examine whom they would, as they could desire) the very next News-Book Thompson put out, he took upon him to give an Account, as though Justice had not been done him; and further said, if there was any doubt of the Fact with Mr. Thompson, or Mr. Farwell, or of Mr. Pain, there were Affidavits to satisfy the World about it.

Then Mr. Spence's Affidavit was read.

Richard Spence, Citizen and Upholder of London, living in Arundel-street in the Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement's-Dane, in the County of Middlesex, having been twice subpoena'd to give Evidence for the King, upon an Information exhibited in the Crown-office against Nathaniel Thompson, William Pain, and John Farwell, and not being called at their Trial to give Evidence in open Court, maketh Oath, That upon Thursday the tenth Day of October, 1678, it being the Thursday before Sir Edmundbury Godfrey was missing from his own House in Hartshorn-lane in the Strand: As he this Deponent was coming from St. James's Market to go to his own House, about seven of the Clock at Night, there were then at the Water-gate of Somerset-house, five or six Men standing together, who laid hold on this Deponent as he was passing by them, and they taking hold of both this Deponent's Arms, dragg'd him down about a Yard within the Water-gate of Somerset-house, it being dark; but one of the said Men, which this Deponent believes to have been Hill, (for that this Deponent knew Hill very well, as also his Master Doctor Godwyn,) cried out and said this is not he, upon which they immediately let this Deponent go.

Jurat. 10 die Julii, 1682. Coram me,

W. Dolbin.

RICHARD SPENCE.

Whereupon the Clerk of the Crown said, that it was one Captain Spence, whom he knew very well, and that he was a tall black Man, and like Sir Edmundbury Godfrey.

Then John Oakley's Affidavit was read.

John Oakley, of the Parish of St. Martin's in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex, Servant to Mr. Robert Breedon of Hartshorn-lane in the said Parish and County, Brewer, maketh Oath, That on Saturday the 12th Day of October, in the Year of our Lord 1678, about eight or nine of the Clock in the Evening, he was in the City of London, in the Company of his Father Robert Oakley of Bissiter in the County of Oxon, Maltster, and his Father came with him so far as Ludgate, where they parted. And this Deponent going homewards to his Master Breedon's House, coming by Somerset-house in the Strand, when he came near the Gate of that House which leads down to the Water-side, commonly called the Water-gate, which was about nine of the Clock at Night, he there saw Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, and pass'd close by him, and put off his Hat to him, and Sir Edmundbury Godfrey put off his Hat again to him; and after that this Deponent had passed beyond Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, he this Deponent turned about and looked upon him again, and Sir Edmundbury Godfrey stood still, and there was a Man or two near Sir Edmund. And this Deponent further faith, that he knew Sir Edmundbury Godfrey very well, for that he saw him almost daily pass by his Master Breedon's House in Hartshorn-lane, going or coming from his own dwelling-House, which was also in Hartshorn-lane. And this Deponent further faith, that about two or three Days after, when the Rumour was that Sir Edmundbury Godfrey was missing, he acquainted his Fellow-Servant Elizabeth Dekin, that he saw Sir Edmundbury Godfrey near the Water-gate at Somerset-house in the Strand, that very Saturday Night that he was reported to have been missing from his House in Hartshorn-lane. And this Deponent further faith, that he told the same Thing to his Uncle Ralph Oakley of the Parish of Little St. Bartholomew, about a Week after the time that Sir Edmundbury Godfrey's Body was found; and also that he told the same Thing to his Father the aforesaid Robert Oakley, and to several others in a short time after.

Jurat 22 die Junii, 1682. Coram me,

JOHN OAKLEY.

Sworn to again the 1st of July, 1682, before Judge Dolbin, Examiner and is left filled up in the Crown-Office.

After which the Court consulted together, and Mr. Justice Jones having first set out the Greatness of their Crime, gave the Judgment of the Court, which was, that Thompson and Farwell should stand upon the Pillory, in the Palace-yard, the last Day of the Term, between the Hours of Ten and One of the Clock, for the space of an Hour, and each of them to pay an Hundred Pound Fine, and to be imprisoned till they had paid it. And as for Pain, he told him, because the Court did not conceive him altogether so guilty, they would inflict no corporal Punishment on him, but did adjudge him to pay an Hundred Pound Fine, and to be imprisoned till he paid it.

Afterwards the Court was moved to explain their Judgment, it being apprehended that it was pronounced upon the Pillory; and the Court did declare that their Intention was (and so the Expression upon the Pillory was to be understood) that they should stand in the Pillory.

Accordingly, Wednesday the 5th of July, 1682, Thompson and Farwell stood in the Pillory in the Old Palace-yard at Westminster, with this Writing over their Heads.

For Libelling the Justice of the Nation, by making the World believe that Sir Edmundbury Godfrey murdered himself.

CXIII. The Trial of Ford Lord Grey of Werk, Robert Charnock, Anne Charnock, David Jones, Frances Jones, and Rebecca Jones, at the King's-Bench, for a Misdemeanour, in debauching the Lady Henrietta Berkeley, Daughter of the Earl of Berkeley, Nov. 23. 1682. Mich. 34 Car. II.

THERE having been an Information preferred against the Right Honourable Ford Lord Grey of Werk, and others, by his Majesty's Attorney-General Sir Robert Sawyer, the first Day of this Michaelmas-Term; and the Lord Grey having then pleaded to it Not Guilty, and the other Defendants, the like afterward, and the King's Attorney joined Issue upon it; Tuesday the 21st of November, was appointed for Trial of this Cause; but it was then adjourned to this Day, because * Sir Francis Pemberton, C. J. Sir Thomas Jones, Sir William Dolben, and Sir Thomas Raymond.

one of the Witnesses for the King was not ready; but this Day it came on about Nine in the Morning at the King's-Bench-Bar, and held till Two in the Afternoon*, all the Judges of the said Court being present.

First, Proclamation was made for Silence, and then for Information, if any Person could give any, concerning the Misdemeanour and Offence whereof the Defendants stood impeached: Then the Defendants being called, and appearing, were bid to look to their Challenges, and the Jury being all Gentlemen of the County of Surrey, were Called, Challenged, and Sworn in this Order.

Cl. of Cr. 1. Sir Marmaduke Gresham, Jur.
2. Sir Edward Bromfield, Jur.
3. Sir Robert Knightley, Jur.
Sir John Thompson.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. We challenge him for the King.

Mr. Holt. Then we challenge toutz per avails, unless the King shew his Cause of Challenge; for by the Statute of 24 Ed. I. the King cannot challenge without Cause.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. But by the Course of Practice, all the Pannel must be called over before the King shew his Cause.

† Mr. Att Gen. Before the Party can have his Challenges allowed, he must shew his Cause; but they must go on with the Pannel in the King's Case, to see if the Jury be full without the Persons challenged, and that is sufficient.

‡ L. C. J. If they challenge any Person for the King, they must shew Cause in due time. For I take the Course to be, that the King cannot challenge without Cause, but he is not bound to shew his Cause presently; it is otherwise in the Case of another Person.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. That hath always been the regular Course.

Mr. Holt. Our Challenging toutz per avails, doth set all the rest aside till Cause be shewn.

L. C. J. The Statute is, the King shall shew Cause: but when it comes in a Case between the King and another Party, that they both challenge, the other Party shall shew Cause first.

Mr. Holt. My Lord, we challenge toutz per avails.

L. C. J. You must shew a Reason for it then.

Mr. Att. Gen. The King shall not be drawn to shew his Cause, if there be enough in the Pannel besides.

Mr. Williams. That is to say then, that the King may choose whom he pleaseth against the Statute.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. No, Sir, we desire none but honest and indifferent Gentlemen to try this Cause.

L. C. J. The old Challenge is taken away, by that Statute, from the King, quia non sunt boni pro Domino Rege, and therefore if the King challenge any, he must shew Cause, but it must be in his Time, and not before you shew your's. Let him stand by a-while.

Cl. of Cr. John Sandys, Esq;

Mr. Serj. Jeff. We challenge him for the King.

Mr. Holt. For what Cause, Sir?

Mr. Serj. Jeff. We will tell you in good time.

Cl. of Cr. 4. Sigismund Stiddulph, Jur.

Mr. Weston. My Lord, I am no Freeholder.

Mr. Holt. He challenges himself.

Surrey ff. SIR Robert Sawyer, Kt. His Majesty's Attorney General, has exhibited an Information in this Court, against the Right Honourable Ford Lord Grey of Werk; Robert Charnock, late of the Parish of St. Botolph, Aldgate, London, Gent. Anne Charnock, Wife of the said Robert Charnock; David Jones, of the Parish of St. Martin in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex, Milliner; Frances Jones, Wife of the said David; and Rebecca Jones, of the same, Widow; for that they (with divers other Evil-disposed Persons, to the said Attorney General yet unknown) the 20th Day of August, in the 34th Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord the King that now is, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, at the Parish of Epsom in the County of Surrey, falsely, unlawfully, unjustly, and wickedly, by unlawful and impure Ways and Means, conspiring, contriving, practising, and intending the final Ruin and Destruction of the Lady Henrietta Berkeley, then a Virgin unmarried, within the Age of 18 Years, and one of the Daughters of the Right Honourable George Earl of Berkeley

(the said Lady Henrietta Berkeley, then and there being under the Custody, Government and Education of the aforesaid Right Honourable George Earl of Berkeley her Father) they the said Ford Lord Grey, Robert Charnock, Anne Charnock, David Jones, Frances Jones, and Rebecca Jones, and divers other Persons unknown, then and there falsely, unlawfully, and devilishly, to fulfil, perfect, and bring to effect, their most wicked, impious, and devilish Intentions aforesaid; the said Lady Henrietta Berkeley, to desert the aforesaid Right Honourable George Earl of Berkeley, Father of the aforesaid Lady Henrietta; and to commit Whoredom, Fornication, and Adultery, and in Whoredom, Fornication, and Adultery, to live with the aforesaid Ford Lord Grey (the said Ford Lord Grey, then and long before, and yet, being the Husband of the Lady Mary, another Daughter of the said Right Honourable George Earl of Berkeley, and Sister of the said Lady Henrietta) against all Laws, as well Divine as Human, impiously, wickedly, impurely, and scandalously, to live and cohabit, did tempt, invite, and solicit, and every of them, then and there, did tempt, invite, and solicit. And that the aforesaid Ford Lord Grey, Robert Charnock, Anne Charnock, David Jones, Frances Jones, and Rebecca Jones, and other Persons unknown, with Force and Arms, &c. unlawfully, unjustly, and without the Leave, and against the Will of the aforesaid Right Honourable George Earl of Berkeley, in prosecution of their most wicked Conspiracies aforesaid; the said Lady Henrietta Berkeley, then and there, about the Hour of Twelve in the Night-Time, of the said 20th Day of August, in the Year aforesaid, at the aforesaid Parish of Epsom in the County of Surrey aforesaid, out of the Dwelling-House of the said Right Honourable George Earl of Berkeley there situate and being, and out of the Custody and Government of the said Earl of Berkeley, did take, carry, and lead away. And the said Lady Henrietta Berkeley, from the said 20th Day of August in the Year aforesaid, and continually afterwards, unto the Day of the Exhibition of this Information, at the Parish of Epsom aforesaid, in the County of Surrey aforesaid, and in divers secret Places there with the said Ford Lord Grey, unlawfully, wickedly, and scandalously to live, cohabit, and remain, did procure and cause, and every of them did procure and cause, to the great Displeasure of Almighty God, to the Ruin and Destruction of the said Lady Henrietta Berkeley, to the Grief and Sorrow of all her Friends, and to the evil and most pernicious Example of all others in the like Case offending; and against the Peace of our said Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity. To this Information, the Defendant, the Lord Grey, and the other Defendants, have severally pleaded Not Guilty, and for their Trial, have put themselves upon the Country, and the King's Attorney likewise, which Country you are: Your Charge is to enquire whether the Defendants, or any of them, are Guilty of the Offence and Misdemeanour whereof they stand Impeached by this Information, or not Guilty: If you find them, or any of them, Guilty, you are to say so; if you find them, or any of them, not Guilty, you are to say so, and no more, and hear your Evidence.

[For which Evidence to come in, Proclamation was made, and then Edward Smith, Esq; a Benchet of the Middle-Temple, opened the Information.]

Mr. Smith. May it please your Lordship, and, Gentlemen, you of the Jury; Mr. Attorney General hath exhibited an Information in this Court, against Ford Lord Grey of Werk, Robert Charnock, Anne Charnock, David Jones, Frances Jones, and Rebecca Jones, wherein is set forth, That the Defendants, the 20th of August, in the 34th Year of this King, at Epsom, in your County, did conspire the Ruin and utter Destruction of the Lady Henrietta Berkeley, Daughter of the Right Honourable George Earl of Berkeley; and for the bringing about this Conspiracy, they have seduced her to desert her Father's House, tho' she be under the Age of 18 Years, and under the Custody and Government of her Father; and solicited her to commit Whoredom and Adultery with my Lord Grey, who was before married to the Lady Mary, another Daughter of the Earl of Berkeley, and Sister to the Lady Henrietta. That after they had thus inveigled her, they did upon the same 20th Day of August, carry her away out of the House, without the Earl's Licence, and against his Will, to the intent she might live an ungodly and dishonourable Life with my Lord Grey. And after they had thus carried her away, they obscured her in secret Places, and shifted about from Place to Place, and continued this Course of Life ever since. And this the Information says, is to the Displeasure of Almighty God, the utter Ruin of the young Lady, the Grief and Affliction of her Friends, the evil Example of all others in the like Case offending, and against the King's Peace, his Crown and Dignity. To this all these Defendants have pleaded Not Guilty; if we shall prove them, or any of them, Guilty of any of the Matters charged in this Information, you shall do well to find them Guilty.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, the Course of Evidence will be this; That this unhappy Gentleman my Lord Grey, for four Years together, prosecuted an Amour with this young Lady; when it came to be detected (some little Accident discovering somewhat of it) my Lady Berkeley did find there was some Business of an extraordinary nature between them, and thereupon forbid my Lord Grey her House. My Lord Grey he made many Pretences to my Lady, that he might come to her House to give them a Visit before he departed, being to go into the Country; try; and he takes that opportunity to settle this Matter of conveying the young Lady away in a very short time. And early on the Sunday Morning, he was, by Charnock, another of the Defendants, conveyed from the House of my Lord Berkeley at Epsom, and brought here to London. We shall in the Course of our Evidence shew how she was shifted from Place to Place, and the several Pursuits that were made in search after her. We shall discover to you, how she was hurried from one Lodging to another, for fear of Discovery. Nay, we shall prove, that my Lord Grey has owned and confessed that he had her, that she was in his Care and Custody, and that he owned the several Instances of his Amours. But I had rather the Evidence should speak it, than I open so much as the Nature of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we shall call our Witnesses, who will very fully make out this Evidence that Mr. Attorney has opened to you. That my Lord Grey did a long time make Love to this young Lady, tho' he were before married to her Sister. This Treaty was discover'd by my Lady Berkeley last Summer, upon an Accident of surprizing the young Lady in writing a Letter to my Lord, and thereupon my Lady Berkeley chargeth my Lord Grey with these Applications to her Daughter, that did so much misbecome him. My Lord Grey was then so sensible of his Fault, that he seem'd very full of Penitence, and assured my Lady, he would never do the like again, and earnestly desired her by all means to conceal it from my Lord Berkeley; for if this should once come to be known to him, he and the young Lady would not only be ruined, but it would occasion an irreparable Breach between their two Families, and of all Friendship between my Lord Berkeley and him. And therefore he desired my Lady Berkeley (who had justly forbid him her House for this great Crime) left the World should inquire into the Causes of it, and so it should come to be known, that his Banishment from her House might not be so soon or sudden: But he begged of her Ladyship, that he might be permitted to make one Visit more, and with all the Protestations in the World assured her, it was not with any purpose of Dishonour, that he desired to come and see her, but that his Departure might be by degrees, and so the less taken notice of. When my Lady had thus charged my Lord with his unworthy Carriage to her Family, and he had seem'd thus penitent for it, she charges her Daughter also, with her giving any allowance to these undecent Practices of my Lord's; she thereupon falls down on her Knees to her Mother, to ask her Pardon for her great Offence, and, with Tears in her Eyes, confess'd she had done very much amiss, and did humbly hope she might obtain her Forgiveness for it, being young, and seduc'd by my Lord Grey, and promised she would see him no more, nor have any thing more to do with him. My Lord Grey he is permitted to come once more to the House, upon those Assurances and Promises of his, that it should be with no dishonourable Purposes in the World. It was, it seems, in his way to his own House at Suffex, but coming thither, he takes an occasion to continue there, and stay a little too long for a Visit; whereupon my Lady Berkeley began to suspect it was not a transient Visit he came to make at her House, but that he had some ill Design in prosecution of the same Fault that he had been so long guilty of. And that Suspicion of her's was but too well grounded, as appear'd afterwards. Our Witnesses will tell you, that my Lord Grey, just before his Departure, was observed to be very solicitous and earnest with his Man Charnock (whom we shall prove by undeniable Evidence to be the Man that convey'd her away) giving him some Directions with great earnestness, what to do was indeed not heard, but the Event will plainly shew it. For my Lord Grey himself, he went on his Journey into Suffex, and lay at Guilford that Night she was carried away, and the next Morning she was missing. Thereupon my Lady sends after my Lord Grey, justly suspecting him to be guilty of this Violence and Outrage offered to her Daughter and Family, and they overtook him at Guilford, before he was got any further on his Journey, and there acquaint him the Lady was carried away, and that my Lady suspected (as well she might) he knew whither. Then immediately he makes haste up to Town, and writes my Lady a Letter, that truly he would take Care to restore Peace to the Family, that by his Folly had been so much disturbed: And there were some hopes of retrieving the Matter, that this Scandal upon so noble a Family might not be made publick; for certainly an Offence of this Nature was not fit should be so, nor indeed was ever heard of in any Christian Society; I am sure I never read of any such Cause in the Courts of Law. And it was impossible any way to have prevented the Scandal, but that which my Lady took, to pass over all, by desiring to have her Child restored again to her, before such time as it was gone so far, as there is too great Reason to suspect it now is. But after that, my Lord Grey was so far from performing what he had so solemnly promised, and making the Matter up, that he stood upon Terms; he was Master of the Lady, and would dispose of her as he thought fit: Third Persons and Places must be appointed where she must be disposed of; with Capitulations, that she should see her as often as he thought fit; which was (if possible) a worse indignity than all that he had done before.

We shall prove to your Lordship, that he did, a long time before this Violence was offered, make Applications to this young Lady, and that must as any Man will believe) be upon no good Account. We shall shew all the base Transactions in carrying away the Lady, after that Confidence which my Lady reposed in his Protestations to do nothing dishonourably, so to admit him to make a Visit; which certainly was the greatest Breach of the very Laws of human Society, against all the Laws of Hospitality, besides the great Transgression of the Laws of God and Men. Yet even then, he seduced the Lady away. For we shall plainly prove she was carried away by his Coach-man that once was, afterwards his Gentleman, and how she was from time to time conveyed to and fro.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. This Story is indeed too melancholy to be often repeated; the Evidence had better tell it: Only this one Aggravation I would take Notice of, which will be made out in the Proof to you of this Matter charged; and that is this, That my Lord Grey, after such time as it was known she was in his Power, gave one Reason for his not delivering her up, (and I am sorry to see his Lordship should think it a Reason) he had required how far the Law would extend in such a Case, and that he knew, it could give a Precedent for it (which the Witness will tell you of) at the Law could not reach him; and that as long as he had run such a course for obtaining that which was his greatest Pleasure, he would not part with her, but upon such Terms, that he might have access to her when he pleased. To such a height of Confidence was this Gentleman arrived, in this barbarous and infamous Wickedness. But, as I said, it is a story too black to be aggravated by any thing but by itself; we shall therefore call our Witnesses, and prove our Fact.

[About this time the Lady Henrietta came into the Court, and was set by the Table at the Judges Feet.]

Earl of Berkeley. My Lord, my Daughter is here in Court, I desire she may be restored to me.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Pray, my Lord Berkeley, give us leave to go on; it will be time enough to move that anon. Swear my Lady Berkeley—(which was done, but she seem'd not able to speak.)—

Mr. Sol. Gen. I perceive my Lady is much moved at the sight of her Daughter. Swear my Lady Arabella her Daughter. (Which was done.)

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Pray, Madam, will you acquaint my Lords the Judges, and Jury, what you know concerning the Letter you discovered, and how you came by that Discovery?

Lady Arabella. My Mother coming to my Lady Harriett's Chamber, and seeing there a Pen wet with Ink, examined her where she had been writing. She, in a great Confusion, told her she had been writing her Accompts. My Mother not being satisfied with her Answer, commanded me to search the Room. Her Maid being then in the Room, I thought it not so much for her Honour to do it then. I followed my Mother down to Prayers; after Prayers were done, my Mother commanded my Lady Harriett to give me the Keys of her Closet and her Cabinet. When she gave me the Key, she put into my Hands a Letter, which was written to my Lord Grey, which was to this Effect.—My Sister Bell did not suspect our being together last Night, for she did not hear the Noise. I Pray come again Sunday or Monday, if the last I shall be very impatient.—I suppose my Lady Harriett gave my Lord Grey Intelligence that this was found out; for my Lord Grey sent his Servant to me, to acquaint me he desired to speak with me. When he came in first, she (I mean my Lady Harriett) fell down upon the Ground like a dead Creature. My Lord Grey took her up, and afterwards told me, said he, You see how far it is gone between us; and he declared to me, he had no Love, no Consideration for any Thing upon Earth but for her; I mean dear Lady Hen, said he to me; for I say it just as he said it. And after this, he told me, he would be revenged of all the Family, if they did expose her. I told him it would do us no injury, and I did not value what he did say; for my own particular, I defied him and the Devil, and would never keep Counsel in this Affair. And afterwards, when he told me he had no Love, no Consideration for any Thing upon Earth but her, I told my Lady Harriett, I am very much troubled and amazed, that you can sit by and hear my Lord Grey say and declare, he has no Love for any but you, no Consideration for any one upon Earth but you, when it so much concerns my Sister; for my part, it stabs me to the Heart, to hear him make this Declaration against my poor Sister Grey—[Here she stooped a while.]

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Pray go on, Madam.

Lady Arabella. After this she said nothing; I told her, I suspected my Woman had a Hand in it, and therefore I would turn her away. This Woman, when my Lady Harriett ran away, being charged with it, swore she had never carried any Letters between them; but after my Mother's coming to London, both the Porter at St. John's, and one Thomas Plomer accused her that she had sent Letters to Charnock, who was my Lord Grey's Coachman, now his Gentleman. I told her then, I did much wonder, she being my Servant, should convey Letters between them without my knowing: She then confess'd it to me, but withal she told me, How could I think there was any ill between a Brother-in-Law and a Sister? And upon this she confess'd to me she had sent Letters to Charnock, tho' before she had sworn it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Madam, have you any thing farther to testify in this Cause? Have you any Matters that you remember more?

Lady Arabella. There is more of it to the same Effect; but all of it is only to this Effect.

L. C. J. My Lady Arabella, pray let me ask you, have you any more to say to this Matter?—Lady Arabella. It is all to this purpose.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Then if you please, Madam, to turn now your Face this way towards the Gentlemen of the Jury, who have not heard what you said, and give them the same Relation that you gave to the Court; and pray be pleased to lean over the Seat, and expose yourself a little, and let them have the same Story you told before, and pray tell the Time when it was.

[Then she turned her Face towards the Bar.]

Lady Arabella. It was in July, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Pray, Madam, tell what happen'd then.

Lady Arabella. In July last, some time then, my Mother came into my Lady Harriett's Chamber, and seeing a Pen wet with Ink, she examined her who she had been writing to. She, in great Confusion told her, she had been writing her Accompts, but my Mother was not satisfied with that Answer.—The sight of my Lord Grey doth put me quite out of Countenance and Patience.—[Here she stooped again.]

[My Lord Grey then was by the Clerks under the Bar, and stood looking very steadfastly upon her.]

L. C. J. Pray, my Lord Grey, sit down (which he did.) It is not a very extraordinary Thing, for a Witness, in such a Cause, to be dashed out of Countenance.

E. of Berkeley. He would not, if he were not a very impudent barbarous Man, look so confidently and impudently upon her.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. My Lord, I would be very loth to deal otherwise than becomes me, with a Person of your Quality, but indeed this is not so handsome, and we must desire you to sit down. Pray go on, Madam.

Lady Arabella. After this, my Mother commanded me to search my Lady Harriett's Room; Her Maid being then in the Room, I thought it not so much for her Honour to do it then. I followed my Mother down to Prayers. After Prayers were done, my Mother commanded my Lady Harriett to give me the Keys of her Cabinet and of her Closet, and when she gave me the Keys, she put a Note into my Hand, which was to my Lord Grey; and that was to this Effect.—My Sister Bell did not suspect our being together last Night, for she did not hear any Noise: Pray come again Sunday or Monday, if the last I shall be very impatient.—I suppose my Lady Harriett gave my Lord Grey intelligence of this, for he sent a Servant to tell me he desired to speak with me. Upon his first coming in, my Lady Harriett fell upon the Ground like a dead Creature, and my Lord Grey took her up, and said, Now you see how far it is gone between us: I love nothing upon Earth but her; I mean dear Lady Hen, said he to me; and if you do expose her, I will be revenged upon you and all the Family, for I have no Consideration for any Thing but her. After that I told him, We defied him, he could do us no Injury; and for my own particular, I defied him, and the Devil and all his Works, and would not have any thing to do with such a Correspondence. After this, I told my Lady Harriett, I was much troubled and amazed, that she should sit by and hear my Lord Grey, her Brother-in-Law, say he had no Consideration for any Thing on Earth but her. For my part, said I, Madam, it stabs me to the Heart, to hear this said against my poor Sister Grey. I told her, I suspected my Woman had an Hand in this Affair, and therefore I would put her away. Afterwards, the same Day my Lady Harriett ran away, this Woman came to me; and I then told her, You have ruined her, and asked her, Why would you send Letters between my Lord Grey and my Lady Harriett? She denied it, and swore she never did it, but when we came to London, the Porter of St. John's came and accused her of conveying Letters to Charnock, my Lord Grey's Gentleman, formerly his Coach-man. I then asked her again about it; she then acknowledged to me she had done it, But, Madam, said she, how could I think there could be any Prejudice or Ill between a Brother-in-Law and a Sister-in-Law? Said I, Were not you my Servant? Why did you not tell me? Besides, you know we have all reason to hate Charnock for a great many Things. This is all I have to say that is material, all else is to the same Effect.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Now this Matter being thus discovered to the Countess of Berkeley, this unfortunate Young Lady's Mother; she sent for my Lord Grey, and we shall tell you what happen'd to be discourd between them two, and between the Lady and her Mother, and what Promises of Amendment he made. My Lady Berkeley, pray will you tell what you know.

[She seem'd unable to do it.]

—She is very much discompos'd, the sight of her Daughter doth put her out of Order.

Lady Arabella. I have something more to say, that is, I told my Lady Harriett, after my Lord Grey had made his declaration of his Love to my Sister, to me, That if ever he had the Impudence to name her Name to me, I would immediately go to my Father, and tell him all.

[Then the Countess lean'd forward, with her Hood much over her Face.]

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, my Lady Berkeley, compose yourself, and speak as loud as you can.

Lady Berkeley. When I first discovered this unhappy Business, how my Son-in-Law, my Lord Grey, was in Love with his Sister, I sent to speak with him, and I told him he had done barbarously and basely, and falsely with me, in having an Intrigue with his Sister-in-Law. That I looked upon him, next my own Son, as one that was engaged to stand up for the Honour of my Family; and instead of that, he had endeavour'd the Ruin of my Daughter, and had done worse than if he had murdered her, to hold an Intrigue with her of Criminal Love. He said, he did confess he had been false, and base, and unworthy to me, but he desired me to consider (and then he shed a great many Tears) what it was that made him guilty, and that made him do it. I bid him speak. He said he was ashamed to tell me, but I might easily guess. I then said, What? Are you indeed in Love with your Sister-in-Law? He fell a weeping and said, he was unfortunate; But if I made this Business Publick, and let it to take Air (he did not say this to threaten me, he would not have me to mistake him) but if I told my Lord her Father, and his Wife of it, it might make him desperate, and it might put such Thoughts into his Wife's Head, that might be an occasion of parting them; and that he being desperate, he did not know what he might do, he might neither consider Family, nor Relation. I told him this would make him very black in Story, tho' it were her Ruin. He said that was true, but he could not help it; he was miserable, and if I knew how miserable, I would pity him: He had the Confidence to tell me that. And then he desired, tho' he said I had no reason to hear him, or take any Counsel he gave me (and all this with a great many Tears) as if he were my Son Dursley, that I would keep his Secret. For my Lord, if he heard it, would be in a great Passion, and possibly, he might not be able to contain himself, but let it break out into the World. He may call me Rogue and Rascal perhaps in his Passion, said he, and I should be sorry for it, but that would be all I could do, and what the evil Consequence might be, he knew not, and therefore it were best to conceal it. And after many words to pacify me, tho' nothing indeed, could be sufficient for the Injury he had done me; he gave it me as his Advice, that I would let my Daughter Harriett go abroad into Publick Places with myself, and promised, if I did, he would always avoid them. For a young Lady to sit always at Home, he said it would not easily get her out of such a Thing as this. And upon this he said again, he was to go out of Town with the D. of M. in a few Days, and being he had been frequently in the Family before, it would be looked upon as a very strange thing, that he went away, and did not appear there to take his Leave. He promised me, that if for the World's sake, and for his Wife's sake (that no one might take notice of it) I would let him come there, and Sup before he went into the Country, he would not offer any thing, by way of Letter or otherwise, that might give me any Offence. Upon which I did let him come, and he came in at Nine o'Clock at Night, and said, I might very well look ill upon him, as my Daughter also did (his Sister Bell) for none else in all the Family knew any thing of this Matter but she and I. After Supper he went away, and the next Night he sent his Page (I think it was) with a Letter to me, he gave it to my Woman, and she brought it to me; where he says that he would not go out of Town.-----If your Lordship please I will give you the Letter.-----But he said, he fear'd my Apprehensions of him would continue.-----There is the Letter.

L. C. J. Show it my Lord Grey, let us see if he owns or denies it.

Lord Grey. Yes, pray do, I deny nothing that I have done.

Mr. Just. Dalben. Bepleased, Madam, to put it into the Court.

Mr. Att. Gen. It is only about his keeping away.

L. C. J. Shew it my Lord Grey.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. With Submission, my Lord, it is fully proved without that.

L. C. J. Then let the Clerk read it, Brother.

Cl. of Crown. There is no Direction, that I see, upon it. It is subscribed Grey.

[Reads.]

"MADAM,

"AFTER I had waited on your Ladyship last Night, Sir Thomas Armstrong came from the D. of M. to acquaint me that he could not possibly go into Sussex; so that Journey is at an End. But your Ladyship's Apprehensions of me I fear will continue: therefore I send this to assure you, that my short stay in Town shall no way disturb your Ladyship; if I can contribute to your Quiet, by avoiding all places where I may possibly see the Lady. I hope your Ladyship will remember the promise you made to divert her, and pardon me for minding you of it, since 'tis to no other End that I do so, but that she may not suffer upon my Account: I am sure, if she doth not in your Opinion, she never shall any other way. I wish your Ladyship all the Ease that you can desire, and more quiet Thoughts than ever I expect to have. I am with great Devotion,

Your Ladyship's

most Humble, and

Obedient Servant,

GREY."

Mr. Att. Gen. Madam, will you please to go on with your Evidence. Lady Arabella. I have one thing more to say: After this, three or four Days after this ugly Business was found out, I told my Lady Harriett, she was to go to my Sister Dursley's. She was, in a great Anger and Passion about it, which made my Mother so exasperated against her, that I was a great while before I got my Mother to go near her again.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. My Lady Berkeley, will you please to go on?

Lady Berkeley. When I came to my Daughter, (my wretched unkind Daughter, I have been so kind a Mother to her, and would have died rather, upon the Oath I have taken, than have done this, if there had been any other way to reclaim her, and would have done any thing to have hid her Faults, and died ten times over, rather than this Dishonour should have come upon my Family.) This Child of mine, when I came up to her, fell into a great many Tears, and begged my Pardon for what she had done, and said, she would never continue any Conversation with her Brother-in-Law any more, if I would forgive her; and she said all the things that would make a tender Mother believe her. I told her, I did not think it was safe for her to continue at my House, for fear the World should discover it, by my Lord Grey's not coming to our House as he used to do; and therefore I would send her to my Son's Wife, her Sister Dursley, for my Lord Grey did seldom or never visit there, and the World would not take notice of it. And I thought it better and safer for her to be there with her Sister, than at home with me. Upon which this ungracious Child wept so bitterly, and begg'd so heartily of me that I would not send her away to her Sister's, and told me, it would not be safe for her to be out of the House from me. She told me, she would obey me in any thing; and said, she would now confess to me, tho' she had denied it before, that she had writ my Lord Grey word that they were discovered, which was the Reason he did not come to me upon the first Letter that I sent to him to come and speak with me. And she said so many tender Things, that I believed her penitent, and forgave her, and had Compassion upon her, and told her (tho' she had not deserved so much from me) she might be quiet (seeing her so much concerned) I would not tell her Sister Dursley her Faults, nor send her thither, till I had spoken with her again. Upon which, she, as I thought, continuing penitent, I kissed her in the Bed when she was sick, and hoped that all this ugly Business was over, and I should have no more Affliction with her, especially if my Lord removed his Family to Durdants, which he did. When we came there, she came into my Chamber one Sunday Morning before I was awake, and threw her self upon her Knees, and kissed my Hand, and cried out, Oh, Madam! I have offended you, I have done ill, I will be a good Child, and will never do so again; I will break off all Correspondence with him, I will do what you please, any thing that you do desire. Then, said I, I hope you will be happy, and I forgive you. Oh; do not tell my Father, (she said) let not him know my Faults. No, said I, I will not tell him; but if you will make a Friend of me, I desire you will have no Correspondence with your Brother-in-Law; and tho' you have done all this to offend me, I will treat you as a Sister, more than as a Daughter, if you will but use this wicked Brother-in-Law as he deserves. I tell you that Youth, and Virtue, and Honour is too much to sacrifice for a base Brother-in-Law. When she had done this, she came another Day into my Closet and there wept very much, and cry'd out, Oh, Madam! 'tis he, he is the Villain that has undone me, that has ruined me. Why? said I, What has he done? Oh! said she, he hath seduced me to this. Oh! said I, fear nothing, you have done nothing, I hope, that is ill, but only hearkening to his Love. Then I told her about the Neck and kissed her, and endeavoured to comfort her. Oh, Madam! said she, I have not deserved this kindness from you; but 'tis he, he is the Villain that hath undone me: But I will do any thing that you will command me to do; if ever he send me any Letter, I will bring it you unopened; but pray do not tell my Father of my Faults. I promised her I would not, so she would but break off all Correspondence with him.

[Here she swooned, and soon after recovered and went on.]

—Then my Lord Grey's Wife, my Daughter Grey, coming down to Durdants, he was to go to his own House at Up-Park in Sussex, and he was down to his Wife to come up to London.-----It is possible I may omit some particular Things that were done just at such or such a Time, but I can remember in general. My Lord Grey, when I spoke to him of it, told me, he would obey me in any Thing; if I would banish him from my own Son, that the World would take notice of it, that therefore it would be better for me to take her abroad with me, he would avoid all places where she came, but he thought it best for her not to be kept too long at Home, nor he absolutely forbid the House, but he would by degrees come feldomer, once in six Weeks or two Months. But to go on with Daughter Grey's coming down to Durdants; he writing to his Wife to come up to London, that he might speak to her before he went to his own House at Up-Park; my Daughter Grey desired he might come thither, and it being in his way to Suffex, I writ him word, that believing he was not able to go to Up-Park in one Day from London, he might call at my Lord's House at Durdants, and dine there by the way, as calling in, intending to lie at Guilford, for it is just the half-way to Guilford. He, instead of coming to Dinner, came in at Nine o'Clock at Night (I am sure it was so much) for it was so dark, we could hardly see the colour of his Horses, from my Lord's great Gate, to the Place where we were in the House: And coming at that time of Night, I thought if I turned him out of the House; my Lord would wonder at it, and so would all the Family. Therefore I was forced, as I then thought, in point of Discretion, to let him lie there that Night, which he did; and he told me, Madam, I had not come here, but upon your Ladyship's Letter, nothing else should have brought me: Because I was to give him leave to come, knowing the Faults he had committed against the Honour of our Family. Upon which I told him, my Lord, I hope you have so much Honour and Generosity in you, after the Promises you have made me, and the Confidence and Indulgence I have shewn you, that you will give my Daughter no Letters, and I will look to her otherwise, that you shall have no Conversation with her. He desired me to walk up with him into the Gallery, and there he told me he had brought no Letters, and would have had me looked in his Pocket. I told him that would be to no purpose, for his Man Charnock (whom we knew he did not prefer from being his Coach-man to be his Gentleman, but for some extraordinary Service he did him, or he thought he would do him) might have Letters enough, and we be never the wiser: But I trusted to his Honour and his Christianity: and I told him, that his going on in any such way would be her utter Ruin. He told me he would not stay there any longer than the next Day; nay, he would be gone immediately if I pleased, and he sent his Coach to London, and had nothing but Horses left. But his Wife desiring her Husband to stay, I had a very hard Task to go through, being earnestly press'd, both by her and my own Lord's importunities for his stay. But my Lord Grey, whilst he was there, did entertain me with his Passion, he had the Confidence to do it, and he wished himself the veriest Rake-hell in the World, so he had never seen her Face since he was married. And, said he, Madam, you will always think me a Villain, and never have a good Opinion of me, I shall be always unfortunate, both in myself, and your bad Opinion of me. Seeing this, I thought it was time to do something more; and I told him that Night he should stay no longer, he should be gone; and his Wife seemed to be much concerned, and would fain have him stay. For by this time she began to find out that there was some Disorder in her Mother and the Family, tho' she knew not what it was; and she sent her Sister Lucy to beg he might stay: I told her I would not suffer it: However, she proposed an expedient how her Sister Harriett should take Physick, and keep her Chamber while he was there. That I was in a sort compelled to do, and I told him, upon their importunity for his stay, that his Sister Harriett should be seen no more by him, but take Physick while he stayed there: To which he replied, Madam, indeed it is rude for me to say it to you, but I must say it, give me my Choice, either to be drown'd or hanged. Upon this I was extremely disturbed, and the next Morning, I told him, I was not satisfied he should stay in England; he had ordered his Wife to go into France, and she was to go within a Month after, I would have him go with her. He told me, he had Law-Suits, and he could not: I told him, he had told me before, they were of no great consequence, and therefore they could not hinder him; and I pressed him very much, and I fell into a great Passion at last; and told him, if he would not go, I would tell her Father, and he should take care of her, to send her where she should be safe enough from him. For I was sensible the World would take notice if he came not thither; and, said I, I am not able to bear you should. Upon this, he promised me with all the Oaths, Imprecations, and promises in the World, that he would go and follow his Wife into France at Christmas, and stay there eight Months; and by that time, I did hope, this unfortunate miserable Business might be over: For I had a great kindness for my Child, and would have done any thing to save her, if it had been in my Power, or would yet do any thing: I would give my life that the World did not know so much of it as now it must this Day. The World knows I had always the greatest Kindness and Tenderness for her, which was such, that some that are now here have said since, that it was my Indulgence to her, and not making it known to my Lord, that encouraged this last ill Business. And thereupon my Lord Grey was ordered by me to go away, and he promised me so to do, which was upon Saturday. I then went up to her Chamber and saw her very melancholy, and did what I could to comfort her. Said I, I warrant you, by the Grace of God, do but do what you ought, and I will bring you off this Business; be chearful, and be not so much cast down (for I thought she was troubled at my Carriage to her) and tho' I said some severe Things to you at Dinner (as I did talk of her going away, and being sent abroad) be not troubled, for I only meant it out of Kindness to you; for all I design, is only to seek an Occasion of getting him away; and therefore, as long as it stays, I will seem to whisper with you, and look frowningly upon you, but if he hath any Tenderness for you, he may see I am angry with you, and do the more to leave you at quiet: But take no notice of it, for I now write to you, tho' I frowned before him, be not affrighted. In the Afternoon I told her the same thing again. But then, said she, he will shew my Letters to him, and that will ruin my Reputation for ever, and that troubles me; but yet it need not, for I never writ to any Man but him, and he doth shew them, he will expose himself for a base unworthy Man, and can but deny it, and he can never prove it. This is true, said I, and he will say so, and therefore be not afraid of him, but trust to the Friendship of your Mother, and do as you ought to do, and I am confident we will bring you clear off from this ugly Business. And then, said she, oh, Madam! my Sister, my Sister Grey, will she forgive me this? I told her, her Sister Grey was good-natur'd and religious, and I made no doubt she would forgive her the Folly of her Youth, and if she would take yet, she was young, and her Sister would impute it to that, and, said I,

I am sure she will forgive you; and I told her, I would do all that lay in my Power to assist her; and I bid her be chearful and trust in God and in my Friendship. She was to blame, indeed, she acknowledged; but she was young, and he was cunning, and had made it his Business to delude and intice her. I told her it was true, and therefore now she must consider with herself, what was to be done to bring her off; which I doubted not, if she would do but as she ought; she promised me so to do; and yet that very Night when I was in my Sleep she ran away. —

[Here she swooned again]

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What time went my Lord Grey away, Madam, that Day?

Lady Berkeley. He went away about four a Clock in the Afternoon.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. And the ensuing Night the Lady was gone?

Lady Berkeley. Yes, that Night she went away too.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. My Lord, I crave leave to acquaint you with one Circumstance that has been already hinted, that is about Charnock, a Person that is taken notice of by both the Ladies that have given Evidence; and one of the Defendants in this Information. This Man, as they seem to intimate, for some extraordinary Service he had done my Lord Grey, or was designed for the doing of, was removed from the Degree of his Coachman; to the waiting upon him in his Chamber. He at this time came with my Lord Grey to Durdants, a House of my Lord Berkeley's near Epsom, and which was in the way to my Lord Grey's House in Suffex, that is called Up-Park. And they being there, notwithstanding all those Protections and Promises made by my Lord Grey to his Lady Mother, as you have heard, to meddle no more in this Matter, yet we shall give you an account; how that the Day before the Night that the young Lady went away, my Lord Grey was very importunately busy with his Man Charnock; what Discourses they had, or what Directions he gave him perhaps may not be known; but his earnestness in talking with him, and his impatience and restlessness we shall prove; and then give you a very full Proof that Charnock was the Person that took her away; and then let the Jury and the Court make the Conclusion.

Mr. Att. Gen. It may be, my Lord, we shall not be able to prove the actual Taking-away from thence, but only by undeniable Circumstantial Proof. Such Impieties use not to be acted openly.

L. C. J. Truly, as far as I can see, here has been more done barefaced, than one would think should be done in any Christian Nation.

[Then a Clergyman that stood by was sworn, but his Name not told.]

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Pray, Sir, will you tell my Lord and the Jury what you know.

Mr. — My Lord, I was at Durdants, my Lord Berkeley's House near Epsom in Surrey, at the time of this ill Accident, and some time after. And upon the Saturday in the Afternoon I (immediately after Dinner was over at my Lord's own Table) walked into the great pav'd Hall; and stood in the Door that looked towards the Downs; and my Lord Grey came into the Hall alone, and walked three or four times very thoughtfully, and then leaned upon the Window, and often looked upon the Ground, and within a little while he steps into the Steward's Hall, where the Gentlemen were at Dinner, and he calls to Charnock, who came out to him. He takes him out of the Hall to the Foot of the Stair-case, and there they talked together a great while, and after some time my Lord Grey went away, and Charnock did so too, I think to his Dinner again, I cannot tell any thing to the contrary. The Reflection I made upon this Passage then was, That my Lord Grey was very punctual in giving his Servant Orders, which I thought he was to carry to London with him, but I suspected nothing of this Matter, nor any thing else that was ill then. Mr. Charnock then passing by me, said I, Mr. Charnock, How long will it be before you are going? He made me no Answer, not one word. Thereupon I went into the Library, and between that and Mr. Charnock's Chamber there was but a very thin Wall, and presently after I came into the Library, my Lord Grey sent one (as the Messenger said) for Mr. Charnock, and he went down to him, as I suppose, and in a little time came up again. And after that, I do believe, I did hear another Messenger come from him to Mr. Charnock again, I will not swear that, for I am not sure of it; because, being at that time busy in reading, I made no Reflection upon it till afterwards. But about a fortnight or three Weeks after, there comes a Gentleman to see me at my Lodgings, and falling into Discourse what News there was; our first Discourse was of the Lady's being missing; he said, it would be sad he feared when she was heard of. Why, said I, what do you mean? I suppose Mr. Forrester and she are together, for that was the talk of the Town. No, said he, it is no such thing; but if you will make it a Secret, unless it comes to be made a publick Business, I will tell you; I do not doubt my Lord Grey carried her away with a design to debauch her. That is hard to be believed, said I; I cannot believe it. Why, said he, you were there when he went away? Yes, said I, but how long was that before the Lady was missing? Said he, it was that Afternoon. Then came into my Mind his earnest Discourse with Charnock, and that which I observed about it, and sending so often for him; and I told that Person of it. Why Charnock, said he, was the Man that took her away.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Who was it that said so to you, Sir? Name him.

Mr. — Mr. Rogers, my Lord Berkeley's Chaplain.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. If your Lordship please to observe the particular Times, when my Lord Grey was so earnest in giving Charnock Directions, that was on the Saturday at Noon, and it was that Night the young Lady went away.

L. C. J. When came my Lord Grey to my Lord Berkeley's?

Mr. Att. Gen. The Tuesday or Wednesday before, I think; some Days it was.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. But upon the Saturday Night it was she went away; this unfortunate Lady that we have produced, her Mother, and so the Lady her Sister, spoke both of their Fears of Charnock. Now we shall prove, that this Charnock was on the Sunday Morning, at eight of the Clock in the Morning, here in London, with a young Lady, in what Habit that young Lady was, our Witnesses will tell you; and others will give you an Account count what Habit this Lady went away in, and then it will be seen who she was. Call Eleanor Hilton.

Mr. Att. Gen. But if you please, Mr. Serjeant, I think it will be proper first to examine my Lady Lucy, who upon the missing this young Lady, followed my Lord Grey to Guilford, and overtaking him, acquainted him with it, and immediately he took Post and came to London. Pray swear my Lady Lucy.

[Which was done, she being in a Box by the Bar.]

L. C. J. Well, what do you ask that Lady?

Mr. Serj. Jeff. We produce her, my Lord, to hear what pass'd between her and my Lord Grey at Guilford. Pray, Madam, will your Ladyship acquaint the Court what occasion you had to go to Guilford, and what you said to my Lord Grey, and what he said to you, and did afterwards.

Lady Lucy. My Lord, as soon as my Lady Harriett was missing, supposing my Lord Grey could best give an Account where she was, I went after him to Guilford, and he was gone half an hour from thence before I came thither, but by sending Post after him, he was overtaken, and came back to me. I told him my Lady Harriett was gone away, and I conjured him by all that was sacred and dear to him, to prevent so great a Misfortune as this would be to the Family. He then pretended he did not know any thing of her going, but promised me, that if he could find her out, he would endeavour to persuade her to return Home, but he would not force her. After several Discourses, which it is impossible for me to remember particularly (saying that he had done nothing that was illegal, and if she did not any thing, we could do nothing against him;) he at last parted from me, to go to London, as I suppose. I begged of him that I might be permitted to go along with him, that I might speak to her, supposing I might retrieve this Business, and recover her, before it were gone too far, but he denied it me, and went away. After that I met him, a Day or two after, I think, I cannot tell justly the Time, and he pretended, he did not know where she was, but only he knew where to send to her; and he would do all he could to get her to return Home. He was sensible of what a Misfortune this was to the Family. But soon after he went to Up-Park again, as he said, to shew us that he was not with her. And he afterwards writ me a Letter, wherein he says, he could not persuade her to come Home, but the Conclusion of it was, "He would do all he could to restore Peace and Quiet to the Family, which by his Follies were so miserably disturbed."

Lady Arabella. My Lord, I desire to speak one thing; About six Weeks ago I met my Lord Grey at my Lord Chief Justice's Chamber, and he told me, he had my Lady Harriett Berkeley in his Power, or in his Protection, or to that effect, he said.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray tell, Madam, when that was?

Lady Arabella. About six Weeks ago, I cannot justly say the Day.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. But if your Ladyship pleases, my Lady Lucy, it will very much satisfy the Jury, if you would shew the Letter you speak of.

Mr. Williams. Ay, pray Madam, shew the Letter.

Lady Lucy. It was a Letter before that which he writ to me at Durdants.

L. C. J. When was that Letter you speak of written?

Lady Lucy. About a Week after my Sister was gone, I cannot exactly remember the Day.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Madam, can you produce that Letter?

Lady Lucy. No, I have it not here.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Then swear Eleanor Hilton. [Which was done.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Is your Name Eleanor Hilton?

Mrs. Hilton. Yes, it is, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray speak out, that my Lord and the Jury may hear you. Do you remember the 20th of August last? Did Charnock come to your House with a young Lady? Did you see her, and what time of the Day was it?

Mrs. Hilton. I cannot tell what Day of the Month it was.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What Day of the Week was it?

Hilton. It was on a Sunday.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Month was it in?—Hilton. I cannot tell, truly.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. About what time of the Year was it?

Hilton. About eight or nine Weeks ago, or something more.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Well, what did you see then?

Hilton. There was a young Lady that came to our House, she came of herself, Charnock he was not with her; he came before indeed, and asked me if I had any Room to spare, and I shewed him what we had; he went away, and I saw no more of him; afterwards, as I said, she came; but who she was, or what she was, I cannot tell.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Can you describe her Clothes?

Hilton. She had a coloured Night-gown on of several Colours; I cannot say what particular Stuff it was: And she had a Petticoat on White and Red.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did you see her Face?—Hilton. I cannot say I did fully.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you think you should know her again, if you should see her?—Hilton. I cannot say that.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. (to the Lady Harriett) Pray Madam, will you stand up a little, and turn up your Hood. [Which she did.]

Hilton. Truly I cannot say that is the Lady.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you believe it was she?—Hilton. I cannot say it, truly.

Mr. Att. Gen. Have you seen her Picture since, and is this Lady like that Picture?

—Mr. Attorney, she says, she cannot say it is the same Lady.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Mistress, to what Purpose was she brought to your House?—Hilton. They did not tell me that.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was it not to lodge there?

Hilton. She staid there but a while, and went away again.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whither did she go then?

Hilton. To one Patten's in Wild-street.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. You went with her, Mistress, did not you?

Hilton. Yes, I did so.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Pray, was there any Letter or Note brought to your House for Charnock?

Hilton. Yes, I brought it to Mrs. Charnock.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did you hear any Reason given for her Removal from your House?

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray did she go to Bed at your House?

Hilton. She did lie down.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What Time of the Day was it?

Hilton. About nine or ten o'clock in the Morning?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, did she say she had been at Church, or what did she say?

Hilton. She said somewhat to that Purpose, she said she was weary.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What Company came to the Lady, while she was at your House?

Hilton. No Body but Mrs. Charnock.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did you see Mrs. Charnock in her Company?—Hilton. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. You saw her come in to her?—Hilton. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did she behave herself to her, as to a Lady of Quality?

Hilton. I cannot tell that, truly.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Why, how did she carry it to her?

Hilton. Whether she was in Bed or no, I cannot tell; but when she came in, the young Lady said, How do you, Mrs. Charnock? She said, Your Servant, Madam, or to that purpose, I cannot exactly tell.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. You brought the Note to Mrs. Charnock, you say?

Hilton. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did she stay at Mrs. Patten's after that?

Hilton. I suppose she might.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray recollect yourself a little, and tell us what Colour was her Manteau?

Hilton. Truly, it was all manner of Colours, Red, and Green, and Blue, and I cannot tell what Colours.

Mr. Att. Gen. What coloured Petticoat?—Hilton. Red and White.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long after this, did you hear my Lord Berkley's Daughter was missing?—Hilton. A While after.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long? Was it that Week?

Hilton. I cannot tell, it was not long after.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was it the same Lady that came to your House in those Clothes, that went to Patten's at Night?

L. C. J. Why, she says she went with her, do not examine her the same things over again.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were you examined before Sir William Turner, about this Matter?—Hilton. Yes, I was.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was it the Day of the Month you then said it was?

Hilton. I suppose it might; I cannot tell the Day of the Month.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was it the Month?—Hilton. It is like it was.

L. C. J. She has fix'd it now to be about eight or nine Weeks ago.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did she give any Reason why she was removed?

Hilton. None at all.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Now, my Lord, we will bring it down to be this very Lady. My Lady Arabella, Pray, Madam, what Clothes did my Lady Harriett go away in?

Lady Arabella. My Lady Harriett had such Clothes as they speak of, I cannot say she went away in her Night-gown, but here is one that can: But there was a striped Night-gown of many Colours, Green, and Blue, and Red.

L. C. J. She does remember she had such a one, but she cannot say she went away in it.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Was there not a chequer'd Petticoat Red and White?

Lady Arabella. She had such a Petticoat, but I cannot say she went away in it; she had also a White quilted Petticoat.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Then swear Mrs. Doney (Which was done.) My Lord, we call this Gentlewoman to give an Account what Habit she went away in; for she lay with her always.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you lie with my Lady Harriett Berkeley, when she stole away?

Mrs. Doney. Yes, indeed, Sir, I did lie in the Chamber that Night, and she went away with her Morning Clothes, which lay ready for her there, against she did rise in the Morning. It was a striped Night-gown of many Colours, and a Petticoat of White and Red, and a quilted Petticoat.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was she so habited, that came to the House, Mrs. Hilton?

L. C. J. She has said so already.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Now you are pleased to observe, that besides the Circumstances of the Clothes, there is mention made of a Note; Mrs. Hilton says she received a Letter and gave it to Mrs. Charnock; and that soon after they went to Patten's House in Wild-street. We shall call the People of that House, to give an Account what Gentlewoman it was that came to that House. Pray swear Mr. Patten. [Which was done.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, will you tell my Lord and the Jury, whether Mrs. Charnock and his Wife came to your House, and with whom, and about what time?

Mr. Patten. My Lord, about the latter end of July, or the beginning of August, Mr. Charnock and his Wife came to my House when we were just removed, to take some Lodgings for a Person of Quality; but they did not say who. Said I then, We have no Lodgings now ready; but they said, We shall not want them yet, till towards the middle of September. Says my Wife, I suppose by that time our House will be ready; and if you any Kindness you may have it. About the 20th of August being Sunday, Mrs. Hilton brings a Gentlewoman with Mrs. Charnock to my House; and when they were come, they called me up, and seeing them all three there, I told Mrs. Charnock, We have no Lodgings fit for a Body of any Quality, at present. Says Mrs. Hilton, Let's see the Chamber and runs up Stairs into a Room where there was a Bed, but no Hangings; when they came in, they locked themselves into the Room. Mrs. Charnock's Wife's Daughter being in the House, I desired her to send for my Wife, who was then abroad; which she did. They desired my Wife's Daughter to lodge with the Gentlewoman that they brought thither, and they were making the Bed ready. I sent them up word, That I desired they would walk into the Dining-room for the present; they sent me word again, They did not desire to do that, for they were afraid the Lady would be seen into the Street, and withal, if any Body came to enquire

Mrs. Charnock, or Mrs. Hilton, I should say there was no Body there. Presently after, I think (or before, I cannot justly say which) a Letter was carried up Stairs to them, upon which they came down Stairs, and away they went up the Street, and when they were gone a little Way on Foot, Mrs. Charnock desired them to turn back again, for she hoped to get a Coach, and she did so, and went away.

Mr. Att. Gen. So they did not lodge there?

Mr. Patten. No, they did not.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did they say any Thing of Care that was to be taken, how they passed by my Lady Northumberland's?

Mr. Patten. My Lord, I do not well remember that: But the next Day Mrs. Hilton comes again to our House, and she runs up Stairs into the same Room, and sits her down upon the Bed-side. Said I to her, Mrs. Hilton, What Gentlewoman was that that was here last Night? Says she, I cannot tell, but I believe she is some Person of Quality, for Mrs. Charnock brought her to our House at seven o'Clock in the Morning. But whoever she is, she is much troubled, we could get her to eat nothing, but her Eyes were very red with crying, and we came away to your House at Night; because hearing some Noise of People in the Street, she was afraid some of her Father's Servants were come, but it was only some People that were gathered about to observe the Blazing Star. So we whip'd out of the Door, and so came to your House, for we had never a Back-door out of our own.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray give an Account what Habit the Gentlewoman was in that came to your House.

Mr. Patten. She had a striped flowered Gown, very much sullied, it was flung about her, just as if she had newly come out of Bed. I did see her Face, but when I had just looked upon her, she clapped her Hood together over it presently.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Do you think you should know her again if you see her?

Mr. Patten. I believe I might.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Pray, Madam, stand up again, and lift up your Hood.

[Which she did.]

Mr. Patten. This is the Lady. I saw her Face twice, once as I told you, and then when she went away, I dropped down, and peeped up, and looked her in the Face again, though she hid it as much as she could.

Mr. Att. Gen. Thus we have proved it upon Charnock and his Wife.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. He gives an Account of the 20th of August, which was the Day after she went from her Father's House. Pray call Mrs. Fletcher.

Mr. Att. Gen. We shall now prove, that they went from thence to one Jones's; that my Lord Grey came there to take Lodgings, and after she was brought, came thither again, and though he changed his Hair into a Perriwig, yet he was known for all his Disguise.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, you see that it is proved upon three of the Defendants, my Lord Grey, and Charnock, and his Wife; now we shall prove it upon the other two, the Jones's. Swear Mary Fletcher.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Sweetheart, pray tell the Court where you lived, and when my Lord Grey came to your House; tell the Time as near as you can, and the Day of the Week.

Fletcher. Sir, he came to David Jones's on the Tuesday after my Lady Berkeley was missing.

L. C. J. Where does David Jones live?

Fletcher. At Charing-Cross just over-against the Statue. And living there, my Lord Grey came there in a Hackney-Coach, first on the Monday without a Perriwig, or any Thing of that, and desired Mr. Jones to come to the Coach-side, which he did, and after a little Discourse with Mr. Jones, they came both into the House, and went up two Pair of Stairs to look upon Lodgings. After that, I had order to make ready the Room for some Lodgers who were expected to come that Night, but did not till the next Day. About Tuesday at Nine of the Clock, my Lord Grey comes again in a Coach to the Door, and threw his Cloak over his Face, he was then without his Perriwig too, and desired to speak with Mr. Jones: I and my Fellow-Servant standing at the Door, he desired to speak with my Master. I went to him and told him, and he came up, and after he had been at the Coach-side, he bid us go down, and keep down in the Kitchen, and would not let us come up any more. And afterwards my Fellow-Servant and I were bid to go to Bed, and my Mistress shut up the Shop-windows herself.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Well, go on, what happened after that?

Maid. Afterwards there was the Warming-pan, and the Candle-stick, and other Things were carried up into the Chamber by my Mistress's Sister. Says my Fellow-Servant, There is some great Stranger sure, come to lodge here, that we must not know of. Ay, said I, this is some great intrigue or other. After a while came in some Company that stayed all Night. I know not who they were, nor how they came.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Well, what was done the next Morning?

Maid. I was never admitted into the Room while they were there, but through the opening of the Door I did see one Lady in Bed, but I cannot say who she was, nor what she was.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know her if you see her again? Look at that Lady; is that she?

Maid. No, I do not know her; I cannot say that is she: My Mistress, and my Mistress's Sister stood both before me, when I just peeped into the Room, and when she perceived that, I did see her pull the Clothes over her Face.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long did she stay there?

Maid. Nine Nights.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Do you know my Lord Grey well?

Maid. Yes, I have seen him often.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. And did you know him notwithstanding his Disguise?

Maid. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What did Mrs. Jones say to you about my Lord Grey?

Maid. She said to us, What Fools were we, to say this was my Lord Grey, it was a Country Gentleman.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. But you are sure it was my Lord Grey?

Maid. Yes, I am sure it was he.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did any Body else lodge at your House at that Time?

Maid. Yes, Captain Fitz-Gerrard.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Discourse had you with him about this Lady?

Mr. Williams. You, Woman, Did my Lord Grey stay there?

Maid. I cannot say he did.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, if the Question you ask, be to introduce another Part of your Evidence from Captain Fitz-Gerrard himself, it may be something; otherwise that can be no Evidence against the Defendants, what Discourse was with another.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. It is so, my Lord; and therefore we ask you, Sweetheart, what pass between you and the Captain?

Maid. Captain Fitz-Gerrard, the Monday-Morning Seven-night, after my Lord Grey first came, called me to his Bed-side, and asked me if I knew what Lady that was that lodged in the House, and what Clothes she wore, and whether she were young or old, and whether she were married or no? I told him I could not tell any Thing, for I could never see her.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Do you know what Linen she brought with her? Did you wash any for her?—Maid. Yes, one Shift.

Mr. Att. Gen. What kind of Shift was it?

Maid. I said, It could be no Person of Quality by her Shift.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Why so?

Maid. Because the Body was finer than the Sleeves, and Ladies use to make the Sleeves finer than the Body.

[At which there was some Laughing]

Mr. Williams. A very petty Evidence!

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Pray call Mrs. Doney again, because you shall not make so slight a Business of the Shift as you pretend, for such Actions as these must be detected by Circumstances.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mrs. Doney, Pray did you shew this Woman another of my Lady Harriett Berkeley's Shifts?

Mrs. Doney. Yes, I did.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Was it the Fellow of that she went away with?

Mrs. Doney. Yes, it was.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Woman, do you believe, upon your Oath, that was the Fellow of the Shift you saw?

Maid. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Was the Body of that you saw from this Gentlewoman, finer than the Sleeves?

Maid. Yes, it was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then pray swear Captain Fitz-Gerrard.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir, will you tell the Court and the Jury, what Passages fell out at your Lodgings?

Capt. Fitz-Gerrard. My Lord, It was my Fortune six Months ago, to take a Lodging at Mr. Jones's, and while I kept my Lodgings there, I had Occasion sometimes to go to Windsor, to wait upon his Majesty; and one Night coming Home to my Lodging, my Servant that waits upon me in my Chamber, told me, there was a Lodger lately come to the House, who lay in the upper Rooms. I asked who it was; he told me, the Maid of the House told him it was a Mistress of my Lord Grey's. I asked how long she had been there; he said, it was but two or three Days since she came. I never thought of this for four or five Days after, nor thought myself obliged to take Notice of the Discourse of the Servant in the House; but being in Covent-Garden in Company, there was some Discourse about my Lady Harriett Berkeley's being gone from her Father's, as it was the Talk of the Town. I came Home about nine o'clock at Night, and having no Servant just then ready to wait upon me, Mr. Jones himself came very kindly to put me to Bed. I had some Fancy upon the Discourse of the Town, this might be my Lady Harriett. Upon which, I said to Mr. Jones, You cannot but hear of the Report of my Lady Berkeley's being run away from her Father, and I know you have a Dependence upon my Lord Grey, and I have a Suspicion you conceal her in your House. If you do, said I, you do a very dishonest Thing, a very ill Thing, and occasion a great deal of trouble and disquiet to a noble Family. And possibly my Lord and my Lady may not know she is alive; therefore, I desire you as a Friend, to make a Discovery of the Lady, that they may know where she is. He seemed very angry upon my saying of this, and told me, As long as I lodged in his House quietly, I need not trouble myself who lodged there besides. Upon that I thought more earnestly upon this Thing; and I told him again, I am resolved to go into the Room, and know who this Lady is that lies here, for now I suppose there is something more in it. Says he again, No Body shall offer such a Rudeness in my House. Said I, I assure you I will do it. He grew very angry, but I went from him to my Sword and was going up. Says he, Pray, Mr. Fitz-Gerrard do not offer such a Thing as this is; you would take it unkindly yourself to have your House searched at this Time of Night. Well, said I, upon Condition that I may see her Tomorrow Morning before she goes away, who she is, I will make no Disturbance in your House To-night. Upon that he left the Room, promising me, I should Tomorrow Morning see who the Lady was. I went out early the next Morning upon some necessary Business, and coming Home between eleven and twelve o'Clock, said I to him, Now is a very civil Time to see this Lady, who she is, for it is not fit you should receive any Person into your House, in such Circumstances, when there is such Cause of a Suspicion. Says he, She is now gone out of the House. And this is all that I can say in this Matter, I never saw the Lady there then, nor did I ever see her in my Life, but once or twice at Epsom.

L. C. J. Did they lock the Door upon you, Captain?

Capt. Fitz-Gerrard. No, they did not.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. And you know nothing more?

Capt. Fitz-Gerrard. I neither knew when she came, nor who she was.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then swear Mr. Smith here, who married one of my Lord Berkeley's Daughters.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Smith. Before my Lord Berkeley made this Affair publick, he used all Means possible to know where my Lady Harriett was; and after it was known to him what Concern my Lord Grey had in it, there were all Means used to make it up: and discoursing with my Lady Berkeley about it, it was proposed that she should be married, but that would cost a great deal of Money; that my Lord did not stick at, nor my Lady, if any Divine of the Church of England did think it proper to treat with any Parson about it, after such a secret Correspondence between her and my Lord Grey. And my Lord said, If my Lord Grey would not prosecute her with any more Visits, he would give a Sum of Money to marry her. Said I, Then, my

Y y y

Lord,

Lord, will you give me Leave to wait upon my Lord Grey in it? He answered, Yes. So I went to him, and offered him that my Lord Berkeley would give 6000*l.* with her, if he would place her in a third Hand, where it might be convenient to treat with any one about it. He talked with me as if he knew where she was, but would not discover it. Says he, You must always suppose, I will take your Proposal in this Manner, if she is in my Power, which it may be she is, it may be not. Said I, My Lord, you make that (if) only as a Subterfuge, for to be sure, you know where she is. Says he, She is beyond Seas, and if you will give me Leave to visit her sometimes, I will promise she shall come again; but that depends upon Time and Tide, it cannot be so very soon. Said I my Lord, you may as well send Horles to Dover, and so over to Calais, for I suppose she may not be far. He said it would be a Work of Time, but he would write to her. I desired he would write that Night. For, said I, my Lord, if this Business be taken in Time, she may yet be saved, if you will contribute what you can to it. He promised me to write that Night to her, but it would be some Time before she got to Town. Then discoursing further with my Lord about it. Says he, if I should bring her to Town, I will not use any Force or Persuasion to her, if she be obstinately bent not to come Home again; betray her to be sure I will not. I am sure, my Lord, said I, that your Persuasions would do very much with her, and a great deal of Good may come of it, if the Matter be speeded. But, says he, if I should bring her to Town, then my Lord Berkeley would disturb her with my Lord Chief Justice's Warrant. Said I, If you will bring her to Town, I will ask my Lord and my Lady, how long Time they will allow for the making up of this Treaty; and in the mean Time, she shall be free from any Disturbance. Says my Lady Berkeley, when I spoke to her of it, Though my Lord Grey has been so barbarous to a Family, that has been so kind to him; yet, if I give him my Word, I will keep it inviolably to him; and I do promise him, if he will bring her to any Place where my Daughter Lucy may visit her, I will engage there shall be no Search made after her. And if he can contribute to carry her into a Place where she may be safe, and not visit her himself, he shall have 2000*l.* to do it. This Message of my Lord's being barbarous, Madam, said I, is not fit for me to carry to my Lord Grey, but you will promise not to take her away, if he bring her to Town, but from the Moment you know where she is, she shall be safe. Thereupon my Lord Grey promised to write to her; whether he did or not, I cannot tell. Afterwards he said he had writ, but she would not come.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Expence has my Lord been at in looking after her?

Mr. Smith. A great Expence; I cannot tell particularly.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. My Lord, we have but one Witness more, and that is a Gentleman, who, by Order from my Lord and Lady Berkeley, kept my Lord Grey Company, and he will tell your Lordship what my Lord Grey confessed to him, what a Passion he had for the Lady, and what Methods he used to get rid of it, but could not. Swear Mr. Craven.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Will you tell my Lord and the Jury, whether you were sent by my Lord Berkeley, to be with my Lord Grey at Up-Park, and what passed there between you?

Mr. Craven. My Lord, the Wednesday after my Lady Harriett Berkeley went away, my Lady Berkeley told me, my Lord Grey had proffered he would go down into the Country for six Months, to shew that he had no Designs upon her; and therefore, if she would propose some Friend of her's to go along with him to keep him Company, he would be very well satisfied with it; and then my Lady Berkeley told me, she would fix upon no Body but me, if he would take me with him. Then I met my Lord Grey on Wednesday Morning at Sir Thomas Armstrong's, and afterwards, went down to his House to him. When I came there, he met me on Horseback, and came up civilly and kindly to me. I thought fit to give him a Caution, having received such Orders from my Lady. My Lord, said I, I am sorry I am forced to come upon such an Account as this, to be a Guard over your Words and Actions; and I am very much troubled that this unfortunate Thing has happened, and you are reputed to be the Occasion of it. Says he, I do own, Craven, I have done a very ill Thing; but that is past, I cannot help that now; but the Thing that is to be thought on is, what is to be done for the future. My Lord, said I, the best Way, if I may give you my Advice, were to send her Home again, before any Report be spread abroad of the Business. How can that be? Says he, I do not know where she is, but I have had a Letter from her, as I told my Lady, I did believe I should find a Letter here when I came down. I will shew you the Letter, which he did. My Lord, said I, this Letter will be thought as of your penning before you came out of Town. I cannot tell what they will think, said he, but here it is. Said I, my Lord, I have a great Respect for your Lordship, and do very much desire, for your own Reputation and Honour, as well as their's, it may be made up in some Way before it be too publick. We were discoursing of this. How shall that be done, says my Lord Grey. My Lord, said I, if you would consent to this, to send her over into France, to Calais or Diep, we will there find some Body that will help her into a Nunnery; and when she is there, she may write to her Mother, that she found she had an Intention to marry her to a Match she could not by any Means approve or like of, and therefore she went away to prevent her being forced to it; and this would be as plausible a Thing as any in the World. And when that Letter should come, my Lady Berkeley should shew it about to her Friends; nay more, she should go over herself to fetch her back again, that she might receive her into her House with Honour. He said, That was a very plausible Thing, and he would do it, if he could tell where she was; but her Letter to him was, that she was gone from her Father, but she did not think fit to let him know where she was, for Fear he should deliver her up again. Then my Lord Grey asked me in what Condition they were all at my Lord Berkeley's about it. Said I, They are in such a Confusion and Trouble they are all mad almost. Says he, How does my Lord bear it? Said I, He is so afflicted that it will go near to break his Heart. Says he, He is indeed one of the Men in the World that is to be pitied; the pitieth him very much, but for her Mother she doth not care. One Day when we went out a Shooting, as we did several Days together; Mr. Craven, says he, I will tell you the whole Intrigue between my Lady Harriett and I. I have had a great Affection for her ever since she was a Child, and have always been taking great delight in her Company; and keeping her Company so often till she grew up, my Passion grew to that height, that I could stifle it no longer, but I was forced to tell her of it, and then I could not speak to her of it, but writ. But withal I begged her to take no Notice of it to any Body, for if she did, it would ruin us both. She was very angry to hear of it, and neither by writing nor speaking could I perceive she had any Affection for me again, till the Parliament sat at Oxford; and then I did pursue my Love and my Amours, and at last, she one Day told me, said she, I have now consider'd of it, and if you do not leave writing or speaking to me of this Matter, the very first time you write or speak to me again, I will tell my Father and Mother of it. That struck him so, he said, that he did not know almost what to say or what to do, and he walked up and down just like a Ghost; but he hid it as well as he could, that it should not be perceived by others. But that Parliament being quickly dissolved, he did intend to go down to Suffolk to his House there, being he found she was resolved against admitting his Affection, and he would stay there several Years, till he had weaned himself of his Passion, and by that time she would be disposed of otherwise, and he might be at Ease. And he hiding his trouble as much as he could from my Lord Berkeley and my Lady, forbore to speak to her, but only when he saw her he could not forbear looking earnestly upon her, and being troubled. My Lord Berkeley, not knowing any thing of it, asked him to go to London with us and not to Suffolk; he was very much persuaded by my Lord and my Lady to it: and at last, my Lady Harriett Berkeley came to him, and told him, Said she, You are very much persuaded by my Father and Mother to go to London and not to Up-Park, why do not you go with them? Madam, says he, you have stop'd my Journey to London, you have hindered my going with them, for I will rather suffer any thing than render you any Disturbance, and if I go to London with you, I shall not be able to contain myself; but if I go to Suffolk, I alone shall have the trouble of it. But one Day, when my Lord of Aylesbury was leading my Lady Berkeley, and my Lord Grey was leading my Lady Harriett, she took my Lord Grey's Hand and squeeze'd it against her Breast, and there was the first time he perceived she loved him again; and then she told him she should go to London with them; and he did go, and from that time, for a twelve-month before she went away, he did see her frequently, almost every Night, pursuing his Amour in writing and speaking to her as often as he could have Opportunity. And tho' my Lady Berkeley put a French Woman to lie with her, yet she did use to rise from the French Woman, and he did use to see her. And one Day, says he, do not you remember you came to the Chamber Door, and she was angry at your coming, and that the Door was not bolted, and if you had come in, you had found me there?

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Do you remember any such thing?

Mr. Craven. I do not, unless it were at Durdants. And, says he, you cannot imagine what I have suffered to come to see her. I have been two Days locked up in her Closet without Meat or Drink, but only some Sweetmeats.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What did he say of his making Addresses to other Ladies to take off his Passion?

Mr. Craven. He said, He did all he could, for he would fain have avoided bringing such an Infamy upon his own Family and his Lady's, and he did endeavour to cool his Passion, by making Love to two other Ladies, whom he courted, and enjoyed both of them, but yet all did signify nothing, he could not subdue it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray tell us what Terms he insisted upon, for his parting with her, and what he said the Law was in the Case?

Mr. Craven. I told him, My Lord, besides the Dishonour you bring upon yourself and two Noble Families, you should do all that in you lies, to avoid the Punishment that will come upon you for it by the Law. Oh, says he, you mistake yourself in that, for you must think I have consider'd of all that before; they cannot do any thing in Law against me for it; let them examine the Case of Mrs. Henage and my Lord Cavendish.

Mr. Att. Gen. What, did he say he would not part with her but upon Terms?

Mr. Craven. He said, I cannot persuade her, and I will not betray her. Truly, said I, My Lord, you had better betray her, and when she comes to be sensible of her own Good, she will thank you for it. Then he owned he had her in his Power, but would not part with her never to see her again.

Mr. Att. Gen. What were the Terms he stood upon?

Mr. Craven. My Lady Berkeley sent me to the Coffee-house, and desired me to ask him, If he would give her an Answer to what she had met him at my Lord Chief Justice's about. My Lord told me, He did not approve of sending her to the Place proposed, but he would send her to his own Sister, his Brother-in-Law Mr. Nevil's. I told my Lady of it, who said, If he did state the Case right to Mr. Nevil, she was sure he would not receive her, nor let him come to her if he did. After that, Mr. Pett's was proposed, so he might visit her. But he did say, If that be the Design, that they would have her from me, and I not to come at her when I please, they shall never see her while they live, nor will I ever deliver her.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. We rest here, to know what they on the other Hand say to it, and we think this foul Fact is fully proved.

Lord Cavendish. My Lord Chief Justice, I desire to be heard on Word in this Matter. This Gentleman, Mr. Craven, that was last examined, has been pleased to tell a very long improbable Story in itself, amongst other things that he has said, he has been pleased to make use of my Name impertinently enough; for he speaks of a Case that that noble Lord, he says, was pleased to mention to him. If he did mention the Case to him, and did name my Name, he also mentions the Case of the Ladies, he says, my Lord was concerned with. I desire to know how he came to name my Name, and not name the two Ladies he speaks of, that noble Lord made his Courtship to and enjoy'd?

L. C. J. My Lord Cavendish, I could have wished he had not named your Lordship, because it was not at all to the Purpose.

Lord Cavendish. My Lord, I am not concerned at it at all, more at the Impertinency of his using my Name.

L. C.

L. C. J. I could have wished, indeed, the Gentleman had spared your Lordship's Name.

Lord Cavendish. I desire to know why my Name was mentioned more than the two Ladies Names?

Mr. Craven. My Lord Grey did not mention the two Ladies Names to me.

Lord Grey. No, nor my Lord Cavendish's neither; It is all a Lie.

Lord Cavendish. I will believe my Lord Grey's Word more than I will his Oath.

L. C. J. That your Lordship may do if you please. But we must not do so here. Come, what say you to it on the other Side?

Mr. Williams. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counsel in this Case for my Lord Grey and the other Defendants: And that we may come closely to the Question, I desire I may first state the Question before you upon this Information, and then you will the better judge how far the Evidence that has been given, is pertinent to the Issue that you Gentlemen are to try. The Parts of the Information are these: That my Lord Grey, and the rest of these Defendants, should conspire together to ruin and destroy this young Lady, and in the Execution thereof, to bring this their Conspiracy to effect, they did often solicit and entice her to Adultery with my Lord Grey; and in Prosecution of these their ill Purposes and Designs, she was by Force and Arms taken away from the Custody and Tuition of the Earl of Berkeley, her Father, and being so taken away, my Lord Grey, and the rest of them, did procure her to live scandalously with my Lord Grey, in Whoredom and Adultery. These are the Parts of the Charge, and the Question is; whether we are guilty of it? For the Evidence, I dare presume to say; that they have not made any direct Proof of the Matter charged. On the other Side, they have, I do agree, offered something conjectural, upon which a Man may imagine and think what he will; but how far you are to conclude the Defendants Guilty, out of those Presumptions, must be left to you; I know you will very well consider of it: It is plain, we are in a very tender Case; it is a Case of Honour on all Sides; and I have often heard it, and always believed it, That Persons of Honour and Quality in the World, would rather lose their Lives than their Honour. And I believe it is the Opinion of my Client, my Lord Grey, as well as of the Prosecutors in this Information. And therefore, you, Gentlemen, I doubt not, will expect to have a clear Evidence to convict him of this Crime. And it is not only his Honour is concerned, but that also of another great, illustrious, and noble Family, to which he is by Marriage allied. So that the acquitting of my Lord Grey of this Matter, doth, in a great Measure, acquit the other Family of so great a Scandal. For that will falsify the Information, and by your Verdict you will remove those Stains, that else may stick on both Sides. We are equally between the two Families, and your Consideration will be, whether you will lay a Stain upon both of them, or acquit them both. Now there has been no Proof against my Lord Grey, of any one Point in the Information.—

L. C. J. No? Sure you are much mistaken; it is a direct Proof against my Lord Grey, I must tell the Jury so, and therefore apply your Defence to it as you can.

Mr. Williams. Truly, my Lord, I hope it is not; and our Case is best stated, by laying open the Truth of the Fact, and then the Matter will plainly appear. I cannot go about to justify the Passion and the Folly, for I may well call it so, of my Lord Grey and this young Lady in this Case. It is misfortune enough, to be accused of a Thing of that Nature, and it may be a great deal worse to be convicted. I shall agree there have been those Transactions between them, that it may be, we cannot justify in strictness every Thing that my Lord Grey has done. But yet, we say he is not guilty of this Information. We do agree, there has been an extraordinary Passion, nay, I must say, a very unjustifiable one, between this Lady and my Lord Grey: But to conclude out of that, that because there was such an unreasonable, unjustifiable, extraordinary Affection between them, therefore we must infer and conclude him guilty of this Information, is a very forced unreasonable Construction; for there are Degrees in Love, and we must not conclude the worst Thing a Man can be guilty of, because he is guilty of some Degree. Then, to come Home to the Case of my Lord Grey, we shall prove, and give your Lordship and the Jury undeniable Satisfaction, that my Lord Grey's so far from having inveigled away this young Lady, or being any Way instrumental to the conveying her away, that he used all Means he could to have prevented any Thing of that Nature before, by discovering to my Lady Berkeley her Mother, my Lady Arabella, and my Lady Lucy, her Sisters, all Persons of great Honour, and her nearest Relations, that she did intend to go away, by warning them, and giving them full Notice, that there might be such an Intention in the young Lady. We shall prove likewise, that no Man in the World could do more, when she was gone, to retrieve her. We shall make it out by undeniable Circumstances, proved even by their own Witnesses. It happened that my Lord Berkeley and his Family withdrew to a Country-House of his near Epsom, in your County, Gentlemen. My Lady had some jealousy, as she has been pleased to testify, that there might be some extraordinary Passion between my Lord Grey and the young Lady; having discovered it by some Letters, as she hath given Evidence. My Lord Grey acquainted her with his Suspicion, that she intended to go away, and was just; that he did not conceal any one Thing that he knew; yea, to acquaint himself that he had no ill Design himself, and if she did get away it was none of his Fault, he produced a Copy of a Letter of Admonition, which my Lord Grey himself had written to her: And when my Lady had heard his Advice about it, and his Counsel he gave her, she said, her Father would not have given her better Counsel. This was so early as July; in the Beginning of August, my Lord Berkeley going down to his Country-house at Epsom, and the Family removing thither. Then my Lord Grey was sick here in Town; and in this Sickness of his, there was a Letter sent my Lord Grey from his Lady, desiring him to come down to my Lord Berkeley's; but it seems he had been under some Engagement to my Lady Berkeley, not to come without her Leave; and having regard to his Word to my Lady, he would not do it. My Lady Berkeley, in a few Days after, sent for him herself, and therein thanks him that he was so just to Word and Honour, that he would not come down without her Invitation.

Upon Tuesday before this unhappy Lady went away from her Father's House, my Lord Grey came to my Lord Berkeley's. When he came down, he was very kindly received by my Lord and my Lady. On the Thursday following my Lady Berkeley acquaints my Lord Grey, that this young Lady had a Design to leave her Father and Mother's Family, and run away. My Lord Grey was so frank with her, as to tell her; Madam, I have long suspected such a Thing, as I have told you; but Madam, your Daughter Harriett is all Day in your Eye, you may lock her up at Night, and secure her if you please. This was a timely Caution given before she made her Escape. On the Friday following comes a Letter from an unknown Hand to my Lady Berkeley, that intimated, That except they had a great Care of their Daughter, and a strict Eye over her, she and her Father should not long enjoy her Company. My Lady Berkeley shews this Letter to my Lord Grey, says he, Madam, this is no more than what I have often told you, I have have given you some Intimations already, and my Thoughts and Advice about it; and whoever it be that writ this Letter, I am afraid her Apprehensions of some ill Usage may put her upon some such Design. And he repeated it again, Madam, let me caution and advise you, have her always in your Eye, and lock her up safe at Night. This was repeated over and over, to my Lady Lucy, and my Lady Arabella. Thus it continued till Saturday, my Lord Grey resolved to go to his Country-House at Up-Park, and took his Leave of my Lord Berkeley and his Family accordingly, and went that Night to Guilford, and there he lay, and rose the next Morning to go onwards of his Journey, but was pursued, it seems, by my Lady Lucy. For she tells you, When this young Lady had left her Father's Family, she immediately on the Sunday Morning came to Guilford, and sent after my Lord, who was newly gone on his Way, and was found on his Way to his House in Suffex. Having received my Lady Lucy's Commands, he returns to Guilford, and there he had the first Notice given him of my Lady Harriett's Escape; says he to my Lady Lucy, This is no more than I have fairly warned you of before; had you taken my Counsel. Was she locked up? No, said she, she is gone away, and your Lordship must needs know where she is, and therefore pray get her to return Home again. Says my Lord Grey, I assure you I know nothing at all of it, and to give you all the Satisfaction I can in the World, I did not only warn you of it before, but I shall be as industrious as any of you all, you shall find, to recover her again. For that Purpose, I will see if she have crossed the River, or is gone any other Way; and if I can make any Discovery, by Letter or any other Way, I will send you Word immediately; and I am so sincere with you, that if any Letter come to your Family for me, I give free Liberty to my Lord and all his Family to open them themselves, and see what is in them; and if I do receive any from her any other Way, a true Copy of it shall be sent; and more than all this, if my Lord be not satisfied with what I have said, let my Lord or my Lady send, and set what Spy upon me and my Actions they please. And it seems he was taken at his Word, and they made Choice of a very proper Gentleman, and you heard what Discoveries he has made, and how he has worded the Matter. For first he makes my Lord Grey at one Time a very subtle Lover, full of all Intrigues, and one that could conceal all within himself, and yet (when it would do him so much Injury) so open, as absolutely to unbohem himself to one that was an absolute Spy upon him and his Actions, and tell him such Things, as no Man in the World sure is such a Fool as to tell another in his Circumstances. But that I leave to the Jury (as my Lord Cavendish has said) to consider of the Impertinency of his long Story. When he had parted from my Lady Lucy he comes to London, and useth all the Diligence he could to find her out. On Wednesday again he leaves London, when he could not find her, and goeth to his own House: Upon Thursday this Gentleman Mr. Craven comes thither to him. There he finds a Letter from my Lady Harriett, and because he would be exact to his Word, he keeps a Copy of the Letter, and sends the Original of it to my Lord Berkeley's. Now no Man will imagine, if he had such an Intrigue with this Lady, as they would make the World believe, that he would ever have sent such a Letter out of his Custody, which would have been a colourable Excuse for him. Nay, we do not rest here, but by the Way we produce this Letter to this Gentleman, who it seems, was our Guardian, and told him moreover, Here is my Answer to this Letter, and sends a Copy of his Answer with the Letter from her to my Lady Berkeley. Then there comes a second Letter, and he, according to his Word, discovers that, and there is not one Circumstance in all his Carriage that doth accuse him. After this second Letter was imparted to my Lord Berkeley's Family, he continued a while at Suffex, and afterwards, when he returned to London, he used all the Means imaginable, for a Person that was so near concerned in Point of Relation, and in regard of his own Reputation, to have found her out, but could not. These are the Circumstances of my Lord Grey's particular Interest in this Matter, and when we have made out these Circumstances, we hope the World will believe him not guilty. It seems the young Lady is now in Court; she is so just, it seems, as to come to do my Lord Right, and that one Thing will knock all their Conjectures on the Head; for she best knows what has been done, and the Jury will consider whether this be imaginable, that my Lord Grey should conceal her all this while, and produce her now, when if any Violence hath been offered her she may freely tell it. And as for the Man that could tell so very readily this was the very Lady that came to his House, when she had so hooded and muffled up herself, we must leave him and his Credit to the Jury. We shall therefore desire, when we come to the Clofe of our Evidence, that this young Lady may be here examined upon her Oath, and then, I hope, the Truth will come out.

Mr. Thompson. My Lord, because your Lordship seems to be somewhat satisfied that there is a direct Proof of the Matter charged against my Lord Grey, therefore I suppose it will not be amiss to open the Fact, and in three Words to state the Charge, and the Nature of their Evidence to maintain it.—

L. C. J. Come, come, call your Witnesses and make out your Defence.

Mr. Just. Dolben. If you can prove what Mr. Williams says, you do something, but do not think to make long Speeches; go on to the Evidence.

L. C. J. Pray, Mr. Thompson, do not you believe we want any of your Help

Help to recollect the Evidence given, or to direct the Jury about it, do you disprove it if you can.

Mr. Thompson, My Lord, the Course of Practice I always took to be so, to open and observe upon the Evidence given, and then answer it. But I submit to your Lordship for that; you may do as you please.

Lord Grey. Then, my Lord, I desire I may speak something myself. Certainly, my Lord, no Man ever lay under a more infamous Accusation, than I now do; and therefore, I hope, your Lordship will pardon me, if I defend myself as well as I can from it; and undoubtedly, if in any Case a Man be allowed to speak for himself, it must be allowed to me in this. My Honour lies here at Stake, and if my Life did so too, I am not, nor should be more concerned to save that, than I am to clear my Reputation, which is and ought to be very dear to me. My Lord, were I guilty of the Villainies that here are laid to my Charge, I certainly should need no other Punishment, I am sure, I could not have a worse, than the Reflections of my own Conscience for them, and I ought to be banish'd the Society of Mankind. My Lord, I must confess, I have been so unhappy (tho' it is more than they could else prove) as to have a very great Kindness for this unfortunate young Lady, my Lady Harriett Berkeley: but yet, not so criminal a one as the Witnesses that have been produc'd would have you to believe, nor as the Information would insinuate. I do here protest, I was no way assisting to her Escape, nor privy to it; nor have I ever at all since detained her from her Father, tho' I have suffer'd a Fortnight's close Confinement and Imprisonment for it; and all this I doubt not to make out to your Lordship's and the Jury's Satisfaction. I shall say no more of the Justice of my Cause, but endeavour to prove it; and, my Lord, this is that which I say to it. The Evidence that has been given consists most of such and such Discourses that have been between the Witnesses and myself, and those I shall give what Answer is fit to be given to them. A Negative, as your Lordship very well knows, is not to be proved. Particular Discourses we have had, of the same Nature as Mr. Williams has opened, about my cautioning them concerning her Attempts to go away; and I shall appeal to my Lady Berkeley herself, whether that be not so. If my Lady Berkeley own it to be true, I hope that is very good Proof. My Lord, about the time that they speak of, concerning the Letter, which I take to be in June or July, I was sent for by my Lady Berkeley into her Chamber; when I came there, my Lady told me there was a Letter, which, she said, was design'd to go from her Daughter to me. I asked her, If she had read the Contents of the Letter, she said, No. I asked her, whether the Direction of the Letter were to me, she could not tell that. But my Lady had told me, her Daughter had given her the Account of what had passed between us, that she was satisfied there was a Correspondence of Love between us. To remove all Fears, I proffer'd to absent myself. I desire my Lady may answer whether this be not so.

L. C. J. That will be to intricate the Business, to go on thus. Pray, my Lord, if you will ask any Question of any Body, tell them your Counsel, and let them ask them, but to make long Discourses all Day is not to be permitted.

Lord Grey. My Lord, I will ask then my Questions all together by and by. My Lady Berkeley going down with my Lord to Durdants, desired that my Wife might go down with her, to which I readily consented. Soon after that, I fell sick and kept my Bed a while. When I was well again, and going into Suffolk, I sent for my Wife to Town, and would not go fetch her, because I would keep my Word with her Ladyship. My Lady Berkeley thereupon wrote me a Letter, wherein she thank'd me for not coming according to my Promise, and commended my Modesty in it; and said, There would be no Apprehension of any Ill from me, if I did come thither for a short time. And thereupon being invited by her Ladyship, to take her House in my way to Suffolk, I did come down thither. And I urge this, to shew that there was no Conspiracy or Design of any such thing in me, for I had not gone to Durdants, if I had not been sent for, and so there was no design in my going. When I came thither it was the Tuesday, and on the Thursday my Lady Berkeley did acquaint me, She was under great Apprehensions and Fears; and I asked her the Reason of it. She told me, That she had been at some Ease, her Daughter having made a great Submission to her, and Promise of constant Obedience, and that she would do all as she would have her, if she would but give her Leave to go to Town with her; but yet, for all this, one Morning she puts on her Hoods and Scarfs, and was going away, and had done it, but that the French Woman and another prevented it. I told my Lady Berkeley then, Madam, said I, I have good reason to believe she may have some such Intention. I did not give my Reason at that time, but I shall by and by. But, said I, if she do go away, I cannot imagine but that it is possible she may send to me, and I will give your Ladyship notice as soon as ever I know; and tho' you seem to be satisfied, and to think your Daughter secure here, yet you do not think her so indeed; and you must needs use her ill, or she would have no Thoughts of going from you. For my Part, if she do go away and come to me, I will shun it as I would Death, and you have now fair warning; she is all Day in your Eye, pray be sure to lock her up safe at Night. Upon Friday following comes a Letter without a Name to it, and Mr. Williams has open'd to you the Contents of the Letter. She read the Letter when her Daughter was in the Room, who asked what the Letter was, and being denied to have any Account of it, was in the greatest Confusion in the World, and leaped and run down Stairs like a mad Thing, and my Lady herself was very much disturbed at it. When I saw the Letter, Madam, said I, this Letter ought to confirm you in the Resolution of taking my Advice; it can come from no Body, but some one that is to assist in the executing of this Design, but thinks it too dangerous to engage in, and gives you this warning to prevent it. You have sufficient Caution given you to make you careful. Whereas, my Lord, if I had been in any sort of Conspiracy of that Nature, to take her away, my Lady Berkeley certainly should have been the last Woman in the World that I would have communicated it to. My Lord, I went away from Durdants on the Saturday, and so to Guilford, where I lay that Night, and went on my Journey the next Morning, but was overtaken on the Road, by a Messenger from Lady Lucy, who was come to Guilford to speak with me; when I came back to her, she told me, My Lady Harriett was gone away that Night, and they did believe I knew where she was. Said I, Madam, I have as great a Share in this Misfortune as any of you all, because of your Suspicion; but sure you must have used her very ill and make her do this; and you are much to blame, when you had all that warning from me; why did you not secure her, and lock her up as I advis'd you? Said she, She was lock'd up, but the Key was left in the Door. Upon this I went to London, and I had appointed my Lady Lucy to meet her on Monday Morning, to give an Account what I could learn; but I told her, that I had heard nothing of her, nor is there any Proof that I did see her at any time, till I own'd it before your Lordship at your Chamber. She seem'd not to believe me when I told her so. Madam, said I, It is certainly true; and to convince you that I have no hand in this Matter, I will go immediately into Suffolk, and there I will stay as long as you will have me; and if you please to go yourself with me, or send any Body else, to observe what I do. She thought it not fit for herself to go with me: But my Lady Berkeley and she afterwards pitched upon Mr. Craven, who had been a long time a Servant in the Family, and I agreed with my Lady in that, to have him, and receive him as a Spy upon me. Discourfing with my Lady Lucy, said I, Madam, Now I will tell you the Reason, which I forbore to tell my Lady Berkeley, why I had good Ground to suspect my Lady Harriett had a Design to go away, and it was this; My Lady Harriett came to me one Day, about six Weeks or more ago, in the Court-yard at St. John's, and says she to me, I am used like a Dog, I live the Life of a Slave here, I can endure it no longer; by the Eternal God that made me, I will not be alive long, unless I can set myself at Liberty. This I said to my Lady Lucy; and these, said I, were Reasons enough for me to warn you to look well after her. I did, according to Agreement, go into Suffolk immediately; and I then told my Lady Lucy, I believed I might have a Letter from my Lady Harriett, by the Wednesday Night's Post, because, said I, she cannot write sooner than that, and if I have, I will send you word. When I was there, Mr. Craven came the next Day to my House; and as soon as he came, said I, Here is a Letter I have received from my Lady Harriett, and if you will, you may take a Copy of it. I took a Copy of it myself, and sent the Original of it to my Lady Lucy, though they have not thought fit to produce the Letter now in Court, that your Lordship and the Jury might see it. But here is mine, which is the first Account what was become of her after she went away; that I received, except what Account I had from my Lady Lucy at Guilford; and this will shew to all the World, that I was not so much privy to her going away, as they say I was. I had denied to assist her in it, when she complained to me of her ill Usage; and when she attempted to go away before, I, upon my Lady's telling me of it, gave her sufficient Caution. And for the truth of all this, I appeal to those very Witnesses that have been produced against me. When I had shewn this Letter to Mr. Craven, I sent it away by a Servant of my own, to my Lord Berkeley's, and writ to my Lady Lucy, and desired her to pen whatever Answer she should think fit to send. My Lady Lucy did write to me back again, and told me the Substance of what I was to write, but the penning of it she did leave to me, for she believed I would do it effectually. I did write an Answer to my Lady Harriett's Letter, and that Answer I shewed to Mr. Craven, and asked him if it were sufficient, and he seem'd to approve of it. The Lady herself is in Court, I know not whether she can give an Account of the Letter, I suppose she can tell you what an one it was. I had afterwards another Letter from her in Answer to mine, and that I have here, and it will appear by both of those Letters, whether I had any interest in her going away. Tho' perhaps that would not have been such a Crime neither; and yet I think withal, that there is not a tittle of Proof that I had any hand in it, not one Proof of any Circumstance like it. And there be any Crime, it must be the taking her away, to such an Intent and Purpose as is charged in the Information. Before I came to Town, I was sent for about some other Business, yet I would not come till I had my Lady's Consent; for I sent her word, my Lady Harriett writ in her Letter, that she was going beyond Sea, and if I went to London I might prevent it, but I would not go without my Lady's or Mr. Craven's Consent and Approbation. When I came to Town, I was one Day at the Coffee-house in Covent-Garden, I was then sent to by this Lady, who was in an Hackney Coach at the Door, and when I came to the Coach-side to her, she gave me a tedious History of her ill Usage at home, which made her come away. And when your Lordship's Warrants were out to search for her, I came up to your Lordship, and I dare appeal to your Lordship, whether I did not acquaint you, that she only sought for Protection, and was willing to return home, so she should be satisfied she should not be ill treated again. You then told me, I could not protect her against her Father. I then told your Lordship and my Lady Berkeley, She was not in my House, nor in my Custody. They replied, She was in my Power; but how could she be in my Power, when she was not in my Custody, nor in my Lodging? But my Crime was, that I knew where she was. And if I do deserve Punishment for keeping my Word and Faith with her, which I gave her in a Letter, upon her Importunity not to betray her, I must submit to it, I could not in Honour do otherwise. My Lord, I desire this first Letter may be read, which was first sent by my Lady Harriett to me.

L. C. J. Surely, my Lord, for all your long Discourse, you cannot but apprehend yourself mistaken, when you say there is no Crime charged in the Information, but the taking her away to such an Intent and Purpose. Surely there are other Things besides that. And what you speak, not proved, your Lordship knows, must pass for nothing.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, your Lordship has made a right Distinction between Discourses and Proofs. Therefore Discourses between Strangers and third Persons, are not to be stood upon, but the Proofs are; and the Evidence together must be left to the Jury, to consider what is material and pertinent, and what not. We shall therefore go on to our Evidence; and shall begin with my Lady Berkeley first, and ask her Ladyship some Questions. And we desire to know whether she hath read this Letter?

L. C. J. But take notice, the Letter you propose, we cannot read it. Mr. Williams. But, my Lord, it was agreed between my Lady Lucy and my Lord Grey, that if he received any Letters from my Lady Harriett, he should communicate them to my Lady Berkeley.

and this Letter coming to him, he first shews it to Craven, this Man that was thus set as a Spy upon him, and after sent it to my Lady Lucy, and whatsoever Answer they would have sent, was promised should be, and accordingly was first shewn to Craven, and then sent. If this were the Agreement, and these Letters were thus written, then sure we may read them.

L. C. J. You may ask my Lady Berkeley any Questions, but must not read any such Letters.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Pray, Mr. Williams, let us go according to the course of Law, and give no Evidence, but what is fit to be given as Evidence.

Mr. Williams. Then thus, Madam, pray can you remember the Discourse that past between my Lord Grey and your Ladyship in June, concerning your Daughter and him?

Lady Berkeley. Where?—Mr. Williams. At St. John's.

Lady Berkeley. I do not well know what Discourse you mean; but any particular Discourse that was there I will answer to.

Mr. Williams. That Discourse that past between you the first time that you acquainted my Lord Grey that you suspected there was too much Familiarity between him and your Daughter.

Lady Berkeley. The first time do you say?

Mr. Williams. Yes, Madam; I think you were pleased to say, that upon your first Discovery, you sent for him and talked with him.

Lady Berkeley. I did not say upon my first Discovery, but when I had discovered it, for I would be very punctual to the Truth in my Evidence.

Mr. Williams. You say, your Ladyship had some Discourse with him in June.—Lady Berkeley. I think it was in June.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Madam, can you remember what my Lord Grey promised your Ladyship then?

Lady Berkeley. He told me then, he would obey me in any thing, even if I would banish him my House.

Mr. Williams. Was there any Letter then produced by your Ladyship or my Lord Grey?—Lady Berkeley. Of what concern?

Mr. Williams. Any Letter that related to your Daughter?

Lady Berkeley. No; but I told him of a Letter that was found, that she had writ to him.

Mr. Williams. Madam, pray have you that Letter, or any Copy of it?

Lady Berkeley. No, it was torn to Pieces; I can bring the Pieces, I believe, if there were occasion.

Mr. Thompson. Your Ladyship read it, I suppose?

Lady Berkeley. No, my Daughter Bell read it, and tore it in Pieces.

Mr. Williams. Was there any Discourse between your Ladyship and my Lord Grey, about any other Letter?—Lady Berkeley. Not at that time.

Mr. Williams. Was there at any other time?

Lady Berkeley. Yes, at the Charter-house at my Lord's House, one Day my Lord Grey desired me to walk into the Gallery, for he had something to communicate to me, and the Discourse that past between us then was this; he shew'd me there a Letter of the passionate Love he had for her, with some good Counsel in it.

Mr. Williams. Did your Ladyship approve of the Counsel he gave her?

Lady Berkeley. Never when there was so much Love and Passion in the Letter.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Madam, recollect yourself, were you not pleased to like of that Letter?

Lady Berkeley. I could never like of the passionate Expressions in it; there might be something in it well said enough, but with the greatest Expressions of Passion and Love; inasmuch, that he himself said of it, Madam, I'm ashamed of that Part, and would have had me overlooked it.

Mr. Williams. Did your Ladyship say, Her Father could not give her better Advice?—Lady Berkeley. Not that I know of.

Mr. Thompson. Pray, Madam, did you ever say so?

Lady Berkeley. Surely I did not: For I could not but think he could give her a great deal better Advice.

Mr. Williams. Does your Ladyship, pray Madam, remember any Discourse between my Lord Grey, and you, upon the Thursday before your Daughter went away?—Lady Berkeley. I cannot tell for Thursday.

Mr. Williams. Does your Ladyship remember the Letter you received from an unknown Hand?—Lady Berkeley. Yes, I do.

Mr. Williams. Did you shew that Letter, or read it to my Lord Grey?

Lady Berkeley. My Lord Grey came up to me, and seem'd to be very careful of my Concerns; Madam, said he, Pray take care, for I saw a Letter directed to your Ladyship, without the Mark of the Post, or the Penny-Post upon it. And, said he, I give you this Caution about it before it comes to you. Because my Lord was by, I arose up and went to the other side of the Room, and my Lord Grey followed me, and when I took up the Letter, I saw something that I thought to be very odd and unusual in his Carriage, as if he were in great Disorder, as I was; and I went to my Chamber, thither my Lord Grey followed me, and that Letter he would not see it as then. I sent for my Daughter Lucy into my Closet, and shewed her, and she was in great Disorder about it too.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Madam, can you remember whether that Letter did Caution you to look well to your Daughter, or else you were not like to have her Company long?

Lady Berkeley. The Letter did say some such Thing, I must look after my Daughter, or I should lose her.

Mr. Thompson. And this was on the Friday before she left your Ladyship, was it not?—Lady Berkeley. Yes, it was so, I think.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Madam, what did my Lord Grey say upon that?

Lady Berkeley. He was extremely earnest to see the Letter, because, he said, it had so disordered me; and at last I was persuaded to let him see the Letter; he turned the Letter up-side down, and looked on the Subscription. Madam, says he, is this all that disorders you so much, I am used to see many such Letters by the Penny-Post; this is nothing but to amuse you. It is a very silly Letter, and written by some Woman, as you may see by the Spelling.

Mr. Williams. Did he caution you to lock up your Daughter a-Nights secure her?

Lady Berkeley. Not one Word upon this Letter; but the next Morning in talking about this Letter, he said, It was a foolish Letter, and what should I trouble myself about it for?

Mr. Williams. But, Madam, had you any Caution given you by my Lord Grey about this Time, to take care of your Daughter?

Lady Berkeley. Not that I remember, to lock her up.

Mr. Williams. What then did he say?

Lady Berkeley. I will tell you what he said to me once or twice. Madam, whatever you do, do not make her desperate. I asked him what he meant by that Word? Said he, It is not necessary to explain that Word to you; I meant nothing, but do not use her ill. Now, my Lord, I was so far from that, that I used her with all the Tenderness of a Mother, like a Sister rather than a Daughter; nay, he himself has confessed, she was better used than he imagined she was.

Mr. Williams. Did your Ladyship, at any time, intimate to my Lord Grey, that you had any apprehensions of her intending to go away?

Lady Berkeley. I did tell him, That when I was at London, my Woman that lay with her, did rise about Eight o'Clock, and left my Daughter alone in the Room, and when she came up again, my Daughter had put on her Hood and Scarf, and her Petticoat was pin'd up, as ready to go out, and the Woman being affrighted at this, called up my other Daughter, and so prevented it; and after came and told me she had pin'd up her Petticoat thus about her, and she did not know what she meant to do. Upon this I went to my Daughter, and, said I, What is the Reason that you pin'd up your Petticoat, and put on your Hood and Scarf? Says she, I had not my Scarf on. But says my Woman to me, when I came into the Room, you thrust something into your Gown. It is true, I did so, Madam, said she, but it was upon this Account, I had got a Sheet of Paper, upon which I intended to write, and seeing her come in, I put it in my Gown.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Madam, did my Lord Grey at any time caution your Ladyship about your Daughter, to lock her up, or tell you his Opinion that he thought she would leave you?

Lady Berkeley. I cannot positively say that; but he used to say to me, Madam, do not make her desperate; I do not know that ever he advised me, as to the locking her up.

Mr. Thompson. Did he desire you, Madam, to take care that she did not go away from you?—Lady Berkeley. I do not remember it.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Madam, can you tell who brought that Letter from an unknown Hand to you at Durham's?

Lady Berkeley. It came down with other Letters to my Lord's Steward.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. But your Ladyship says my Lord Grey was very solicitous about that Letter.

Lady Berkeley. Yes, Sir, he came to me, and very earnestly cautioned me about it: For, said he, I see there is neither the General-Post nor the Penny-Post Mark upon it. And knowing himself guilty of what he was guilty of, he might be afraid lest my Lord should see it, and so his Business come out.

Mr. Williams. Pray, my Lady Lucy, do you remember that ever my Lord Grey advised the locking her up?

Lady Lucy. Upon discoursing of the Letter that came from an unknown Hand, my Mother said to my Lord Grey, Sure that is such a horrid thing that it can never be done; my Lord Grey might then reply and say, If you fear it, you may lock her up: but I do deny that ever I heard him say any thing to caution my Mother, that he thought she was going.

Mr. Williams. Madam, the Question I ask your Ladyship is; whether my Lord Grey did or no direct or advise to lock her up?

Lady Lucy. Upon my Mother's Discourse concerning the unknown Letter, and how sad a Thing that would be, he might say, That if she feared that, she might lock her up; but he never did say that he did think she would go.

Mr. Thompson. Pray, when was this, Madam? how long before she left the Family?—Lady Lucy. The Day before.

Mr. Williams. Then, Madam, for the Discourse you had with him at Guilford, what said he he would do?

Lady Lucy. It was at London, that he passed his Word to go down into the Country.

Mr. Williams. What did he promise you to do there, Madam?

Lady Lucy. He said he would not stir from Up-Park till he heard from my Father.

Mr. Williams. What did my Lord say to you, Madam, about the Letters he should receive?

Lady Lucy. He did say he would send us all the Letters that came to him from her, and if any came to our Hands we were to open them.

Mr. Williams. Was my Lord Grey willing to receive a Spy, Madam, upon him?—Lady Lucy. Yes, he was.

Mr. Williams. Was there any Letter sent to your Ladyship from my Lord Grey?

Lady Lucy. Yes, there was a Letter with one in it from my Lady Harriett.

Mr. Williams. Have you those Letters by you, Madam?

Lady Lucy. No, I have neither of them here.

Mr. Williams. Can you tell the Contents of it?

Lady Lucy. I have told them already.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Madam, will you please to recollect yourself a little, when you were at Guilford, and told my Lord Grey that my Lady Harriett was gone away, did not my Lord tell you, you had not observed the Directions and Advice he gave about her, to lock her up; and did not you then answer him, Yes, the Door was lock'd, but the Key was left in?

Lady Lucy. I did reply, the Woman had not lock'd it carefully enough after her.

Mr. Williams. Did you not say, that the door was lock'd, but the Key was left in?—Lady Lucy. I do not remember a Word of that.

Mr. Williams. Madam, will you please to cast your Eye upon that Letter, and see if that Paper be a true Copy of the Letter you had?

L. C. J. What Paper is that you offer, Mr. Williams?

Mr. Williams. It is a Letter from the young Lady to my Lord Grey.

L. C. J. You know no use can be made of that Paper, why do you offer it? It is contended that my Lord had the Lady in his Power, and then would not she write any Thing?

Mr. Williams. Then, my Lord, there is the young Lady herself, we desire she may be examined.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. But before we part with my Lady Lucy, if you have done, we desire to ask her a Question: It is here insinuated, as if there had been some Hardship put upon this young Lady, or some ill Usage in her Father's Family: Now for the Honour of that noble Family, I would have that Point clear'd; and therefore, pray Madam, did you ever observe observe any Unkindness, any Severity or harsh Usage, that was used to this Lady, by my Lord or my Lady at any time?

Lady Lucy. So far from that, that all of us had a Jealousy that she was loved best.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Pray take Notice of that, Gentlemen.

L. C. J. Pray, Madam, let me ask you one Question. After my Lady had discovered this Evil Affection between my Lord Grey and this young Lady, did she then put any indecent Severities upon her, or use her very hardly?

Lady Lucy. My Lord, I came out of France but two Days before she went away. I saw no such thing.

Mr. Williams. We ask her about my Lord Grey, and you ask her about a third Person.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Oh good Mr. Williams, we know why we ask her that Question. It is an extraordinary Case. Pray my Lady Arabella, will you answer the same Question?

L. C. J. Ay, Madam, pray let me ask you; after this ill Business between my Lord and her was discovered, did my Lady Berkeley, (I cannot say my Lord, for he knew nothing of the Matter till she was gone away) use her ill or unkindly?

Lady Arabella. No, no, my Lord; no Mother in the World could be more indulgent and kind. She did indeed find it necessary to have a stricter Eye over her, and she did put a Woman about her to look after her, and did not permit her to write any Letters. She had, or expressed a greater Kindness for her, than any of us all besides.

Lady Berkeley. Ay, and that my Lord Grey knows to be true.

L. C. J. No, no, when my Lord Grey was in his Passion, he might say so, but he has no Proof to shew of it.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. My Lady Lucy and my Lady Arabella, what Person did you fear should take her away, pray?

Lady Arabella. We were not afraid of any Body but my Lord Grey.

Lady Lucy. There was no Reason for fear of any Body but him.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, there is the young Lady, we desire she may be sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. We oppose it, Sir, and have very good Reason so to do, and we think it is time to do it now, if ever.

L. C. J. Why should she not be sworn, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Just. Dolben. If the Lady herself have the Confidence to be sworn, I see no Reason why she should not.

Mr. Att. Gen. This Case, my Lord, is in the Nature of a Ravishment of Ward, for it is for taking a young Lady out of the Tuition and Custody of her Father, who is her Guardian by Nature, and it is apparent in the Proofs, she is highly Criminal in this very Matter herself, in consenting to go away in such a Manner, and to such an evil Purpose; and now she comes to excuse one, that is not only a Partaker in her Fault, but the first Seducer. Now, my Lord, when we have proved this Matter of Love upon her, that is laid in the Information, sure she cannot be a Witness for them, she would be a Witness to excuse herself.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, I do think truly, that notwithstanding what you say, she may be a Witness, being no Party to the Information. But withal, I think there is very little Credit to be given to what she says.

Mr. Williams. Sure these Gentlemen forget themselves much in offering to hinder or oppose one's being a Witness, that is no Party in the Cause.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Truly, my Lord, we would prevent Perjury if we could.

[Then she was sworn.]

L. C. J. Brother Jefferies, we cannot oppose it, if they will press it, and she consent; but I tell you what I think of it.

Mr. Williams. If she be sworn, my Lord, we would ask her a Question or two. Madam, we would desire your Ladyship to answer whether my Lord Grey had any hand in your Escape?

Lady Henrietta. No, Sir.

Mr. Just. Dolben. You are upon your Oath, Madam; have a care what you say; consider with yourself.

Lady Henrietta. Yes, I know I am upon my Oath, and I do upon my Oath say it.

Mr. Williams. Did my Lord Grey advise you to it?

Lady Henrietta. No, I had no Advice from him, nor any Body about him, nor did he know any Thing of it, it was all my own Design.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Madam, I would ask you this Question, and pray consider well before you answer it. Did you see my Lord Grey on the Sunday after you went away from your Father's?

Lady Henrietta. No, I did not.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Did you see him on Monday?

Lady Henrietta. No.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Did you on Tuesday?—Lady Henrietta. No.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Did you on Wednesday?

Lady Henrietta. No.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Good God! Pray, Madam, how long afterwards was it that you saw him?

Lady Henrietta. Sir, it was a great while after.

Mr. Williams. How many Days or Weeks after was it?

Lady Henrietta. Sir, I cannot tell.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. As near as you can, Madam, when was it?

Lady Henrietta. I can remember the first Place that I saw him at after, but the Time exactly I cannot.

Mr. Williams. Where was that, Madam?

Lady Henrietta. It was in a Hackney-Coach.

Mr. Williams. That was the Time, I suppose, that you sent for him out of the Coffee-House in Covent-Garden?

Lady Henrietta. Yes, I did so.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Madam, did you write any Letter to my Lord Grey after your going away?

Lady Henrietta. Yes, I did by the next Post.

Mr. Williams. When did you write that Letter, Madam?

Lady Henrietta. I did write it upon the Tuesday after I came away. I hope that is no Offence.

L. C. J. No? Is it not? You should have writ to some Body else sure.

Lady Henrietta. I thought him the fittest Person for me to write to, and I did not imagine it would be any ways scandalous for him, he being the nearest Relation I had in the World, except my own Brother, that could protect me.

Mr. Williams. Had you any Answer from my Lord Grey to that Matter, Madam?

Lady Henrietta. Yes; and a very harsh Letter it was.

Mr. Williams. Did you write him any other Letter?

Lady Henrietta. Yes; but I received no Answer of it at all.

Mr. Thompson. Pray, Madam, did my Lord Grey, at any time, persuade you to return to your Father's?

Lady Henrietta. Yes, he did so several times.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Pray, Madam, do you know Charnock, that was my Lord Grey's Gentleman?—Lady Henrietta. Yes, I do.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Upon your Oath, did not he carry you away from Durdant's?—Lady Henrietta. No.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Nor did not his Wife assist you in it?

Lady Henrietta. No.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Nor was she not with you on the Sunday Morning?

Lady Henrietta. No, nor was not with me.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were you not at Mrs. Hilton's then, Madam?

Lady Henrietta. No.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were you at Patten's?—Lady Henrietta. No.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Nor at Jones's?

Lady Henrietta. No, nor at Jones's upon my Oath.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, who did come with you from Durdant's?

Lady Henrietta. I shall not give any Account of that, for I will not betray any Body for their Kindness to me.

Mr. Wallop. If it be no Body in the Information, she is not bound to tell who it was.

Lady Henrietta. If I have vowed to them before, not to discover, I will not break my Vow to them.

Mr. Just. Dolben. If they ask you of any Body in the Information, you have heard their Names, you must tell if it were any of them, but you are not bound to tell if it were any one else.

Lady Henrietta. No, it was none of them. I went away upon another Account.

L. C. J. If you have no further Questions to ask her, pray, Madam, sit down again.

Lady Henrietta. Will you not give me leave to tell the Reason why I left my Father's House?

Mr. Just. Dolben. If they will ask you it they may. You are their Witness.

Mr. Williams. No, my Lord, we do not think fit to ask her any such Question; she acquits us, and that is enough.

Lady Henrietta. But I desire to tell it myself.

L. C. J. Truly, I see no Reason to permit it, except we saw you were a more indifferent Person to give Evidence than we find you.

Lady Henrietta. Will you not give me leave to speak for myself?

Mr. Just. Dolben. My Lord, let her speak what she has a Mind to, the Jury are Gentlemen of Discretion enough, to regard it no more than they ought. But, Madam, for God's sake consider you are upon your Oath, and do not add willful Perjury to your other Faults.

Lady Henrietta. I have been very much reflected upon here to Day, and my Reputation suffers much by the Censure of the World, and therefore—

L. C. J. You have injured your own Reputation, and prostituted both your Body and your Honour, and are not to be believed.

Mr. Just. Jones. You are, Madam, to answer only such Questions as are asked you pertinent to the Issue that the Jury are to try, and if the Counsel will ask you no Questions, you are not to tell any Story of yourself.

Mr. Ireton. My Lord, as to the Evidence of Patten, the Case is quite otherwise than they would represent it to be, about Charnock's coming thither for Lodgings, for Mrs. Patten is a Midwife, and used to lay Mrs. Charnock, and it was for her to lye in at Patten's House, because it would be inconvenient to lye in at my Lord Grey's.

L. C. J. What does that signify? But prove what you can.

Mr. Thompson. Where is Mrs. Patten, they would not produce her, because they knew it was against them? [She appearing was sworn.]

L. C. J. Well, what do you ask of this Woman now?

Mr. Ireton. I would ask her, my Lord, whether were there any Lodgings bespoke in your House against September?

Mrs. Patten. I know nothing of that.

Mr. Ireton. Was there any Body in June or July at your House to be speak Lodgings?

Mrs. Patten. I cannot tell the Month nor the Day.

Mr. Thompson. Pray Mistress speak what you do know.

Mrs. Patten. Mr. Charnock and his Wife did come to my House in Summer.

Mr. Williams. What was their Business?—Mrs. Patten. For Lodgings.

Mr. Thompson. Did they tell you who they were for? Did they say about Lying-in?

Mrs. Patten. They were only for his Wife.

Mr. Ireton. Did he tell you what time he should come?

Mrs. Patten. He did tell me they were not fit to come into yet, but they might at such a Time, but she did not know her own Reckoning.

But they were not taken.

Mr. Ireton. Are not you a Midwife?

Mrs. Patten. I was Mrs. Charnock's.

L. C. J. What is that to this Purpose?

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Now you are sweetly brought to Bed.

Mr. Ireton. Pray, Woman, will you tell what they said to you.

Mrs. Patten. Mr. Charnock and his Wife came to our House for Lodgings. I asked her who they were for; she said they were for a Gentlewoman. I asked her who she was. Says she, For myself to lye in here. Said I, How comes that about? Says she, About the Time that I returned to my Lord's Family will be in Town, and I find it not convenient to be in at our own House; then my Father and Mother have sent for me to the Country, to lye in there, but I cannot think of going thither, because of changing my Midwife. Then, said I, truly, Mrs. Charnock, nothing in my House is at your Service. Said she, I think it convenient rather to be here than to go into the Country; but I do not desire that Lord's Family should know that I intend to lye-in here, for I would not inconvenience my Lady's House, and yet my Lady, it may be, will permit me to go out.

L. C.

L. C. J. But, Mistress, there came one to your House from Mrs. Hilton's, Who was that?

Mrs. Patten. I do not know; I was not at Home then.

L. C. J. Did you not come Home before they went away?

Mrs. Patten. No, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Was that Woman they brought to lye in in your House, Mistress?—Mrs. Patten. Who do you mean, Sir?

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. The other Gentlewoman that came with Mrs. Charnock and Mrs. Hilton. The Lady that spoke just now.

Mrs. Patten. I do not know; I never saw her Face in my Life, that I know of; what my Husband saw I cannot tell, I saw her not; it may be she, it may be not, for any thing I know.

L. C. J. Well, Gentlemen, have you done, will you call any more Witnesses?

Mr. Williams. We have done, unless they call any more.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. We shall only call a noble Lord, my Lord of Ailebury, to testify what he knows, being very much conversant in the Family, of the Treatment he has observed of this Lady.

L. C. J. That needs not, for there is no Body that fixeth any thing of the Matter upon my Lord or my Lady.

Mr. Wallop. We do hope in your Lordship's Observations upon the Evidence to the Jury, you will please to take Notice, that there is no Colour of Evidence of any actual Force upon the Lady which is laid in the Information, that my Lord did vi & armis abducere, &c.

L. C. J. Oh, Mr. Wallop, fear not, I shall observe right to the Jury; but you have read the Book that is written concerning Juries lately, I perceive.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. He has studied such Books no doubt, and has learned very good Counsel from Whitacre.

L. C. J. Look you, Gentlemen of the Jury, here is an Information on the behalf of the King, against my Lord Grey, and the other Defendants; and it doth set forth, that my Lord Grey having married one of the Daughters of the Earl of Berkeley, and having Opportunity thereby of coming to the Earl of Berkeley's House, he did unlawfully solicit the Lady Henrietta, another Daughter of the Earl of Berkeley's, a young Lady, to unlawful Love; and that he did entice her from her Father's House; and that he did cause her to be conveyed away from thence against her Father's Consent; and that he did unlawfully use her Company afterwards in a very ill Manner, an unjustifiable Manner; and this, Gentlemen, is the Substance of the Information; in truth, it is laid, that he did live in Fornication with her. Now, Gentlemen, to this, my Lord Grey, and the other Persons, the Charnocks and the Jones's have all pleaded not Guilty to it. Now then, the Question before you is, whether there were any such unlawful Solicitation of this Lady's Love; and whether there was any Inveiglement of her to withdraw herself and run away from her Father's House without his Consent; and whether my Lord Grey did at any Time frequent her Company afterwards. Gentlemen, the Evidence that has been given, you have heard what it is, and it is very plain, if you do believe these Witnesses that speak it from my Lord's own Mouth (that he hath a long time unlawfully solicited her to Lust. For there is nothing else in it, Gentlemen, (that is the plain English of it all) he has enticed her to unlawful Lust. My Lady she gives Evidence of it from his own Mouth, that there was an Intrigue of unlawful Love between them: She says my Lord Grey condemned himself for it several times, but yet prosecuted it; he own'd it was a most dishonourable and dishonourable thing in him, which indeed it was; he did herein in Truth make a right Estimate of the thing. He did own he had betrayed the Family, and brought it into great Scandal, and had abused both Father and Mother by this unlawful Solicitation of their Daughter to this unworthy wicked Affection; but he excused it all with the Greatness of his Passion, and that was all; he pray'd her to consider, it was a great and passionate Love, a Love that he could not resist; he loved her above all Women living, and many fair Promises of Amendment and doing he made, but you see how he has performed them. You hear my Lady Arabella tells you there was a Letter written by my Lady Harriett, his Lady that appears now in Court as a Witness for my Lord Grey, which she had out of her own Hand, and she tells you the Effect of it; it was to invite my Lord another Night, as he had been with her a former Night; and to shew the Greatness of her Longing for him, she desires it might be quickly, not to stay till Monday, for if he did, she should be mighty impatient, if he delayed so long; and withal she told him, her Sister Bell, which I take to be my Lady Arabella, had not discovered it, nor heard the Noise that was between them that Night they were together. My Lady Lucy, she tells you, he owned there was an unlawful Love between him and her Sister, it must needs then be true, if he owned to her, and he said that it put him upon mighty Inconveniencies, and he own'd he had done so much wrong to the Family, that he could never repair it. You hear my Lady tells you she forbid him the Family; and you hear likewise, what little Designs he had, and what he pretended that he might continue to come to the Family, if you believe my Lady. For he pretended that this would be the way to make it publick, if he were forbid the House altogether; but he would be under her Direction, he would do nothing but what she should approve of; that he would not apply himself to her Daughter to speak to her, nor write to her. And you hear that all this, he did, before my Lady Arabella, vent a great deal of Passion to her, that she was the only Person in the World he had any Love for; and my Lady Arabella tells you she heard him say, when he had seen her down like a dead Woman. When he had made my Lady a Promise that he would not come without Leave, he sends his own Wife thither first, that he might come down, and very earnest and importunate she was with her Mother, not knowing any thing of the Intrigue, but was instrumental to get Leave to come down. And at Length Leave was given him to dine there, as he went to Sussex; but he comes at Nine o'clock at Night, and then Excuses were made by him for it; and my Lord Berkeley desiring him to stay, who was not acquainted with the unlawful Affection that was between his Daughter and him, and accordingly did stay till Saturday. You hear, Gentlemen, what is said to you now, her carrying away, for all that has been hitherto observed to you, has only to the unlawful Solicitation of this Lady to unlawful Love. My Lady tells you, that that very Night that my Lord Grey went from her House was her Daughter carried away. You see then, the Question will be, whether my Lord had any hand in carrying her away, and for that you must weigh these Circumstances. It is pretty manifest that this Coach-man, that is, Charnock did carry her away. Now the Chaplain, tells you, that my Lord was earnest in several Discourses that Day with Charnock, and under some great Trouble, he could discern that in his Countenance; and several times he was sent for to him, as tho' there was some mighty earnest Business imposed upon Charnock to do. Charnock made as tho' he went away, it seems with his Lord, who went away about Four o'clock; and the Lady was carried away in the Morning between Twelve and One, which is the Time spoken of. Now to prove that Charnock carried her away, you have these Circumstances: She was brought to the House of Hilton, there was a Lady brought in there that Morning about Nine o'clock by Charnock; Charnock was the Afternoon before going to Up-Park with his Lord, but it is manifest that he was back that Morning at London, and so brought the Lady thither that Morning. If you believe Hilton, the Witness, it is manifest she had been a Journey, and was very weary, so that she was fain to go to Bed at Nine o'clock. This Lady that was there brought by Charnock and his Wife, was afterwards carried to Patten's House, Mrs. Hilton swears it; and Mr. Patten swears they did come in there. There was a great deal of Policy used in the Case, and Care taken; and Mrs. Hilton tells you why; they saw some Men about the Door, which they were afraid might be Men that came to look after the Lady, and so they slid away thro' the Back-door, which proves something in that she was to be concealed. Then consider the Circumstances of the Clothes that do so exactly agree. There was a Gown with red and green Flowers striped, and there was Petticoat striped with red, and a white quilted Petticoat under that the Lady had on that came to Patten's; and the Lady's Woman who lay with her and look'd after her, describes to you her Gown and Petticoat to be the same as those were that the Lady had on, who was hurried away from Patten's House at Night to another Lodging. We cannot indeed discover where that was. Now then, after this, my Lord Grey, he undertakes to my Lady Berkeley, that he would go to Up-Park, and stay there till he had Leave to come to Town. Patten who saw the Lady, swears this is the very Lady that sits here, and who has been examined, but denies it. If she was the Lady that was brought to Patten's, she was the same that was brought to Hilton's, whither Charnock brought her; and so there is a full Evidence of the Guilt of Charnock and his Wife, who was the Solicitor about the Business, took Lodgings for her, help'd her away from Hilton's, and help'd her to Patten's, and from Patten's somewhere else. So that if you believe them, Charnock and his Wife are both Guilty. As to my Lord Grey, who went to Up-Park on the Wednesday, soon after he came to Town again, and it is positively sworn that he came to Jones's upon the Tuesday, and sent for Jones out to come to him, who was in a Hackney-Coach, where he discoursed with him a pretty while, and afterwards the Room is provided for the Lady up two Pair of Stairs in Jones's House. She is brought thither, my Lord Grey came twice to the House, and both Times without his Perriwig, as the Maid swears she knew him very well, and there he took Lodgings for a Lady, and that Lady came afterwards. Now if this falls out to be my Lord Berkeley's Daughter, then you have it push'd home upon my Lord Grey. That this was my Lord Berkeley's Daughter, you have this Evidence made up of Circumstances. First, The Policy used in the Case by my Lord, to have all so privately managed. Another Circumstance there is, tho' at first it seems but slight, yet if it be well consider'd will signify very much, and that is what the Maid does testify. She says her Linnen was brought down to be washed, and there was a Shift that was very remarkable, for it had the Body of one sort of Cloth, and the Sleeves of another, and that she took special Notice of it, and thence would have concluded that the Lady was not a Person of Quality; and another of those very Shifts that belonged to my Lady Harriett was brought to her afterwards, and she swears it was of the same Fashion and Make with that which the Lady had that lodged in their House; and it was, as all do agree, just in the same manner as this was, with the Body of one Cloth and the Sleeves of another. Then, there is Colonel Fitz-Gerrard was in those very Lodgings at that time; and he comes and tells you, that having heard of my Lord Berkeley's Daughter's Departure from her Father, and considering the Circumstances that he had heard the Maid say that it was my Lord Grey's Mistress that was brought in thither, and such other Circumstances concurring, he did conclude this to be the Lady, and he tells Jones his Suspicions concerning it (whose Wife was by the Way so very officious to conceal the Lady, that she would not suffer her Maids to come up Stairs, but would rather shut up the Shop-windows herself, than the Maids should come to see her.) Mr. Jones having Discourse with the Colonel about this, and finding the Lady was smoked, was angry at the Colonel's Curiosity, which increased the Colonel's Suspicion. He told Jones, This must needs be the Lady, and I will see her. Which he very much fearing, intreated him not to disturb his House at that time of Night, and upon Promise to let him see her the next Morning, he desisted, but told him, He knew not what he was doing, he did a very ill thing to conceal a young Lady from her Friends; her Father and Mother not knowing where she was, might give her over for Dead. But in the Morning the Lady was convey'd away. This, to me is a shrewd Circumstance that Jones knew her to be the Lady, and to conceal all the Matter, got so much time to send her away. To what Purpose else was she carried away, when the Colonel was to see her, that he might be satisfied about his Suspicion, and so acquaint her Father? But she was conveyed away presently. Gentlemen, it is manifest by all the Witnesses, and by what the Defendants Counsel themselves opened, that under this Absence of the Lady from her Father, he had an Intercourse of Letters with her, which is a great Circumstance to prove that she was carried away by his Contrivance. He could tell the Lady Lucy. That she should never be brought back again, without he might have leave to visit her. So that, it seems, he had full Power over her. There is another Gentleman, who has told you he was set as a Spy over him; and if you believe him, my Lord Grey has made a Confession to him as he would to his Ghostly Father; he has told you the Intrigue of all his unlawful Love, from the Beginning to the End; how long he was engaged in it before he had any Comfort from the Lady, when he had the first first Demonstration of Kindness from her, and the whole Matter all along. There is another Gentleman that was sent to treat with my Lord (Mr. Smith) concerning this; he tells you my Lord Grey and he being in a long Discourse, he offered that he would deliver her to one Person, but not to another: She should be first sent to his Brother-in-law, Mr. Nevil's in Berkshire; afterwards to another Place, Mr. Pett's, so as he might have Access to her; but he tells you also, this was the Conclusion of all, He would never part with her, nor never deliver her, upon any other Terms, than that he might have Access to her whenever he would. Now lay all this together, and see what it amounts to. He that had so great a Passion for her, he that could not be without the Sight of her, but used such Ways to come to speak to her; he that had Letters from her all along; he that had such Power over her, that he could deliver her, as he said, or not, and would keep her in Spite of her Father, unless he might have Leave to visit her as often as he pleased; and consider then, I say, whether it is not more than probable, that he had a Hand in carrying her away. It is plain, beyond all Contradiction, she was carried away by his Man, who was in his Company that Night; he pretended to go to Up-Park, but was in London the next Morning by nine o'Clock. My Lord came afterwards to take Lodgings for her, two Days one after another. Whether then he be not as guilty as Charnock, or any of the rest, nay, indeed, the main Mover of this ill Thing, you are to consider upon the Evidence that has been given. But you must, withal, take into your Consideration, what my Lord Grey says for himself. He has asked several Questions of the Ladies that were examined, but truly never a one worth the remembrance, that I know of, or that made to his Purpose. He does indeed pretend that the young Lady was hardly used at Home, and that she fled to him as to a Sanctuary for Protection; and you hear the several Witnesses examined to that Point; and they all say she was used, notwithstanding the Discovery of this ill Business, with the greatest Kindness and Respect that a Child could be used with by her Mother, and no Hardship put upon her, but only she was forbid to write any Letters to my Lord Grey, and had a Maid put upon her, to keep her from running away, because once before she attempted it, as her Mother did believe. The Lady herself is here, she has been examined; she indeed denies this all along; she says that this Coach-man Charnock did not carry her away; she says she was not at Hilton's, nor at Patten's, nor at Jones's; that she never saw my Lord Grey till a long Time after she went from her Father's. But this is all disproved by the other Witnesses; and so whether you will believe her single Testimony, or their's, I must leave it to you. You must consider under what Circumstances she is, and truly she doth not seem to be any Way fit to be believed in this Matter. Jones and his Wife are as guilty as any of the rest, for their Contrivance to keep her secret, especially, after that he had promised Fitz-Gerrard to let him see her. Look you, as to the long Discourse my Lord Grey made, I must tell you, it is not to be believed further than it is proved. Now my Lord Grey did tell us, that he from Time to Time had given Caution to my Lady, that she should look to her Daughter, and lock her up, for else she would, as he believed, run away. My Lady denies it all, and so it goes all for nothing, and you are to take no Notice of it. I must leave it to you, whether you do believe what these Witnesses have sworn, if you do believe the Evidence produced for the King, most certainly they are all five guilty of the Charge in the Information.

Mr. Just. Dolben. There is no Evidence against Rebecca Jones.

L. C. J. No, there is not.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. No, we cannot insist upon it that there is, you must find her not guilty.

Mr. Just. Jones. I must remember you of one Thing, Gentlemen, and that is, what drop'd from my Lord Grey's own Mouth, that when my Lord, as he says, gave his Advice that she should be looked after carefully, he would not give his Reason for it, but after he did, as he says, tell it my Lady Lucy, that she complained to him at St. John's, that she led the Life of a Dog, or a slave, and she would not endure it any longer, and desired him to assist her, or she would do herself a Mischief. Why was not this told before?

L. C. J. Ay, but Brother, my Lady Berkeley denies it all too.

[Then the Jury began to withdraw.]

Earl of Berkeley. My Lord Chief Justice, I desire I may have my Daughter delivered to me again.

L. C. J. My Lord Berkeley must have his Daughter again.

Lady Henrietta. I will not go to my Father again.

Mr. Just. Dolben. My Lord, she being now in Court, and there being a Homine replegiando against my Lord Grey, for her, upon which he was committed, we must now examine her. Are you under any Custody or Restraint, Madam?—Lady Henrietta. No, my Lord, I am not.

L. C. J. Then we cannot deny my Lord Berkeley the Custody of his own Daughter.

Lady Henrietta. My Lord, I am married.

L. C. J. To whom?—Lady Henrietta. To Mr. Turner.

L. C. J. What Turner? Where is he?

Lady Henrietta. He is here in Court.

[He being among the Crowd, Way was made for him to come in, and he stood by the Lady and the Judges.]

L. C. J. Let's see him that has married you. Are you married to this Lady?—Mr. Turner. Yes, I am so, my Lord.

L. C. J. What are you?—Mr. Turner. I am a Gentleman.

L. C. J. Where do you live?

Mr. Turner. Sometimes in Town, sometimes in the Country.

L. C. J. Where do you live when you are in the Country?

Mr. Turner. Sometimes in Somersetshire.

Mr. Just. Dolben. He is, I believe, the Son of Sir William Turner that was the Advocate, he is a little like him.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Ay, we all know Mr. Turner well enough. And to satisfy you this is all a Part of the same Design, and one of the foulest Practices that ever was used, we shall prove he was married to another Person before, that is now alive, and has Children by him.

Mr. Turner. Ay, do, Sir George, if you can, for there never was any such Thing.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Pray, Sir, did not you live at Bromley with a Woman as Man and Wife, and had divers Children, and living so intimately, were you not questioned for it, and you and she owned yourselves to be Man and Wife?

Mr. Turner. My Lord, there is no such Thing; but this is my Wife I do acknowledge.

Mr. Att. Gen. We pray, my Lord, that he may have his Oath.

Mr. Turner. My Lord, here are the Witnesses ready to prove it that were by.

Earl of Berkeley. Truly as to that, to examine this Matter by Witnesses, I conceive this Court, though it be a great Court, yet has not the Cognizance of Marriages: And though here be a Pretence of a Marriage, yet I know you will not determine it, how ready soever he be to make it out by Witnesses, but I desire she may be delivered up to me, her Father, and let him take his Remedy.

L. C. J. I see no Reason but my Lord may take his Daughter.

Earl of Berkeley. I desire the Court will deliver her to me.

Mr. Just. Dolben. My Lord, we cannot dispose of any other Man's Wife, and they say they are married. We have nothing to do in it.

L. C. J. My Lord Berkeley, your Daughter is free for you to take her; as for Mr. Turner, if he thinks he has any Right to the Lady, let him take his Course. Are you at Liberty and under no Restraint?

Lady Henrietta. I will go with my Husband.

Earl of Berkeley. Hussy, you shall go with me Home.

Lady Henrietta. I will go with my Husband.

Earl of Berkeley. Hussy, you shall go with me, I say.

Lady Henrietta. I will go with my Husband.

Mr. Williams. Now the Lady is here, I suppose my Lord Grey must be discharged of his Imprisonment.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. No, my Lord, we pray he may be continued in Custody.

L. C. J. How can we do that, Brother, the Commitment upon the Writ de Homine replegiando is but till the Body be produced, and here she is, and says, she is under no Restraint.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. My Lord, if you please to take a little Time to consider of it, we hope we may satisfy you that he ought still to be in Custody.

L. C. J. That you can never do, Brother.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. But your Lordship sees upon the Proofs to Day, this is a Cause of an extraordinary foul Nature, and what Verdict the Jury may give upon it we do not know.

Mr. Att. Gen. The Truth of it is, we would have my Lord Grey forthcoming, in Case he should be convicted, to receive the Judgment of the Court.

L. C. J. You cannot have Judgment this Term, Mr. Attorney, that is to be sure, for there are not four Days left. And my Lord Grey is to be found to be sure, there never yet, before this, was any Thing that reflected upon him, though this, indeed, is too much and too black if he be guilty.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Brother, you do ill to press us to what cannot be done; we, it may be, went further then ordinary in what we did, in committing him, being a Peer, but we did it to get the young Lady at Liberty; here she now appears, and says she is under no Restraint; What shall we do? She is properly the Plaintiff in the Homine replegiando, and must declare, if she please, but we cannot detain him in Custody.

L. C. J. My Lord shall give Security to answer her Suit upon the Homine replegiando.

Mr. Williams. We will do it immediately.

L. C. J. We did, when it was moved the other Day by my Brother Maynard, who told us of ancient Precedents, promise to look into them, and when we did so, we found them to be as much to the Purpose, as if he had cast his Cap into the Air, they signified nothing at all to his Point. But we did then tell him (as we did at first tell my Lord so) if he did produce the Lady, we would immediately bail him. And she being now produced, we are bound by Law to bail him. Take his Bail.

[And accordingly he was bailed at the Suit of the Lady Henrietta Berkeley, by Mr. Forrester, and Mr. Thomas Wharton.]

Earl of Berkeley. My Lord, I desire I may have my Daughter again.

L. C. J. My Lord, we do not hinder you, you may take her.

Lady Henrietta. I will go with my Husband.

Earl of Berkeley. Then all that are my Friends seize her I charge you.

L. C. J. Nay, let us have no breaking of the Peace in the Court. By my Lord Cavendish, the Court does perceive, you have apprehended yourself to be affronted by that Gentleman Mr. Craven's naming you in Evidence; and taking Notice of it, they think fit to let you know, they expect you should not think of righting yourself, as they have Thoughts you may intend. And therefore you must lay aside any Thoughts of any such Satisfaction. You would do yourself more Wrong by attempting to right yourself in any such Way.

Lord Cavendish. My Lord, I am satisfied that your Lordship does it was impertinently spoken by him, and shall not concern myself further, but only desire that the Court would give him some Reproof.

Then the Court broke up, and passing through the Hall there was great Scuffle about the Lady, and Swords drawn on both Sides, but Lord Chief Justice coming by, ordered the Tipstaff that attended him to take Charge of her, and carry her over to the King's Bench; and Mr. Forrester asking if he should be committed too, the Chief Justice told him, might go with her if he would, which he did, and as it is reported, lay together that Night in the Marshal's House, and she was released of Prison, by Order of the Court, the last Day of the Term.

On the Morning after the Trial, being Friday the 24th of November, the Jury that tried the Cause, having (as is usual in all Cases not tried at the Bar, where the Court do not sit long enough to take the Verdict) given in a private Verdict the Evening before, at a Judge's Chamber, and being now called over, all appeared, and being asked if they abide by the Verdict that they gave the Night before, they answered, which was read by the Clerk of the Crown to be, That all the Defendants were guilty of the Matters charged in the Information, except Rebecca Jones who was not guilty; which Verdict being recorded, was committed to the Court and the Kings Counsel, and the Jury discharged.

But in the next Vacation the Matter was compromised, and Judgment was ever prayed, or entered upon Record, but Mr. Attorney General was pleased, before the next Hilary-Term, to enter a Nisi Pro as to all the Defendants.

CXIV. Proceedings between the King and the City of London, on an Information in nature of a Quo Warranto †, in the King's-Bench, 1687. Hil. 35 Car. II.

Mich' 33 Car. II. in B. R. Rot. 137. Sir Robert Sawyer, Knight, His Majesty's Attorney General, against the Lord Mayor, and Commonalty, and Citizens of London.

The Information in nature of a Quo Warranto sets forth,

THAT the Mayor, and Commonalty, and Citizens of the City of London, by the space of a Month then last past, and more, used, and yet do claim to have and use, without any lawful Warrant, or regal Grant, within the City of London aforesaid, and the Liberties and Privileges of the same City, the Liberties and Privileges following, viz.

I. To be of themselves a Body Corporate and Politick, by the Name of Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens of the City of London.

II. To have Sheriffs Civitat' & Com' London' & Com' Midd'. and to name, elect, make, and constitute them.

III. That the Mayor and Aldermen of the said City should be Justices of the Peace, and hold Sessions of the Peace.

All which Liberties, Privileges, and Franchises the said Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens of London, upon the King did by the space aforesaid usurp, and yet do usurp.

Plea. THE Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens, appear by their Attorney, and plead,

I. As to their being a Body Politick and Corporate, they prescribe, and say,

1. That the City of London is, and time out of mind hath been, an ancient City, and that the Citizens of that City are, and by all that time have been, a Body Corporate and Politick, by Name of Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens of the City of London.

That in Magna Charta de libertatib' Angliæ, in the Parliament holden 9 Hen. III. it was enacted, Quod civitas London' habeat omnes libertates suas antiquas, & consuetudines suas.

That in the Parliament 1 Ed. III. that King by his Charter De assensu Prelatorum, Comitum, Baronum, & totius communis regni sui, and by Authority of the same Parliament, having recited that the same Citizens, at the time of the making Magna Charta, and also in the time of Edward the Confessor, William the Conqueror, and other his Progenitors, had divers Liberties and Customs, Wills and Grants by Authority aforesaid, That the same Citizens shall have their Liberties according to Magna Charta—And that for any personal Trespass alicujus ministri ejusdem civitatis, libertas civitatis illius in manus ejusdem Domini Regis Ed. III. vel heredum suorum, non caperetur, sed hujusmodi minister prout qualitatem transgressionis puniretur.

They plead also,

That in the Parliament holden 7 R. II. Omnes consuetudines, libertates, franchises, & privilegia civitatis predictæ tunc civibus civitatis illius, & eorum successoribus, licet usi non fuerint, vel abusi fuerint, autoritate ejusdem Parliamenti ratificat' fuerunt.

Then they plead the Confirmation of several later Kings by their Charters; as of King Henry VI. by his Charter, dated 26 Octob. 23 H. VI.

King Edward IV. by his Charter, dated 9 Novem. 2 Ed. IV.

King Henry VII. by his Charter, dated 23 July, 20 H. VII.

King James I. by his Charter, dated 25 Sept. 6 Jac. I.

King Charles I. by his Charter, dated 18 Oct. 14 C. I.

King Charles II. by his Charter, dated 24 Jan. 15 C. II.

Ac eo Warranto they claim to be, and are a Body Politick, &c. and averse their usurping upon the King.

II. As to the having, electing, making, and constituting Sheriffs of London and Middlesex, they plead,

That they are, and time out of mind were, a Body Politick and Corporate, as well by the Name of Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens, quam nomen Civium London. And that King John, by his Letters Patents under the Great Seal of England, in Court produced, dated 5 Julii, anno regni sui primo, granted to the Citizens of London, that they should have electing, making, and constituting Sheriffs of London and Middlesex perpetuum.

Then they plead this Liberty and Franchise confirmed to them by all the aforesaid Statutes and Charters, ac eo Warranto they claim to elect and constitute Sheriffs.

III. As to the Mayors and Aldermen being Justices of the Peace, and holding Sessions, they plead,

That the City is, and time out of mind was, an ancient City and County, and the Citizens a Body Politick.

That King Charles the First, by his Letters Patents, dated 18 Octob. 14

Car. I. granted to the Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens of the City of London, That the Mayor and Aldermen of London, such of them as had been Mayors, should be Justices of the Peace, and should hold Sessions. Et eo Warranto they claim to be Justices, and hold Sessions.

Respons. TO this Plea the Attorney General replies. And as to the Mayor, and Commonalty, and Citizens of London, being a Body Politick and Corporate,

First takes issue, that they never were a Body Corporate, and for this puts himself upon the Country. And then goes over and pleads.

That the Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens, assuming upon themselves to be a Body Politick and Corporate, and by reason thereof to have Power and Authority to convocate and assemble, and make Laws and Ordinances, not contrary to the Laws of the Kingdom, for the better Government of the City and Citizens, and for preserving the King's Peace—Under Colour and Pretext thereof, but respecting only their private Gain and Profit, and against the Trust in a Body Corporate by the Laws of this Kingdom reposed, assumed an unlawful and unjust Authority to levy Money upon the King's Subjects, to their own proper Use, by colour of Laws and Ordinances by them de facto ordained or established; and in prosecution and execution of such illegal and unjust Power and Authority by them usurped, 17 of Septemb. 26 Car. II. in their Common Council assembled, made, constituted, and published a certain Law, by them de facto enacted, for the levying of several Sums of Money of all the King's Subjects, coming to the publick Markets within the City to sell their Provisions, viz. Of every Person for every Horse-load of Provisions into any publick Market within the said City, brought to sell, 2d. per Day. For every Dorser of Provisions, 6d. per Day. For every Cart-load not drawn with more than three Horses, 4d. per Day. If drawn with more than three Horses, 6d. per Day. And that these Sums of Money should be paid to the Use of the Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens: and if any refused to pay, then to be removed from his Place in the Market. And that by colour of this Law, the Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens, for their own private Gain, had illegally, by the space of seven Years next after the making this Ordinance, received divers great Sums of Money, in all amounting to 5000l. per Annum, in Oppression of the King's Subjects.

And further, That whereas a Session of Parliament was holden by Prorogation, and continued to the 10th of January, 32 Car. II. and then prorogued to the 20th of January then next:

The Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens, 13 Jan. 32 Car. II. in their Common Council assembled, unlawfully, maliciously, advisedly, and seditiously, and without any lawful Authority, assumed upon themselves ad censendum & judicandum dictum Dominum Regem, & prorogationem Parliamenti per Dominum Regem sic facti. And then and there in Common Council assembled, did give their Votes and Order, that a certain Petition under the name of the Mayor, Aldermen, and Commons of the City of London, in Common Council assembled, to the King should be exhibited; in which said Petition was contained,

That by the Prorogation, the Prosecution of the publick Justice of the Kingdom, and the making necessary Provision for the Preservation of the King, and of his Protestant Subjects, had received Interruption. And that the Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens in the same Common Council assembled, did unlawfully, maliciously, advisedly, and seditiously, and with Intention that the said Petition should be dispers'd amongst the King's Subjects, to induce an Opinion in them, that the said King by proroguing the Parliament, had obstructed the publick Justice, and to incite the King's Subjects to Hatred of the King's Person and Government, and to disturb the Peace of the Kingdom, did order that the said Petition should be printed, and the same was printed accordingly to the Intent and Purpose aforesaid.

By which the Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens aforesaid, the Privilege, Liberty, and Franchise of being a Body Politick and Corporate did forfeit, and afterwards, by the time in the Information, that Liberty and Franchise of being a Body Politick did usurp upon the King. Et hoc, &c.

And as to the other two Pleas, viz. The making and having Sheriffs and Justices of the Peace, the Attorney General imparles to Mich. Term.

Rejoinder. THE Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens, as to the Plea of the Attorney General, pleaded in assigning a Forfeiture of their being a Body Politick and Corporate,

Protestando, That those Pleas, by the Attorney pleaded, and the matter in the same contained, are insufficient in the Law to forejudge or exclude the Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens from being a Corporation.

Protestando etiam, That no Act or Deed, or By-Law made by the Mayor, Aldermen, and Common Council is the Act or Deed of the Body Corporate.

Protestando etiam, That they, the Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens of London, never took upon them any unlawful or unjust Authority to tax the King's Subjects for their own private Gain, or did ever levy or exact from the King's Subjects, coming to Markets, such yearly Sums as in the Replication are alledged—For Plea say,

That London is the Metropolis of England, and very populous, & Celeberrimum Emporium totius Europæ.

That there are, and Time out of mind, have been divers public Markets for Provision and Merchandise within the said City to be sold.

That the Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens have been, time out of mind, and yet are, seiz'd of these Markets in Fee, and by all the said time at their own Costs and Expences have provided and have accustomed, and ought to provide at their own costs Places for the holding the said Markets and Stalls, and Standings, and other Accommodations for Persons bringing Provisions and Merchandizes to the said Markets and Supervisors and other Officers for the better preserving and ordering the said Markets; and of the great concourse of Persons coming to the same; and for the sustaining and supporting of the said Costs and Expences, by all the time aforesaid have had, and ought to have reasonable Tolls, Rates, or Sums of Money, of Persons coming to the said Markets for their Stalls, Standings and other Accommodations by them for the better exposing their Commodities had and enjoyed.

They further say, That the Citizens and Freemen of London are very numerous, (viz.) 50000 and more.

That within the said City there hath been, time out of mind, a Common Council assembled, as often as necessary, consisting of the Mayor, Aldermen, and of certain of the Citizens, not exceeding 250 Persons thereto annually elected, called the Commons of the said City.

That there is a Custom within the said City for the Mayor, Aldermen, and Common Council, to make By-Laws and Ordinances for the Regulation and Government of the publick Markets within the City.

That these Liberties and Customs of the City were confirmed by Magna Charta, and the other Statutes in the Plea abovementioned.

That by reason of the burning of the City in Sept. 1666. and the Alterations in the Market-Houses and Places thereby occasioned, for the establishing and resettling the Markets within the City, 17 Sept. 26 Car. II. the then Mayor, Aldermen, and Commons, in Common Council assembled, according to the said Custom, for the better Regulation of the said Market, did make and publish an Ordinance, entituled, An Act for the Settlement and Well-ordering the publick Markets within the City of London, by which said Ordinance reciting that for the accommodation of the Market-people with Stalls, Shelters, and other Necessaries for their standing in the Markets, and for the amendment, paving, and cleansing the Market-places, and for the support and defraying the incident Charges thereof, there have been always certain reasonable Rates and Duties paid for the same. And to the intent that the said Rates may be ascertained and made publick to all Market-people, and the Collectors restrained from exacting—It was enacted and ordained by the said Common Council, that the Rates and Sums in the Replication should be paid to the use of the Mayor and Commonalty and Citizens; or upon refusal, to be removed out of the Market. And they aver, that these are all the Rates or Duties paid, and were reasonable Sums to be paid; and these they have demanded and received for the Use and Purpose aforesaid, as was lawful for them to do.

As to the other matter alledged by the Attorney General in assigning the Forfeiture, they say,

That within this Kingdom (viz.) at the Parish of St. Michael Bassishaw, London, there was an execrable Plot and Conspiracy profecuted by Papists to destroy the King, and to subvert the ancient Government, and suppress the true Religion in this Kingdom established.

That Sir Edmundbury Godfrey took Examinations of Witnesses, and Informations of the same; and also of the burning of London by the Papists.

That divers of these Conspirators had lain in wait for him, and murdered him, to the intent to suppress his Examinations, and to deter other Magistrates from acting in the Discovery.

That Green and others were try'd, and hang'd for this Murder.

That Coleman, and others were also try'd, and executed for the same Conspiracy.

That William Lord Powis, Lord Arundel of Warder, Lord Petre, Lord Bellasis, were impeached by the Commons in Parliament of High Treason for the same Conspiracies, and sent to the Tower.

That the King in his Speech to that Parliament had recommended to them the further pursuit and examination of that Conspiracy, declaring he thought not himself nor them safe, till that matter were gone through with; and therefore that it was necessary that the said Lords in the Tower should be brought to their Trials, that Justice might be done; and the Parliament having made an Address to the King, wherein both Lords and Commons declared their being deeply sensible of the sad condition of the Realm, occasioned chiefly by the Conspiracies of a Popish Party, who had plotted and intended the Destruction of the King, and Subversion of the Government and Religion of the Kingdom; and thereupon a Solemn Fast kept pursuant to the King's Proclamation, grounded upon the said Address, and divers Bills prepared to be pass'd into Laws for Preservation of his Protestant Subjects.

These Impeachments and Bills being thus depending, and the Lords in the Tower not tried, the Parliament was upon the 10th of January prorogued, as the Attorney General above in his Replication hath alledged, by reason whereof the Citizens and Inhabitants of the said City, being faithful Subjects to the King, were much disquieted with the Sense and Apprehensions of the Danger threatening the Person of the King, His Government and Realm, by reason of the Conspiracies aforesaid, as is by both King and Parliament affirmed and declared; and conceiving no better means to prevent, than by the Sitting of the Parliament; and having received a Petition from divers faithful Subjects, Citizens of London, to the same effect: And it being lawful to petition, the Mayor Sir Patience Ward, and the Aldermen and Commons, in Common Council assembled, for the preservation of the King and His Government, did cause to be written the Petition in the Replication mentioned, which is set forth in hæc verba; and did Order, that after the same was presented to the King, it should be printed for the satisfaction of the troubled Minds of the said Citizens; and traverse the writing or making any other Petition, or making this to any other end or intent than they have pleaded.

THE Attorney General as to the Plea of the Mayor, and Commonalty, and Citizens pleaded to the the making and publishing the Ordinance about the Markets.

Protestando, That the Mayor, and Commonalty, and Citizens were not seiz'd of the Markets, nor at their charges provided Stalls and Necessaries, or Market-places.

Protestando etiam, That the said Rates and Sums were not reasonable. For Plea faith, That by a Statute made 22 Car. II. it was enacted, that Places for Markets should be set out, and 2d. per Chaldron upon Coals for the Charge of that, and many other things, was given; and that they received a great Sum out of that Duty for the Purpose aforesaid; and yet for their own private Lucre took the Money by the Ordinance.

And traverseth, That the Mayor, and Commonalty and Citizens, time out of mind, habuerunt & habere consueverunt Tolnetas, Ratas, five denariorum summas per ipsos Majorem, Communitatem, & Civis superius suppositas per prefatam Legem, five Ordinationem predictam Affess. & in certitudinem reduci. prout per placitum suum superius rejuvendo placitum supponitur.

And to the Plea of the Mayor, and Commonalty, and Citizens, pleaded to the Residue of the Attorney's matter assigned for a Forfeiture, as aforesaid.

The Attorney Protestando, That the aforesaid Prorogation of the Parliament was for urgent Causes concerning the good of the Kingdom, and thereby the prosecution of publick Justice not interrupted.

And demurs to the said Plea of the Mayor, and Commonalty, and Citizens by them pleaded as to the Petition.

THE Mayor, and Commonalty, and Citizens, as to the making and publishing the Ordinance for the Payment of Monies by those that come to the said Markets, say as before.

That the Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens have, time out of Mind, had, and accustomed to have, reasonable Tolls, Rates, or Sums of Money of all Persons coming to these Markets with Victuals and Provisions there to be sold, for Stalls, Standings, and other Accommodations, by them had for exposing their Victuals and Provisions to Sale. And of this they put themselves upon the Country, &c. To this the Attorney demurs.

And as to the Plea by the Mayor, and Commonalty, and Citizens pleaded to the Residue of the Matter by the Attorney General, assigned for a Forfeiture, they join in Demurrer †.

This great Case was only twice argued at the Bar: First, by Mr. Finch, the King's Solicitor, for the King; and Sir George Trevelyan, Recorder of London, for the City. And next by Sir Robert Sawyer, the King's Attorney General, for the King; and Henry Pollock, for the City.

The First Argument was in Hilary Term on Wednesday, Febr. 7.

Mr. Sol- THE Questions in this Case, as I think, will be, licitor.

I. Whether any Corporation can be forfeited?

II. Whether the City of London differ from other Corporations as to point of Forfeiture?

III. Whether any Act of the Mayor, Aldermen, and Common Council, in Common Council assembled, be so much the Act of the Corporation, as can make a Forfeiture?

IV. Whether the Acts by them done in making the By-Law, and receiving Money by it; or in making the Petition, and causing it to be printed and published, be such Acts, as if done by the Corporation, will make a Forfeiture of the Corporation?

I. The First of these Questions truly I should not make any Question

† When the Demurrer in this Case was joined (viz. Mich. Term, 34 Car. II.) Mr. Serjeant Pemberton was Chief Justice of the King's Bench. But before Hilary Term when it came to be argued, he was removed, and made Chief Justice of the Common-Bench; and Sir Edmund Saunders, who had been Counsel for the King, in drawing advising the Pleadings, was made Chief Justice of the King's Bench.

at all, but that this Case has been a Case of so great Expectation, that man hath discoursed about it, and the prejudice that some have entertained concerning it, have drawn them to assert the Negative Proposition. Therefore, my Lord, because this strikes to the whole, though I have it hath no Foundation in Law, I will beg leave to remove this Objection out of the Case.

1. First of all, No Corporation hath any other Creation than any other Franchises have, and subsist upon the same Terms that other Franchises do.

2. There is a Trust or a Condition in Law, that is annexed to, and grows upon all Franchises, that they be not abused, and the Breach of them is a Forfeiture of the very being of the Franchise.

3. And as there is no Foundation of that Opinion in Law, the Mischiefs would be great, if the Law were otherwise. For,

1. First, that no Corporation hath any other Creation than other Franchises have; 'tis undoubtedly true that the King is the Original and Commencement of all Franchises; they have their beginning from him, the Books are clear and full in it: I need not quote them, though there are many, Kelway 138. 17 Ed. II. 530. in the Reports of those times set forth by Mr. Serjeant Maynard. Now, my Lord, there can be no Corporation, but by the King's Letters Patents; for even the Prescription doth suppose there was the King's Patent to create it at first. And therefore the proper inquiry will be about the Second thing.

2. How far the Breach of Trust that is annexed to a Franchise, is a Forfeiture of that Franchise.

First of all, There is no Rule in Law more certain, than that the Mischief of a Franchise is a Forfeiture of that Franchise. This the Statute of 18 Ed. II. does very well prove, which was an Act of Grace to restore Franchises to those that had lost and forfeited them. There it was restrained Ita quod libertat' non sint abusa. And my Lord Coke 2 Inst. in his Observations upon the Statute of Westm. 1. that Chapter of it that concerns Towns that exacted more Murage than was granted, fol. 223. says, They shall lose that Grant for ever; says the Mirror of Just. which my Lord Coke there quotes, that is no more than the Common Law; for the Law wills that every Man should lose his Franchise, that does misuse it: So the Abbot of St. Albans Case, 8 Hen. IV. 18. The King seized the Franchise into his hand, because the Abbot, who had the Gaol, would not give Pledges to make Deliverance, and for detaining his Prisoners a long time without making a lawful Deliverance. And so 20 Ed. IV. 6. The Abbot of Crowland's Case for detaining Prisoners acquitted after fees paid, the King seized the Gaol for ever. These two are cited by my Lord Coke 2 Inst. 43. And in Sir George Reynel's Case, 9 Report, Fitzherbert's Abridgment, Titl' coron' placit' 233. a Layman was taken in Robbery, the Ordinary challenges him as a Clerk, whereas he was a Layman: It was ruled, that for his false challenge the Ordinary should lose his Temporalities to the King, and lose his Franchise to challenge Clerks, for him and his Successors for ever. Thus far is plain, That Franchises, if misused, are forfeited; and that though enjoyed by Persons as a corporate capacity, as appears by the Cases put. And then as a Corporation may forfeit any Franchise they are seized of in right of the Corporation, so may a Corporation forfeit the Franchise of the Corporation itself, upon the same ground and reason in Law: unless any one will say, The Franchise of being a Corporation cannot be misused; and that could be very strange matter to assert.

Every Corporation is entrusted with a Franchise to make Laws for governing the Subject within it's Jurisdiction. If that Power be exercised to the Subjects prejudice, as it may be, it were an hard matter if there were no Law to redress that Grievance. Suppose a Corporation under their common Seal should authorise a Rebellion, would any Man say that were a Forfeiture? 'Tis said indeed by Pigott, 21 Ed. IV. f. 13. Arguendo upon a Case (where the Question is, Whether a Corporation should avoid a writ entered into by the Mayor by Duress.) That a Corporation can neither commit Treason or Felony; but upon the same Reason that he urges, that a Corporation cannot act at all, that is, abstractedly from all the members of it; for so this Notion is, that a Corporation is a Body in consideration of Law only, and not Reality; and therefore the particular act even of the head of that Body shall affect him personally only. But this is only a Notion of his arguing; but it is the best Opinion of that Book, that Durefs to the Members did so affect the Corporation, that it could avoid the Bond.

Now, my Lord, a Corporation may be surrendered; and surely that may be surrendered, may be forfeited; and I shall offer you some authorities in this case, 12 E. III. rot. claus. memb. 36. a Writ is directed to the Constable of Dover, reciting, That the Cinque-Ports had seized the Goods of several Merchant Strangers Portugueses, and others; and the Writ commands that Right should be done, or else the Franchise should be seized into the King's Hands, 6 Ed. II. rot. claus. No. 5. The Liberties of the City of Bristol were seized, and the Custody of it granted for divers Contempts and Injuries done per Regem, Balivos, & Communitat' to the King; and so the close Rolls R. II. m. 6.

There is another Case that comes further, Pasc. 9 Ed. I. Majus rot. 25. and it likewise among my Lord Chief Justice Hales Collections, that has given to Lincoln's Inn Library; I took it out of that Book: 'Tis in Collection of the Adjudicata in the time of Ed. I. fol. 28. a. Thus it is: There was the Abbot of St. Austlin in Canterbury had made an Agreement with the Men of Sandwich, about paying Ten Hogheads of Wine yearly to the Abbot; and there was due to the Abbot some Thirty Marks, he had Judgment, and Execution went out; and thus 'tis in the Book, Vic. de—mandatur, quod levare fac' 30 Marcas de bonis ipsius, pro pretio 10 Doleorum Vini annuatim solvend'. And they were rescued when the Sheriff came to execute the Writ, and they were for that; and the Judgment of the King and his Council, which was by Parliament, for it was adjourned into Parliament, was, Quod lib' de Sandwich forisfact' sit. And there is this Observation, tho' it be taken with the same Hand, which is not his, but the Clerk's that transcribed it, Judicium illud extendit contra Barones 5 Portuum, & eorum lib'as, ut mili videtur. These are the Words of that Book: And this goes a great way with the City of London, as to their Confirmation of Magna Charta; for the Cinque-Ports are confirmed by Act of Parliament, as well as they.

Now, my Lord, there are many Cases of like nature, and that even in the Case of the City of London too, as I shall shew you by and by. Now these are not Judgments in Quo Warranto's, to oust a Corporation of Franchise of being a Corporation, yet it shews, that these things were forfeitures of all the Franchises of a Corporation; for a Seizure is never where there is Matter for Forfeiture found upon Record, as in Sir

George Reynel's Case; or to ground a Forfeiture, upon which to bring a Quo Warranto, as in our Case. But in the Case of 9 Ed. I. there it does appear Judgment was given by the Parliament, that the Liberty should be forfeited, not that it should be seized into the King's Hands only.

Now, my Lord, where all the Franchises of a Corporation are forfeited, what is the Corporation? Truly, 'tis nothing, 'tis but a Name; a Corporation without a Power to act, is nothing at all. Indeed, I do not find any Judgment in a Quo Warranto of a Corporation being forfeited; yet, my Lord, it doth not follow from thence that this cannot be by Law; for many Quo Warranto's have been brought against London, and other Places too, to oust Corporations of their Franchises, but it hath always ended in Submission to the King, and so they have been at quiet. All the Quo Warranto's in Mr. Attorney Palmer's time, after the King's Restoration, against the several Corporations, they all submitted; and yet that was to question the very being of their Corporations.

Now, my Lord, pray consider a little upon the Rule of Law. It should seem very strange, if a Corporation should neglect to come into Eyre, or into the King's Bench, the same Term that a Quo Warranto is brought against them, they must be ousted of their Franchise for ever, as 'tis said 15 Ed. IV. 6 & 7. And yet, when all the Contempts and Oppositions imaginable are found upon Record, that this should not be a Forfeiture, that seems absurd that a Neglect in Eyre should do it, but all the Oppressions and Offences in the World, when found upon Record, should not do it.

3. But, my Lord, the Mischief that would follow from hence are very great. How many Oppressions and Offences would be daily committed, if every Corporation were a Franchise and Jurisdiction independent upon the Crown? and the Punishment truly of some particular Men for those Offences would not be adequate, where the Power of offending and misgoverning should still remain; sure that were no adequate Redress of such an Inconvenience. And to this purpose my Lord, I shall humbly offer a Case, and 'tis that great Case between the Earls of Gloucester and Hereford, Hil' 20 Ed. I. in B. R. rot. Wallie 14. 'Tis likewise in Riley's Placita Parliamenti, 83, 86. The Case is this in short: They both claimed the Liberty of Returna Brevium, and they had incurred great Contempts in refusing to obey the King's Writs; and Judgment was given against them, that the Liberty should be seized for this Reason, which, I think, will go a great way in this Case, and for which I offer it, Quia puniendus est Dominus libertatis in eo quo deliquit. I think, my Lord, as I said, that will go a great way in this Case to shew the Reason of the Law.

My Lord, if the granting of too many and too large Franchises were a Mischief, as certainly it was by the Law, and as appears by the Commons Petitions 21 Ed. III. rot. Parl. No. 17. where they pray, That new and large Franchises may not be granted, because it tended to the overthrowing the Common Law, and great Oppression of the People. And the King's Answer was, That Care should be taken for the time to come. I say then, if this were such a Mischief, that there ought not to be granted new and large Franchises, much more would it be a Mischief, if these Franchises should not be under the Controul of the Law, when they exercise such Oppression. And so, my Lord, I shall leave that Point; for I think it will be pretty clear, that a Corporation may forfeit their Being of a Corporation.

II. I shall next consider, Whether the City of London be in any other Plight than any other Corporations. I think, truly, there is no Difference at all. Now this Question doth depend upon what they have set forth by their Plea; and that is, the Confirmation of Magna Charta, cap. 9. Civitas London' habeat omnes libertates suas antiquas, & consuetudines suas. And then the Act of 1 E. III. upon which my Lord Coke, in his 4 Inst. 253. says, that the Franchise of this City shall not for any Cause be seized into the King's Hands. And then that of 7 R. II. which says, that the City shall enjoy it's whole Liberties, licet non usi vel abusi. This is their Foundation, upon which they would distinguish this City from all other Corporations. Now as to these things, I give these Answers:

First for Magna Charta, That plainly is no more a Confirmation to them, than 'tis to other Cities and Corporations. For not only the City of London is named to have it's ancient Liberties and Customs preserved, but 'tis likewise omnes alie Civitat' &c. and all Cities, Burroughs, and Towns, and the Barons of Cinque-Ports, and all other Ports, should have all their Liberties and free Customs. So my Lord Coke agrees it in his Comment. And in what he cites out of the Mirror of Justice, and other ancient Authors of our Law, they should enjoy their Franchises which they had Right to by lawful Title of the Gift and Confirmation of the King, and which they had not forfeited by any Abuse. So that the Act which confirmed them, did not purge former Forfeitures, much less did it license other Abuses.

Then for their Acts of 1 E. III. and 7 R. II. I shall humbly offer this, That as they are in truth no Acts of Parliament at all, so they will not concern this Question, whatsoever my Lord Coke says concerning them. But I shall give some instances before these Acts, to shew that they never had such an unquestionable Power as they now dream of, and then some Instances in after times, that there either were no such Acts, or no such Sense at least is to be put upon them, as they have strained to make.

First, it appears 15 E. I. that the Franchise of the City of London was seized into the King's Hand, and Johannes de Britton was made Custos Civitatis London', who was no Freeman; and this implies, that the Franchise was seized into the King's Hands, for they had a Power to choose de seipfis, by Charter from King John, a Citizen to be Mayor or chief Governor; but here was another Governor appointed them.

Then Rot' Pat' 26 E. I. Rex pro bono servicio civit' London' reddit eis civit' suam London' habend' dict' civibus ad volunt' Regis. Teste Rege. So that both the City, and all its Franchises, were seized at that time; for he restored the very City of London to the Citizens habend' during his Will

Will and Pleasure. Thus, my Lord, it stood in the time of E. I. Then in the time of E. II. seized again; 14 E. II. memb. 21. of the Pat. Rolls, in 21. Rex dimisit civibus London' officium Major' civitat' London. 15 E. II. Rex dedit licentiam eligendi Major' London. And in the second part of Pat' Rolls 15 E. II. m. 5. the King recites, That whereas in the Fourteenth Year of his Reign he had replevied to them the Office of Mayor, usque quindenam Sancti Martini, and also recites, which Office was seized into the King's Hands by the Justice of Eyre in the Tower of London, and he was willing to continue it longer to them, ex gratia speciali he did grant them the said Office, quandiu, &c.

Then the second part of Pat' Rolls in 20 E. II. it is recited, That the King had seized the Office of the Mayoralty, and had replevied it from time to time; and that one Hammond de Chigwell was made Mayor, the King had accepted of him for Mayor, Et Rex volens eis gratiam uberiores facere, grants him the Office of Mayor.

Now, my Lord, these Seizures shew plainly, that the Franchises of the City were forfeitable; for either they were seized upon Matter of Record found for a Forfeiture, or else upon some Matter which was to be a Ground of a Forfeiture. So then they were absolutely gone, and I do not find that these were ever taken out of the King's Hands by Process of Law, but were restored by Grace and Favour; for till the 20 E. II. it appears, that they so long continued in the King's Hands, and he absolutely disposed of them.

Here is now a Favour to them, and a plenary Restitution. Thus it stood in the Reigns of E. I. and E. II.

Now the next thing will be for their Act of 1 E. III. which they back with my Lord Coke's Observation upon it, that it was Authoritate Parliamenti. Now, truly My Lord, there is no such Act of Parliament that is any where extant. For it is not in Print, neither are there any Parliament Rolls of E. III's time till 4 E. III. And he that cites it, my Lord Coke himself, cites no Roll at all for it; so that where we shall find this Act of Parliament, truly I do not know. But this Act at best amounts to no more, than that for any personal Trespas of Officers the Liberties of the City should not be seized: but that signifies nothing, for that is not our Case. There are Acts of the Corporations, not of particular Officers; though I cannot but observe how the Law was taken to be at that time, before this their pretended Act, even for the Offence of private Officers; and that appears to be the Law too in the Case of 9. E. I. which I cited before, which was only the Offence of the Mayor of Sandwich, who refused to answer for a Trespas, and a Rescue was committed, and the whole Liberty seized.

Now this Act of 1 E. III. be it what it will, though they would take it in that Sense, that no Forfeiture should be incurred for the Trespas of an Officer, yet I find quite the contrary thereunto, and that it hath not prevailed even in that Sense. For 5 E. III. rot. claus. 14. there the King did discharge one from the Office of Mayor, and commands the Aldermen and Commonalty to choose another. Now this, my Lord, I take to be not so much a punishment of the Officer, as a breaking in upon the Franchise itself. But I shall shew more fully in the Reign of R. II. that this was done.

Yet I will first take notice of the Statute of R. II. which is the next thing that they rely upon; and this, with Submission, is no Act of Parliament neither; for though my Lord Coke, in his 5th Inst. 205. says, this is the Statute mentioned in our Books, which supports the Customs in London to devise in Mortmain, and other Customs against Acts of Parliament and cites Authorities in the Margin; yet my Lord, I have looked, and can find none of them to speak to the purpose for which they are cited, but the Book of 7. H. VI. fol. 1. where the Custom of London to devise in Mortmain is in Question; and there it was ruled a good Custom, because of the Statute that confirms it after the Statute of Mortmain, but says the Book, Quere the Statute; so that they were not well apprized of the Statute in those Days, though this were the Foundation of all these Resolutions of that kind.

It appears by the Roll, that it is no Act of Parliament in the Nature of it, for it is 7 R. II. N<sup>o</sup>. 37. 'tis a Prayer of the Commons, That there might be a Patent granted to the City confirming their Liberties, licet non usi vel abusi fuerint. And the Answer was, Le Roy le veult; but this is no Act of Parliament, it is no more than a Confirmation of the Letters Patents, which had been Primo, R. II. Besides further, there never was any Patent granted in Pursuance of this Act: And yet 'tis plain, that if it had been so, it would only have extended to Forfeitures that were past, but could never amount to a Dispensation or License for the future. And my Lord, this appears by these Authorities and Records that I shall now cite. The first part of Pat' Rolls 16 R. II. membr. 36, 37. whereby it fully appears, That notwithstanding these pretended Statutes, there was no such Privilege in the City, but that for the Offences of their Officers, or themselves, the Franchise should be seized.

But, my Lord, I must a little observe, that truly the City have attempted to raise themselves above the Fear of any Judgment in any of the King's Courts; for in Primo R. II. Parl. Roll 126. there they petition for a Confirmation of their Character, with a Clause of licet non usi vel abusi, which was that they then would have to be done in Parliament for them. But they do likewise desire in their Petition, that notwithstanding any Statute, Privilege, Charters, Judgment made, or to be made to the contrary, their Liberties might be confirmed; of this, 'tis said, The King will advise. There is in 1 R. II. Parliament Rolls 121. as pleasant a Petition as the other; they there do desire, that the Interpretation of their Charter may be left to themselves; and where it is doubting, such Meaning as they should put upon it should be allowable. But to that the King's Answer was, That he would make the Interpretation of his own Charters, according as his Council should advise. So that I observe, they would fain have been absolute, but they could never do it; it hath always been denied them. So that from what was done at this time, and after 7 R. II. it does appear plainly, that there was no Difference between the City of London and any other Corporation, only this is really the greatest. But as all Greatness is the King's Favour; so when Men forget their Duty, in abusing the King's Favour, this great Court is the Place to put them in Mind of it. I come then to the Third Question:

III. Whether the Act of the Mayor, Aldermen, and Commonalty, in Common Council assembled, be an Act of the Corporation, so as to make a Forfeiture of the whole? And with Submission, my Lord, that will be pretty clear too upon these Reasons:

1. First of all, the whole Corporation is fully represented by them, notwithstanding the Disparity of Number set forth in their Rejoinder.

2. Again, All By-laws and Ordinances made for the good Government and Order of the City, are certainly the Acts of the Corporation; but the sole Power of making those Laws is in the Mayor, Aldermen, and Common Council; and therefore sure the whole Power of the Corporation is in the Common Council.

3. They have the sole Power of the Corporation-Seal. They can bind all the whole Corporation by any Alienation to, or Charge upon their Inheritance; and by Consequence they may surrender all or any of their Franchises, and then as I said, they may forfeit them.

4. They have pleaded that there hath been Time out of mind a Common Council, consisting of the Mayor, Aldermen, and Two hundred and fifty Citizens, who are called the Commons of the City. So that it shall be intended now, that as they have prescribed for it as incident to their Corporation, it was part of their Original Constitution to be thus represented by them, and ruled and governed by their Laws: But there is another reason for it, and that is, that it is an inseparable incident to a Corporation, implied in Law without grant, that they have a power to make By-Laws to bind the Corporation, without which there were no Government in a Corporation; and therefore a misfure of that Power must be a Forfeiture of their Corporation, because 'tis a breach of their Original Trust: 22 Affis. pl. 34. there is this Rule given, and a true one it is, Where there are many Franchises granted, which do not depend one upon another, there the misfure of one is a Forfeiture of that one which was misfured; but where there are several parts of a Franchise depending all upon the said Franchise, if any part be misfured, the entire Franchise shall be forfeited. As for instance, if a Man have a Fair, a Court of Pypowers is incident to it, the misfure of that Court of Pypowers is a Forfeiture of the whole Fair itself; for where any Part is abused that is incident to an entire Franchise, that Abuse forfeits the whole.

And this is the Opinion of Palmer's Reports in the Case of the Corporation of Maidenhead, where 'tis doubted whether the Market was forfeited for taking too much Toll, because the Toll was not inseparably incident to the Market, and so was not dependent upon the entire Franchise, and there the rule is taken, as I have said before, that the misfure of a part of an entire Franchise: or a power that is incident to it, is a Forfeiture of the Franchise.

Then, my Lord, if they cannot forfeit here, the whole power of the Trust of the Corporation is reposed in them, and may be misfured by them, to the Oppression of the King's Subjects, and there is no remedy, if they shall not be punished at all. For it is much harder to say, that several Acts of all the particular Persons should forfeit the Corporation, than that their joint Act should do it. But this, my Lord, is an Act contrary to the trust upon creating the Corporation, and may be a misfure to the prejudice and oppression of all people; and if this should not forfeit the Corporation, there is no remedy at all, but the power remains of oppressing as it did before.

Now, my Lord, I think, with submission, I have made it pretty plain, and as they are not distinguished from other Corporations in Point of Privilege as to Forfeitures, so this is their Act, and shall bind them, being done by their Representatives.

IV. Then the fourth Point will be, Whether these Offences set forth in the Replication are Forfeitures?

1. The first is the making of that Law in the Common Council for the levying of Sums of Money upon the King's Subjects, and the actual levying of those Sums accordingly; and this they justify under their Prescription to have reasonable Tolls, as they set forth in their Pleadings, from all Persons that come to their Markets to sell Provision there, and power to reduce their Tolls to a certainty by an Act of Common Council. That is their Justification; so that, my Lord, the first thing to be considered is,

(1.) What right they have to these Tolls or Sums of Money assessed by the By-law? and then,

(2.) Whether if they have no right, their taking upon them to make a Law be a Forfeiture?

(1.) For their Right, that depends upon a prescription to have reasonable Toll, as they set it forth, and this, as they have pleaded it, appears to be no right at all; for a prescription to have Toll and Tollage, shewing how much in certain, is void; for reasonable Toll is not incident to a Market, but the Party has it by the King's Grant, and so 'twas judged in this Court, Mich. 39 & 40 Eliz. cited by my Lord Coke in the Second Inst. 220. So if the King grant a Toll, if he do not in the Grant ascertain how much shall be taken for Toll, that Grant is void, and so is the Prescription too, as you may see in the Corporation of Maidenhead in Palmer's Reports, fol. 79. grounded upon 9 H. VI. 45. 11 H. VI. 19. and so he cites the Opinion of Popham in the Case of Weldhouse, for no Subject can prescribe to have Toll, but by the Grant of the King.

But, my Lord, this is not properly a Toll neither, nor in the nature of a Toll; for that is always paid by the Buyer, and never paid by the Seller; but here all that comes to the Market, whether they buy or sell, buy, sell or not sell, they must pay by this Law. My Lord, I cannot see there may be a custom for Persons to pay for Standings in a Fair or Market, as that Cafe was 9 H. VI. 45. but yet that must be prescribed in a certain Sum, which is not done here. And this customary payment is in the same nature as a Toll traverse, or a Toll through, which cannot be in an uncertain Sum; for they are all by Prescription and a Grant of them now uncertain would not be

But, my Lord, however, Judgment upon these Pleadings must be given against the City; for either the Prescription, as they have set it forth, is good, or it is not good; if it be good, then the Traverse that is taken is well taken, to wit, that they have no such Custom, and they ought to have taken Issue upon that which they have not done; for, my Lord, they have taken Issue thus, That, Time out of Mind, they have had reasonable Toll of all Persons coming to the Market to sell their Provision, without tying of it to the reasonable Toll assessed and reduced to Certainty by the Law; and this is naught: For though they had a reasonable Toll in general, taking the Prescription to be good, yet if either that reasonable Toll in the use of it were not taken in that Manner, or to that Value that they assess by their By-law, then have they done Wrong; and therefore our Traverse is proper to their reasonable Toll, that they had not, Time out of Mind, such a Toll as they set forth; for it must be such a reasonable Toll as may answer to that which is assessed in the By-law; and that they have not put in Issue. For the King, when once he hath granted a Market, cannot after grant Toll to that Market, because it is a free Market, and the People have Right to come to it as a free Market; neither can they, when once by Custom they have exercised their Power of assessing reasonable Toll, alter that at their Pleasure; for it being once set, all People have Right to come upon such Terms: And if they increase the Toll, under Pretence to reduce it to Certainty, it will be void; for they may lower their Price if they will, but they can never come to increase the Penalty. If, therefore, they have done Ill in not taking Issue upon the Traverse, which does take in the full Substance of their Rejoinder; if it be good, then Judgment must be given against them upon that Reason; so then, my Lord, the Question will be,

(2.) Whether the making of a Law to raise Money at large upon the Subject be a Forfeiture of the Charter? And truly, my Lord, that it is. For, First, It is the usurping of a Power that they neither can have, nor have by Law.

Secondly, It is a Breach of the Trust annexed to the Corporation; for 'tis a Misuse of the Franchise, to the Oppression of the King's Subjects; and therefore the Charter must be forfeited, and not the other Franchise; not the Franchise of a Toll, for they have none; not the Franchise of the Market, for that would be nothing. If the Market be forfeited, it must either be extinguished or kept, if it be extinguished, 'tis a Punishment to others that did not offend; and if it be kept, though it be forfeited, 'tis no Punishment to them that do offend: And 'tis a Question whether a Market may be forfeited for taking unreasonable Toll; and that appears in the Case of Maidenhead. And, as my Lord Coke says upon the Statute about taking outrageous Toll, the Franchise should be seized only till it be redeemed by them.

But, my Lord, however, without going far into that Matter, this Offence lies not only in taking the Money, but in taking upon them, and usurping a Power to make Laws to raise Money. They have taken upon them a legislative Power to oppress their Fellow Subjects, that is their Offence, and that is a Misuse of their Franchise. My Lord, in the Case of Ship-money it was not the Quantum of Money that was raised, that was complained or quarrelled at, but it was the Manner of levying it without an Act of Parliament. The Logick and Consequence of that was it, which was so much debated and stood upon. So here, the Abuse and the Offence is the making the Law, and the Consequence of that; for by the same Reason that they have a Prescription to lay so much, they may have a Prescription to lay ten Times as much. So that upon what I offer upon this Point, I conceive it ought to amount to a Forfeiture of their Charter, and the Loss of their Corporation.

Then the next Thing will be that which is the last Matter, that is the Petition, and that is of a strange nature; where the Offence is not only presenting, but in printing and dispersing of it; it charges the King with interrupting the publick Justice of the Nation, and the making the necessary Provisions for the Security of his Protestant Subjects; for, my Lord, to say, that the Prorogation of the Parliament, which is the King's Act, who surely has alone, and none but he, the undoubted Prerogative calling, proroguing, and dissolving Parliaments; to say that Act of his was an Interruption of Justice, is all one as to say, the King did interrupt: And 'tis done by them as a Corporation; 'tis the Act of the City in their Common Council in the Name of the Corporation; and, as they have pleaded it, the Mayor, Citizens, and Commonalty, in Common Council did do it, which sure is the Corporation, as they would have it. And that I rely upon for the Reasons I offered before upon that Point.

Then the Matter of this Petition is the taking upon them to censure the King and his Government by this Petition. The printing and dispersing is now publickly scandalizing and libelling the King; for 'tis in the Nature of an Appeal to the People: 'tis unlawful to print any Man's private Case, while it is depending in any Court of Judicature, before it comes to Judgment, because 'tis an Appeal to the People. And that was Lord Chief Justice Hale's Opinion in Colonel King's Case. And the Consequences of such Proceedings are so many, and the Danger so great in these licentious Days, that I do not know indeed whether it will tend.

The Fact is confessed by them in their Rejoinder; but they say they do it to alleviate Men's Fears, and quiet their Minds absq; hoc, that they do it aliter vel alio modo. Surely, my Lord, this is no sort of Excuse in the World, nor is it capable of any. They have owned the Thing, but they have excused it in the Manner of doing thereof. And I may venture to say the Traverse is impertinent: Suppose a Man be indicted for publishing a Libel, and he owns the Fact, but doth traverse absq; hoc, that he did it maliciose, or with an intent to defame, that surely would be an Answer; for those are Constructions that the Law puts upon it, and not Matters traversable, or to be put in Issue. But if the Fact be done Lawfully, 'tis maliciously done, and with such an Intention. Therefore a Confession of the Fact is a Confession of all the Consequences that the Law puts upon the Fact.

My Lord, this can Amount to no less than the Forfeiture of their Charter, not only for the greatness of the Offence, but because otherwise the Law would be unequal; for if this were the Case of a private common Person, he must be fined and imprisoned during the King's Pleasure, as was the Case of Harrison in I. Cr. 503. for Words spoken of Justice Hutton. Now, my Lord, a Corporation is not capable of suffering this Imprisonment; and therefore 'tis a much greater Offence in them, as the Body is greater than any particular Member: And then, that which is a greater Offence would have a less Punishment, if the Charter itself were not forfeited, than it would if a particular Person were punished. And give me leave to apply here the Reason of the Earl of Gloucester's Case, that I cited before, Quia Dominus Libertatis puniretur in eo quo deliquit. So they shall lose their Charter for the Abuse of that Power that was intrusted with them by their Charter: Therefore, upon the whole Matter, I do humbly pray your Judgment for the King, that they may be outed of their Franchise of being a Corporation.

May it please your Lordships;

Sir George I AM of Counsel in this Case for the Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens of London.

The Record hath been truly opened by Mr. Solicitor in all Particulars, except an Omission of one or two, which I shall mention.

The Information sets forth and charges, That the Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens of London, had, by the space of a Month before the Information, used, or claimed to use, without any Warrant or Royal Grant, the Liberties therein set forth; that is to say; to be of themselves a Body Politick and Corporate with such a Name, and by that Name to plead and be impleaded, to answer and be answered; and likewise to make Sheriffs and Justices of the Peace: But as to these there are only Imparances, and I suppose Continuances. But as to the first Article, the Defendants plead and prescribe, That they are a Body politick Time out of Mind; and then they set forth, indeed, several Acts of Parliament, and Charters of Confirmation: To this Mr. Attorney General doth reply two Things:

First, He takes Issue upon the Prescription, That they are not Time out of Mind a Body politick with such a Name; and then he assigns a Forfeiture, which Mr. Solicitor, indeed, does call two Causes; but they rather seem to be but one joint Cause; but yet take them to be two.

The first is, That the City did assume upon themselves a Power to meet and make Laws for the Government of the City, and thereupon did make the Law which is now in Question; and thereby did levy, and order to be levied, for one Horse Load of Provision so much, &c. and that this should be paid to the Use of the City, and for Default of paying, the Persons denying to pay this Rate, should be removed from their Standings in the Market.

The second Branch is, The Petition, and therein are those Words which Mr. Solicitor hath repeated about the Prorogation of the Parliament.

And to all this the Defendants do rejoin, That the City of London has, Time out of Mind, been seized of these Markets; and they say, That the City of London is the Metropolis of the Kingdom, and consists of above fifty thousand Citizens and Inhabitants; and that (at their proper Costs and Charges) they are to provide, and always have provided a Market-place to sell Provision in, and also Officers for the Preservation of good Order, and Regulation of that great Concourse of People that comes thither, and that they have always amended and cleansed the Markets; and for these Charges of the Market-places, and Officers, and cleansing of the Markets, they have always received, and ought to receive reasonable Tolls. They say that Time out of Mind there has been a Common Council in the City, and that, for the like Time there has been a Custom, that they should make By-laws for the better Regulation of the Markets, for the ordering where such and such Markets should be held, and for the assessing and reducing to Certainty the Tolls and Rates that are to be paid by Persons coming to the Markets, so as such Laws be profitable to the King and his People, and agreeable to the Laws of the Kingdom; and then again they set forth the several Confirmations of their Customs and Privileges by Acts of Parliaments and Charters.

And then, as to the second Branch of their Forfeitures, they set forth, That there was such a Plot, and such Proceedings in the Courts of Justice against the Conspirators, and that there were several Judgments and Executions upon it; and they set forth several of the King's gracious Speeches to his People in Parliament: amongst other Things, that he did there, in his Speech therein mentioned, recommend to the Lords and Commons in Parliament assembled, to pursue the further Examination of the Plot; adding, That he thought not himself nor them safe, till that Matter was gone through with, and that the Lords in the Tower might be brought to their speedy Trial, that Justice might be done. They set forth likewise an Address of both Houses for a Fast, wherein they desire that the King would issue forth his Proclamation, which Proclamation is accordingly issued; and in that it is expressed (I cannot repeat the Words, but to this Purpose), That the Dangers impending could not be prevented, but by the Blessing of God upon the Councils of his Majesty and the Parliament. Then they set forth, That the Parliament was preparing several Bills for the Preservation of his Majesty's Person and the Protestant Religion, and the Peace of the Kingdom; and those Bills could not be enacted elsewhere, and that they were then depending: And they set forth further, that the Parliament was prorogued before those Bills were enacted: And they set forth also, that the Lords impeached could not be tried, but in Parliament; and that by the Law of the Land it is lawful for the King's Subjects in their Distresses, and for Redress of Grievances, humbly to petition the King for Remedy in that Behalf; and that for Satisfaction of the Citizens, who had made their Applications to the Common Council, and for the alleviating of their Fears; and out of their Zeal for the Preservation of the King's Person, and the Protestant Religion, they did give their Votes to this Petition, as is charged; and they give their Reasons for it; that is, it was ordered to be printed, to the Intent that false Rumours (concerning the Citizens petitioning of the King) might be prevented, and the Enemies of our Lord the King from proceeding in their Conspiracy be deterred, and the Fears and Perturbations in the Minds of the King's Subjects might be allayed, and that the Citizens and Inhabitants of the said

City might better know what was done upon their Application to the Common Council.

My Lord, I have taken some Notes of what Mr. Solicitor has said; but I beg your Lordship's Leave, that I may first deliver what I have prepared upon the Argument; and afterwards I will talk upon my Notes, and give particular Answers to the particular Things he has insisted upon, for so much of them as I shall not answer in my Discourse, which I must beg your Lordship's Patience in; for I fear I shall be pretty long.

I shall go on upon the same Points Mr. Solicitor has done, and endeavour to meet him, and give an answer in all Particulars, and shall add a Point or two which he has not mentioned; as particularly, that this Information (as it is here laid upon this Quo Warranto) is not brought against right Persons; for it is brought against the Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens of the City of London. Whereas it ought to be brought against particular Persons for usurping such a Corporation, if it can be brought at all.

The first thing that I shall go upon, is, That a Corporation cannot be forfeited; for now we must begin as it were from the Replication; for there is disclosed all the Matter, upon which the Stress of this Point lies.

And that a Corporation cannot be forfeited, I think will appear by opening the Notion and Nature of a Corporation, which you may find in my Lord Coke's 1st Inst. fol. 202. 250. he says, It is a Body to take in Succession, framed as to that Capacity by the Policy of Man, and called a Corporation, because the Persons are made into a Body, and so are of Capacity to take or grant, &c. And he says, That Persons capable of purchasing are of two sorts; Persons Natural created of God, such as private Men, as J. S. and J. N. and Persons created by the Policy of Man, as Persons incorporated into Bodies Politick. So then if this be the true Notion of a Corporation, then all the Question is, Whether there shall remain such a Person in the World as this Corporation of the Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens of London?

And that this is a meer Personality and Capacity will further appear even by this Quo Warranto itself, which says, That we did claim and usurp to be a Corporation under such a Name, and thereby to plead and be impleaded, to answer and to be answered: So that there is no more now can be considered in this Record, but whether we have or can have the Capacity of being Plaintiff and Defendant.

My Lord, in Brook's Abridg. tit. Corporation (I cite not what is said there as an Authority, but only as an Opinion), he joins the Titles Corporations and Capacities together: I say, it is only the Judgment and Notion of the Man, who your Lordship knows never uses to join any Words as Titles, but what are synonymous; and there he joins Corporations and Capacities, to shew the Nature of a Corporation is a Capacity. And suitable to this is what Justice Windham says in Dr. Patrick's Case; A Corporation is a mere Capacity, a civil Capacity, says he, I do call it an Ens rationis; whether he did affect that Word because it was in the Case of a Man in the University, I cannot tell; but the Meaning was, that this was the Notion of a Corporation, that it was an invisible Person and Capacity only.

Now, my Lord, I do not love to litigate about Words: I must confess that Mr. Solicitor does not speak without some Authority, when he calls a Corporation a Franchise; but I say it is not properly a Franchise to have a Power to be impleaded and to plead; for as to that they are Consequents, which belong to the Person rather than a Liberty or Franchise that is superadded to it. Therefore in Hobart 210. Norris and Stap's Case, the Case of the Wardens and Fellowship of the Weavers of Newbury; I think it unnecessary to cite the whole Case, but there my Lord Hobart says, Though Licence or Power to make Law is given to a Corporation by a special Clause, yet it is needless, for I hold it to be included by Law in the very Act of incorporating; and so is also the Power to sue and to be sued: Such Body is a Person that must answer the Law as a Defendant, and sue as a Plaintiff.

But I do agree, I say, that there is one Case, and yet but one in all the World, wherein a Corporation is called a Franchise; and it is in Coke's Entries, tit. Quo Warranto, Placito primo; a Quo Warranto is brought against several Persons, to shew by what Warrant they claim divers Liberties, Privileges, and Franchises, as to be of themselves a Body Politick and Corporate, by the Name of the Burgesses of Helmefley in the County of York. So that under that general Word I confess it may be called a Franchise; and the rather, because Mr. Noy (a Man of great Learning) in his great Argument of Fulcher and Haywood's Case in Mr. Justice Jones Reports, says it is a Franchise, for it was called so in such a Plea.

But now, my Lord, that it is not in it's own Nature forfeitable, is made plain by all those qualifications that have been attributed to it, and Expressions in our Law Books about it: As that a Mayor and Commonalty, or Body Corporate, can never die, 1st Inst. fol. 9. b. 3 Coke 60. a. 2 Bulstr. 233. 21 Edw IV. fol. 13. a Mayor and all the Officers; but the Commonalty have Succession in perpetuum, and can never be said to die: And this Notion, my Lord, has gone further than England: I beg your Lordship's Pardon if I take the Liberty to cite a very learned Author Grotius, in his Book De jure Belli & Pacis, lib. 2. cap. 9. he says, Cities are Immortal; and a City does not therefore cease to be a City, though all the Citizens of it should die.

But the dissolving of a Corporation by a Judgment in Law, as is here sought, I believe is a Thing that never came within the Compass of any Man's Imagination till now, no, not so much as in the putting of a Case. For in all my Search (and upon this Occasion I have bestowed a great deal of Time in searching) I cannot find that it ever so much as entered into the Conception of any Man before; and I am the more confirmed in it, because so learned a Gentleman as Mr. Solicitor, has not cited any one such Case, wherein it has been (I do not say adjudged, but) even so much as questioned or attempted; and therefore I may very boldly call this a Case primæ impressionis.

1 Inst. fol. 13. b. there it is said, If Lands holden of J. S. be given to an Abbot and his Successors; in this Case, if the Abbot and all the Convent die, so that the Body Politick is dissolved, the Donor shall have again his Land, and not the Lord, by Escheat. So that he does allow a Body Politick may be dissolved indeed; but it is not properly a dissolving, nor a dying of that Body, but a taking away of the Subjects in which it did subsist, or to which it did adhere. And therefore unless it be by such an Accident, as all of them dying, or by Violence, as in the Case of the Monks of Bangor, I never heard before that a Corporation was dissolved; to be sure not by a Judgment in Law. My Lord Roll, in his Abridgment, Part 1. fol. 514. tit. Corporation, at the Letter I, makes it a Head of one of his Titles, How a Corporation can be dissolved; and therefore was led very properly to enquire into all Things that might dissolve a Corporation; for that Book is in the Nature of a Common Place Book. Now under that Head he cites not only the common Case, if all the Members die, then 'tis a Dissolution; but he says further, and he cites an Authority for it, If a Corporation consists of so many Confratres, and so many Sisters, and all the Sisters die, this Corporation is dissolved; for both the Brothers and Sisters are integral Parts of the Corporation, and it cannot subsist by halves. But he does not go further, he does not say, If they shall levy too much Money upon the Market, nay, he does not say, if they should commit Treason (if it were possible they could do so) which had been more proper to have instanced in, he being naturally led to it under that Title; for that is a thing that happens a thousand times oftener than the Death of all the Members. And, under Favour, if the Law be so as they would have it, every Penalty levied upon a By-Law does endanger the Corporation every whit as much as this of the Rates upon the Markets.

Littleton, my Lord, in his Seet. 108. (it is a general Rule, but commonly taken Notice of, and may be in this Case) says there, upon the Statute of Merton, An Action will not lie against a Guardian for the Disparagement of his Ward, because it was never heard of from the time of the making of that Statute, that such an Action was brought; and yet he adds, that the Words of the Statute might very properly ground such an Action. Now, my Lord, that was a matter of two hundred Years before Littleton wrote, that that Statute was made; and 'tis possible such an Action might have been brought, but not remembered, and that is an Action brought by an Inferior against a Superior, the Ward against his Guardian; but here this Suit, if it can be brought, is brought by the King, who is Supreme, and therefore there can be no Reason to think, but he would have brought many of these Suits to have dissolved Corporations, if by Law it might have been done.

Besides, my Lord, Acts of Parliament can never be antiquated, because a Statute is a Law in Writing; but the Common Law is not a Law unless it be repeated and practised. And so is Davis's Opinion in the Preface to his Book, and in the Body of his Reports too: He says, That when People have tried and used such an Act, and found it useful and profitable to the Publick, and fit to be practised, that Act of Repeating begets a Custom, and so becomes in it's Name and Nature the Common Law of the Land. But now, my Lord, if I can challenge all the Times, and all the Precedents that ever were in this Kingdom, to shew me where ever there was a forfeiture of a Corporation, or a Judgment given against a Corporation to forfeit it; no, nor ever thought of till this last Year, I think I may assert 'tis not Law: And if it extend to this Corporation of London, it must have extended to all Corporations formerly, and it must do so to all still.

In the Case of Ecclesiastical Leases, in the fifth Report, and in several other Places, there is a large Discourse of what Bishops and other Spiritual Corporations might do at Common Law; 'tis said, They might grant for Years, for Life, in Tail, or in Fee. But what might they grant? their Lands and Tenements, their Possessions and Revenues; but never one Word, that they could grant away themselves, or Politick Capacity; still that which was their very Being, was not in their own Power to grant away; and, if it were not to grant, much less were it in their own Power to forfeit: For if it should be so, there is never an Hospital in England, but if it have taken too much Toll, were to be destroyed; and never a Bishoprick, Deanry, and Chapter (nay, almost particular Parsonages, for they are Spiritual Corporations too, and all the Corporations of England are under the same Rule of Law) if they have transgressed in any of the Kinds assigned here for a Forfeiture, but were to lose their very Being.

That these were in the Power of these Spiritual Corporations at the Common Law, no Man doubts; and if any Man does tell me, that the restraining Statutes do extend to the Corporation, truly I must deny it for it is Lands, Tenements, and such Things, that are mentioned, and there is Provision made only against Grants, and not against Forfeitures. A Forfeiture, Mr. Solicitor says, must be a great Breach of Trust; and so it must indeed! and how then should they answer for it? If a Bishop or a Dean and Chapter, have Lands in Fee upon Condition, and they break the Condition, their Lands are gone: But if that Breach of Condition should amount to a Forfeiture of their being a Corporation, that were very strange; this would dissolve and destroy all the Colleges in the Universities, and all the Charity in the Kingdom; for every Breach of such Condition would be a Breach of Trust.

My Lord, there was a very proper Time when this might have been thought of, if it could have been maintained for Law, and that was in the Time of H. VIII. He sent out Dr. London and others with a Commission of Inquiry, to examine into all the Misdemeanors of the Monasteries, Convents, and Colleges. To what Purpose was all this done? Could he have brought Quo Warranto's against them? He needed not have inquired much for Misdemeanors and Offences; if they had but raised five Pence, nay, for ought I know, if they had but raised five Pence upon a Market, or the like, they had all been dissolved; and 'twas so much the more in this Case then, for this Reason: In those Regular, Religious Houses and Corporations, the Body of them was dead, and the Abbot or Prior was only to appear for them, and plead and defend for them. There 'tis said in the 1 Inst. 103. a. that in a Quo Warranto against an Abbot, Bishop, or a Prior, for Franchises and Liberties, if the Abbot or Prior disclaim alone, this shall bind their Successors; and if it were possible there might have been a Forfeiture, yet without so much as troubling himself to assign that Forfeiture, he might have gone that way by Quo Warranto to get a Disclaimer.

And 'tis very well known, there were Men put in those Houses to be Heads of them, on purpose to try if they could surrender them: And that they needed not to have done, nor have asked the Consent of the Members to have surrendered; for they needed only to have brought a Quo Warranto; for after the Renunciation of the Pope's Power and Supremacy, King H. VIII. did grant his Conge d'asire to choose the Heads of those Corporations; and when they were once there, and a Quo Warranto issued, the Abbot or Prior might say, This Corporation is but a Liberty or a Franchise, and I am the King's Creature, I will disclaim the Liberties, and there is an end of the Franchise: But this was not thought of in diebus illis.

I think, my Lord, that in case of a Town the Law is clear; though I shall not at present much contend with Mr. Solicitor upon that Point, that London stands upon greater and better Circumstances than other Corporations and Towns. It is all one as to the main Points, whether it do, or not; though I shall say enough as to the particular Reason, to answer what he says to the contrary, by and by. But yet this I will say, a Corporation in a Town is more protected in Law, than others are: For, says my Lord Coke, if a Town or Borough does decay, yet it shall remain a Town or Borough; as is plain in the Instance of the Burgeses of Old Sarum, and the like. So that it seems, that though the Death of the Abbot and his Convent does destroy that Corporation, yet the Dilapidations and Decays of a Town does not destroy it, but it remains a Town still; nor is the Liberty of sending Burgeses to Parliament destroyed, or forfeited.

I confess, my Lord, I do not see but that at this rate a Quo Warranto may be brought against a particular Man, to know by what Authority he claims to have the Liberty of a Subject, to sue and be sued, to plead and be impleaded: 'Tis a Capacity that's born with him, and belongs to him as he is born in England, or as he is by Act of Parliament naturalized, and made a Subject; especially in the case of Denization it comes home to the Point. Why should not a Quo Warranto be brought against a Man, to know by what Warrant he claims to be a Denizen, and in that respect to plead and be impleaded, to sue and be sued? These are relative Capacities, that stick and adhere to the Person; and if you once constitute the Person, you shall never say he shall not have the Incidents to such a Person.

This Case indeed, my Lord, that I put last, is so gross a Thing, that it was never drawn in question, though some others have, as Dignities, Lordships, and the like; and yet no Quo Warranto was ever brought, or can lie in these Cases. And that is the Opinion upon that great and solemn Argument of the Case of the Earl of Oxford, in Mr. Justice Jones's Reports; where it was held, that an Earldom, or the like, is a personal Dignity, and such a one is in the nature of a publick Person, and by no means can part with or surrender that Capacity. And so your Lordship knows it was adjudged lately in the House of Lords in Parliament, upon the Petition of the Lord Purbeck: They all voted there, that Peerage could not be determined, nor surrendered; no, although there was a fine levied, and all the Instruments of Law that could be contrived to annul it; and I cannot see, but that if this Capacity of a Corporation be able to a Forfeiture, all others must be so too.

There is one Capacity indeed, and a small one, that a Feme Covert has by the Custom of London, That she shall trade without her Husband, sole Merchant, and be sued so, and shall sue: The Husband indeed is named, but only for Conformity; the Action is against her, and the judgment against her severally, and the Debt must be levied of her Estate; and it be thought that a Quo Warranto lies for such a meer Capacity? No more than it can lie to know, by what Warrant such an one claims to be an Executor, or Administrator, or an Overseer of a Will; and yet there is no Action brought against them in such a Capacity, and as such they are and are sued, though perhaps they would be glad to be rid of that Capacity too.

My Lord, 'tis true what my Lord Coke says in his 2 Inst. 664. there was Custom to take Tithes of Marriage Goods within the Dominion of Wales, which is taken away by a Statute; and there he says, If a Custom, that was once reasonable and tolerable become grievous, and not answerable to the Reason whereon it was grounded, yet it cannot be taken away but by Act of Parliament; for an Inheritance once fixed cannot be taken away but by Parliament. If this be so of a little Custom in Wales, how much more is it so of this great Corporation of London, and, which is more yet, of all the Corporations in England?

My Lord, Mr. Solicitor was pleased to say that a Corporation might surrender. I must confess, I should not willingly have meddled with that Point at this Time; but since it has been mentioned, I will only endeavour to say so much as may answer him in what he intended it for, as Ground for the better proving the Point of Forfeitures. I believe Mr. Solicitor (because he cited no Authority for it) might rest very much upon the supposed surrenders in the Time of H. VIII. the Surrenders that were made of the Monasteries then; and I do believe he does presume, as others have thought, that those were Surrenders of their Corporations: Truly, my Lord, I believe they were not; and to prove that they were not, I shall rely upon the Dean and Chapter of Norwich's Case, 3 Coke 120. which is also reported in 2 Anderson 120. and I shall at the same Time mention another Case, and that is the Case cited before of Fulcher and Wood, in Jones 166. and in Palmer 491. where the same Question was to be debated, Whether the Deanry and Chapter of Norwich was given and destroyed by their Surrender?

My Lord, in the Report of that Case in Palmer, I will first remember your Lordship of what is said by Whitlock in his Argument of that Case; fol. 501. of that Book; there Whitlock sitting in this very Court, says, That although the King can create and grant a Corporation, yet he cannot dissolve a Corporation; and a Dean and Chapter being a settled Corporation, by their own Act cannot dissolve themselves; being once a settled Corporation cannot be felo de se. But I say further, those Acts of Parliament made in H. VIII.'s Time (they are all in your Lordship's Memory) that of 27 H. VI. I. gave all the Monasteries under two hundred Pounds a year to the King; that of the 30 H. VIII. cap. 13. recites, that several other Monasteries had been granted, surrendered, and forfeited to the King; and it says, that the King shall have them, &c. I do allow there are the words surrendered and forfeited, and I mention them on purpose to answer them; and this is the Answer I give them.

First, for the Word Surrender. When the Monasteries were surrendered, that was only a Grant of the Lands, and nothing else; the word Monastery can carry nothing else in it. And so is Wortly and Adams's Case in Plowden's Com. 194. where there is a great Discourse of the Surrenders of the Monasteries, and the Acts of Parliament about them, and what ensued upon them; but in all that Book it was not by any Means admitted; that the Corporation, or any of that, was by these Surrenders dissolved: And, my Lord, as to the word Surrender, it is fully satisfied by the words Lands and Tenements.

Secondly, as to the word forfeited, my Answer is this: The Corporation is not named in the Surrender, and therefore cannot be presumed to be intended to be surrendered; and then there are other Things, as Leets, Liberties, and Franchises, which are named, and are capable of being forfeited, and so the word forfeited may be applied to them, and very properly; for they are liable to a Forfeiture, but the word Corporation is not at all mentioned.

But for another understanding of the word forfeited, I desire your Lordship would give me leave to cite a Case in the 2d Part of Roll's Reports; fol. 101. (which is called the Continuation of his Reports) and it agreeth exactly with the History of those Times: There were some Abbots; as the Abbot of Glastenbury, the Abbot of Reading, and the Abbot of Colchester, that were stiff Men, and would not surrender; thereupon the King gets them indicted of Treason, (the Story is well known how he handled those Men) and thereupon they did graft a Kind of Opinion, that their Land was forfeited by this means; for a small Pretence would serve them to put People into an Act of Parliament of Attainder; and he tells you, that was the Reason why they put the word forfeited into the Act of Parliament; and then disbottom themselves upon the Statute 26 H. VIII. cap. 13. that Statute that gives to the King any Estate of Inheritance, whereof any one is seized that commits Treason. Though I do not by any Means allow it to be Law, that those Clergymen by their own Acts could forfeit so much as the Lands of their Corporation; but it was taken for a Pretence, and so they put in the word forfeited.

Besides, another Thing is this, the same Statute says, The King shall have and enjoy the Things there given him, in the same manner as they the Abbots, Priors, &c. should have enjoyed them. Now if the King shall enjoy all as they did, and in the same manner, what then must he enjoy? It may well extend to Lands, to Leets, and to Markets, and particular Franchises; all those Things the King may have: But shall the King have their very Corporate Capacity? Shall the King have and enjoy the Liberty of suing, and being sued, by the Name of the Abbot and Prior, or the like? That Office, sure, he cannot execute; it is inconsistent with Sense or Reason to say, that he shall have it, or can have it. And in these Statutes they did doubtless accumulate Words to make them look the bigger, because they were to make a great Present to H. VIII. by these Means.

Then comes 32 H. VIII. cap. 24. that relates to the Corporation of the Knights of St. John at Jerusalem; and it seems by the penning of that Statute, that this very Question had been taken notice of since the Time of the making of the last Statute in 30; for there it is declared, That that Corporation of St. John at Jerusalem shall be dissolved, and that the King shall have their Lands. So that their taking notice, and providing directly to dissolve it, shews, that they had by that time considered, that neither the Surrender of their Lands, nor the vesting of them in the King, had done any Thing to the Corporation, save only they had deserted their House, and fancied themselves dissolved, because they were turned out of their Possessions.

My Lord, in the great Case of Haywood and Fulcher, 'tis again and again said there, That the Surrender of the Dean and Chapter, (where they surrendered all their Church, and all their Franchises and Hereditaments) was no Surrender of the Corporation, no, though the King did take it to be a Surrender, for he accepted it as a Surrender, and granted them a new Incorporation of the same Name, only adding, Ex fundatione Regis Edwardi Sexti. So that he did take it to be a good Surrender, but it was adjudged that it was not a good one; and so it is held in 3 Coke 73. And so says the Dean of Wells's Case in Dyer 273. the Surrender is, Diaconatus Ecclesie Cathedralis de Wells: One would think it impossible to have surrendered any Thing by a stronger Word; but yet there they say, 'tis not good without an Act of Parliament.

And whereas it hath been sometimes said, as it is there, they were dissolved, and they have been dissolved by the Surrenders, and the like; there is a very good Answer given to all that Discourse in Palmer 495. where 'tis said, When they speak of a Dissolution by Surrender, 'tis a Relation of Fact only, and not of Law; that is, they were dissolved in Fact, so as that they did desert their House, and did demean themselves as if they were disincorporated, but they were not so in Law; for they fancied a Corporation could not be without Lands, and so, when their Lands and Church were given up, they thought all was gone and dissolved: For (said they) a Dean and Chapter must be a Dean and Chapter of some Place, and when the Land is gone, how can they be said to be of such a Place? No, said the Judges there, that is no Reason at all; for the Corporation was before they had any Lands; and if those Lands were all evicted, or they all disseized of them, yet they are a Corporation still. 'And in Roll's Abr. 2. Part 185. 'tis said, the Abbies came to the King by the Statutes of Dissolution; so that they had no Opinion that the Surrender did carry even their Lands, though I do admit they did carry their Lands; but I may say they could carry no more, they could not carry their Being of the Corporation.

There is a Case in Dyer 282. and 'tis the only Case that seems against us in this Point; there were two Deans and Chapters of St. Patrick and Christ Church in Dublin, in Ireland; and these both, and not one of them, were together one Chapter of the Archbishop of Dublin, Time out of Mind, and one of these surrendered, and then their House

House was used for a Place for the Courts of Justice, and continued so; and then a Lease is made by the Bishop, and that confirmed by the only remaining Dean and Chapter, which was that of Christ Church: And whether that Lease was good or no was the Question, and truly that was the only Question that is made there in that Book; and so 'tis of little Authority as to any Thing else; but 'tis true, that that Book does say in the End of the Case, that the Lease was held good, quia Corporatio & Capitulum Sancti Patricii prædicti fuit per donum & sursum redditionem Decani & Capituli prædicti legitime dissolutum & determinatum. My Lord, to that I answer:

First, There was no Occasion for this Reason, because it did digress from the main Point in the Case, as it is truly observed in Palmer, fol. 502. next.

Secondly, It was a private extrajudicial Opinion; it was the Opinion of but five Judges, and for ought appears seven might be of another Opinion, and yet the Case was sent for the Opinion of all the Judges here, because the Lawyers in Ireland, it seems, did make a great Doubt of it. And it was also an Opinion and Judgment of the favourable Side, for it was to confirm a Predecessor's Lease. But,

Thirdly, Certainly, my Lord, the Case is mistaken, for the Surrender could not be good without the Consent of the Bishop, which is also added in the End of the Case there: He is the Patron, and must necessarily confirm their Acts to make them valid, especially they being instituted, and given to him for his Advice in the Government of the Church, and the Disposal of its Lands.

Fourthly, my Lord, I have this further Answer to give it, that my Lord Coke says in 1 Leon. 234. (and 'tis not denied) that this Surrender was by Act of Parliament, or else it had not been good. And beyond that,

Fifthly, I have by me a Manuscript of my Lord Dyer's Reports, the most authentick one, which was my Lord Coke's, and has his own Hand to it in sundry places; and by that he does often correct the Prints of Dyer, and so also he might have done in this Case; for there all these Latin Words are left out, there is not one of them, nor any Space left to put them in, nor any Blot for their being rased out, it is an Addition of the Publisher, and printed in another Letter than the rest of the Case is; 'tis not in that Book, which I take to be the truest Original of Dyer: Besides, my Lord Coke's Answer, that it was by Act of Parliament makes an End of all. And truly, my Lord, that the Determination of such Things should be by Act of Parliament I shall cite you one Authority, and I borrow it from Mr. Solicitor, who has mentioned it before 'tis Rot. Par. 8 R. II. num. 11. and it is taken Notice of by my Lord Coke, who cites it in his 4 Inst. 228. To which I add also, that the Liberties were seized, and the Case determined in Parliament: There the Case was this, the Mayor, Bailiffs, and Commonalty of Cambridge, had committed a notorious Uproar and Tumult; they had assaulted the Colleges of the University, they had imprisoned the Vice-Chancellor, and some of the Scholars, they had extorted from them two Releases, and a Bond of 3000 Pounds; and after all this great Uproar and Tumult a Writ went out, but whence? From the Parliament, and there they are summoned to appear, and there they are to shew Cause why the Liberties should not be seized, as forfeited; and there upon full hearing it was adjudged by the King, with the full Consent of the Lords and Commons in Parliament, that the Liberties should be seized as forfeited: All this is taken Notice of by my Lord Coke. But yet, as if he thought it not enough to have said all this in the Body of the Book, he puts down in the Margin of that Book these Words, Nota, It was done by Act of Parliament. And that it was taken, that a Corporation cannot be dissolved but by Parliament, I shall cite your Lordship Davis's Reports, fol. 1. b. where he says, that neither by the Surrenders, nor by the Acts of Parliament that gave their Possessions to the Crown, were those Corporations dissolved; the Surrenders did not do it, and the Acts of Parliament did not intend it.

But, my Lord, I shall dismiss this Point, for indeed it will not conduce to the Question, which is not, Whether a Corporation be surrenderable, or no? but, Whether it be forfeitable?

Now there are many Things that are renounceable, that yet are not forfeitable; an Annuity pro Consilio impenso & impendendo may be surrendered, and so is Empson's Case in Dyer, fol. 2. but it cannot be forfeited for Treason, 'tis a Thing that adheres to the Person, and there is a Privy in it that makes it not forfeitable; so a Guardianship in Socage, a Man may renounce it as well as he may Executorship, but they are neither of them forfeitable; and so is the Trust of a Freehold, and several other like Things.

My Lord, as to what Mr. Solicitor has said, That a Corporation may be seized, and therefore it may be forfeited; I think certainly that is no good Conclusion at all. Those Words of Seizures of the Liberties, and seizing into the King's Hands, he has with great Learning collected a great many Records about them, and they make a great Sound at first, but when they are narrowly looked into, they make nothing of Argument at all; they have slept a long Time, and are but imperfectly remembered; they may serve to amuse People, but when they are considered they will signify very little. Vet. Nat. Br. fol. 161. He distinguishes there (and every Body must) between the Causes of the Seizure of a Franchise into the King's Hands, and the Causes of a Forfeiture; and there he sets down several Things, and then adds stude differentiam istorum: so that there is a Difference, and that Difference ought well to be advised upon. In 2 Edw. III. 28 & 29. Scrape gives the Rule, says he, in some Cases a Franchise ought to be taken into the King's Hands, and in some Cases it ought to be seized till a Fine be made to the King; and in some Cases it ought to be fore-judged; and so he makes three Distinctions. Now, my Lord, this will answer (as I shall observe by and by) all that Mr. Solicitor has produced about Seizures, either by Act of Parliament, or for a Fine, or for a Distress for want of an Appearance. If a real Action, there goes out a Grand Cape, and there the Lands shall be seized into the King's Hands, and that look big upon Record; but if you come to know the meaning of it, 'tis only that the Sheriff should return Issues upon it, and that is a very little Thing; the King has no Pretence to the Title of the Land, nor is the Suit his Suit, but the Party's: So the Seizing of a Bishop's Temporal-ties, and the Lands of Priors Aliens, and the like. But Words must have a reasonable and legal construction; as when a Statute is made, that if a Man does so and so his Body shall be at the King's Will, and he shall do with him at his Pleasure, as in the Statute of Maintenance, and the Statute against transporting of Money, that is nothing but that he shall forfeit the Use of his Body, and the Liberty of his Body, and shall be imprisoned for the Offences.

All this I shew, to distinguish about this Word Seizure, and by that distinction to answer the Weight of all the Records that Mr. Solicitor has cited. Those Seizures that were of any Towns, I say, they were only till they had made a Fine to the King; and when the King had so seized them, what did he do? He put in a Custos upon them, which was to keep them in good Order; he put them into a safe Hand, but it was never intended to suspend or destroy the Corporation: For the Corporation went on as it did before, it might sue as it did before, and was as liable to be sued as before; it was to put a Guard upon them, not for their Destruction, but for their Preservation; to quell Insurrections, to keep peace and good Order among them; the Seizure of the Liberties was not a seizing of the Corporation, because a Corporation is not a Liberty, it cannot be seized; for the King cannot exercise the Liberty of a Corporation; the King may seize the Mayoralty, and the King may put in such a Deputy, that may be a Custos, he may seize the Sheriffalty, he may seize a Leet, or a Market, or he may receive the Profits of them, and execute by Deputy the Purport of them: But what can he do when he has seized the Corporation? Can he himself be the Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens of the City of London? or can he put in any one to be such Corporation? It is not a Thing manurable, 'tis not a Thing seizable, nor ever was seized; for the King can seize nothing, but what he can have and use when he has seized it. And therefore all those Custodes that were put into London, upon the seizing of the Liberties, were only in the Nature of the Lord Lieutenants, that were to keep Order in the City, and prevent Breaches of the Peace; but still the Customs, the Courts, and the Usages of the City went on as they did before; I cite not any Record indeed for it, because there is no need, 'tis so well known; but if there be any doubt of it, we will make it appear, that during all those times Mr. Solicitor speaks of, who has cited a great many Records, and if he can find as many more, yet still all along the City was in Statu quo, as to their being a Corporation; they did sue and were sued, and they did all manner of Acts as a Corporation, which shews that it was not so much as suspended, much less forfeited. This is without Contradiction very plain, during all the time of those Seizures. If it had been forfeited at all, it must have been extinct; and if there could have been a Judgment given against it, it could not have been taken into the King's Hands, but it must have been an Ouster of the Liberties.

In Yelverton there is a Case of the King against Staverton, a Quo Warranto is brought against Staverton for keeping a Court Leet, and a Court Baron, within the Hundred and Manor of Warfield; the Defendant disclaims the Court Leet; as to the Court Baron, the great Doubt is whether a Quo Warranto can be brought for it, it appearing that he had a Manor; for that is inseparable to a Manor. For he that has the Demesnes and Copyholds, must call his Tenants together to do Suit and Service; and 'tis agreed indeed a Quo Warranto will lie. But Plumier, Chief Justice, and Fenner doubted of it. And in that case Judgment must be, that he shall be ousted of the Liberty, and not that it shall be seized; for the King cannot use it, and therefore 'tis impossible, that it should be taken into his Hands: And so 'tis, as I said, of a Bishop's Temporalities, and the Lands of Priors Aliens, and the like; it is a meer Personality, and cannot be seized.

But Mr. Solicitor says a Corporation can commit a Crime: Truly I do very much question that, nay, I shall deny it by and by: But if they do commit a Crime, the Punishment must be by other means than a Forfeiture; and I will cite your Lordship a parallel Case: For as I said before, a Corporation is an Ability or Capacity like that of a Denizen, and so can no more be forfeited than a Denizenship can. There is Verseline Manning's Case in Lane's Reports, 58. and the same Case is in Rolls 1. Abr. 195. in an Office of Intrusion, it is there found, that Verseline Manning was a Denizen by Letters Patents, and in the Letters Patents there was a Clause, as is usual in Patents of Denization, Provisum, that Verseline Manning the Denizen should do liege Homage, and that he should be obedient and observe the Laws of this Realm. The office finds that he never did Homage, nor was obedient to all the Laws of the Realm; and it was urged that consequently he had lost his Denization, for Breach of the Condition. No, says the Court there, by no means, this must have a reasonable Construction, not to take away his Capacity of being used as a Subject, and so suing and being sued; but the Promise is to be interpreted thus, for his Non obedience of the Law he shall forfeit the Penalties appointed by the Law: So, I say, a Corporation, if it do offend the Laws, shall forfeit and undergo the Penalties appointed by the Law, but not be incorporated, any more than a Denizen underdenized.

My Lord, the next Point that I go upon is, what I at first mentioned, and that is this, That this Quo Warranto is not well brought, and that can be no Judgment given against us upon it, if we should admit (which I do not) that a Corporation is forfeitable; or if I should grant (which I do not neither, but shall come to that afterwards) that the Particular assigned are Causes of a Forfeiture.

Now this Quo Warranto is brought against the Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens, of the City of London, that is to say, against the Corporation (for that is the corporate Name, and no Man sure is so vain to think that can be the Christian Name or Surname of any natural Person) therefore I say 'tis brought against us as a Corporation, and charges us, that we have usurped the Liberty of being a Corporation, under a Name, for a Month before the Information brought. Now, my Lord, I say this is impossible, and this is repugnant; for the Question is, whether we are a Corporation, and that is a Liberty to be Plaintiff and Defendant? And then comes Mr. Attorney, and admits us to be Defendants; for he sues by that Name, and yet the very Question that he brings us to dispute on is, whether we are capable of being Defendants.

or no: That is just as if he should have said, I have brought you into Court, and you must be Defendants, or else I have brought you here for nothing; for there is no Cause depending without Parties, Plaintiff and Defendant; and then I will assign for the Cause of my Suit, that you are no Defendants; nor is it possible for you to be Defendants.

My Lord, this is plain Reason; but I shall strengthen it with great Authority, and that is the Case upon a Writ of Error, out of Ireland, to reverse a Judgment given in a Quo Warranto against the Corporation of Dublin: It is in Palmer the first Case, and 2 Rolls fol. 113 & 125. A Quo Warranto is brought against Cusack, and other Aldermen of Dublin, who pretended to have Privileges, and a Guild, and to be a Corporation, and this I presume is for their being a Corporation; for there is a Curia advisare vult as to the Corporation, and so 'tis not put in the Case, but 'tis also brought for several Liberties that they did pretend to claim; as that they only, and none others, should sell and buy all Merchandizes, and nobody should buy of another, or sell to another, but to them; that all Merchandizes should be brought to their Common-hall, &c. Now, as to these Liberties, they are forejudged, that the Liberties should be seized, and they ousted; as to their being a Corporation, Curia advisare vult; so the Case is in Palmer: But in the other Book in 2 Rolls 115. it is agreed, if a Quo Warranto be brought to dissolve the Being of a Corporation, it ought to be brought against particular Persons; for the Writ supposes, that they are not a Corporation; and 'tis to falsify the Supposal of the Writ to name them as a Corporation. Now here this Writ, it supposes them to be a Corporation, or else they could not be Defendants; and then it comes and falsifies that Supposal, by assigning that they are no Corporation, nor ever were, or if they had been, they had forfeited it; and so all the Foundation that this Writ stands upon is destroyed.

In this Case of Cusack I am assisted further with a Report of it in my Lord Chief Justice Hales's Book; a Report of very great Authority with all Men of our Profession: And there he says expressly, If a Quo Warranto be brought for the usurping a Corporation, it must be brought against particular Persons, because it goes in Disaffirmance of the Corporation; and Judgment shall be given, that they be ousted of the Corporation; but if it be for Liberties claimed by a Corporation, then it must be brought against them as a Corporation.

Lord Chief Justice. What Folio is it in my Lord Hales's Book, Mr. Recorder?

Mr. Recorder. It is my Lord Hales's Common-place Book, which is in Lincoln's-Inn Library, fol. 168. placito 7. and this is our Case directly. If you go about to say, our Corporation is forfeited, or must be dissolved, nay more, (as you say here) we never have been a Corporation; or by Forfeiture our Corporation is lost long ago, then there is nothing can come before the Court properly, but that J. S. and J. N. particular Persons, have usurped to be a Corporation, when they are none. This Information is brought in Disaffirmance of their being a Corporation; and therefore there must be set up somebody capable of being a Defendant in such a Suit; and who can that be but particular Persons, which ought to have been named, as they are in that Case of Cusack? For as Judgment of Ouster of particular Liberties, given against particular Persons, will not bind the Body of the Corporation; so the Judgment, that they are not a Corporation, will not be good, unless it be given against those particular Persons that usurp the Corporation. And I do say further, that individual Freemen of London cannot possibly be bound by this Judgment: For they are not here before you, nor were they ever so; for it is the Corporation here that is made the Defendant. And I do not now consider the Number that make up that Body (London's being so populous doth not alter the Case;) for the Case is the same, if it were the Corporation of Queenborough, or any other petty Corporation. Suppose twenty Men be a Corporation, or pretend to be a Corporation, and you come to enquire by what particular Means these Twenty Men pretend to be a Corporation, or, as the Words of this Quo Warranto are, usurped to be a Corporation; you must not say that they are one, and then say, that they usurped it; for 'tis not the Corporation that usurps to be a Corporation, that is impossible; but it is the particular Persons that usurp to be a Corporation, when indeed they are not one. A Corporation may usurp a Market, they may usurp a Leet, but they cannot usurp themselves. In Townsend's Book of printed Precedents (which is a laborious Thing, and wherein he has collected all the Precedents he could meet with of Quo Warranto's) there is but one in all the Collection, that was brought against any Persons upon the Score of being a Corporation: And what is that? How was it brought? Not against a Corporation that was, but against a Corporation that never was, that is to say, a Parcel of People, that took upon themselves to be a Corporation, when they were not; and that is the same single Precedent in Coke's Entries 527. tit. Quo Warranto. The King against Helden, and other Burgesses of Helmsley, for usurping to be a Corporation by the Name of the Burgesses of Helmsley. And how does the Attorney General there bring the Writ? He brings it against particular Persons. My Lord Hobart, who was then Attorney General, never thought he could have maintained his Quo Warranto, or expected Judgment against them, if he had brought it against the Burgesses of Helmsley generally, and then have said, that they were no Corporation; but he brings it against those particular Persons, and thereupon they come in and disclaim their being such a Corporation, and the having the other Liberties; and the Judgment is, That of those Liberties those particular People should be ousted, and should not intermeddle with them.

Now, my Lord, what Judgment can be given in this Case, that the Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens, shall not intermeddle with the being of Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens? 'Tis a very reasonable Judgment, that Helden and those particular Persons should not intermeddle with such a Liberty, or be in such a Corporation; but if such a Judgment be given against the City here, that would be as much as to say, That you have never been what you are, or you shall never be what you are, that is the English of it.

And, my Lord, I am sure, as there never was but one Quo Warranto, that we can find any printed Precedent of against the Being of a Corporation, so that very Precedent is not against those that really were so, but particular Persons that usurped to be so. And if you search all the Records of this Kingdom, and all the Books in all the Offices, you will never find any that is brought against a Corporation, for being a Corporation, upon Pretence that they might be made none by a Forfeiture; and no Prerogative of the King shall extend to excuse this, but his Action shall abate, if it be not right brought, as well as the Subjects, and so is Plowd' Com. fol. 85.

Further, my Lord, I have another Authority in this Point; and that is in the Case of the Corporation of Maidenhead, which hath been so often cited by Mr. Solicitor, and it is in Palmer 80, 81. where it is said, When the Attorney General hath supposed them to be a Corporation, it is not usual to plead them to be a Corporation; otherwise, if he had questioned them as Inhabitants of such a Town, then they ought to enable themselves: Those are the Words of that Book; and what can be more plain? Here the Attorney General supposes us to be a Corporation, his Replication flies in his own Face; and he having supposed it at first, he is bound not to question us for our being a Corporation at any time after. As to the Business of forfeiture, it is a strange and a new Word, that never came into any Quo Warranto before, that I know of; but we will accept the new Word, but not the Thing, and that they have forfeited by such and such Acts: This sure sure will be very hard upon us; for if it be a Forfeiture, it must relate to the Time of the Thing done, to the Time of the making the Act of the Common Council, to the Time of the Toll levied; or to the Time of the Petition; and if it do so, it must relate like a Forfeiture for Treason; it must reach all mean Acts, all the Leases that we have made since, are gone; all the Judgments that we have given in any Cause, are coram non Judge, and void; all the Acts of the Corporation are overturned by this Forfeiture; and we have been under a vast Mistake all this while. We have had no Mayors nor Sheriffs, no kind of Officers, no manner of regular and legal Proceedings; but we have been under a great Mistake ever since this Money was ordained or levied. We have forfeited all; and that it is so, is plain, because in all Quo Warranto's, wherein Persons are convicted for usurping of Liberties, there is a Fine set upon them for continuing that Usurpation, and Reason good; then if it be an Offence for continuing the Liberty, we must be fined for doing it ever since the Forfeiture, when, if Mr. Attorney General's Rule be right, there has been no such Corporation; but we ought to have discontinued all our acting as a Corporation, and laid it down; and so every Step that we have taken since hath been irregular, and every Act void.

If so be an Action be brought against Baron and Feme, and the Plaintiff should in his Replication say, they were divorced several Years before, has he not undone all his Pleading? Here then is our Case: Mr. Attorney General admits us to be sueable, and yet charges us to have no Capacity to be sued: I do implead you, but you have no right to be impleaded; here he brings us into Court, and when he has brought us here, he quarrels with us for being here. He makes us Defendants, and then questions whether we ought to be so; and so his great Charge against us is, that we are what he would have us to be, and what he hath made us to be; for if a Month before the Information, the Corporation was not, but the very Being of the Corporation was usurped, how come we at the Month's End to be Defendants? Here comes a new Creation interposed in that Time, and makes Parties sueable in the Court, when by the Charge in the Information we were not so a Month before.

And then, my Lord, the Information is not quite so bad, but the Replication is worse: First, he takes Issue, that we never were a Corporation, at all; and the next Thing is, if ever you were a Corporation, you have ceased so to be, because you have forfeited it so and so several Years ago. This is just then to put a common Case, (and I confess, a very familiar one it is) if I should bring an Action against a Man, and when he hath pleaded, I should by way of Replication set forth, there never was any such Man as the Defendant, and take issue upon it; or, if there were, that he was dead Ten Years ago: And yet this is the Substance of Mr. Attorney's Issue, and his Replication.

My Lord, the Authorities before cited in Palmer, Coke's Entries, Rolls, and my Lord Hales's Common-place Book, are not all; for I have some other that never saw the Light in Print yet; and that is the Case of the King against Bradwell and others, Trin. 18. of this King. A Quo Warranto was brought against them for usurping to be a Corporation or Company of Musicians; it had been a strange Thing, if the Quo Warranto had been brought against that Corporation, and then the Attorney General had said they were no Corporation, nor ever were; there they did think best and fittest to go against Bradwell, and the rest, and that by Name; and only so, not against the Body Corporate. So in that Case of the Corporation of Worcester, which was lately tried before your Lordship in this Court; when the Quo Warranto was brought against such Men for usurping to be all Aldermen and Common Council-men; if the Attorney General had once called them Common Council-men, it had been a great Repugnancy for him afterwards to say, that they were none; or if they were, that that Privilege of theirs was lost so long ago. So in the Case of the Quo Warranto against the Bermudas Company; it was against a Corporation, and against particular Persons by Name both. These Things have been considered, and doubtless they have gone on in an ordinary way. I must confess, I was not privy to that particular Case; but by the Report of that Case, which I have seen, I have been informed, that the Corporation never appeared; for they said, 'tis not Sense for us to appear; for it being a Question by what Warrant we are a Corporation, it is not we, supposing us a Corporation, that do usurp, but the particular Persons that do usurp, if it be at all usurped. Now, my Lord, if that had been a regular Suit, no doubt but there would have been Judgment against the Corporation, which there was not; and certainly the Replication of Forfeitures was not good against the Corporation, but against the particular Persons only.

All Mr. Solicitor's Authorities for seising, hold true, if the Corporation would never appear: And what is the Reason it should be brought against J. S. and J. N. but because Corporations do never appear in such a Case, in regard it were not congruous they should appear? for the Quo Warranto

Warranto must intend it so, that they were not a Corporation in Being, by implying a Forfeiture. Then say I, no Judgment at all can be given upon this Score; Non admittitur exceptio ejusdem rei, cujus petitur dissolutio; a Man shall never be admitted to controvert that to be in Being, which he himself desires should be destroyed, and so has allowed it to be. Shall Mr. Attorney be admitted to deny the Supposal of his own Writ? And truly I think I might very well leave this Part of the Case, and this Point, to Mr. Attorney General himself; for if he will have any thing to be answered by us, he must maintain us to be a Corporation capable of answering; and so I have Reason to expect, that against his own Replication he will be pleased to support the Being of our Corporation, and so dismiss us hence.

My Lord, I have done with this Point, and now I come to the Replication, which indeed is a Kind of a new Quo Warranto; for it brings in new Matter, and therein they do charge Two Forfeitures; the one is, by reason of the Abuse of the Market, the other is, by reason of the Petition. My Lord, I shall answer both of them. That we were seised of the Market, that is pleaded, and that is agreed: That we were seised of Tolls, and were to have reasonable Tolls, that is agreed too: That there is a Custom in London to have Common Councils, and that this was by Common Council, is agreed; all this is agreed by the Demurrer: That this Toll (though by the way I must confess, and will agree with Mr. Solicitor, that it is not properly to be called a Toll; for a Toll is only for Goods sold; and when they are sold, in Recompence for the Officer's Attendance for the Testification of the Contracts, and the entering them in their Books; but I agree, this is not such a Duty for Goods bought and sold, but it) is for the Accommodation of Persons repairing thereunto for their Stalls; and, if I would call it by any particular Word, I had rather call it Stallage than any thing else; it is for those Accommodations, which we have been at vast Charge in preparing and providing, and for the Maintenance of requisite Officers, and for the cleaning of the Markets. Now Mr. Solicitor objects, That we cannot prescribe for a Toll uncertain, and he cites the Case of Murage, and the like; and so I must confess, where Murage is granted, 'tis commonly a Thing uncertain; so is Pontage, and the like; but I believe (if I had thought, that it would have been a Point insisted upon) I could have brought you Instances where Murage, and such-like Things, have been granted in general, and they would have been ancient ones indeed: And there is a Necessity for it in some Cases; for when a Town will repair its Walls, the Charge may be greater or less, as the particular Accidents may be, and so perhaps a certain Duty would not do it. When a Wall is to be built, there the Duty may be certain; but when it is built, to keep it in Repair, the Duty of Murage may be uncertain, according to the Charge; and if the Case be not so, it will come little to our Purpose, which is a Duty upon a great and a continuing Charge. I will name him some Things that he must agree, and I know he will grant, are uncertain, as Pickage and Stallage, which are Duties for picking in my Earth to dig Holes for the Posts of Stalls to be fixed in: Now there can never be, nor ever was, any circumscribing in those Matters; for Circumstances in every of those Cases must govern it. If I have Occasion for my Stall to use a Foot of Ground, one sort of Sum is necessary; if ten Feet, another Sum; it ought to be equal indeed, but it could never be good, if it were limited to a Sum certain; and in all Grants that ever were of Pickage and Stallage, they were never reduced to a Certainty; and those are Things too that relate to a Market.

And so I take it to be for Keyage, Anchorage, and the like; for when there are Ports or Places for Ships, to which they may be fixed, the Owner of the Port may have a Compensation for that; but that must needs be uncertain, according to the Circumstances; if a Ship be bigger or lesser, if a Ship stay a Month or a Day, it is not fit the same Rate should be paid; nor is it usually granted by particular Words, Co. Entr. 535 & 526, Placit. 4. the King against the City of London for the Water-Bailage, and other Things. They pleaded only a Right in general, and do not say what the Particulars were; and yet one of the Things demanded in the Quo Warranto, was, as I said, the Water-Bailage; which, sure, if any thing ought to be certain, that ought. In that Case it was good Pleading; though I think I could say more against it than this Thing, that is in the Nature of Stallage; so that all that Mr. Solicitor hath built upon that must, I think, needs vanish.

My Lord, I do not think but London ought to be, and is as much under the Obedience and Correction of the King, as any City; but yet I believe, in these Cases of their Customs, you will give that Allowance and Indulgence to it, that all your Predecessors have done, which is greater than they have given to any other Corporations in the Kingdom, and that because it was London. That there should be such a Thing as a Foreign Attachment, I think, is hardly allowed in other Places; I am sure, I have known it denied in some, that a Contract in Writing should be equal to a Book-Debt; that a Feme Merchant should sue or be sued without her Husband; or if he be named, he should only be named for Conformity. You take Notice, that London is a Port Town, and that Men that trade there, sometimes go beyond Seas, and in their Absence their Wives trade by themselves, and perhaps carry on distinct Trades while they are here; and so they may do in other Places, may be; but only for the sake of London do you take Notice of these Things there, and not elsewhere. Their Penalties, that are sued for in their Courts, a great many of them are such as would not be well maintained in other Courts, or in any other Place; and yet they are maintained there, as namely, That their Penalties should be sued for before the Mayor and Aldermen, when the Benefit of them goes to their Use; and yet that is allowed in the Eighth Report, notwithstanding the grand Objection, that they are in some sort Judges and Parties, Rolls 2 p. Abr. Tit. Prescription, Letter H. Fol. 266. No. 2. & 3. The City of London may prescribe to have a Court of Chancery in London, of Matters tried in the Sheriffs Court, though such a Court cannot be granted by the King's Letters Patents; but the Mayor and Citizens of York cannot prescribe for such a Court, because it were very dangerous, that such petty Corporations should have such Courts.

And, whatsoever is said by my Lord Hobart in his Reports, 63. I do affirm, there is no Act of Parliament that erects a Court of Chancery in London or the Cinque-Ports. If Mr. Solicitor had struggled with me about the being, or not being of that Act of Parliament, I would have agreed with him, that there was no such, sooner than some that he says are none. The Customs of London have been upheld, and, I must confess, I think that is very strange, even against the general Words of an Act of Parliament, 2 Inst. 20. A Gaoler in London may permit his Prisoner, that is in Execution, to go at large with a Batoon in any Place within their Jurisdiction, and it is no Escape. And so is Plowden's Com. 36. A Citizen of London may set up one Retail Trade, though he was bred to another, notwithstanding of the Statute 5th of the Queen. And for a general Rule take that that is said in Palmer 542. Those of London may prescribe against a Statute; and the Reason is, because their Liberties are confirmed by Statute, and other Towns are not. In Rolls Rep. 1 P. 105. Sprake against Tenant, my Lord Coke being then Chief Justice, says, We take notice of the Customs in our Courts, and other Courts in Westminster Hall, and in London. Fleetwood, Recorder of London, says a very strange thing in 1 Leon 284. Hollingshead's and King's Case, and in 4 Leon 182. that the King's Courts ought to take Notice, that those of London have a Court of Record; for if a Quo Warranto issues to the Justices in Eyre, it does not belong to them of London to claim their Liberties; for all the King's Courts have Notice of them. And truly I have been informed, I mean by Copies of Records, that when the Justices in Eyre came to the Tower, this was a Privilege allowed to them, they were not bound to set forth their Liberties, as others were.

My Lord, I think this, as it is pleaded, is a Duty very justifiable, and very well payable, by virtue of this Custom. I do agree, as I said, a Toll is properly for Goods sold, and this is a Custom for the Accommodation of those that brought Goods to be sold; and it is like that 1 Leonard 218. my Lord Cobham's Case, a Duty paid for the Standing in the Cellar; and there that is held to be good. In Rolls 2 p. of the Abridgment, 123. Letter B. Hickman's Case, the Lord of a Manor may prescribe to have the Eighth Part of a Bushel of Corn in Four Bushels that are brought to the Market within the Manor, in the Name of the Toll, and that is for Stallage only; for it is said there, Whether it be sold or not. And in the same Book, fol. 265. the City of Dublin set forth, that they are Owners of the Port of Dublin, and that they maintained Perches in the said River, to direct the Ships in the deep Channel, and that they kept the Key and the Crane; and therefore, in Consideration of that, they prescribed and demanded Three Pence in the Pound for all Merchandizes in the said Port, and it was held good. Now I agree Toll-through, that cannot be prescribed for simply and generally; but by Toll-through I mean, as you know, for passing and repassing through only, and not for staying. But yet even that may be prescribed for too, in Consideration of repairing a great Highway, or a very foul Way, or maintaining a Bridge, and the like. And therefore, if our Considerations here be as good, then we maintaining those great Places may prescribe for this Duty, as for passing through the Streets, though it were no Market.

There is a famous Case reported in Rolls 1 p. Fol. 1. & 44. and it is in 2 Bulstrode, and also in Moor; it was the Case of the Bell-man of Litchfield: A Prescription is made, that the Corporation of Litchfield hath a Market, and they ought to repair the Way to it, and to appoint a Bell-man that should sweep the Market-place; and that for this the said Bell-man, time out of mind, had taken of those that brought Corn to the said Market, and opened their Sacks to sell, a Pint of Corn, if but a Bushel or under; if more, a Quart. So that if it were opened and not sold, yet he was to have that Duty, and that Prescription was adjudged to them by all the Judges; and yet it does not appear there, whether the repairing that Way cost them 5s. or 5000l. and yet by Intendment they would not account it unreasonable, though it might have been urged it was very unequal; if they could take a Pint for that which was under a Bushel, perhaps they would take, by that Means, half of what the Party bought; but if there were Fifteen Bushels, they had but a Quart, and that was objected as to the Inequality of it; and yet they all passed over that by a reasonable Intendment, and would not deny the Prescription to be good. And the Case of Cranage in Dyer, and the Case of 21 H. viii. are admitted to be good Law, where the Town of Gloucester prescribed for a Toll of Boats passing by the River near the Town.

Now, my Lord, for ours, there was very great Reason to induce it, the great Alterations that were made in London by the Fire; and it was the first Time that London was burnt: And if there should be War, and so great Alterations and Confusions, there were great Cause, that the City, that lays out great Sums, and must be at such a publick Charge, should not be Losers by it.

And we do set forth more than they do in the Case of Litchfield, that we provided the Market-places at our own Charge; and if they will alter them, they must expect to pay some Compensation for it; that we do keep Officers, and pay them for cleansing and keeping Order in the Markets: And above all that, we provide Standings and Stalls, and such Accommodations, and that I am sure is a Provision no Lord of a Market is bound to make, unless he will; and therefore the Market-people, that are accommodated by it, have great Reason to pay for it; and we pay all the Taxes for the Market-places, for the Ground is ours; and that is not alledged in the Pleading indeed, but it must be implied, because we pay the Taxes, and they that have the Standings are liable to pay the Taxes: And so is the Judgment in Rolls, 2 p. 239. and the second Abr. 289. And in the Case of Cusack Justice Doddridge says, that the redeeming of one Fair from the Abbot of Westminster cost the city of London 8000l. for he had a Fair at Westminster, and that during that Time no Sale should be made in London, or the Places adjacent; and a great Rate it was, if it were the Measure of a Toll is according to my Lord Coke 2 Inst. 58. where the Thing demanded for Wares or Merchandises does so burden the Commodity, that the Merchant cannot have a convenient Gain by Trading therewith; and thereby Trade is lost or hindred, then it is evil Toll. But here indeed the Market-people are better accommodated than ever they were; and Trade is so far from being discouraged, as that it is increased, as is implied in the Replication; for it is said we receive 5000*l.* a Year, which if it were so unequal, would not certainly be paid, nor could be, if there were not great Trade there. So that the Increase of Trade is the thing complained of in this Quo Warranto. And the Truth of it is, I have examined and looked into the Fact of these Things, and there is nothing in this By-law, but what was really anciently paid, except only in one Instance, whether it were 6*d.* or no, that was paid when a Cart was drawn by Two Horses, which now is but 4*d.* and if we have increased the Toll, which I doubt whether it be so or no, it is only in a very Trifle.

Now, my Lord, this Case, I think, is a stronger Case than that in Rep. the Chamberlain of London's Case; there is no Consideration of Stalls, or cleansing the Place, but only they had an Officer to search and view, and that was a new Appointment of their own; they could not prescribe for it, but it was thought a Penny was a reasonable Recompence, and the Subject had a Benefit by it; and if he would bring his Cloth to London to be sold, he should come thither to have it viewed, and give a Recompence for it. Now London is all Market indeed, every Shop is a Market; and it hath been well said of the Judges several times in Westminster-Hall, that London is the Market of all England; and there is never an Acre in England, but is the better for that.

As to the Imposition upon Coals, that is but an Inducement; and an Inducement is never to be relied upon; it is not to be stood upon; and Mr. Solicitor did very honourably decline it, and did not make any thing of it, nor trouble the Case with it.

When the City did make this Act of Common Council, they did consult with their Counsel for Matter of Law, and with their Officers and Fellow Citizens for Matter of Fact, and did adjust these Rates, and enacted them to be paid, they being reasonable ones, and according to the ancient Usage; but if they were mistaken, it will be no Cause for you to give Judgment against them, for many other Reasons: As first, you cannot judge this to be unreasonable. I have not heard one Word said, that this is an unreasonable oppressive Toll. Here is Money levied; What then? If it be a reasonable Sum, it is not so great; it does not deserve the Name of Oppression. I say, it is not so great an Oppression, if they should have been mistaken in the Form of instituting the levying of it; if they might have done it under their Common Seal, and now they have done it without that by Act of Common Council. Nay, it does not deserve that you should judge it unreasonable; you cannot do it here, for the Considerations are meritorious, and equivalent to it the great Charge they were at in building, and they still daily are at in cleansing and repairing, and providing Stalls. But, however, the Case is not so disclosed here, that you can judicially determine this to be an unreasonable Toll; according to the Rule in Coke's Magna Charta 222. the Toll of a Market need not be certain, only it must be reasonable; and what shall be deemed reasonable the Judges must determine, if it come judicially before them. So shall reasonable Customs, and reasonable Fines, and reasonable Services, and reasonable Time to remove Goods, and the like, they must be judged by the Discretion of the Justices upon the true State of the Case before them. Now this Case must have all its Circumstances stated and agreed by Demurrer, or found by Verdict. And so is 4 Rep. 27. b. and Hobart 135. and 174. as in the Case of Copyholders Fines, the Quality and yearly Value of the Land must appear, or else there cannot be Judgment whether it be reasonable or no. In the 13th Report. fol. 3. & Croke Car. 196. Where the Question was, Whether the Lord of a Manor might affect two Years and an half Value of Copyhold Lands, according to the Rack-rents for a Fine upon Surrender and Admittance, and upon Nonpayment to enter for the Forfeiture; as suppose Land, it be rented at 20*l.* a Year, here is 50*l.* demanded for Admittance; there it appeared judicially that it was unreasonable; and so it was adjudged, because the Value was certain. But who can here say, Whether the providing of Markets costs 5*s.* or 500*l.*? It is not estimable. Perhaps we have overbought all these Tolls that they call unreasonable; we aver it to be reasonable, the Demurrer agrees it to be so, and you must intend it to be so, unless the contrary be set forth clearly in its Circumstances; for that will have a Forfeiture, must shew the Circumstances to make it out.

My Lord, another Thing is this, to answer Mr. Solicitor in that Point: I say, an unreasonable By-law is no reasonable Cause or Colour for forfeiting a Corporation, admitting it to be unreasonable, though I grant it not. My Lord Hobart in Norris and Stap's Case, Hob. 211. says, that though Power to make Laws is given by special Clauses in all incorporations, yet it is needless; for that is included by Law in the very Act of Incorporating. For as Reason is given for the natural Body or the governing of it, so Bodies Corporate must have Laws as a politick Reason to govern them. Reason is a Faculty in them as 'tis in a Man, and may err; and therefore, says he, If the King do grant Letters Patents of Incorporation to Persons, and he doth thereby make Ordinances and By-laws himself, they are subject to the same Construction and Rule of Law, as if they were made afterwards by the Corporation. For the King can no more make an unreasonable By-law than a Corporation; but if the King do, shall that affect the Corporation, and make the Corporation void by way of Repugnancy, or an instantaneous Breach of Condition? No, it shall not. And therefore as they may receive unreasonable Rules from the King, without defeating of the Corporation, or having their Being thereby vacated; so they may make unreasonable By-laws without the same Danger of destroying the Corporation. The Cases are very many, wherein By-laws have been judged unreasonable; the Truth of it is, there is a great Misfortune in the penning and making of those By-laws; by some means or other there is something discerned that still proves an Exception to it, as we see in the Case of the Carmen and the Woodmongers; their By-law was made and re-made, and corrected again and again, before it could be made to hold Water in this Court. So in the Taylors of Ipworth's Case, the Bradnox's Case, which was here lately. All these have been adjudged void; but what then? In all these Cases it was never said, Hereby your Corporation is destroyed, you have erred in making a By-law, and therefore you have lost your being of a Corporation. Besides, if there were but a Colour for it, and it were any thing tolerable, surely that were enough to make us excusable in such a matter. If it has been received, as we agree it has, the Officers are Trespassers, every Individual of them are sueable, and any Man may bring his Action against them. But they that come to the Market, think not fit to complain; if they did not like the Market, they would not come at all; and if they did not like the Payment, they would not come neither; and there is no levying of any thing unless they do come.

Now, my Lord, I will admit the levying and the receiving, and yet I say this is no Forfeiture; for here is a Mistake of Law, or a Mistake of Fact, by Colour whereof Money is received: This by no means will work a Forfeiture of a Corporation; for at that rate, every Penalty that has been levied by a By-law will be adjudged a Levying of Money without Law, and so forfeit the Corporation; which has not been done in other Cases of By-laws, and those much worse than this; because most of those By-laws were made for levying Money upon Men for exercising a Trade; and 'tis much more to say that you should levy such Sums of Money upon every Stroke of honest Industry, whereby a Man gets his Livelihood, than that you shall pay so much for your Accommodation in my Ground for the better vending your Goods. This hath been held good in some Cases, but in others it hath been held naught; and this hath been all received and levied to the Use of the City too, and so 'tis a levying of Money, whereby they have a great Advantage; nay, 'tis worse still, because it is imposed by Force, and recovered by Force: but here 'tis a voluntary Penalty, no Force, no Compulsion, only their being removed from their Standings, no other Penalty, no Imprisonment, or the like; but if you do not like the Conditions, you may be gone: I desire you to walk out of this Market, if you don't like the Price of the Provisions; and to be gone from the Stall, if you don't like the Price of the Standing. We were not bound to provide these Stalls for you, but having provided them, if you don't like them, you may leave them; in other Cases, the Man is imprisoned, and sued by Action for the Penalty; here at any time, if you don't like, you may be gone.

My Lord, I am very confident, if this be so, that all Monies levied by a Corporation without Law are Forfeitures, or where the Law is mistaken; then I dare boldly affirm, that we never were a Corporation two Months since London was London; but by virtue of some old sleeping By-law or other, that has been set on foot, Monies have been levied, which perhaps will not be in Strictness allowed good: And if all these had been Forfeitures, we had been in a strange Condition, not one Month or two should pass over us, but we had forfeited it; and never can there be perhaps a Month to the End of the World, but we should still be forfeiting. And what is said of us, may be said of any other Corporation that happens to make By-laws. And I am sure in former Times there were Monies levied with a Witness, I mean not the late Times of Rebellion only, but an hundred Years ago, strange Exorbitances of that nature were committed by London and other Corporations; then they went by way of Information, but never was it thought that it could affect the Being of a Corporation: If it should do so, I do not know whether it will go at last. The greater or the lesser Sum is not that that will difference the Law. Is it a Forfeiture to receive 5000*l.*? Why is it not a Forfeiture to receive 500*l.*? Why not to receive 5*s.*? Why not to receive 5*d.*? No Bounds can be set for that, if it be a Transgression of the law; here is a Tort and a Wrong done by your By-law, that you have levied 5*d.* and therefore all this great Inheritance of London, this, that is the greatest Inheritance of the Kingdom, is forfeited for a Trifle, upon Three Halfpence, or a Basket of Eggs.

Nay, my Lord, to go further, I say, If this be a Forfeiture, I say it is only a Forfeiture of the Market; nay, not so much neither, 'tis only a Forfeiture of the Toll: My Lord, I cannot but once more mention that excellent Notion of my Lord Hobart, That the Power of making By-laws is included in the Act of the Corporation; for as Reason, says he, is given to a natural Body to govern it, so a politick Body must have Laws, as its Reason, to govern it. Now then the making of these Laws is but the Exercise of that Reason, declaring the Mind of the Corporation, for the Direction of the Officers of it, what to do, and what to take; and 'tis but like the Mind of a Man that directs his Hand what to do. For this is not like the Duty of Stallage, that relates to the Publick, and relates also to something that before they had no Interest in; but only relates to the Administration of a private Property, and directs the Manner of that Administration. They are Lords of the Market, and that is casual to them, it is not necessary for them so to be. If any Corporation bid their Officers levy so much Money; suppose they bid them take more Toll than is due, or levy more Money for Rent than is due for the Land, why this might be looked upon as a great Breach of Trust and Encroachment: They should have had but 6*d.* and they took 7*d.* and this done by Act of Common Council, which is their way of expressing their Mind; yet surely it would be no Forfeiture, because the Land is their own, and the Administration of it belongs to them only in point of Interest and Property. Suppose a Gentleman has a Market, and his Reason, which is his By-law, as my Lord Hobart says, puts him upon taking of Toll; but he does a little mistake the Law or the Custom, he bids his Servant take so much, which perhaps may be too much for Toll; does this destroy his Capacity of suing and being sued? You may as well say such a particular Person shall not plead, or be impleaded, if he do so and so. Nay this, if he were a Denizen, does not forfeit his Denization, and yet a Denizen is as perfectly a Creature of the King's as a Corporation is. It is Basilicon Doron, it is the Bounty and Kindness of the King to one born out of his Dominions, to give him the Capacity of a Subject, to sue and be sued, and the like, which cannot be forfeited, even for Breach of Conditions in the Letters Patents of Denization. For this is within Verfellin Manning's Case; if he does not observe the Laws of the Land, 'tis true, he must be punished for it, but he shall not be undenizen'd.

My Lord, there is a Statute, which I think is a most plain Declaration of the Law in this Case, and 'tis the Stat. of West. 1. cap. 31. Some call it it the 30th, because they differ in the numerating and heading of the Chapters. 'Tis the Statute concerning those that take outrageous Tolls in Market Towns. The Statute says, Le Roy prendra la Franchise del' March en sa Maine. The King shall seize the Franchise into his own Hands. My Lord Coke in his Comment upon that Statute says, he shall seize the Franchise of the Fair or Market, till it be redeemed by the Owner, that's all. But this is intended, says he, upon an Office to be found; for in Statutes all Incidents shall be supplied by Intendment.

Now in the Quo Warranto that was brought against the Corporation of Maidenhead in Palmer's Reports, there is this very Case. That Corporation took an outrageous Toll, too much Toll, or that that was not justifiable, for going over their Bridge. Yet it was so far from being imagined, that this should be a Forfeiture, (and yet the Case is the same, let any Man distinguish it that can) that it was a Question whether the Market was forfeited, or no, as you may see in that Book, fol. 82. And there 'tis said by Dodderidge, and at last it was agreed by all the Court, that it should be a Forfeiture only of the Toll, and not of the Market. And I desire that that Folio may be noted by your Lordship, and that you will please to look into what is said in that Case; for 'tis debated before, and it seemed as if they would have forfeited the Market by it, but not the Corporation; and yet that was not forfeited neither. And to this I will apply that Rule that Mr. Solicitor himself did mention, Puniatur in eo quo peccat. You have offended in the Toll, therefore you shall suffer in the Toll, not in the Market, to be sure not in the Corporation. For if it were that, it should affect the Market, it would be because it hath some relation to a Market as a Toll hath; but how can this possibly affect or touch the Corporation? The Statute indeed goes thus far, and says, Whosoever shall take outrageous Toll shall forfeit the Market; but then shall we come and add, Whosoever shall take outrageous Toll, shall forfeit his Capacity of holding a Market, or any thing else? Do they complain of us for taking the Legislative Power upon us, and therefore we shall forfeit our Corporation, when the Statute itself has appointed the Punishment, and says only, the Market shall be forfeited, and so make a new Law themselves? Statutes are supposed to be penal enough of themselves, and all penal Statutes are to be taken equitably as to the Penalty, and not stretch'd beyond the Letter. And where-ever a Statute inflicts a Penalty, and says you shall forfeit so much, as my Lord Hobart says, the Common Law shuts up the Negative, that you shall forfeit no more. How then is it possible we should forfeit that, which if it were forfeitable at all, is not within the Provision of this Law?

'Tis true, as Mr. Solicitor hath said in the Book of Assises that he cited in Vet. Nat. Brev 161. it is said you shall forfeit in the Case of a Misuser (where the Liberties are not depending one upon another) only the Liberty that is abused; but how that can be applied for him I understand not; for nothing can be more flat and plain against him: If so be we should forfeit our Toll or our Market, be it so; nay, if we should forfeit our Liberty of having a Common Council, what then? How is it possible to bring it up to a Forfeiture of the Corporation? You shall forfeit a Court of Pypowders, if you forfeit your Market, because 'tis incident to it, and dependent upon it, and subject to what Dangers the Market itself is subject to; but the Being of a Corporation, nothing can transcend that. To be sure what is incident to it, cannot transcend it; 'tis but a Subject to that which is superior.

For Example sake, my Lord, I will cite you a Case, which is the Case of the City of London too about the Measurage of Coals. It is Sir Julius Cesar's Case, 1 Leon' 106. And I chuse to cite that Book; for though it did not come out with your Lordship's Authority, yet my late Lord Chancellor gave this just Account of it, That it was one of the best of our later Reports. Sir Julius Cesar libelled in the Admiralty against the Officer of the City for measuring Coals upon the Thames. Fleetwood came to the Bar, and prayed a Prohibition, and Edgerton the Solicitor on the other Side complained, that the Mayor of London did take a Fine for this Measurage, and made an Office of it; and this he conceived was Extortion (which is the Thing complained of here in so many Words;) and being upon the Thames, should be punished in the Admiralty. As to that the Judges replied, by no means, and Wrey and Gawdey said, If it be Extortion in the Mayor, there is no Remedy for it in the Court of Admiralty, but in the King's Courts: And it shall be redressed here in a Quo Warranto, says Gawdey. 'Tis true, a Quo Warranto might well have been brought for redressing that Extortion; but it could not mean thereby, that the Corporation should be dissolved: And that it was so understood, is most plain; for accordingly a Quo Warranto is brought. You have it in Coke's Entries fol. 535. and 536. placit' 4. And the City of London appeared and pleaded, and prescribed to it; and thereupon the Attorney General that then was, my Lord Coke himself, was satisfied, and confessed their Title, and Judgment was given for them; and since it hath been held good and they have enjoyed it in Peace; and this I hope is a good Example for Mr. Attorney to follow in this Case.

My Lord, I come now to that Part which I come least willingly to, I mean that of the Petition; and that which I have to say in it, is this, my Lord: First I say, That this Petition is justified in the Pleading, and I hope it is very justifiable; if it were but excusable, 'tis enough. That it is justifiable to petition the King in our Necessities and Extremities, is plain from what my Lord Hobart says, fol. 220. He says it was resolved by the Court in Renham's Case, that it was lawful for any Subject to petition to the King for a Redress, in an humble and modest manner: For, as 'tis there said, Access to the Sovereign must not be shut up in case of the Subjects Distresses. Now the Common Council are not less privileged than any other sure, but rather more in this kind of Addressing and Petitioning: I cannot tell what Crime to make of this, there is so much alledged against us.

I did very well observe truly, and would always observe and remember in all such Cases, what my Lord Keeper here said to your Lordship, That Council should not so much speak, as if they would abet the Guilt of their Client, rather than advocate for their Innocency.

My Lord, if the Words themselves that are alledged are not Words that are unlawful to be delivered or spoken, then all this that they are dressed up with of the Intention to censure the King, and to bring him into Dislike with his People, all that must go for nothing, and are not to weigh in the Case. Now the Words are these: That there was a Prorogation, and by means of this, there being depending so many Impeachments of Lords and others, and Bills in the Parliament in both Houses, which could not be perfected any where but there, the Prosecution of the publick Justice, and the making Provisions necessary for the Preservation of his Majesty and his Protestant Subjects, received an Interruption. Now, my Lord, I conceive these Words are not Words that in themselves are unlawful, and for that your Lordship will be pleased to consider our Plea; I need not repeat it, you have it before you: If they are in Sense and Substance the same Words that have been spoken by the King, and the Lords and Commons in Parliament; he that will not be satisfied with that Authority, will not be satisfied with any. Then what do we say? We say, that the Prosecution of the publick Justice received an Interruption: Does not the King say so, and more, in his Speech we have set forth, wherein he recommends it to both Houses, that Justice may be done? What is the Meaning then but this? If the further Prosecution of the Offenders goes not on, Justice is not done. And so we speak but the King's Words. We say, they are not tried, or they were not tried; they themselves complain of it to this Day; and therefore Justice did receive an Interruption. I am confident, without Reflection, that honourable Person my Lord Danby, in this Point, hath said Words much more liable to Exception, though truly Words, that I believe deserve no Rebuke. He has complained, that Justice was not done in his Case, because he was not tried, and that when he desired to be tried too; but his Liberty taken away, and he forfeited that which was dearer to him than Lands or Honours, his Health, whereby he endangered his Life, and lost all the Comforts of Life. If it were lawful for him to say, as certainly it was, That Justice was not done in his Case, why might not the City say so? Either these Lords ought to be condemned, or they ought to be acquitted: 'Tis hard to say Justice is done, when they lie so long in Prison, and are not either acquitted or condemned.

Then we say this, That the making Provision for the Preservation of the King's Person, and of his Protestant Subjects, received an Interruption. To this Part we give this Answer: We set forth, That there were Bills depending in the Parliament for this Purpose, and that is agreed to us by the Demurrer; and that these Bills could not pass into Laws, any more than the Lords could be tried but in Parliament. Why then if it be so, that the Matter cannot be done, nor Provision made, but (as that Proclamation, that issued for the Fast, said, and as the Addresses of both Houses for the Fast do say) by the Blessing of God upon the Counsels of King and Parliament; if these Counsels, or the King and his Parliament are interrupted, this is not done. To make such an high Crime of this I do not understand; I would not be thought to speak anything to justify that which is really a Crime; but this is that I say, 'Tis not in Law unlawful for us to petition the King, or address to him: But, my Lord, to take off the Edge of this Business, I shall beg Leave to read to your Lordship a Speech of the King's, made the 6th of March following, and therein there are these Words, The further Prosecution of the Plot.

My Lord, let any Man read, and spell, and see how in Substance the Words in our Petition differ from the Words of the King, making those Laws necessary for the Security of himself and the Kingdom, and this spoken the 6th of March, when this very Petition now complained of was presented in January or February before, and there was no Parliament between. No Man will say, that there were Laws sufficient for the Security of the King and Kingdom, when the King himself speaks of the Necessity of making such: So then, those Laws that were preparing received an Interruption. The Lords were not tried: Is not that an Interruption of Justice? Since they could be tried no-where else, as must be granted; and the King recommends it to them as not done, but necessary to be done. So the King said before, and so it is implied here. There is no such thing said in the Petition, That the King did interrupt Justice, and the Proceedings of the Parliament: It is an Inference and a Consequence made by Wit and Art: not that the King did interrupt, or intend to interrupt Justice; but it says, By the Prorogation of the Parliament the publick Justice received an Interruption.

My Lord, suppose at that Time there had been a Pestilence here, and the King had been as much resolved to meet his Two Houses as they here, but by reason of the Pestilence he were necessitated and forced to make a Prorogation; then there comes such a Petition from the City, and says, That by reason of this Prorogation those Bills that were depending did not pass, and the publick Justice received an Interruption: What is the Offence of this? 'Tis all true. If there be Bills depending, and Impeachments, that can no other where be tried, they do receive Interruption by a Prorogation. Can any Man say this is false? The Charge in the Application is, That we did falsely and maliciously say, what? that which is true, and that which the King had said before, and that which the Lords and Commons said after him, That till those Things were done they were not safe; and those Things as yet were not done.

My Lord, there is this further in it, the Petition is set forth in verba; and therefore I may take any thing out of it to explain it, and store it to itself; for this indeed is a very restrained Construction of the Petition.

It says, when this interruption by the Prorogation was received, That the King for urgent Causes, and very good Reasons, did prorogue the Parliament. It is his Prerogative to do so? and God forbid but he should have it. I think, without doubt, we should be more at a Loss for want of that Prerogative, than we can be by the Use of it. It is mine, and I believe every good Man's Opinion, that that Prerogative is very necessary and profitable for us all; but it is the Consequence of it, that this Interruption of Justice is received; nay, we are so far from saying, that the King did interrupt Justice, or intending it, that we say, we do hope the King's gracious Intentions were only to make way for the better Concurrence of his Majesty and his Parliament. The King does, for great Causes, and known to himself, who has the Prerogative, prorogue the Parliament; and by, as a mere Consequence, not as the King's Intention, the publick Justice is interrupted: Nay, this we affirm was with a good Intention in the King, that he might the better be enabled to concur with his Parliament, as is set forth in the Petition. Can there be any thing more properly said? 'Tis the greatest Justification of the Prorogation that can be. The King has prorogued the Parliament: What to do? Why Justice hath in View received an Interruption, but not in the Intention of the King. We know what the Meaning of it is, and so we set forth in our very Petition, it is to gain Time, that he may the better concur with his Parliament. It is a great Commendation of the King's Purpose, instead of charging him with Injustice, that he did resolve to concur with his Parliament for such Ends, and accordingly did prorogue the Parliament.

Now the Attorney General hath put in, that it was ea intentione; there is the Sting of the Business to put in those Words, to make that which we may lawfully speak, of itself to be an Offence. But truly that signifies just nothing: It can never hurt a Thing that is true, it has great Authority in it, if it be applied to a Thing that is unlawful; but if in Substance it be true, and the Thing itself justifiable, those Words make nothing in the Case; and I think I need not argue that Point, but refer myself to the great Case that was in Westminster-hall; and that is the Reversal of the Judgment given in this Court against my Lord Hollis, which was a Reversal in Parliament; and is printed in the last Impression of Mr. Justice Coke's Reports by Order of Parliament; and there they explode all the Notion of ea intentione, and this Business. A Man speaks Words that he might speak in Parliament (though I know not whether he might, or no, but the great Thing is, if Words, that in themselves are tolerable to be spoken, be spoken, you shall not come and say they were spoken with an ill Intention; though, as I shall shew by-and-by, this hath a kind of Fatality in it, and that is this, that it is done with an ill Mind by a Corporation that hath no Mind at all.

Mr. Att. Gen. Just now you said it had a Mind, and Reason was its Mind.

Mr. Recorder. I said as my Lord Hobart says, that a By-law to it is a Mind, as Reason is to a Man, but it hath no moral Mind. My Lord, then I say, the Citizens of London were indeed at that Time under great Consternation, by reason of the Conspiracies that had been discovered in Parliament, and in the Courts of Justice; and it had been declared by the late Lord Chancellor, at the Trial of the Lord Stafford, which your Lordship may very well remember, That London was burnt by the Papists; and therefore it was no Wonder, that they were desirous, that themselves and the Kingdom should be put into great Security against those Enemies. This, my Lord, I confess is a tender Point, and I would not speak a Word in it without a Law-book to back me. I remember that my Lord Hobart says, that Zeal and Indignation are fervent Passions. The City of London had great Indignation against the Papists for this Conspiracy against the King and Kingdom, and the Religion established by Law. There was no Disaffection in the City at this Time, when this Petition was made, sure; and I wonder, that any Man should say, that knows London, and was acquainted with it then, and looks upon this Petition which passed nemine contradicente, that they had such an Intention as is insinuated; and pray let him read the Names of the worthy Aldermen that then sat upon the Bench, and the other Names of the Common Council-men then present, and then let him say, if, without Reflection, the King have more loyal Subjects in the City of London than these Men were. And do you think, if there had been in it any Sedition, or any of those ill Qualities that make up the ill Adverbs, which are joined to it in the Replication, not one of all those loyally disposed Men would have spoken against it? But alas! all of it passed nemine contradicente.

My Lord, I say, that if the Matter of it be justifiable, as I think it is, then all these Words will signify nothing, if there were never so many more of them: And the presenting and carrying of it to the King, that is no Offence, that is not so much as pretended to be one. And, my Lord, I think it a very harsh Translation of the Word into Latin, when the Petition says, That the Parliament's Proceedings, or the publick Justice, received an Interruption, to put that Word of Obstructionem in; truly I think a better Word might have been found to express the soft Expression in the Petition: and they need not have put that hard violent Word Obstructionem, when to make English of it they translated it Interruption.

But, my Lord, they do admit, I say, that the making and presenting of it to the King is not the Offence, so much as the Publishing of it, by which it is exposed to many others besides. Now to excuse that, the Answer we give is this; and 'tis that which will carry a very reasonable Ground of Justification in it: Certain Citizens, that were private Men, had petitioned the Common Council, and thereby they were importuned to make known the Desires of the City to the King, and it was reasonable to make known to those Citizens what the Common Council had done, to prevent false Rumours, which we knew were rife enough in those Days; and to shew, that there was nothing ill in it, we did print it. And 'tis also all driving at the common Interest, at the King's Safety, the Preservation of the Church and the Government established: All this they did desire might be known to these Citizens, and all others that inquired about it; and therefore they printed it, to evidence that there was nothing of ill intended in it. And I do wonder, I must confess, that this Objection of the publishing of this Petition should be so much insisted upon; for they say, that the Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens of the City of London did it; and say not any thing of the Common Council, that they did print it: Now they that did vote it, knew it without printing; and 'tis alledged in the Pleadings, and confessed by the Demurrer, that the Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens of London, that is, the Corporation, consists of above 50,000 Men, which cannot well be intended otherwise. Why then, here is a Petition that is agreed to be well enough lodged as to the Persons that voted it, being the Liberty of the Subject to petition; and if this had been only presented to the King, though it had been by those 50,000 Men, say, if it had been by 10,000 Men, who had been the Corporation, it had been well enough, so it had not been printed, but only kept private to themselves: Why then 'tis very strange, that what is known to all London, so great a Part of the Kingdom, should be lawful, but it should be heinously unlawful to send the News of it further. It went further than the City of London; and therefore 'tis such an Offence as shall be a Forfeiture of the Corporation. My Lord, there is the Case of Lake and King, the Petition to the Parliament was scandalous in itself, yet it stood protected, being presented to the Parliament; and it was lawful to print it, provided it were delivered to a Committee of Parliament, or only to those that were Members; though 'tis said there, that the Printing of it is a great Publishing; for the Composers, Correctors, and other Persons, that are concerned in the Press, read every Letter of it. But it was answered, that Printing is but a more expeditious Way of Writing; and if he had employed 20 Clerks, it had been a greater Publishing than three or four Printers. Possibly the Printers might not read it, or not be able to read it well, or not all of them read it at that Time.

Now here, my Lord, sure it was lawful to acquaint the Citizens what they had done, if you take it to be the Act of the Common Council, and the Common Council to be the Representative of the City. It was always agreed by the House of Commons, that any Member might send the Votes to those that sent them thither, and whom they represented; they have blamed indeed Men for sending the Debates, but never for communicating the Votes: And what they may do by Writing, that they may do by Printing. Why then might not the Citizens of London, who by Custom choose those Common Council-men, well desire to know, and might well know, what they had done? And then what they might do by Writing, they might by Printing; for that is but another Way, though a more suitable and compendious Way, of exhibiting any thing that you would have go to many. And if it be lawful to impart it to all the City, and all the City does know it, though it does go further, 'tis no Matter; for what is known to London, may very well be known to all the Nation besides, without Offence, if it did go further. Besides, it shall never be intended it was published further, or that any others knew of it; for 'tis said to be published in the Parish of St. Michael Bassishaw, in the Ward of Bassishaw, and that is in London, to the Citizens of London; and so they only talked of it amongst themselves. Besides, the main Thing which I go upon, is, if there be no Ill in the Thing itself, the ea intentione can make no Crime by a bare Affirmation, which we deny; and if it might be well said or done, it is lawful to print it, and the Publication is no Offence neither.

My Lord, the next Point I come to is this, That a Corporation cannot possibly commit a capital Crime, or any other Crime against the Peace: And I shall offer this Dilemma, Either it was done seditiously, or not; if not, then there is no sufficient Assignment of a Cause of Forfeiture; if it were, then 'tis a Crime for which the Offender is indictable; and that, I say, is absolutely impossible for a Corporation to be guilty of. And here I will throw in also that Business of the Toll; and I will, for Argument's sake, admit the Taking of a wrongful Toll to be Robbery, and then let the Argument go on. I have heard it said within the Bar occasionally, that a Corporation is intrusted with the Government; and that they may commit Treason, and raise Sedition, as Mr. Solicitor hath said; I suppose it must be under their Great Seal: But I confess, I believe it is rather spoken to amuse, than to satisfy: But I really think it is no ill nor unjustly Thing for me to say, nor against the Government to affirm, That 'tis impossible a Corporation can commit Treason, or that it is intrusted with the Government in any such Kind.

But first, my Lord, I shall shew you what Opinion former Times had, and that because such an Opinion as this hath been broached of late Days.

L. C. J. Mr. Recorder, will you be much longer? Because I must sit here at Nisi prius this Afternoon, and yet I would fain hear the Argument, if it would not be too long.

Mr. Recorder. No, my Lord: I have almost done, and will cut short.

In 21 E. 4. fol. 13. b. 'tis said by Pigott, That a Mayor has two Abilities; the one to his own Use, to make and to grant, and to do as another natural Person does; and then the Mayor, as Mayor and Commonalty, hath another Capacity to their common Use and Profit; and that is but a Name, an Ens rationis, a Thing that cannot be seen, and is no Substance; and for this Name or Corporation, 'tis impossible they can do or suffer any Wrong, as to beat or be beaten, as such a Body; but the Wrong is made to every Member of the Body, as to his own proper Person, and not as to the Name of Corporation; nor can the Corporation do a personal Wrong to another; nor can they commit Treason or Felony as to the Corporation, nor against any other Person. And if a Writ of Debt be brought against the Mayor and Commonalty, or other such Body, upon an Obligation, and they plead it is not their Deed, and it is found their Deed, they shall not be imprisoned as another single Person shall. The same Law is, if they are found Disseisers with Force, they shall not be imprisoned, nor in a Writ of Ravishment of Ward shall they either be imprisoned, or abjure the Realm; for such a Body is but a Name, to which such an Act cannot be done. So says Catesby in the same Book; In a Writ brought against them no Capias shall issue, because they are but as a dead Person in Law; and the Appearance upon a Capias cannot be otherwise than personal. And so to this Purpose says the Chief Justice there; If this Body will do any thing, it must be done by Writing. And all along it is the Tenor of the whole Case, that a Corporation cannot commit Treason, or any other Crime. But the Reason of the Thing is above any Authority. Suppose, that they under their common Seal should commit Treason, and you bring an Indictment of Treason against the Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens of the City of London, what Judgment shall be given against them in their Corporate Capacity? What? It shall be, that Suspendatur per collum Corpus politicum. And then, what Execution shall be done upon that Sentence? What? must they hang up the Common Seal? Nothing else you can do can affect them; but in their private Capacity, there they may be punished as single Persons.

A Penal Statute says, that he or she, that offends against the Law, shall forfeit so much, or incur such a Penalty: Is a Corporation Male, or Female, that it should come under such a Provision? But the real Reason of the Law is this, it is a Civil Being, it is Ens civile, it is Corpus politicum; liticum; it hath civil Qualities, but it hath no moral Qualities; and all Offences consist in the Immorality of them, and there must be Malice to make that Immorality. No Words or Acts are Treason or Felony, unless there be a traitorous Mind, or a felonious Mind; and therefore a Mad-man cannot be guilty of Treason or Felony. Serjeant brought an Action for these Words, that he had spoken Treason; it was moved in Arrest of Judgment, that this cannot be actionable; for he might speak Treason in putting a Case: Ay! that were well, said they, if it could be understood so; but we must intend it, that he spoke Treason, as his own Words ex corde suo, which makes it Treason; for Treason consists in the Immorality of the Mind.

Another Reason is what Pigott said, as I said before, That a Corporation is but a Name, an Ens rationis, a Thing, that cannot see or be seen, and indeed is no Substance, nor can do or suffer Wrong, nor any thing where a corporal Appearance is requisite. What my Lord Dyer says in Moor 68. that he never saw, is, I believe, true in general, what no Man ever did see, that a Corporation could be bound in a Recognisance or Statute Merchant; and why? because it must be acknowledged in Person: And so in this Case, the Guilt follows the Person, but cannot a mere Capacity. In all Crimes the Offender must appear in Person, and plead in Person, and suffer in Person; but you can never bring the Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens into Gaol, to appear and plead to an Indictment, to receive a Judgment, or suffer Execution. Can a Body Politick, that is invisible, appear in Person; But then there is this great Objection: By this Means, they say, if there be no Punishing of them, there is no Government, and they may commit Treason under the Great Seal, they may raise Armies, and instigate a Rebellion, and all with Impunity. My Lord, I say no, and I give two Answers to it, that are not to be replied to; and the first is this:

1. All these Persons, that are met together, though they are met corporaliter, in their corporate Capacity, for the Acts of the Corporation at that Time; yet when they go out of their corporate Business, and commit Treason or Felony, the Crime does not egredi personas, every one of them is a Traitor or a Felon; and notwithstanding they appeared there under the Pretence of a Corporation, yet they are all liable in their private several Capacities, every one of them must be indicted personally, and suffer personally: For when they go about to do such a Thing, it is out of the Business of the Corporation; and they must answer for their own particular Offences. But,

2. I have another Answer to give to it. This Objection is to be retorted on the other Side, that if a Corporation authorize the levying of War under their common Seal, they shall be affected by it in their politick Capacity, and are liable to the Law in that Capacity only, and must suffer in that Capacity only: And the Consequence of that is, they are discharged in their private Capacity; and this is a Law of Indemnity and Protection for all Crimes; for a Man cannot be liable two Ways for Treason, or Felony, or any other Crimes: If he be not liable in his private, he is in his publick Capacity; if not in his publick, he is in his private. And what is the Consequence of that? This is a Dispensation for a Corporation met together in a Body, to do any illegal Thing, or to commit any enormous Crime; for the King's Counsel say this, We are responsible for it in our politick Capacity; and what Execution can then be done to punish that Corporation with such a Punishment as the Law inflicts, that is, Imprisonment, or Death, any more than upon an Action of Debt brought against them upon a Bond, and Non est factum pleaded, and found for the Plaintiff? Can they be imprisoned? and the like. So that this shall protect and shelter them in the Commission of any capital Offence; for if they are to suffer for it as a Corporation, you must take Judgment against them, as the Law gives it; and how will that be done against an invisible Body? What will be the Execution against the Corpus Politicum, that can neither see nor be seen?

I think this mighty plain; and I must confess, I wonder how it could ever enter into the Mind of any Man, that a Corporation could commit a corporate Crime. I have, as it became me, in regard of the Duty of my Place, and before that, for my own Learning, read Stamford's Pleas of the Crown, my Lord Coke's 4th Institutes, Poulton de Pace Regni, my Lord Hales's Pleas of the Crown, Dalton's Justice of the Peace, and other Books on that Subject; but I defy any Man to shew me in any of those Treatises concerning criminal Matters, any Resolution, that ever a Corporation could be so concerned, that they should be brought before a Justice of Peace, or proceeded against upon any Law for Treason or Felony, or be hanged in their political Capacity.

My Lord, I shall conclude all my Discourse of this Kind (and I have almost done, because I perceive I incroach upon your Patience) with an Observation I have made upon the 19 H. 7. c. 7. and it is the Statute, that makes Provision against Corporations, that made By-laws against the Prerogative. That Statute says, That some Corporations did so; now an higher Offence than that, sure, cannot well be described; and there that Law says, that those that do so, that make such By-laws against the Prerogative, shall forfeit for so doing, for every Offence, forty Pounds, unless they are confirmed by the Chancellor and the Treasurer, and Chief Justices, or any Three of them. Now to what Purpose was this Statute made; if the making of an ill By-law (and worse cannot be than a By-law against the King's Prerogative) should be a Forfeiture of the Being of a Corporation? How vainly did the King and Parliament employ themselves to make a Statute, that a Corporation should forfeit 40 Pounds for such an Offence? No Man will say they had rather take that Penalty than another, when they might have a greater, if a greater could be had by Law. If they might have had a Quo Warranto, and thereby destroy the Corporation, surely they would not have stood for the Penalty of 40 l. for they might easily have got more Money: No, they might have said, We will never pass it by, unless you will give us 4000 l. or a far greater Sum; nor shall you have your Corporation again, without you give us a considerable Recompence for it. And when the Process and the Proceedings were so expeditious and easy to come at in a Quo Warranto, as it was easy in those Days, why should they put the King to the Delays, in an Action of Debt for so small a Penalty as 40 l.? So that I take it to be a direct Judgment of the Parliament in that Case, that no Corporation should or could be forfeited for the making of any By-law that was irregular, though it were even against the King's Prerogative.

But to hasten to a Conclusion, I have all this while, my Lord, supposed, that the Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens of London have done this: But it is not so; this is not the Act of the Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens, 'tis not the two hundredth part of the Corporation, 'tis but the Act of the Common Council; and we have distinguished ourselves by pleading, that it does not consist of above 250, when the City contains above 50,000. I must confess the Council is not taken notice of much in Law; as is seen in Warren's Case, 2 Crook 540. & 2 Rolls 112. Warren, being one of the Common Council of Coventry, and displaced, sued out a Writ of Restitution; and upon that Writ it was returned, that by Custom the City might place and displace ad libitum; they there held, that the Custom was good: But it is not so of a Freeman or Alderman, because he hath a Freehold; but a Common Council is a thing collateral to a Corporation, and the Office of a Common Council is nothing but only to give Assistance and Advice, which they may refuse at their Pleasure. In Bywick's Case in Style 32. & 2 Rolls 456. it is said, That 'tis a Place merely by Custom, and that the Common Council is properly but only a Court of Advice; and, my Lord, you shall never intend more than that they were a Court of Advice: All the Rise of their Power is but by Custom, and that Custom is pleaded to give Advice for the Benefit of the City, and make By-laws for the Good of the Corporation; and that is confessed by the Demurrer, and you shall intend no more than what is opened in the Pleading.

And then 'tis evident this was done by a very small Part of the Citizens of London; and that does no way affect the whole Corporation. In James Bagg's Case, 1 Rolls fol. 226. it is said, That if a Patent be procured by some Persons of a Corporation, and the greater Part do not assent to it, that shall not bind a Corporation. And if so be a Charter sealed, and sent by the King, because not accepted in pais, by the greater Party, bind not, shall an Act done by a few; and an Act done, that tends to a Forfeiture, bind the Whole in point of their Being? There is no Ground to say, that the Common Council represents the City, no more than a Counsel does his Client, or an Attorney his Master; only as far as is for the Benefit of the City, they are chosen and intrusted to make By-laws; if they offend, they are but Ministers and Officers, and so they are within the Statute of Edw. III. which I mention, though I think we have no Need of that in the Case to help us; if they make an unreasonable By-law, it is void, and every Man that is aggrieved by it may have his Remedy, may bring his Action. Shall you supply this by an Intendment, that they have such a Relation? that they are the Representatives of the City of London? that they have a Power to forfeit the Corporation? No, my Lord, by Law they are Part of the Corporation, but they have no such Power to forfeit the Corporation: A Custom shall never be construed to enable a Man to do a Wrong; and a great Wrong it is, that they that are trusted, and trusted but for a Year, and trusted but for the Good of the Corporation of which they are Part, should give up the Being, or, what is worse, forfeit the Being of that Corporation. The Custom of Kent, that makes an Infant capable of making a Feoffment, shall never enable an Infant Tenant in Tail to make a Feoffment, so as to work a Discontinuance of the Estate Tail, and put the Heir to his Formedon. Every illegal Act of theirs is beyond their Commission, and a Nullity of that is all in respect of themselves; and it is as if they had never done it as to the Corporation, for they are by no means the Corporation; for tho' they use the Common Seal in some Cases, at some Times, so do the Court of Aldermen in other Cases; but it is only in other Cases wherein they are particularly intrusted. If an Act of Common Council say, that I shall have such and such Lands of the City, that Act signifies nothing, but as a Direction and Advice; when it is under the Common Seal, it is an Act of Corporation, and proceeding by Advice of Common Council, it binds.

Now, my Lord, this is the more unreasonable, because we know, that the Practice of the Common Council in London being to advise for all the Inhabitants, they are chosen by the Unfreemen as well as others; and it is a strange Thing, that they should have a Capacity to give away the Liberty of the Citizens, when they are chosen by others as well as them. They had no such Trust for them; nay, all Trust they had was to keep their Liberties, and not to destroy them. Has any Man a Trust to destroy himself? Sure no Man is trusted by God himself to be Falsus deus. And certainly then you can never understand it to be in the Nature of a Trust to destroy another; and the least Citizen, my Lord, has as much as as true an Interest in the Corporation of the City of London, as the greatest: And therefore 250, if they had been much the greater Number of the Citizens, would signify nothing to the rest of the Body.

My Lord, I shall only say this little more: Here is no Crime charged relating to them as a Corporation: Here is indeed a fine Word used, that we did this contra fiduciam in corpore politico repositam; but all this is but an imaginary Trust, the King never gave them a Power or Authority, or intrusted them to make By-laws that were unreasonable; he gave them Power to make reasonable By-laws, and so he does every Corporation. And the same Law that gave them the Power, limits that Power, and says, if they go beyond that Power, it is a Nullity. And these Acts relate not to them as a Corporation; the Petition is not so much as said to be against any Trust reposed in the Corporation; certainly there never was any such Trust. Did ever the King intrust them to advise him about the Matters contained in the Petition? And if not, then it is not contra fiduciam; therefore it relates to particular Persons: If it be an Offence, I hope it is none of the Corporation's.

But then the levying of Money, that is contra fiduciam; they took upon them an illegal and unjust Power in the Common Council. Suppose it is, how does this belong to the Corporation? It is an Incroachment upon Property, it is the most arbitrary Thing in the World. Whether they have the Market, and the Dominion of it, or not, is matter of Fact, and being pleaded, is confessed by the Demurrer: And then for the Power of making By-laws, that is a Thing that cannot possibly be taken from them while they are a Corporation; it is that which must be in them as a Corporation, like the Faculty of Reason in a Man, to express his Resolutions by. And it is no more, than if a Man, that has a Market, bid his Servant go and remove such as have Stalls there, unless they will pay so much. That Direction is as good a Law as this, and as bad a Law as this, and no more. There is nothing else in it but the Direction of the Officers, what they shall do in the ordering of the Markets, and disposing of the City's Property.

Then as to the formal Method of expressing themselves, whether it be by Act of Common Council, or under the Common Seal, or by their natural Voice, it is all one, it is not a Thing that concerns them as a Body Politick: But if it were illegal and mistaken, I say, the Penalty is only, that it shall be void. What the Common Council, nay, what the Corporation does within the Limits of its Authority, is good; what beyond that it does, is void. If I command my Servant to distrain for Rent, and he kills a Man in the doing of it, this, as to me, is void; but as to himself, that is chargeable upon him. And what I say of the Common Council, I say of the Corporation itself, that it is a Capacity, and a limited Capacity; it is the Act of the Members, not of the Corporation, if they do wrong. The Common Council can act for the Good of the City, and the City can do no more, if they themselves should meet. Crooke, Eliz. fol. 85. the Queen makes a Lease for Years of Lands to the Men of Chesterfield, by the Name of Aldermen, and they by that Name grant all their Interest to Clerk; says that Book, This is void: for the Queen granting them a Lease as to the Aldermen of Chesterfield, this makes them a Corporation, and gives them a Capacity to take, but not to grant. And so Rolls Abr. 1. p. 513. And therefore no Corporation is to be considered as a Corporation, but only when it acts according to the Capacity allowed to it; and as to the rest, it all turns into their private Capacity, but it affects not the Body, nor hath any such Relation as to bind it.

My Lord, all the Question here is, Whether there shall be such a Person in esse as this Corporation? Whether the City of London shall subsist as such a Person, to sue and be sued, to plead and be impleaded? There is nothing of Government or Misgovernment in the Case; but it is all about our Capacity, and nothing else, whether we shall be Defendant or Plaintiff in any Court.

My Lord, Magna Charta, and all the other Acts, that have gone in Confirmation of it, shew the great Care of the Government in all Ages to preserve the City of London; and I look upon them as so many Declarations of the Immortality of it, and of all other Corporations. I shall use a strange Argument perhaps at first Hearing, but it is to me a great Evidence for us, that Magna Charta does not confirm our Being, but our Liberties and Privileges; it says, That the City of London shall have all its Liberties, it confirms its Leets, its Markets, and all those Things, that is, it confirms all that it has; it has not saved indeed, if a Corporation indeed be built upon a Corporation; but that particular Liberty may be destroyed, as that of Bridewell, and the like; but it does more than confirm its Being, for it does implicitly declare, that that was impossible to be forfeited: They confirm what needed Confirmation; but for their Being there was no Need of that; it only confirmed the supervenient Liberties, without which it might be a Corporation; but as to its Being, it meddled not with that. And if it were not so, it were an unreasonable Thing, that we should have so many Acts of Parliament, that give such particular Powers to the Mayor and Commonalty of London; and scarce any Act of Parliament, that relates to the Publick, but London is mentioned, and taken care of in it. Are not all these Declarations, that London should stand for ever? Would not any one have said else, Pray what do you put such Confidence in London for? There is not such a fickle Thing upon the Earth as the Being of the Corporation of London. If they lay but 6d. upon a Joyn of Meat, they are gone, and there is not a Month in the Year but they forfeit their Being.

The Act for Administration hath a Proviso, that says, it shall not extend to London: Why does any Man think, that this Law was not intended to be as perpetual for London, as for other Parts of the Kingdom? They did not question but London would be a Corporation as long as England was England. It would be a strange Thing in the Example of it, that the World should be taught by one Instance, that a Corporation can be ruined, when so many People put their Trusts in those Corporations, and so many vast Inheritances depend upon them. And I think the King and the Government, or those you call so, are more concerned to preserve London, than all the Persons that are in it. I would not speak it in this Place by way of Argument for my Client, but I think I could maintain it in all Places; only I hope and believe I shall have no Need for it.

My Lord, all Innovations (as this must certainly be a very great one) are dangerous; this Frame of Government has lasted and been preserved for many Hundreds of Years, and I hope will be so as long as the World endures.

My Lord, I am sensible I need your Patience; but I have just done. There is a Charge that has very little, indeed there is nothing in the Matter; but the Weight and Consequences are fitter to be meditated upon, than spoken of. And therefore for these Reasons I do pray, that these Liberties may be adjudged to us, and we may be dismissed out of this Court.

Now, my Lord, if your Lordship please, I will give an Answer to Mr. Solicitor's Authorities.

Lord Chief Justice. I suppose you do intend to argue it again, and therefore there will not be so much Need of that now; besides, it is late, and cannot stay.

Mr. Attorney General. My Lord, I think it may be very proper to have the other Argument, the first Week in Easter Term.

Lord Chief Justice. Take what Day you will, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Attorney General. Let it be the first Friday in the Term, if you please, my Lord.

Lord Chief Justice. Let it be so. Look you, Mr. Recorder, I perceive you do agree, that the Petition, setting forth, that the King having prorogued the Parliament, and thereby that Common Justice had received Interruption; you have justified in your Plea, (I took it always to be so) now at the Bar, That the King by the Prorogation did interrupt the Justice of the Kingdom.

Mr. Recorder. No, no, my Lord: Then I have Reason to speak again, to make myself rightly understood.

Lord Chief Justice. Why, look you, you do agree, that the King had prorogued the Parliament, and thereby that publick Justice was interrupted; if that were so, by whose Means, and by whom did the publick Justice receive Interruption, if not by the King? I did take it to be so really, and that you had justified it.

Mr. Recorder. My Lord, I do agree, as we say, and the King himself said, that these Acts were not passed, nor the Lords tried; and so Justice was not done: And I would ask your Lordship, or any other indifferent Person, whether Justice were done, or necessary Provision for these Things made, if those Bills were unpassed? If it were so, it is a natural Truth, that thereby the Trial, and Acquittal, or Condemnation of the Lords was interrupted; and so was the Security of the King's Person, and the Protestant Religion, the Bills not being passed. For the King calls upon the Parliament to pass them the next Session, therefore they were not passed in the former Session. This is by no means a charging of the Interruption of Justice upon the King; every great Thing, that is done by the King, may have a prejudicial Influence, it may be, as to some Particulars; but to say, that thereby Justice is interrupted, is not to charge any Blame upon the King; because, though it may be prejudicial in one Particular, yet it may be useful to the Publick. No doubt, if the King do prorogue the Parliament for never so great Ends, and necessary Causes, yet if I have but one Bill passing there, suppose it be a private Bill about Naturalization, or the like, if a Prorogation comes, it is naturally true, that that is interrupted; but that is not laying a Blame upon the King.

Lord Chief Justice. May it be said, that the publick Justice is interrupted, if a Bill for Naturalization, or the like, pass not before the Prorogation? I speak it for this only, that they that argue next may think upon it. The Petition does say, that the publick Justice was interrupted: Did they mean it was true? or did they mean it was not true? If they did mean it was true, then you have done well to justify it, to say it was so, and the King had done amiss in proroguing the Parliament. Yet it seems, the Common Council of London, neither by Charter nor Prescription, had any Right to controul the King, nor to be of the King's Council neither; and therefore it was a Matter purely dehors. If the Matter were not true, why do you put in your Petition? If it be true, justify it, if you can. But here is the Matter; I would have a good Answer given me to this Point: The Petition was to the King; if so be the Petition had been delivered to the King, (as it may be it was) it was but one single Petition to the King; that might be well enough, if there had been no more in the Case, it is very possible it might not have been a Question at this Time: But pray, I would know of them that argue next, by what Law or Authority it was, and what was the Meaning of it, that that which did not require two Clerks to write, in order to its being presented to the King, must be printed? By what Law is it to be justified? the Printing and Publishing of this Petition, and sending it all over the Nation, whereby the Mayor, Aldermen, and Common Council of the City of London, do let all the Nation know, that they do look upon the King as one, that by the Prorogation of the Parliament had given the publick Justice of the Nation an Interruption? Pray by what Custom or Law is this published? In the Case of Lebellis fam-fis (even in the Case of a Subject) it is adjudged, that if you print a Libel, though the Matter of it be true, you shall be punished for it: Now when it is argued again, I would desire some good Satisfaction in that, what Reason or Ground there was for printing or publishing this Petition, unless it be to that Intent which is set forth by Mr. Attorney General in his Replication?

Now for the other Point, as you have ordered the Matter, you hold, that a Corporation cannot be forfeited. Mr. Solicitor did take some Pains to argue, that there was no Statute, that did protect you from a Forfeiture; he was not aware of what you did insist upon: You say, that by the Common Law Corporations cannot forfeit their Being; if so be they cannot, there is an End of the Question. But I pray you do you take it, that a Corporation can commit any corporate Act, or no? For according to your Definition of the Matter, if nothing will serve but the Act of the Mayor, Aldermen, and all the Citizens, I believe I may safely say, and so will every one else, that never any corporate Act was done by the City of London since it was a City.

We know on the other Side, and you, when it makes for your Turn, told us, that the Mayor, Aldermen, and Common Council could make By-laws, and they were good, and binding, that is, when it lay in your Way. For you make a Prescription in your Plea, and so also you have said at the Bar, that they may make By-laws to bind the Corporation, so that it seems when it is for your Convenience, then the Mayor, Aldermen, and Common Council can do as much as all the Corporation; but when you come to be touched with something, that you have done, in which you have gone beyond what you should have done, then the Citizens are 50,000 Men, and these are but 250 Persons, that have done these Things. Either the Mayor, Aldermen, and Common Council are the governing Part of the Corporation, or else they signify just Nothing: If they be, then whatsoever they agree upon binds the Whole, and must be taken as a corporate Act; or otherwise you will bring it to this Pass, that the Corporation can do Nothing at all. For if the whole Corporation be not bound by such an Act, then it is impossible for you ever to do an Act that shall be an Act of the Corporation; so that that will be pretty hard for you, that are for the City, I think, to maintain. Then I have but one Word more (I give no Opinion, but only tell you what I would have you apply yourselves to): Is the Trust of making By-laws annexed to the Lord of the Market? or it is annexed to the Lord Mayor? or it is annexed to the Corporation? Surely the Power of making By-laws is annexed to the Corporation; and I cannot see how, as Owners of the Markets, they have that Power. Now by your Distinction, where there is a Franchise that does necessarily depend upon another, there the Abuse of any Part does forfeit the whole Franchise. If then this Power be annexed to the Corporation, as sure I think it is, (but I reserve myself till I have heard a further Argument about it) then consider, whether or no, when they have abused that that Power, in making this By-law, that is knit to them as a Corporation, it does not affect the Being of a Corporation? For it is strange a Corporation should commit a Fault, and not be punished for it. I tell you, I deliver no Opinion in any thing now, but these Things I would have you give me some Satisfaction in; and there are indeed several other Things, that will require Consideration: I only hint these now.

The Second Argument was in Easter Term, on Friday, April 27.

Attor. Gen. THIS Case between the King and the City must be acknowledged to be a Case of Importance, both as it refers to the general Government of the Kingdom, and that of the City in particular. As it concerns the Particular of the City, it doth not bode such dismal Consequences, as some Men endeavour to frighten their Neighbours with; as if it were hereby designed to demolish at once all their Liberties, and to lay waste and open the City of London, and to reduce it to the Condition of a Country Village; than which nothing could be more maliciously suggested of so excellent a Prince, who hath given such large Demonstrations, not only of his general Care of all his People's Welfare, but of his more especial and particular Kindness to this City of London. This Quo Warranto is not brought to destroy, but to reform and amend the Government of the City, by running off those Excesses and Exorbitances of Power, which some Men (contrary to their Duty, and the known Laws of the Land) have assumed to themselves under Colour of their Corporate Capacity, to the Reviling of their Prince, the Oppression of their Fellow Subjects, and to the infinite Disquiet of their Fellow Citizens. I shall not recount the Mischiefs which those Exorbitances have of late wrought within the City, both as to its Peace and Profit, as likewise to the Obstruction of the free Course of Justice, that few Causes escaped the Crime of Maintenance from a divided Party. These Exorbitances committed by the City, casting so great an Influence over the whole Kingdom, make the King's Interposition in a Course of Law necessary, by gently laying his Hands upon them for their Cure. Herein the Politick Body of his Subjects resembles the Natural, that the disaffected Members are best cured by laying on the King's Hands upon the Body. It hath been observed, that the City of London was never better governed, nor flourished more, than after it came from under the King's Hands. The Reason given by Edw. I. at his Parliament in 18 Edw. I. of Denial of the Petitions of the Citizens of London, to be restored to their former State, scil. To have a Mayor and their ancient Liberties, is this: Quia sunt in bono Statu, & omnia bene, & in pace, & nullum Commodum apparet to change it then. The City was in as good Plight, both as to its Quiet, and good Government and Profits too, whilst in the Hands of the King, under the Common Law Government, as it would be in the Hands of the Corporation. Neither did the City suffer by being in the Hands of the Crown, as it was in the Reigns of Edw. I. Edw. II. Edw. III. and Richard II. nor their ancient Customs and Privileges destroyed; but they were thereby indeed restrained and held within the modest Rules of Government, in Subordination to the general Government of the Kingdom: And therefore the Danger threatened by this Suit will not be so fatal to the Being or Well-being of the City, as was suggested. Nay, I may with great Assurance say, That if the City receive the least Harm hereby, their, or their Managers, obdurate and final Impenitence must draw it upon themselves. For though the Conclusion of the Replication upon the Assignment of the Forfeiture be, That the Liberties be seized, and they ab iisdem penitus excludantur, that is but the formal Conclusion upon Assignment of Forfeitures; it shews what the Judgment of the Law may be, if demanded by the King's Attorney, and necessitated by the City's Obstinacy, but doth not exclude the King's Grace. But the Importance of this Case, to the general Government of the Kingdom, is of another Nature; and the Consequences thereof, both to the King, and his Subjects in general, appear now far greater than before, from the Manner and Grounds of the Defence made for the City at the Bar: viz. from the general Topicks of Corporations, That they are immortal and indissoluble; that no Treasons or Seditions against their Prince can be committed by the Members of a Corporation, even though those Members meet, and act jointly in the same Manner and Method, as they do all other Corporate Acts; no, though they should vote Raising of Men against their Prince; and should give Authority (under their Common Seal) to levy Money for that Purpose; that Murders, Felonies, and Oppressions of their Fellow Subjects, either by unjust Imprisonments, or levying Money upon them; that none of these Crimes committed by the Majority of the Members of any Corporation, and authorized under the Common Seal, will affect the Corporation, or the Government thereof, in point of Forfeiture: But a Corporation once constituted, is out of the Reach of the Common Law, to determine its Being, or its Governments, for any Causes whatsoever. If such Notions as these could be true, or should receive the least Countenance in a Court of Law, it would be unsafe, either for the King or any of his Subjects, to live in or near a Corporation. And the Complaint made by the Commons in Parliament 21 Edw. III. that the Increase of Franchises tended to the Extinction and Overthrow of the Common Law, would soon be made good to the Purpose, when such great Bodies of Men, as the Corporations within England consist of, shall jointly have a Power allowed them, Quilibet impune audendi, without being capable of Separation. The Distinction between the Politick Capacity and the Natural, to subject the one to Punishment, and not the other, was framed in the Jesuits School, to encourage Subjects to rebel against their Princes; but never yet so far improved the Distinction to apply it to Corporations, which (if they had thought of it) would have been more efficacious to their Purpose, than as they applied it; Assurance of Impunity being the strongest Argument for a Commission of any Crime. The Case being of such Consequence both to the King, and his Subjects in general, I shall endeavour to examine it by the Rules and Precedents of Law, that I may sever what is mere notional, from what is of Substance in it. I forbear to trouble the Court again with opening the whole Pleadings, but shall take the Case as it hath been opened: Wherein the general Question is, Whether by any thing disclosed upon the Pleadings, it appear to the Court, that the Mayor, Citizens, and Commonalty of London, have forfeited their Right of being and acting as a Body Politick, and subjected that Right to be seized into the King's Hands?

In stating of the Question, I forbear to style it a Franchise or Liberty, that I may not by anticipating preclude the Force of Mr. Recorder's Argument, That it is no Liberty or Franchise; but may reserve the entire Consideration thereof to its proper Place. And therefore I shall call it a Right, for such most certainly it is; and it includes both Jus agendi, & Jus habendi. Before we can arrive at the main Question, certainly preliminary Points have been moved and debated; some to the Form of the Suit and Pleadings, others relating to the Matter thereof.

To the Form Mr. Recorder took three Exceptions:

1. That the Information is not well laid, because not brought against particular Members by Name, which ought to be in all Cases, where the Right of Corporations is questioned or struck at.
2. That the Replication is worse, importing a Contradiction both to the Supposal of the Information, and to itself; because it denieth London to be a Corporation, which the Information allowed, and admitted it too, to be a Corporation, by assigning Causes of Forfeiture.
3. That no Judgment can be given upon these Pleadings, either of Seizure or Ouster; not of Seizure, because the King cannot seize what he cannot hold when seized: And the Body Politick, by which Name it is sued, cannot be ousted of itself.

The great Triumph Mr. Recorder erected upon the Strength of these Exceptions, as for an assured Victory already obtained, makes it necessary for me to give a more particular Answer to them, than their Weight would otherwise require. For the Authorities cited by him argue very little to this Purpose: And indeed he hath been so unfortunate in quoting of Authorities, that how little soever they seem to make for him, as to the Point he produceth them; yet they flatly make against him in some other material Point, not only by his Authorities, but his Objections themselves, to the Form of the Information, admit, that a Corporation is in its Nature separable by Judgment of Ouster against the particular Members by their Natural Names. The Opinion of my Lord Hales, in his Common-place Book, Quo Warranto, fol. 168. pl. 7. argues, Quo Warranto 168. pl. 7. he did not think of the Indissolubility of Corporations; but it is no Opinion, that the only Way to impeach them was by a Suit against particular Persons; for it is only a short Reference to the Cases of Cusack, and others of Ireland; and Farrer and others of the Virginia Company: Which Cases (as also that of Fisher, Helden, and others of the Borough of Hebmerley; the Case of the Musicians, and the Bermudas Company; and the other Cases cited by Mr. Recorder) do fully prove, that Corporations are Franchises, and may be questioned and impeached in the very Point of being Corporations, by Suits of Quo Warranto. And they do prove, that the Suit may be brought against some particular Members by Name: And against the rest of the Corporations by the general Words, as, Et alios Liberos homines, & alios Burgenses, & alios de Fraternitate. And these general Words are material and operative; for a Judgment thereupon binds the Whole. In the Case of Cusack against particular Members by Name, cum diversis aliis Civibus Civitat' Dublin', Judgment was given to out not only the particular Men, but alios Cives, & Successores suos. Upon the Writ of Error, it was assigned upon Record as one of the Causes of Error, that Judgment was given to out the Corporation of those Liberties; yet no parties by their Names of incorporation; but Judgment was affirmed. And the Quere that is made in Rolls 2 Report, in the Case of Ferrars, and others of the Virginia Company; Whether Mich. 21. Jac. I. Rot. 9. the Corporation were barred? probably did arise from the Non-observance of the Records, where Judgment was given, as well against the alios Plantatores, as the particular Men made Parties. In both these Cases the Suit was as well against the rest of the Corporation as the particular Men: The Appearance by Attorney was entered for both, and the Plea as well in the Name of the rest, as the particular Men, and Judgment against both. And the Judgment against the Virginia Company discharged that Company.

These, and the other Precedents produced by Mr. Recorder, do prove, that the King's Suit may be brought against particular Persons by Name, and against the Residue of the Corporation, by a general Name of & alios homines; or against particular Persons, and also against the Corporation, by the very Name of Incorporation, as the Case of Bermudas Company: But they do not argue the King hath not a further Election, either to bring his Suit for questioning the Corporation, by the proper Name of Incorporation, without naming of particular Person, or by some other general Name, which sufficiently describes the Persons. I shall therefore apply these Answers to the Objection warranted by Precedents of Law, that where-ever many Persons are jointly concerned in Charge or Discharge, and the King hath Cause of Suit against them, he may sue them either by naming some particular Persons, with a general Reference to others; or he may sue only by a common Name of Description, without admitting them to be a Corporation, especially where the general Name sufficiently describes the Persons, who took this Corporation; and this well for Offences at Common Law, as against Statute Laws. When Murder is committed in the Day-time in a walled Town, totâ Villâ munita; and so for Repair of Highways, or Nuisances in Highways, Repair of Bridges, and for levying of the Hue and Cry. The King's Suit, either by Indictment or information, hath been used both ways, either naming some few particular Inhabitants, but then always with a general Reference & alios Inhabitantes, which is essential, otherwise both Indictment and information would be naught; or they are frequently only by the general Name of Inhabitants, within a Parish, Hundred, or County, as the Case of Denbigh, for using several Liberties, as to hold a Court of Pleas before the Bailiff, and choosing two Aldermen, &c. upon Plea and Demurrer, Judgment of Seizure is given, Mich. 21. quod Inhabitantes capiantur. A Quo Warranto brought by Gerard the Queen's Attorney, against Homines & tenentes Manerii de Kings Haurston in Com. Bedford, for claiming to be discharged of Knights Wages, &c. they pleaded the Manor to be ancient Demefne; and their Plea was confessed, and Judgment for the Tenants, without naming any particular Tenant. These general Names of Inhabitants and Tenants were sufficient Descriptions of the Persons whom the King sued; and yet this Suit, by those Names, works no Conclusion that they were a Corporation. So Cives, Burgeses, & Communitas of such a Place, are general Names to describe the Inhabitants of the Place by, antecedent to their being a Corporation. The like of Mayor, Bailiff and Burgeses, Mayor and Citizens, and Pontenarii; where Burgeses is but an Addition of the Name of an Officer to the common Name of the Inhabitants, and properly describes the Persons whom the King sueth. By these Names of general Description, they are capable to take this Right of Incorporation by the King's Grant. The Grant doth not enable them to take this Right; and if by such general Names in the King's Grant they may take, there can no Reason be assigned, why they may not be sued by the same Name they took, when they are questioned for this Right, be the Name of Corporation the same, or any other. Upon Pleadings in the Case of a common Person, Mayor & Cives shall not necessarily be intended a Corporation, without it be especially set forth.

Inter Jerom & Neal 20 Eliz. B. R. 1 Leonard 106. in Trespass and Battery, the Defendant pleads Salisbury an ancient City, and a Custom there, that if any Affray be committed upon any Officer, upon Complaint to the Mayor, he, as a Justice of Peace, might send for the Offender, and justifies, under the Commandment of the Mayor, to bring the Plaintiff before him: And on Demurrer joined, and Judgment against the Defendant, one of the Grounds thereof was, that it did not appear that Salisbury was a Corporation, although it did appear that Salisbury was a City, and had a Mayor; much less shall it conclude the King, who is not so strictly bound in his Suites as common Persons are. It is true, that in the Case of Maidenhead there are three Judges against Mountague, of Opinion, that they need not set forth they are a Corporation, because they are not questioned for it by their Information, but supposed to be one, and questioned only for a Market, which they claimed by the King's Grant. In the same Case it is agreed, if they had been sued by any other general Name, but the very Name of Incorporation, they should not be intended a Corporation, according to the Case of the King against the Corporation of Denbigh. And whoever looks into the Record, must conclude Mountague's Opinion to outweigh that of the other three Judges. The Suit against them was by the Name of the Pontenarii; the Grants which they plead, recite the Corporation of the Pontenarii to be dissolved, and the Grant is a new Grant to the Bridge-masters: So that there was no room for any Intendment, that it was a Corporation before the Grant, against their own Plea; but that which seems in the Case to have preserved the Bridgemasters, is, that the Judges inclined to an Opinion, that it being for Maintenance of a Bridge, which was of necessary and publick Use, the Grant itself might amount to a new Incorporation, which was a plain Waver of the former Opinion; and if the three Judges had continued their Opinion, Judgment would have been entered for the Defendant; but no Judgment was ever given in that Case: So that Mayor, Citizens, and Commonalty of London being a general Name, sufficiently describing the Persons against whom the Suit is brought, may be used in the King's Suites without any manner of Conclusion to the King. But in the next place, it is yet stronger, where one of the Articles of the Suit is for usurping the Corporate Right, that prevents all Colour of Pretence for any Conclusion; herein this Case differs much from that of Maidenhead, as to the Form of the Information. And in such Cases, where the questioning the Right is a special Article, the Form of the Information is the same against all Corporations, whether by just Title, or altogether usurped, and by Wrong; the Suit supposeth them all to be by Wrong, and usurped; and whether by Right or Wrong, cannot be known, till the Title by Pleading be disclosed and disputed; and many times not then neither, because the Liberty may be lost by Default of Pleading, upon Nihil dicit, or Mispleader, by pleading a wrong Title, or insufficiently pleading a right Title.

A Quo Warranto contra Præpositum & Burgeses burgi five villæ de Card, for claiming to be a Corporation, and divers other Liberties: They plead, that they claim nothing but under the Bishop of Bath and Wells. It appears by the Plea, that they had no good Incorporation, and Judgment might have been entered against them: But the Bishop obtained a Grant from the King of a new Incorporation, which I have seen and perused, and thereupon a Noli prosequi was entered.

A Quo Warranto against the Commonalty of the City of Canterbury, for claiming to be a Corporation, and divers other Liberties: They plead to all, and several Issues taken in several Parts of the Plea, and Breaches assigned to others for a Forfeiture. Quo Warranto against the Bailiff and Aldermen of New Radnor is of the same Nature; and Multitudes of others I could produce, where the Suit is brought in the same Form as our's, to question the Right of a Corporation against them by their Corporate Name.

My last Answer is, That where the King proceeds for a Forfeiture upon breach of Condition, the Right is not determined till Judgment of Seizure; for it is a mistaken Ground, that Forfeitures to all Purposes relate to the Time of the Forfeiture: For as to Copyhold Estates, Offices, and Liberties, in Case of the King, which may be determined by Breaches of Fact, they are not avoided till the Fact, which causes the Forfeiture, found upon Record: So that the Suit is well grounded against them, the Name of Mayor, Citizens, and Commonalty: for they continue such Seizure, and till then are a Corporation de facto.

I shall be short in my Answers to the Objections to the Replication, cause they are in Effect already answered by what I have said. The averie of the Title by Prescription is pursuant to the Supposal of the Information, which supposeth they have usurped that very Liberty, and puts them upon shewing their Title by that Name; even put the Case they have a good Title by that Name, by this Patent, or by Act of Parliament, and they will waive it, and set up a Title by Prescription. And this was done in the Case of Canterbury before, and in the Case of New Malton; where, upon the very same Information as our's against the Bailiff and Burgeses of New Malton in Rot. 3. Com. Ebor. they pleaded their Title to their Corporation by Prescription, and Issue taken; and it proved fatal to them; for Verdict and Judgment went against them.

Then for the Contrariety of the Replication to itself, none appears; for the Traversing of the Prescription by such Name, is no Denial; but it may be a Corporation by Prescription by another Name, or it may have that Name also by Grant. And the farther Replication is, That assuming upon themselves to be a Corporation by that Name, they committed the several Acts, which are assigned for Breaches. And that is the only Advantage the King hath. By Informations of Quo Warranto he may go upon the Title, and take Advantage of any Defect therein, or of the Pleading thereof, and may also assign Breaches for a Forfeiture, as is held in the Case of Maidenhead Bridge. In the Case of Canterbury, Issue was taken upon some Liberties, Breaches assigned to others. The King may plead several Pleas, and take several Issues, and demur to part, as he shall be advised.

3. The Objection, that no Judgment can be given upon these Pleadings, ariseth principally upon two notable Errors, against plain and express Authorities of Law.

(1) That nothing can be seized into the King's Hand, which the King cannot hold and enjoy when it is there.

(2) That every Judgment upon a Forfeiture ought to be a Judgment of Ouster.

These mistaken Grounds having been so often made use of by Mr. Recorder in other Parts of this Argument, for supporting a Supposition, That a Corporation cannot be forfeited, I shall (to avoid Repetition) leave them to be considered when I come to his main Argument; and therefore shall proceed to consider the preliminary Points moved relating to the Matter; viz.

First, Whether the Right of Incorporation of being a Body Politick may be forfeited, or seized into the King's Hands?

Admitting it may be, then,

Secondly, Whether the Acts of Common Council, or the Members assembled in Common Council, which is all one, may work such Forfeiture, or Cause of Seizure?

First, As to the first Point, I must confess the Weakness of my Understanding, that upon what hath been offered from Reason or Authorities of Law, I cannot apprehend it rendered in the least doubtful to a Court of Law, whatever it may be in a Common Hall, and Publick Assemblies of the City, where strong Lungs have a Preference before a rational Head, but that the Right of being a Body Politick may be forfeited, or suspended.

It was moved as a Doubt by Mr. Solicitor, but as a vulgar Error obtruded from publick Prints upon the unthinking and unwary Citizens; which possibly gave Encouragement to the many Exorbitances committed within the City, and particularly to those now laid to their Charge; and, I thought, sufficient had been spoken by Mr. Solicitor to have prevented the Growth of so mischievous an Error. But for that Mr. Recorder did ex animo espouse that Opinion, as if no Man were in his right Wits, that did not concur with him in Opinion, and as if there were something in it indeed, hath laid his main Stress upon it, and erected it as his Palladium to defend the City by. And probably this Image (for, if examined, I fear it will prove no other than a Work of Imagination) may make that Impression upon some Men, that, conceiving themselves to be Citizens and Aldermen of an invincible and immortal City, incapable of Dissolution, they may dream of being an independant Commonwealth within a Kingdom, and unaccountable to the King, or his Laws. It is therefore made necessary for me (with your Leave) to mispend some of your Time in speaking again to this Point; which I shall do.

1. By briefly stating what this Right is, whence it ariseth, and for what Purpose it was framed or introduced?

2. I will examine the Reasons and Grounds produced by Mr. Recorder, why it cannot be forfeited?

3. Then I shall offer the Reasons and Authorities of Law, that it may and hath been forfeited and seized into the King's Hands.

In speaking to all which I will not so far distrust the Memory of the Court, as to repeat what hath been so well urged by Mr. Solicitor from Reason and Authorities, but shall endeavour to avoid it what I can.

1. As to the first Thing proposed, This Right of a Corporation, aggregate of many, (to which I shall confine my Discourses, being the only thing under Consideration) is a Right granted to many natural Persons to be, have, enjoy, and act as one Body and Person. It confers jus Personæ, & Personam efficit, which our Law Books express by the Names of Persona Politica, and Corpus Politicum, and, as such, is capable of all Civil Rights, both habendi & agendi. The Instruments of Creation of this Right, and the Claims thereof upon Pleadings, do best declare the Nature of it, viz. Quod homines Inhabitantes, Cives, Burgeses, or such other general Name, describing the Persons who are to take, sint unum Corpus Corporatum re, factis, & nomine. And when Prescription is made for a Body Politick, &c. Quod Homines & Cives, or Homines & Burgeses sunt, & a tempore cujus, &c. fuerunt unum Corpus Corporatum re & facto per nomen — So that it is something more than a Notion, or mere Name, Corpus Corporatum fully expresseth it, a Body made up of several visible Bodies in unum collecta, & vinculo juris unita. And a Corporation is every whit as visible a Body, as an Army: For though the Commission or Authority be not seen by every one; yet the Body united by that Authority, is seen by all but the Blind; and if the King or the Law demand the Authority, it must be produced and shewn and is as visible in the Eye of the Law, as any other Right whatsoever, whereof natural Persons are capable. It seems strange, and almost beyond all Excuse, that the Recorder of London should never have seen that great Body Politick assembled; unless he will excuse himself, that he is the Mouth of the City, and not the Eyes.

Co. 11. b. f. 29. Sir James Bagg's Case, Co. 11. b. allows it to be such a Right, that every Member, separately considered, hath a Freehold therein; and all, jointly considered, have an Inheritance which may go in Succession. It is the same Right which the Civilians style Collegium, or Universitas, and so styled here in Bracton's time; scil. Si Rex concesserit alicui—Universitati sicut Civibus vel Burgensibus.

Natural Persons, as such, are capable of taking and holding this Right. It is neither taken nor held in their Politick Capacity, but their Natural; for many Men, as Men, are capable of Union, which is evident by the Charters of Creation, and the Pleadings in all such Cases; it is Homines & Burgenses, Homines & Cives, who are constituted unum Corpus Corporatum. And as the Natural Persons are an essential Part constituting the Body Politick; so all the Operations and Exercise of this Right are only performed by the Natural Persons, 21 Ed. 4.

31 Ed. 4. fol. 14. fol. 14. That Book and other Authorities, are express in the Point; though in a Case so evident, there needed no Authority. And therefore when the Question is of Non user or Abuser of Franchises by a Corporation, it must of Necessity be intended for some Acts or Negligence of the Natural Persons, or those Officers that are employed by them. And the Question will rest only upon this, What Acts, or what Omissions of the Natural Persons, will affect this Right, wherein all the Members of the Body have an Interest?

This Right is merely of human Institution; and therefore as to its Birth, Form, Extent, or Limits, is directed and supported by the municipal Laws of each Country, and therefore for that Reason is styled by our Books Political. By the Constitution of our Laws, this Right, as all Jurisdictions and Franchises, is lodged in the Crown, and thence only is derived. Bracton upon the Question, Quis concedere possit libertates, & quibus & qualiter transferuntur? thus resolves it: Dominus Rex habet omnia Jura in manu sua, quæ ad Coronam & Regalem pertinent potestatem, & Regni gubernaculum; habet etiam Justitiam & Judicium, quæ sunt Jurisdictiones; habet etiam ea quæ ad Pacem pertinent. Ea quæ dicuntur Privilegia, licet pertineant ad Coronam, possunt ad Privatas Personas transferri, sed de gratia ipsius Regis specialiter. And then sheweth, that such Grantees as Usufructuaries may enjoy them, donec amiserint per abusum vel non usum. The 49 Ed. 3. 3. this ancient Author in this Point, That none can make a Corporation but the King; such Power cannot be prescribed for, it is so inherent to the Crown. The principal Case was of the Whitelawers in London, who prescribed, That by the Custom of London, the Men of any Art or Mystery might act as a Guild or Fraternity, and were capable of a Devisé; and plead their Custom confirmed by several Charters; and, no doubt, would have pleaded some of the Acts of Parliament now pleaded, if the learned Counsel had then thought there had been any thing of Force in them. Judgment was given against them, for that none had such Power but the King. In that Case it appears, that the Abbot and Prior of Westminster were one entire Corporation, and divided by the King, and, after the Severance, a Quare impedit maintained by the Prior against the Abbot.

Some Corporations are by the King alone, as Dean and Chapter, Mayor and Commonalty; some by the Pope alone; some mixt, by the King for their Temporal Possessions, by the Pope for their Spiritualties. Whether the King grant them by Charter out of Parliament, or in Parliament, or by Act of Parliament, the King is still the Donor, and the Fountain and Spring from which this and all other Liberties flow. A Title by Prescription always supposeth a Grant in or out of Parliament, and is allowed by Law for supporting long Possessions, grounded upon ancient Grants before, time out of Memory; but by what Title soever these or any other Rights are derived down, whether Grant or Prescription, their Natures remain the same, and they are governed by the same Rules of Law, and are equally subject to the like Civil Accidents, the one as well as the other.

The last thing inquirable into this Head is, To what End and Purpose such Corporations were elected, and allowed by the Policy of our Laws.

The general Intent and End of all Civil Incorporations is in order to better Government. Government relates principally either to Persons or Things: That which relates principally to Persons may be properly called General Government; because, properly speaking, Persons only are the Subjects of Government. That which relates to Things is called Special Government, because limited to the Managery of particular Things, as Trade, Charity, and such-like; for the Government whereof several Companies and Corporations for Trade were erected, and several Hospitals and Houses for Charities. Of this Nature are the Trinity-Houses for regulating Navigation; and so the College of Physicians, the Corporation of Parish-Clerks, and a Multitude of other Special Corporations in England. The only End of erecting these Special Corporations was, for the better Order and Government of the several Matters specially committed to their Care.

The Corporations for General Government only, are those of Cities and Towns, Mayor and Citizens, Mayor and Burgesses, Mayor and Commonalty, and such-like. The Corporations, as they are for the Government of Men only, having nothing specially committed to their Care upon the Incorporation, so they are erected for no other End or Purpose than Government. And if either at the Time of the Incorporation, which very few are, or afterwards, they have any Special Matter committed to their Care, it is purely collateral to the Ends and Design of erecting these sort of Incorporations within Cities and Towns. This appears by the Charters of Creation both ancient and modern; the Form is much the same, which is after this manner: Nos volentes, quod de cetero imperpetuum in eadem Civitate, Burgo, aut Villa [as the Case is] Libertas & Privilegium ejusdem habeatur unus certus & indubitatus modus pro custodia pacis nostræ, ac pro bono regimine & gubernatione Civitatis, Burgi, & Villæ, ac Populi ibidem inhabitantium, & aliorum illie confluentium; & quod Civitas, Burgus, aut Villa, pace concordia, & quiete sint, ad formidinem & terrorem malorum delinquentium, & in præmium bonorum; ac etiam ut pax nostra ceteraque facta justitia & bono regimine ibidem melius custodiri valeant & possint. These are the Grounds upon which Corporations are erected.

The Limits and Extents of their Corporations, and Jurisdiction, are limited by their Characters; and there is a plain Difference made in many Charters between this and other Liberties, as to the End of granting; this being erected only pro bono regimine, being a Burden, and chargeable in the Execution of that publick Trust. Many other Liberties and Privileges, both of Ease and Profit, are granted to them pro meliore sustentatione of those Charges, which the Government would necessarily require. Since the Statute of Mortmain they cannot purchase without a special Non obstante. They cannot engross Trade, by excluding Foreigners; Norris and Stap's Case, Hob. 211. So that no private Benefit can be assigned to be the End of erecting them. The Power of making By-laws, which is incident to a Corporation, is only for better Government; and by that Rule they must be judged.

Having considered the Nature of a Body Politick aggregate, whence it flows, and for what Purpose it was erected.

2. I proceed to examine the Grounds and Reasons produced, why it cannot be forfeited, or seized into the King's Hands?

Many things were produced by Mr. Recorder, to make good his Assertion, more ad captandum populum, than to persuade a Court of Law. I will not mispend your Time in perusing the jocular Part of the Argument, which may make the Citizens smile one way, and the Learned in the Law another way; but I shall collect together what seems to have any Force of Argument. The Grounds the Argument went upon seem to be these:

- (1) That a Corporation is no Liberty or Franchise, but a mere Capacity of suing, and being sued.
- (2) That a Corporation, in its Nature, is not capable of being forfeited or dissolved.
- (3) That it cannot be surrendered.
- (4) That the Forfeiting or Dissolving of any Corporation was never put in Practice, nor so much as ever came within the Compass of any Man's Imagination.

(1) As to the first, A Corporation is no Liberty, but a Capacity. Now it is proved, even just as all the rest will appear to be proved, by strong Averments, and Quotations of Books that prove no such thing. The Authorities were 1 Inst. 250. Bro. Title Corporation and Capacities. In the Institutes the Words are, A Body Politick is a Body to take in Succession, framed as to that Capacity by Policy. The Authority is express against him, that a Body or Person Politick hath a Capacity to take in Succession, and is not a mere Capacity; and the other Words of the same Author, are, And made into a Body and Capacity to take and grant: So that this Authority fails; it neither proves it no Liberty, nor to be a mere Capacity.

That of Bro. Tit. Corporation, proves less, for Capacity is of larger Signification, and incident to Natural Persons, as well as Corporate Persons; and such Instances are set down under that Title of Alienees, &c. and it is a great Imputation to the Memory of so learned a Person, that he should think, that Corporations and Capacities were synonymous, or that he should tautologize in a Title in an Abridgment.

The Definition Mr. Recorder gives of a Corporation, that it is a Capacity of suing and being sued, which served him for many a Jest in his Discourse, is no better than to define a Man to be Animal bipes, or, which is nearer, a mere Capacity of walking with two Feet. Although the Authorities fail, and prove not the Matter, yet it is of that Importance to the Cause, that a Corporation be no Liberty, that something must be thought upon to make it out. For if it be admitted to be a Liberty, the Authorities will be too strong, that every Liberty and Franchise carries with it a Condition, that it be used, and well used, the Breach of which will amount to a Forfeiture. And therefore, when nothing else can be found to prove it no Liberty, recourse must be had to the negative Argument, backed with strong Averments, that it was never so styled in any Authority of Law, except in one Case, in the Co. Ent. Q. W. Town of Helmsly, Co. Ent. Quo Warranto, and Mr. Noy's Opinion in Hayward and Fulcher's Case, grounded only upon the Case of Helmsly. But one Swallow makes no Spring; and it was well Mr. Recorder spied it in that Case, otherwise the Averment had been without any Exception.

If the Point had rested upon that Precedent, and Mr. Noy's Opinion, it would have better Authorities for it, than any could be produced against it. But there are Multitudes of Authorities, whereby Corporations are not only called, but appear to be Liberties and Franchises; several have been cited by Mr. Recorder, but not seen, or overlook'd by him.

In the Case of Cusack and others, in all the Parts of the Record it is styled a Franchise or Liberty; and particularly in the Continuance, Curia advisare vult, and time taken to advise upon it as a Liberty. So in the Case of Farrer, and others of the Virginia Company throughout the Record styled a Liberty and Franchise, even in the Judgment itself. Mr. Noy knew of these Cases, and many more before this time; but knew it to be the Guise of learned Men, in clear Cases and of daily Experience, not to repeat many Authorities.

The Records of the Cases cited by Mr. Recorder of the Borough of Hebmerly, the Case of the Musicians, and Bermudas Company, &c. do all call it a Franchise or Liberty. The Cases I have already cited do so too; Against the Bailiff and Burgesses of New Malton; against the Mayor and Commonalty of Canterbury; against the Portreve and Burgesses of Chard. Many more I have perused, but conceive it too much to trouble the Court with them at present.

It is certainly true in all the Records of Quo Warranto, where-ever there is a special Article against a Corporation for being a Body Politick, it is always impeached by the Name of a Franchise and Liberty; and Mr.

(3) Tho

tures there are of that Nature. And in so clear a Case I omit to mention the Writs of Non emittas, for entering into Corporations, and the Returns of their Bailiffs; which make out evidently, that Corporations are Franchises, and the Limits of the Corporation, and Limits of the Franchises are all one.

(2) The next Argument is drawn from the Nature and Qualities of Bodies Politick, That they are invisible, immortal, impeccable, and therefore impatible, with a large Jargon of non ens, & ens rationis. Certainly this Argument was fetched from the Clouds at the City's Charge; and it cost them dear: For I cannot believe it could enter into the Reason of any Man, much less of learned Men, that a Body framed by the Policy of Man can be immortal; or that a Body, compacted of many bulky visible Bodies, can be invisible; or a Body, whose very Parts and Members are mortal, is in its own Nature immortal. Mr. Recorder admits, that the Death of all ends the Corporation; and therefore if any learned Men have used such hyperbolical Expressions, most certainly they never intended the Citizens of London, or other populous Town or City within England, of whom the Question is, but of some Corporation in Utopia, where the Citizens neither eat, drink, nor die, or at least of some Corporation that never had other Existence but in the Brain.

The Authorities cited were Co. 1. Inst. 9. Bulstrode 233. 21 Edw. 4. 13. and many others; and many more might have been cited, and to as much Purpose; as Co. 10. fol. 32. Sutton's Hospital, brings in a whole Regiment of Authorities speaking to the same Purpose. I do not remember that Book was cited, and there was Reason for it; for in Conclusion it spoils the Argument, viz. that these Expressions are of Corporations in Abstracts, not coupled with particular Men of this or that Town, where the Men act all, and the Corporation doth nothing otherwise than what the Men do. If it be considered abstracted from particular Men, it is but a bare Right, and coupled in the Notion of it with Men in general, who are the proper Subjects of Government, and remains only in Notion, and may well enough sustain these Epithets which have been given it, as all other Rights and Notions may; but whilst it remains such, it can no more sue or be sued, than commit Treasons, Felonies, Riots, or other Trespases, either against the Government or particular Men; neither hath it any Existence in re & facto, but in the Brain.

The Case indeed that is cited 1 Inst. 9. is applicable to any particular Corporation; the Case is thus put: If a Man gives Lands to a Mayor and Commonalty, or other Body aggregate, consisting of many capable Persons, without naming Successors, the Law construes it a Fee Simple, because in Judgment of Law they never die. If this be any Authority, it is from the Immortality of many Persons capable, for they are the Persons who are said in Judgment of Law not to die. Where my Lord Coke's Sense is plain, that these natural Persons, though capable to take in their natural Capacities jointly, which the Law would adjudge an Estate for Lives; yet the Grant being made to them by their Corporate Name, they take in that Capacity, and the Grant is not determinable upon their Death, but shall continue with the Corporation whilst it continueth. That my Lord Coke never dreamt of Immortality of a Body Politick, fully appears in his Writings: 1 Inst. 13. where he puts the Case insisted on by Mr. Recorder of a Dissolution by Death of Abbot and Monk. He after puts the Case generally of other Corporations, as Dean and Chapter, Mayor and Commonalty: If Lands be given to them, and the Corporation be dissolved, the Lands shall escheat to the Donors, upon a Condition in Law: in the first Grant, if the Law raise such Condition upon Grant of Lands, much rather doth it upon the Grant of the Incorporation, where the Intent of the Donor is as special, and upon a greater Tyult. That my Lord Coke understood it of other Dissolutions than by Death only, he refers in the Margin to the Case of the Knights Templars, which was not dissolved by the Death of the Members. That Corporations were dissolved many Years before the Statute De terris Templariorum, 17 Ed. 2. the Statute recites, the Corporation was dissolved, and that the King and several other Lords had entered upon all their Lands and Escheats: The Judgment of the Parliament was, they were well dissolved, and the Lords well intitled by Escheat, as the Law stood; and therefore by Act settles them upon the Hospitallers. This Corporation was dissolved by the Pope, and upon the Ground of Non user. The End of their Corporation was for guiding Christian Pilgrims to the Holy Land and Jerusalem, which the Saracens and Turks having over-run, and possessed themselves thereof, the Members of the Order never came there, but disposed of themselves in several Parts of Christendom. The Order was erected by Pope Honorius, 21 H. 1. Anno 1120. and was dissolved by Clemens Quintus, 4 Ed. 2. Anno 1311. thirteen Years before the Statute: and their Spiritual Corporation, which was the Principal, being dissolved, the Power of holding Lands, conferred by Temporal Princes, determined, 2 Inst. 431. & H. 432.

1 Inst. fol. 102. the Case is put where the Tenant held by Homage Antient of a Body Politick dissolved; the Homage is gone, though a new Corporation be founded by the same Name. That my Lord Coke never entertained such an Opinion, appears by his Argument in the Case of the Dean and Chapter of Norwich, when Attorney General. His Mistress's Heart was much upon that Case to preserve their Lands; and it was well argued by Mr. Attorney, and no doubt well studied; but this Topick, from the Indissolubility of Corporations, never came into his Head. Besides the Statutes of Confirmation, he insisted upon these things: First, That the Words of the Surrender were not sufficient to surrender the Corporation; Secondly, That they were the Bishop's Council, and in some sort one Corporation with him; Thirdly, From the great Mischiefs which would ensue. This new Invention alone would have done the Business, if he had been so fortunate to have found it out; or if any of the Judges had thought of it, they would not have gone about it so long, as at length to ground their Resolutions only upon the Points which did arise upon the Statutes. Fitzherbert is of the same Opinion, That if an Abbey be dissolved, a Presentation shall escheat to the Lord of whom it was held.

(3) The next Argument produced by Mr. Recorder was, That a Corporation could not be surrendered; upon which Head I will not entertain your Time, for these Reasons: First, Because it was not to the Question, and that Mr. Recorder admits, that many things may be forfeited, which cannot be surrendered; Secondly, Because the Point may come judicially into Debate, some Dislike having been taken to Surrenders lately made; and I choose to refer myself to that Question which comes properly in Judgment; Thirdly, But my last and principal Reason is, that he hath produced no Authority of Law to make good his Assertion.

The Authorities of the Cases of the Dean and Chapter of Norwich. Mich. 40 & 41 Eliz. and Hayward and Fulcher's Case, Hil. 3 Car. 1. which both relate to the same Surrender, and are in effect the same Case, only in the latter Case the Surrender is disclosed to the Court to be larger than did appear in the former Case; and though many Books are cited, yet they all contain but these two Cases, which make strongly against him. For throughout these Cases, both in stating the Question, Arguments of Counsel, and Resolutions of the Judges, it is plainly admitted, that a Corporation might be surrendered. Otherwise the stating of the Question in the first Case, upon the Effect of the Words in the Surrender of all their Possessions and Cathedral Church, Whether sufficient to surrender the Corporation? and the Arguments thereupon, and the Resolution of the Judges was needless; but it was plainly admitted, that a Corporation may be dissolved; and it was the Common Law Point they did resolve, that they were all idle and illusory. And so in the second Case, Whether the Dean and Chapter, without the Bishop, could surrender the Corporation? it is all along admitted, both by the Counsel upon the Grounds they went upon, and by the Judges in their Resolutions, that it might be surrendered, concurrentibus his quæ in jure requiruntur; and therefore, by the Resolution of the Judges, it could not not be done without the Bishop, because he had an Interest in them. And when Whitlock in his Argument had recourse to a more general Reason, which was, That the Surrender could not be good, because then they should be Felo de se, which is against Nature; Jones takes him up, and flatly denies it, and saith, That a Dean and Chapter might dissolve themselves by Cesser; or if all die, or resign, the Corporation is dissolved; but concurred with him, that the Surrender did not dissolve it, because the Bishop was no Party, nor consenting; and in the End Whitlock concludes his Argument, that it could not be done without the Bishop. And the Saying of Whitlock in that Case, That the King may grant, but not dissolve a Corporation, is certainly true in the same Sense as it is of Lands, and all other Rights whatsoever; the King may grant, but cannot refuse without Cause; yet all may be forfeited upon due Cause, and by Judgment of Law returned to the King.

(4) The last Topick of Argument, by which Mr. Recorder concluded a Corporation cannot be forfeited, is a Non user; because never any Corporation was forfeited, nor did it ever enter into any Man's Imagination, that it could be forfeited. This indeed doth put the Proof upon me; and Mr. Solicitor hath already made it out with great Learning by several Instances of Corporations seized into the King's Hands for Forfeitures committed by them; some by Judgments, others by Inquisitions finding those Forfeitures. But Mr. Recorder with one Blast hath blown them all away, that they are but mere Sounds, and look big with Seizure, and seizing of Liberties into the King's Hands, but, when strictly examined, they are of no Substance; and the Fruit of all the Examination ends in a Difference he hath found out between Seizures and Forfeitures; much such another Difference as was that between a Liberty and a Capacity, upon which the whole Weight of the Argument turned, That a Corporation was no Liberty, but a Capacity. And if so little a Distinction be enough to answer the Weight of Mr. Solicitor's Arguments, it will be in vain for me to attempt further Instances, unless I can reconcile this little Difference, and shew it to be as ineffectual as that between a Liberty and a Capacity was before; and therefore I crave leave, in the first place, to examine this short Answer to so many and so great Authorities.

It is objected, That those are Precedents of Seizures, but not of Forfeitures; for Seizures in the Case of the King's Suits, and of the Bishop's Temporalities, are of the same Nature as Seizures upon the Grand Cape's and Distingas in Suits between Party and Party, only to answer Issues. And when Liberties of Towns are mentioned to be seized, the Towns only are seized, and not the Corporation, which remains in statu quo; but where a Forfeiture is, there must be Judgment of Ouster. Every Sentence almost of this Answer is contrary to all the Books and Records of Law, that I know of. The Authorities cited to prove the Differences are Nat. Brev. fol. 161, 162. which saith, Inquire into the Causes of Seizures, and Causes of Forfeiture; but what these Causes are, which may be Causes of one, and not of the other, are not disclosed. But my Lord Coke, in the Countess of Shewsbury's Case, determines the Difference, and makes them all one. There are, saith he, three Causes of Forfeiture or Seizure of Offices for Matter of Fact, Abuser, Non user, and Refuser. He makes the Causes of both to be the same: Forfeiture is but the Fact upon which the Seizure is grounded, where the Subject hath Title of Entry for a Forfeiture, in the Causes of the Entry, different from the Causes of the Forfeiture. So in the King's Case, where Liberties are seized for an Abuser, whether it be by Judgment, or upon an Inquisition, or Presentment, finding the Abuse; can it be a Question with any learned Man, but the Seizure is for the Forfeiture? The King cannot seize without Cause, and the Cause must be some Fact in Breach of the Condition in Law annexed to the Liberty. The other Authority produced is of the Quo Warranto against Roger Mortimer, cited 2 Ed. 3. 29. in Strata Marcella, Co. 9. fol. 28. where upon Denial of Aid, and the Defendants not answering over, Judgment was given of fore-judger of the Liberty, and Error brought; where Scroop saith, That in some Cases Franchise shall be put into the King's Hands, in some Cases seized in the Right of the King until Fine; and in some Cases it shall be fore-judged, which holds for ever. I do admit this Case to be good Law, but it makes nothing to the Purpose to prove the Difference; or that Seizures by the King for Misusers are not for Forfeitures, or that Judgment of Ouster are only Evidence of Forfeitures.

Seizures, or to prove a Seizure in the King's Suit, is of the same Nature as the Grand Cape or Distingas, upon mean Process in the Suits of common Persons. And because neither the Book Cases, nor Mr. Recorder have given any Light into the Cases, which may vary the Judgment in a Quo Warranto, I will endeavour to state the Matter, how it stands upon Seizures of Liberties:

(1.) Liberties may be seized into the King's Hands by the Award of the Court, which, in that Book, is styled, Put into the King's Hands; and that in two Cases principally:

Where the Defendants are summoned to appear at the King's Suit, and make Defaults.

Where a Contempt appears upon Record, in returning or executing the King's Process.

I shall give Instances of each. For the latter, 2 Ed. 4. fol. 5. in case of Bailiffs, upon Error, the Bailiff appeared, and prayed a Day to bring in the Record; they failed at the Day: The better Opinion is, their Franchise shall be re-seized. And Vavasor there saith, If a Lord of a Franchise do any Trespas, or Contempt to the King's Court, it is Cause in the same Court to re-seize the Franchise. For the former, 15 Ed. 4. 6. in Quo Warranto, if the Defendant appear not at the Day, the Liberties shall be seized; and if he doth not replevin them, as in Eyre, they shall be absolutely forfeited; for the Statute of Quo Warranto directs the King's Courts to proceed in Quo Warranto as in the Eyre.

Trin. 16. Jac. 1. Brigg's Case, in Quo Warranto, the Defendant appeared not at the Day; the Liberties were seized, Roll. Rep. 2 part, fol. 46.

Trin. 17 Jac. 1. Roll. 2. part, 92. Quo Warranto against the Mayor and Burgesses of Wigmore in Com. Lancast. upon Default made at the Day, it was agreed by the Court, That if they shewed not good Cause to excuse their Default, their Liberties should be seized into the King's Hands; This being in the Case of a Corporation, the Capias in manus should be of the Politick Person which made the Default. Where Seizure is by Award of the Court for a Contempt in Court, the Court may admit the Parties to affix and order Restitution; so where by Award of the Court, on Default of Appearance at the King's Suit, a Seizure is made, which is in Nature of a Distress, to bring in the Party, by putting him out of the Possession of the Liberty, till he appear and replevy; the Court, if the Defendants come in time, and pray it, may deliver them the Possession upon Replevin; and this by the new Statute of Quo Warranto, 30 Edw. 1. Before that Statute the general Writ of Summons to answer to Liberties, as also the particular Writs of Summons upon the Kings Special Suits, superseded the Use of any Liberty till the Justices met on the Day of Return. Which Mischief was remedied by that Statute; if they appeared not at the Day, the Liberties were to be seized in Nature of a Distress, to enforce their Appearance. And upon Appearance, if they demanded to replevy them, the Judges might deliver back the Possession of the Liberties upon Security to prosecute their Claim, and answer the mean Profits, if any, in case Judgment were against them; much in the same manner as the Practice is in the Court of Exchequer upon all Seizures to this Day, by the Seizures the King is in Possession: But if the Party appear and plead, and put in Security, he is by Rule of Court permitted to receive the Profits. But this Statute not limiting any Time for his Appearance, or to reply, that remained as it did before upon the old Statute of Quo Warranto, 18 E. 1. which refers to the Practice in Eyre: So that if the Party did not Replevin in Time, the former Seizure would amount to a Seizure after Judgment by Default, which is final.

(2.) Again, Liberties are seized into the King's Hands by Judgment of Court in the King's Suits, whether the Judgment be by Default, or Nihil dicit; upon Demurrer, or Issue tried, this Judgment is final, and the Court cannot admit to a Fine, or award Restitution, unless upon Error brought. This Court is to set the Fine upon the Capiatur, but not the Fine for Redemption: that is purely in the King's Breast, Et ex gratia Regis. There is no such formal Judgment of Seizure until Fine; but this upon Judgment and another Seizure upon Inquisition, or Presentment, which I shall mention, are the Seizures in the King's Right, represented in Mortimer's Case, but frequently entered quousque Dominus Rex aliud preceperit. What was intended by a Judgment of Ouster in that Book, and in what Cases by the Course of the King's Courts it ought to be, will best appear by an ancient Rule, taken and agreed by the Judges in Edward the Fourth's Time, before they were promiscuously used. The Rule is thus: Where it clearly appears to the Court, that where a Liberty is usurped by Wrong, and upon no Title, either by the King's Grant, or otherwise, there Judgment only of Ouster shall be entered: But where it appears, that the King or his Ancestors have once granted a Liberty, and the Liberty be misused, Judgment of Seizure into the King's Hands shall be given. These Rules carry their own Light with them: That which came out of the King's Hands, as Bracton useth the Word, is properly returned there again by Seizure, or (as our ancient Books phrase it) by Re-seizure. But that which never came thence, but merely usurped upon him, shall be vacated, and by Judgment of Law declared null and void.

There is another Case, which is there likewise resolved, and that is, where it is doubtful to the Court, whether the Liberty commenced by Grant, or by Wrong; that for the Uncertainty the best and safest Course is, that Judgment be given of Seizure. This last Case was the principal Case in that Book, the Question arising upon a Default, What Judgment should be given? and by that Rule Judgment was given of Seizure, not of Ouster. And agreeable to these Rules, all the Judgments which I have met with have been given; and this Course hath been found most beneficial to the Subject, who, though by Forfeiture, Misdemeanor, or Default, he may lose his Liberty, may have recourse to the King's Mercy for Restitution.

In the Case of the Bailiffs and Aldermen of New Radnor, which was by Default, Judgment of Seizure only was given.

In the Case of New Malton, though the Issue, that the Corporation was by Prescription, was tried against them; yet having long acted as a Corporation, they might have mispleaded their Title, as the City of Lon- don hath done, in claiming that, by Prescription, which commenced by Grant within Time of Memory, Judgment only of Seizure was given, and not of Ouster. In all Cases of Disclaimer, Judgment only of Ouster shall be given; upon the same Rule Judgment only of Ouster was given in the Case of Staverton, reported in Yelverton and Crook: But the Entry there is mistaken; for it is entered Mich. 8. Jac. 1. Rot. 2. for it appeared to the Court, that it was a mere Usurpation without Title; for that no such Court, as he claimed, could be gained by Prescription, nor indeed by Grant, through the Meanness of his Estate. Mr. Recorder insisted upon this Judgment, as a Measure for all Judgments upon Forfeitures of Liberties, but plainly mistook the Reason of it. Upon the Reason of these Rules, in such Cases where Grants do appear, but either the Parties are not capable of taking, or the Liberty granted, not allowable by Law, the Courts hath been to enter a mixed Judgment both of Seizure and of Ouster.

In the Case of the Inhabitants of Denbigh, who claimed by Charter several Liberties; but it appearing they had no Capacity to take, yet the Usurpation being by Colour of Letters Patents, the Judgment was mixed both of Seizure and Ouster; for there was no possibility of Restitution, because they were not capable.

And in the Case of Cusack it appearing to the Court, that the Liberties granted did not pass, nor could be lawfully used; yet the Usurpation being by Colour of a Grant, Judgment of Seizure was given, as well as Ouster, in these Cases, as likewise in Sir George Reynell's Case; and by Multitudes of Cases of Offices seized, it appears how vain the Objection was, that the King cannot seize a Corporation, because he cannot have it, or be the Mayor and Commonalty; for not only what the King may have or hold, but what he may dispose of, are in Judgment of Law, said to be in his Hands; and it is the proper Office of the Hand disponere, as well as tenere. And what but colourably came out of the Crown, though it cannot subsist by Law in a Subject, shall be seized, as in Cusack's Case.

3.) In the last Place there are other Seizures, which are by Process by Commission of Inquiry upon Inquisition found, or upon Presentment; and such are always for Forfeitures, upon Faults found in Breach of Conditions annexed by Law. That the King is in Possession of all incorporeal Rights by such Seizures upon Inquisition, appears by the Resolution in Sir George Reynell's Case. In these Cases of Seizure for Forfeitures, no Court, or the Lord of the Liberty, whether Body Politick, or Natural, can admit to a Fine, and thereupon make Restitution; neither is there any other way by Law to take off the King's Hands, but by direct Traverse of the Fact, if the Fact found be not true; or by Demurrer, if the Fact found be not in Law sufficient Cause of Forfeiture. The Facts upon which such Seizures have been made, have been generally so notorious, and the Consequence of Law upon them, taken to be so evident, that I never met with any such Inquisition ever traversed or demurred to; but the Application for Restitution hath still been to the King's Grace. And these Inquisitions have been taken either ex officio by the Sheriff, or by special Commissions. The Sheriff by his general Commission is intrusted with the Preservation of the whole County, and the publick Peace thereof.

And though in the Grant of Corporations and other Liberties, there be special Clauses exclusive, Ita quod, &c. Yet these Clauses, as the Grants themselves, have another Ita quod annexed to them by Law, that they preserve good Government, and do not abuse the Franchise, by committing or permitting Riots and great Disorders in Breach of the publick Peace; which if they do, is by Law a Non omittas to the Sheriff, to inquire and take care of the publick Peace within the Liberty.

The Town of Hereford was seized into the King's Hands by the Sheriff of the County, for holding of a Market contrary to the King's Prohibition. Upon Certificate thereof into Chancery, the King's Writ issues to the Sheriff, approving thereof, and commanding him to keep it in the King's Hands, Donec dominus Rex aliud inde preceperit. Rot. Clauso. 15 H. 3. memb. 7. Hales lib. K. fol. 41.

Of Seizures made upon Presentments, and Inquisitions taken by Commissions, there are many Instances, some whereof I shall mention when I come to the Precedents. The Seizures upon Judgment, or for a Forfeiture, which are always in the King's Right, do as effectually put the King into Possession, and oust the natural Persons from using the Right, as any Judgment of Ouster whatsoever. And the Difference between such Seizures, and those upon the Grand Cape, which are only upon Mean Process, and in Right of the Subject, and in his Aid, is too apparent to be further enlarged upon. There is some Resemblance between this Seizure upon the Grand Cape, and that in the King's Suit for Default, that Appearance for both are upon Mean Process, and both repleviable, if the Defendant or Tenant come in Time.

There is also a further Resemblance between them, which makes not for Mr. Recorder's Purpose; and that is, in that both are lost for ever, if the Parties come not in Time. For at Common Law, if upon a preceptum quod reddat, and the Lands seized into the King's Hands upon the Grand Cape, the Tenant makes Default, and comes not within forty Days, he could not wage his Law to excuse his Default, but the Demandant should have Judgment to recover the Land presently, 15 Ed. 4. fol. 7.

The Difference that it was not the Franchise or Liberty of the Corporation, but the Towns themselves were seized into the King's Hands, is as void of Authority as of Law. Sometimes indeed Civitas & villa, in Records, are used promiscuously for the Franchise and Freedom, which is jointly used and enjoyed by the Inhabitants, exempt from the Common Law Jurisdiction: And in such Case, the Seizure of the City or Village, and of the Franchise, is all one; and the Inhabitants thereby put under the Government of the Common Law, discharged of the Franchise. But if the Town or City be taken for the natural Persons who are the Inhabitants, or for the Houses wherein they inhabited, which they must be upon Mr. Recorder's Distinction, otherwise it will be a Distinction without a Difference; neither the Inhabitants nor Houses were ever seized, or could be seized, into the King's Hands upon such Inquisitions as have been found, and Judgments of Seizure that have been given. The only Proof for this Difference was a strong Averment, that whilst the City of London

London lay under the several Seizures, sometimes of the Mayoralty only, at other times of the whole Franchise, the Corporation was as vigorous as ever, and in Statu quo; not so much as suspended, but did exercise all Corporate Acts as before. An Averment against the express Sense of all the Citizens when under those Seizures, and against many Authorities of Law.

At the Parliament, 18 Ed. 1. the Citizens (for they had then no Mayor) petitioned the King in Parliament, Quod Rex velit eis concedere pristinum Statum, sc. Majorem et antiquas Libertates. They petitioned not for their Houses, or the Liberty of their Persons, those were never seized; but to be restored to the Mayoralty, and their ancient Liberties, which were under Seizure in the King's Hands. If the Corporation had been in Statu quo, they would not have troubled the Commons to present such a Petition, nor the King to grant so idle a Petition, as eis concedere pristinum statum; but they, who knew their Condition better than Mr. Recorder, could admit themselves out of Possession both of their Mayoralty, and their ancient Liberties, and pray to be restored to them. And the King's Answer was, he was not at present advised statum mutare. My Lord Coke's Opinion is, that the Chapter, when no Dean or Commonalty, when no Mayor, have not Capacity so much as to make continual Claim, nor to take by Purchase, nor sue any Action.

If the Commons of London meet on Michaelmas-day, and choose a Mayor, the old Mayor not present, the Election is void; and so any other Act without the Mayor. If the Commonalty in the Vacancy of a Mayor make Obligation under their Common Seal, it is void; how much stronger will the Case be, when the whole Franchise is seized?

I have now removed the Objections which lay in my Way, by opening the Nature and Effect of Seizures of Liberties into the King's Hands, and where Judgment of Seizure, and whereof Ouster are properly given; whereby it may appear, that this special Capias of Capias in manus Regis is as proper an Execution against the Body Politick, as the common Capias against the Body Natural; and in Judgment of Law the Politick Person is as properly said civilliter mortua by Judgment of Seizure, as the Natural Person is said civilliter mortua by Judgment of any Attainder for any Capital Offence. Mr. Recorder acknowledges, that in case of Natural Persons, when the Law gives Forfeiture of the Body, or of the Liberty of the Body, it is all one in Judgment of Law; the Law is the same when it speaks of Bodies Politick, to forfeit the Liberty of the Body Politick, and to forfeit the Body Politick.

3. My Way thus cleared, I will lay down the Grounds and Reasons of Law, upon which I conceive, with some Clearness, that Corporations may be forfeited and seized into the King's Hands, as well as Offices, or any other Liberties whatsoever; and then shall instance in some further Precedents, whereby it will appear they have been forfeited and seized. My Grounds are principally these:

(1) That there is a Condition in Law annexed to the Franchise of a Corporation, upon its first Erection, as strong, if not stronger, than to any other Franchise or Liberty whatsoever.

(2) That there is nothing extraordinary or peculiar in the Nature of a Corporation, to hinder taking Advantage of the Condition broken, or to exempt it from the common Condition of other Liberties in Consideration of Law.

(1) As to the first, Where-ever the Law introduceth or alloweth any Right upon a Trust, or for the Benefit of the Publick, it implies a Condition, that the Trust be discharged, and the Ends of its Creation complied with. This Condition implied by Law is of stricter Obligation than Conditions express; it shall bind Infants and Females Covert, 8 Co. 44. The principal Case is of Offices; but the Book saith, So it is of all Liberties and Franchises. And indeed throughout our Books, the Cases of Offices of Publick Trusts and Franchises run parallel; and the greater the Trust is, or of greater Necessity to be performed, the Condition is still the stricter. And therefore in Franchises, as well as Liberties, if the Franchise be for the better Administration of Justice, and of Necessity. Non user will be adjudged a Breach of Condition; but where not of Necessity, Non user will not be a Breach; yet Refuser, which is an obstinate and wilful Non user, may be a Breach; but in case of all Liberties and Franchises whatsoever, Abuser was ever judged a Breach of the Condition. This Matter, upon the Question of Forfeiture of an Office, is well stated in the Countess of Shrewsbury's Case, 9 Co. 50. Now this Franchise of a Corporation is granted upon a far greater Trust and Confidence than any other Liberty whatsoever, as I have already shewn; viz. For the Government and Peace of the Inhabitants, and others coming within the Liberty of the Franchise, in Subordination to the general Government of the King; and that they are intrusted therewith by the King upon the publick Account of Government only, and not for any private Respect or Benefit whatsoever. Other Franchises are either subordinate and auxiliary to this, as to hold Courts, have Gaols, and such like, for the better Administration of the several Parts of Government; or else are of Profit or Use, pro meliori sustentatione of the Charge and Burden of this subordinate Government. And therefore Banks, in the Argument of Hayward and Fulcher's Case, Palmer 495. calls it the Principal Liberty, and other Liberties the Accessories.

In the Case of Knights Templars, the Corporation was dissolved upon the Account of Non user, though without their Default; but the End of their Institution ceased. The Case is much stronger where it is a voluntary Cesser, as where the Abbots and Monks quit their Habit, and leave their Houses; this Non user will be a good Cause of discharging the Order. Where the Commonalty have Power to choose every Year a Mayor, if they do not choose a Mayor, their Franchise shall be forfeited, or they may be fined, upon this Reason, that common Justice fails for want of such an Officer, which was a Breach of the Condition annexed to their Liberty by Non user, 21 E. 4. 14. It appears in this Case, That the Commonalty, in the Vacancy of a Mayor, are by this Purpose a Corporation, to choose a Mayor to perfect the Body; and 'tis the only Corporate Act, that they are by Law enabled to do without.

out a Mayor; and this Right may be forfeited too. And as by never choosing a Mayor, they themselves would dissolve the Corporation; so by forfeiting their Right, it is in the Power of the Law to dissolve them. It also appears expressly by this Case, that the King may proceed either for a Fine, or upon a Forfeiture, as he may do in the Cases of all Offices and Franchises whatsoever, as he shall be advised.

If Non user in some Cases (as I have shewn) will forfeit a Corporate Right, no Shadow of Reason can be offered, why Misuser or Abuser will not do it as well as in all other Liberties. For as greater the Trust is, or stronger the Condition, so an Abuser of that Trust is a far greater Breach of the Condition, than a simple Non user. Single Bodies Politick have indisputably such Conditions annexed to them upon the Trust of their Creation; and the Breach of the Condition is in Law good Cause of separating the politick Person from the natural, by Deprivation, which in the Civil Law is of the same Effect as Judgment of Ouster by the Common Law; and their Suspension hath some Resemblance with our Seizures into the King's Hands. If Mr. Recorder had but observed the different Laws that Spiritual Corporations and Civil Corporations are guided by, he would not have raised his Wonder to that Height, that Quo Warranto's were never brought against Monasteries, Bishops, Deans and Chapters, Parsons and Vicars, and that bringing it now against the City of London threatened the whole Hierarchy of the Church; when, with his Leave all these, if they offend, may by Law lose their Corporate Right, which may be severed from them by a certain Instrument called Deprivation, the Edge of which is no sharper than Judgment of Seizure, or Ouster in our Law. And certainly the Union between the politick and natural Body is as close and as strong in single Corporations, as in aggregate; and the same Authors have bestowed upon them the same Epithet, and that they cannot commit Treason and Felony; and the Body Corporate of the Bishop, Parson, Prior, Alien, &c. is as invisible, immortal, and as politick as that of aggregate Bodies. Yet not only Treason and Felony, but far less Misdemeanours committed by the natural Persons will forfeit the Corporate Right, and amount to a Breach of the Condition annexed by Law. So little Crimes, as Waste, and wilful Dilapidations, will be Causes of Forfeitures; many of the Cases thereof are put in Sir James Bagg's Case, to which I refer, 11 Co. 98. For I do take that Case to be an express Judgment in Point, That there is a Condition annexed by Law to every Corporation, and that the Breach thereof is a Forfeiture. The Resolution there is, that any Member of the Body may forfeit his Corporate Right, and may by Law be divested of it, which Right is there called his Freedom and Liberty. And it is the same Right or Liberty, in which all, jointly considered, have an Inheritance, wherein each Member hath a Freehold; for they are not seized of this Right in their Corporate Capacity, but as Natural Persons, the Question being of that Right which gives them the Corporate Capacity. And what any Member may forfeit, every Member may; and the same Acts which will forfeit the Right of every Member, separately considered, if done jointly by all the Members, will have the same Effect. What Act will amount to a Forfeiture, that Case generally determines, whatsoever is contrary to the Duty and Trust of a Member; especially if the Fact be contrary to his Oath, the Oath of Allegiance by the Statute 7 Jac. cap. 6. is made a Part of the Freeman's Oath. The Case goes further, and assigns many Particulars, which will be Breaches of the Condition, viz. Attainders, Forgery, Perjury, Conspiracy, or any other infamous Crimes, at the King's Suit; if these will be sufficient Cause, there can be no doubt but Treasons, Felonies, and Oppressions, Seditions, and other Attempts in disturbing the Government, will be good Causes of Disfranchisement of any or many of the Members who commit such Crimes; and this upon the Trust and Condition implied by Law, upon the first Erection of the Corporation; for the present Members are under no other Trust or Condition as to this Matter, than what the Law imposed upon the first Members.

I cannot see how the Counsel for the City can evade the Force of Sir James Bagg's Case, unless it be by a Distinction or two:

1.) Between every Man, and all Men; every Man may forfeit his Part, but all Men cannot forfeit the whole: Just such another Distinction as was made to all the Precedents between Seizures and Forfeitures.

2.) The other Distinction seems to have a little more Colour, and it is between the King and the Corporation.

The Corporation, say they, are intrusted by Law with Power over their Members to remove them for acting against their Duty; but the King cannot disfranchise any particular Member; and if he cannot disfranchise any one Member, much less can he all Members, or seize their Liberties into his Hands, which in Law amounts to a Disfranchisement of all the Members.

I answer, The King may do both the one and the other; and in saying the King can do it, I mean in Course of Law.

1.] The King doth it, when the subordinate Ministers and Governors within the Corporation do it; for they do it as his Ministers in Execution of his Laws; and it is their Duty to do it, according to the Trust he hath reposed in them, and the Power he gave them; and this Authority is greater or lesser, as he is pleased to grant it, as it appears by Sir James Bagg's Case. If the King grant them express Authority to remove, they may remove the Offender before Conviction at Law. But if no express Power be granted, a Conviction at Law must be first had; and the Judgment of the Law directs their Duty, and they are accountable herein to the King in his Courts of Law: If they mistake the Law, and displace a Member convicted of an Offence, which amounts not to a Forfeiture, the Party shall be restored by Mandamus; an excellent Precedent of Restitution, if they do not their Duty, to disfranchise where the Offence requires it.

2.] The King may do it, by commanding them to do it by his Writ out of the Court where the Conviction remains, or out of the Chancery, as he may the Coroner of the County, Mayor, and other Officers, as the Precedents have been. A Writ to remove the Mayor of Berwick. So where an Alderman is dead, the King may send his Mandamus to choose another,

another, as done in the Case of Lanceston, P. 8. Car. 1. P. 3. Car. 1. 23 R. Hale, Corporat. Pl. 5. If they yield not Obedience, they may be fined, or may incur the Forfeiture of their Liberties, as the Case may require.

3.] In case the Corporation cannot do Justice in punishing and displacing the Offenders, either because the Majority are Offenders, or favouring, or abetting the Offenders, there being a Failure of Justice in the Franchise, which the Law will not permit, by Judgment of Law the City or Ville shall be restored to the Government and Jurisdiction of the Common Law, by Seizure of the Franchise into the King's Hands.

4.] Failure of Justice, and the not suppressing and punishing of notorious Riots and Tumults, have been adjudged good Causes of Forfeiture of Liberties: and the Plea of Non Ability to suppress them, disallowed as any Cause of Excuse, as to the Point of Forfeitures of the Liberties, which doth and will appear by the Precedents insisted on by Mr. Solicitor, and what I shall superadd. So that I conceive the Authority of Sir James Bagg's Case remains unshaken, that there is a Condition annexed to the Franchise of a Corporation, the Breach whereof will be a Forfeiture. The greater the Trust of any Member of a Corporation is, the stricter is the Condition; as where any of the Members are chosen into any Places, which more immediately concern the good Government of the Corporation, a less Crime will be the Cause of his Removal, than will be a Disfranchisement of a private Member, as in the Case of an Alderman.

Taylor's Case,

pl. 1.

It was resolved, for being a Drunkard and Haunter of Taverns, he being a Magistrate more immediately intrusted with the Government, was Cause of Removal; though he have Freehold in the Place, yet it is upon special Trust and Confidence. The Law will be the same, if the Magistrate gives the least Encouragement to popular Tumults, or frequent Conventicles, and unlawful Assemblies. And it is no Objection to say, that some Statute Laws have laid a Penalty for the Offences, as it is in the Case of Drunkenness, and many Offences of Officers; and in Common Law Offences, the Law provides a Penalty against the Offender by Fine or Imprisonment; and yet the same Offence, if a Breach of Condition, will be Cause of Disfranchisement, as appears in Sir James Bagg's Case. The Penalties inflicted by Statutes or Common Law, are for the Breaches of particular laws; but the displacing of a Magistrate is for Breach of the general Trust of his Place, wherewith he is intrusted for the Publick; and having broken that Trust and Condition, the Law adjudgeth him unfit to be intrusted, ne quicquam detrimenti capiat Respublica. The Question, What Acts of a Member will forfeit his Corporate Right? is no-where in our Books so distinctly put as in Sir James Bagg's Case. But the Question, What Acts of the Members, and of what Number of the Members, will forfeit the whole Franchise? I know no-where distinctly put in our Books, but as they lie scattered in the Instances of Forfeitures taken, and Franchises seized; otherwise than upon the general Rules of non user & abuser of the Trust committed to them. But the Civilians do largely treat upon these Questions; Whether the Cities, Colleges, and Universities may be forfeited and dissolved, and what Acts of the Members will be Causes of such Forfeitures? And therefore I crave Leave, before I conclude this Head, from the Condition annexed by Law to all Corporations, only to mention one of them. It is Oldradus de Ponte, in his Book intitled, Consilia sive Responsa, & Aurea Quaestiones: Where he debates the Point at large Pro and Con. and puts the Objections of some Authors, which are much the same enthusiastick Raptures, as have been made use of in this Case; viz. that they have no Souls, but are immortal Bodies, and such-like Stuff. But he resolves the Question thus; I will repeat his own Words: Sed licet non habent veram personam, tamen habent personam fictam fitione Juris. Et ideo dicit Lex, quod Municipium Civitas & Societatem personae sustinent: Et sic eadem fitione animam habent, & delinquere possunt, & puniri, ea tamen poena quae possit cadere in eas, scilicet, quod privetur Privilegiis, & sic Capite minuitur. Et sic sicut vera persona per mortem naturalem definit esse quod erat, sic ista persona ficta per mortem Civilem, quae est, ut privetur Privilegiis, definit esse quod erat, quia amodo non erit Universitas. And then assigns the Causes generally: Et quod Privilegia possint revocari, cum incipiunt esse iniqua vel damnoisa. Et non potest esse magis iniquum, si utatur eo in contumeliam concedentis. Though this be a full Opinion of a learned Man, as to the Case in question, both as to the general Question of Forfeiture, and the particular Breaches assigned; yet I use it not as an Authority; but only to shew the Concordance of other Laws with the Law and Practice within this Kingdom; and that learned Men have before now not only dreamt of such a thing, but have concluded the Point upon Debate and Reason of Law, That Corporations may be forfeited and dissolved, when their Privileges, as used by the Members incipiunt esse iniqua vel damnoisa.

Oldradus de

(2.) My other Ground is, that there is nothing extraordinary or particular in the Nature of Corporations aggregate, to exempt them from the Condition of single Corporations, or of other Liberties: If there be, it hath not yet been shewn. It must arise either from the Number of the Persons who take, and are the Subjects of this Liberty, because they are many; or from the Right conferred upon them. The Number of the Persons constituting this Body contributes nothing towards the Indissolubility thereof, pleaded for. They were several natural Persons before the Union, and remain so many natural Persons; and by retaining their natural Capacities, are as capable of being separated, as they were before capable to be united by taking this Right. And as to the Number of the Persons, a Corporation differs nothing from other Communities, which may assemble and act in a Body: As the voluntary Societies in Inns of Court and Chancery, and Armies, which act under Commissions, to some Persons to collect and assemble, others to act jointly under them. These Societies have their peculiar Rules and Laws to act by, and act jointly, and in a Body, as Corporations do: But yet, in the one Case, if the Members so agree; or in the other Case, the Commission be revoked, they are all separated, and the Union dissolved. So as to the Nature or Numbers of the Persons collected, a Corporation differs nothing from other Societies not incorporated. From Number may be presumed a greater Duration, and it is most probable many may outlive one; but it is certain that many shall die as one Man, and probable, that all may die before others elected, which was admitted to be a Dissolution of the Body Politick: but ingeniously distinguished, that this was rather a Separation of the Persons from the Body, than of the Politick Body from the Persons. Be it so, it is admitted then they are separable, and that Number cannot protect the Natural Persons from being severed from the Body Politick by natural Death. And I have already shewn, that Number contributes nothing to the Indissolubility of a Corporation, by Separation of the Members one from the other, which is called a Civil Death; and in Cases of Civil Death, the separating the Liberty from the Person, or the Persons from the Liberty, is all one. To take the Office from the Officer, or remove the Officer from the Office, is all one; and so in Disfranchisement, to take away the Freedom of a Member, or to remove him from his Freedom, is all one: And so in Forfeiture of Franchises, the Judgment of Ouster is formally putting the Persons from the Franchise, and Judgment of Seizure taking the Franchise from the Persons; but in effect they are the same viz. a Separation between the Persons and the Franchise. And this Separation being wrought by a Condition in Law annexed upon the Union, the Number of Persons can no more prevent it, than where Lands, or incorporate Inheritances, are granted to many and their Heirs, upon an express Condition that no Advantage could be taken of the Condition broken, because the Grant is to many Men.

From the Nature of the Right or Franchise, as little can be inferred for this inseparable Union pretended.

1.) In its Creation, it is merely by the Policy of Man, and the Rule is taken in Calvin's Case, 7 Co. fo. 25. That what is by the Law of Man, may be altered. And divers other Books speaking of the Effects of human Constitutions, laying down as a certain Rule, Quicquid colligitur dissolvi potest; mortal Beings cannot confer Immortality.

All Rights whatsoever are incorporate, and sometimes abusively are styled immortal, which by Intendment of Law is only, that they have continuance so long as any Persons subsist capable of having them: And in this Sense the Right to Lands and Corporate Inheritances are of greater Duration than many Liberties, and particularly those of Corporations; because they subsist when they return to the Crown, which many Liberties do not, but are then extinct. Strata Marcella, 9 Co. & 15 Ed. 4. fo. 6.

2.) As to the Nature of this Right, whether it be considered as a Right of taking and holding in another Capacity than that of natural Persons, or as a Right of taking in Succession, under neither Consideration can it import any inseparable Quality. In the former, it is both the same with that of single Corporations, and plainly implies a Trust. In all the Cases of our Law, where-ever any Persons take in another's Capacity than their own, it is always upon Trust, as Executors or Administrators, Churchwardens, &c. and all single Corporations: And where the Law creates the Trust, the Law provides Remedy, if the Trust be broken, for putting the Trust into safer Hands. And likewise, if considered as a Right framed by Policy, to take in Succession, it is in Substance the very same with that of single Corporations, and if any Advantage be in point of Duration, it inclines to the Side of single Corporations; as better framed by Policy to have Continuance, than the other of aggregate Corporations.

1.] Because the Choice of the Successions, whether elective, donating, or presentative, is placed elsewhere, and not in the Person himself, that it cannot be in his Power to prevent the Succession.

2.] Because the Law leaves it not in his Power to determine the Corporation, either by Surrender or Forfeiture, but during his Life; and so cannot prejudice his Succession.

But in Lay Corporations the Power of Succession being intrusted with them by Elections to continue it, the whole Right is in them, and consequently in their Power to determine it, either by not electing, or electing those the Law incapacitates, which is the Case of Worcester; or every Man of them may for good Cause be disfranchised, or the Franchise for Cause seized, and consequently, for want of Succession, the Goods may go in Succession, as to Churchwardens. A Chattel Lease may go in Succession. The King grants Lands for Years, rendering Rent to the Aldermen of Chesterfield; they take in Possession as a Corporation, Cro. Eliz. 35. (Mich. 26). The same Case, Hales, Corporat. pl. 25. Upon these Grounds that there is a Condition annexed to all Corporations as well as other Liberties, and that there is nothing peculiar in the Nature of Corporations aggregate, to exempt them from being liable to Seizure for Breaches of that Condition, I conclude, Corporations may be taken into the King's Hands by Seizure; which is a Separation of the Liberty of being a Body Politick from the Natural Persons who (as Bracon phraseth it) were but Usufructuarii, and had not Proprietum Dominium. And by this Separation the Natural Persons are restored to the Government of the Common Law.

The Mischiefs that would inevitably follow, were the Law otherwise have been insisted on by Mr. Solicitor. It were to set up independent Commonwealths within the Kingdom; and according to the Judgment of the Parliament 21 Ed. 3. would certainly tend to the utter Overthrow of the Common Law, and the Crown too, in which all sovereign Power to do Right both to itself and the Subjects, is only lodged by the Common Law in this Realm.

The Answer Mr. Recorder applied to the Mischiefs, that they might be otherwise punished, is of little avail. Though he did not express in what Manner they might be punished, yet it must be intended by Fine, or at the Suit of the Persons injured by their Offences. The same Answer may be applied to the Oppressions by Officers and the Abuses of all Liberties whatsoever, and likewise to exclude Disfranchisement of any one Member of a Corporation: But there is no sufficient Remedy to cure the Mischiefs, whilst the Cause still remains and is in as great Power to oppress, as before; which nothing can sufficiently restrain, but the Loss, at the least, the the Loss of that Power. To put the Subjects grieved to contend with Corporations for their Relief by their several Actions, were for the Common Law to lay a greater Burden upon them, than what they suffered from the Corporation; as was sufficiently experimented in the Case of the Duty of Water-bailage of London, before the Quo Warranto was brought to rescue them: And if they recover Damages, those Damages can only be levied upon the common Goods and Estate of the Corporation, 8 H. 6. 1. And many Corporations have little or nothing in Common Stock, and few Corporations sufficient to make Satisfaction for all their Oppressions. And to prosecute for a Fine is no Satisfaction to those who are injured, nor doth remove the Cause of the Oppression. And the Law would be deficient, if such inferior Jurisdictions, or Corporations, were not subject to the Common Law upon the like Conditions as other Liberties, Franchises, and inferior Jurisdictions are.

Mr. Recorder hath affirmed it with great Assurance; That never any till this Suit ever so much as thought of refusing Corporations, which are subordinate Governments. I shall only request of him, and of the other Gentlemen of the City's Counsel, to shew me the Opinion of one learned Man of this Kingdom, or any other Nation, deliberately delivered upon the Question, That sedatory and subordinate Governments cannot, for any Cause whatsoever, be forfeited or refused. That de facto they have been refused in other Nations, is testified by many Authors, with their Opinions, that de jure they may so be; which I forbear to trouble the Court with. Within this Kingdom of that Nature are Counties Palatine, the Cinque Ports, the Liberties of Ely, Lordships, Marches, and such-like, and the Corporations of Cities and Towns; which are all held of the Crown of England. What the Practice and judicial Opinions have been concerning these Liberties, according to the Law of this Land, Mr. Solicitor hath shewn in several Instances; which I shall not repeat, but shall produce some others to prove the same Matter. I beg Leave to rescue a very considerable Precedent produced by Mr. Solicitor, from the Gloss Mr. Recorder was pleased to put upon it, That it was an Act of Parliament; when 'tis no such Matter, but a Judgment of the King's Bench in Point upon a Forfeiture. It is the Case of Sandwich, cited p. 9. Ed. 1. Rot. majus 35. Kan. The Record is amongst the Plea Rolls, in the Treasury or Tally Office.

It was upon an Information at the King's Suit, presented by the Sheriff of the County against the Mayor of Sandwich, and Three others, for assaulting the Sheriff's Bailiff upon Execution of the King's Writ within Stanore, beating the Officer, and taking the Writ from him, and tearing it, and stamping it under his Feet. They plead to the Jurisdiction, that Stanore was within the Liberty of Sandwich, within the Cinque Ports; and that De aliqua seductione fac' corporis Regis, non tenentur respondere alibi, tamen at the Court at Shepway. The Plea was over-ruled upon this Ground, That none could claim such a Liberty without express Grant; and they shew no Charter for it, and were ruled to answer over. They insist upon that Exemption, and refuse to give any farther Answer; whereupon Judgment was given, that they be committed to Prison: And the Judgment goes farther, Et quia Johannes Dennis Major de Sandwich convictus est de transgressionibus predictis; & factum Majoratus in his quae tangunt Comitatum est factum ipsius Communitatis, consideratum est, quod Communitas de Sandwico amittat Libertatem suam. This is an express Judgment of this Court upon the Forfeiture of the Liberty, for a Crime committed by the Mayor and others, in a Matter relating to the whole Liberty. Before this, the Franchise of Sandwich was seized, as forfeited into the King's Hands for a notorious Riot committed by the Inhabitants, in Obstruction of Justice, 3 Ed. 1.

The Case upon that Record was thus: Upon an Inquisition found of Purprestures within the King's Warren of Dover, by stopping a Water-course, whereby the Warren was overflowed, a Writ issued from the Court of Dover, to distrain the Offender by his Goods, to amend and remove the Purpresture: The Officer distrains the Cattle of Simon Erchebston, who was the Offender, and lived at Sandwich, within the Cinque Port. Some of the Men of Sandwich make Rescous; and when the Constable of Dover sent Messengers to complain to the Mayor of Sandwich of this Rescous, and to require Redress; after the Complaint made, and no Redress had, several of the Men of Sandwich fell upon the Messengers, and severely beat them. Then the Constable sent more Officers to see Right done, against whom the Town was barrocaded and chained, and his Officers kept out by the Townsmen in hostile Manner. Then the Constable went in Person, and after some time suppressed the Tumult, and upon their Submission, the Commonalty prayed the Constable would deliver their Submission to the King, which they then delivered to him under their Common Seal; and accordingly was delivered by the Constable to the King and Council, and adjourned into Parliament: And the Mayor, Bailiffs, and Commonalty ordered to be there at a certain Day, before the King and his Counsel in Parliament. Upon hearing thereof in the Presence of the Mayor and Bailiffs for the whole Commonalty, Judgment is thus entered upon that Record; Consideratum fuit per Dominum Regem & concilium suum in Parlamento, quod Majoratus & Libertas de Sandwich pro predictis Transgressionibus in manus Regis capiatur, & tradatur in custodia Constabulario de Dover, ad disponendum de predicta Villa secundum communem Legem & Consuetudinem Regni, non obstante aliqua Libertate. It evidently appears, both by the Form and Matter of it, that that Form was judicial, and not legislative, and agreeable to the Forms of Judgment in the other Common Law Courts, and in our Law Books. Here is a Judgment only of Seizure upon a Forfeiture, and it amounted to a real Ouster; for the Town was actually divested of the Liberty, and delivered up to the Government of the Common Law. For copiatur Majoratus & Libertas de Sandwich in the Singular Number, in manus Regis tradatur in custodia Constabulario suo, who is the Common Law Officer, within the Cinque Ports, is no more than leaving the Town to the Government of the Common Law; which is fuller explained by the subsequent Words of disponendum de Villa secundum Legem & Consuetudinem Regni. And it appears by this Record, that there is a Difference between the Liberty and the Ville, though sometimes Ville is used for the Liberty of the Ville; but here the Mayoralty and the Liberty are seized, and the Ville delivered over to the Common Law Officer.

The next Precedent I insist upon, is that recited by Mr. Recorder, the Case of the Town of Cambridge, but lamentably defaced by my Lord Coke's marginal Note, and Mr. Recorder's Averment, that by the Record it appears to have been by common Consent of Parliament. I rather insist upon this, for that Mr. Recorder hath acknowledged its Force, that it worked upon the Corporate Right, and was upon a Forfeiture; but lays the Force of it in its being an Act of Parliament, when in Truth it is a plain Judgment of a Court of Law, and it appears by the Record it was no Act of Parliament. 5 R. 2. N. 45. Mr. Recorder cited the Record 8 R. 2. No. 11. 4. In 1. to 66.

228. and it is probable Mr. Recorder looked no further than that Book for it: In the Margin it is so cited, but miscited; yet in the Body of the Book, in putting the Case, it is truly cited; for the Record is 5 R. 2. 45. to 66. and it is evident by the marginal Note; and my Lord Coke's saying it was the common Consent, misguided Mr. Recorder, to affirm it to be an Act of Parliament, when the contrary appears by the Record. The Complaint to the King and his Council in Parliament against the Town of Cambridge was for a great Riot committed, and an Assault upon the University; and the Fact in Substance is the same as related in the Fourth Institute. It was prosecuted at two Suits, the one against the late Mayor and Bailiffs, who were at the Time of the Riot in their Natural Capacity; the other against the Mayor, Bailiffs, and Commonalty, in their Corporate Capacity; the Writs returnable coram nobis & concilio nostro. The former Mayor and Bailiffs appear, and plead in their Natural Capacity, that they were neither assenting nor aiding to the Riot; neither did or said any thing, that might turn to the Damage of the University, unless only by Coaction, and outrageous Compulsion: And there seems to have been no further Proceedings in that Suit. Upon the other Writ, the Mayor, Bailiffs, and Commonalty appear, and pray they may have a Copy of the Articles, which were read to them, and Counsel allowed to them, and Time to answer; and such Answer was returned, as is mentioned in the 4th Inst. But in the Record it is said, it was answered by the Court; and that the Court told them, that at present they should not be put to answer to the Crime, (which must be in order to a Fine) but only touching their Liberties.

Then touching their Liberties, they put in a Plea by Cotton's Researcher Counsel, to the Jurisdiction of the Court, which cords is omitted in my Lord Coke; only he saith, after many dilatory Shifts and Subterfuges following therein, the Court over-ruled the Plea to the Jurisdiction, and ruled them to answer in chief; and if not, Judgment should be entered by Nihil dicit. They then pleaded a frivolous Plea, partly Not guilty, partly in Excuse; and the King's Sergeant replied, and the Plea was held naught. Thereupon they submitted, as to the Franchise, to the King's Grace, saving that it might be no Conclusion to them, if they should be called in Question for the Crime. Whereupon Judgment of Seizure was only given. The Words of the Record say thus: Nostre Seigneur le Roy de Assent des Prelates & Seigneurs en cest Parlement fist seiser la dit Franchise en sa maine come forfait pur la ditz Causes. Throughout the Record it appears by all the Proceedings they were judicial; but the Plea to the Jurisdiction of the Court, and the Judgment by the King and Lords, only are Demonstrations it was no Act of Parliament, nor adjudged by the legislative Power, but by a Court of Law.

It appears upon the same Record, that the King granted several of the Particulars which were seized, to the University, who enjoy them to this Day. Et la Remnante de la Franchis de la dit Ville the King granted to the Mayor and Bailiffs, to hold of him and his Heirs, at the ancient Rent of 101 Marks.

33 Ed. 1. Plac. parl. 277. The Liberty of the City of Winchester seized into the King's Hands by Judgment of the King and Lords, for suffering a Hostage of Baion, who was committed to their Charge by the King for safe Custody, to escape, to the King's great Damage. The Writ of Seizure is directed to the Sheriff of the County, quod predictam Civitatem Wintoniae, & Libertatem ejusdem Civitatis, cum omnibus ad eas tangentibus sine dilatione capiat in manus Regis, & eas salvas custodiat, donec Rex aliud praeceperit. Whereby the Franchise being seized, the Men of the City are put under the Government of the common Law Officer. Afterwards the City compounded with the King for 500 Marks, and then the King reddidit eisdem Majori & Civibus Civitat. & Libertat. predictam habendam in forma qua eas tenuerunt ante captionem earundem in manus Regis, and Letters Patents of Restitution were granted, and a Writ of Restitution directed to the Sheriff.

These were Judgments by the King and Lords in Parliament, upon Forfeitures, and were Judgments of Seizure only, according to the settled Rule and Practice in the Common Law Courts.

Mich. 18. Ed. 3. Rot. 161. B. R. in the Treasury or Tally Office. A Judgment of the King's Bench against the Town of Ipswich, upon a Forfeiture. The Bailiffs of Ipswich are impleaded by the King, upon a special Information, reciting that in the King's Bench, sitting there, several Malefactors were indicted for the Death of one John Holby; and that many of the said Town, tam de majoribus quam de mediocribus, did comfort and encourage the Felons after the Felony committed, and treated and entertained them with Viands and great Joy. And, after the Departure of the Justices, kept a mock Court publicly, and summoned the Justices, and the Officers of the Court, to appear under several Pains. To which the Bailiffs appeared, and were opposed, by the Court, Why they did not attach and stay the Malefactors? They answered, The Malefactors flew to Sanctuary. Being further opposed, that they did not attach those of the Town, that furnished the Malefactors with esculenta & poculenta, they pleaded, quod non ausi fuerunt, eo quod tanta fuit multitudo gaudentium, & plures eorum fuere e parentela Malefactorum: Whereupon Judgment was given contra Balivos & Communitat. quod custodia ejusdem Villa seisiatur in manus Regis, & quod aliquis ex Parte Domini Regis, qui sit ausus ad pacem Domini Regis manutenendam, se intromittat in eadem Villa, quousque Dominus Rex aliud inde dixerit. Which the Record Record shews, is the Bailiff of the County, the common Law Officer. And the Mayor and Bailiffs in open Court surrendered their Staffs of Office. This Judgment is agreeable to those in Parliament, and of Seizure only.

R. Claus. 7. Johan' Memb. 24. Civitas & Libertas Norwici was seized into the King's Hands, for hanging Approvers without the License of the King or his Justices; and the Mayor was summoned to answer for the Damage done to the King. Rot. Fin' Memb. 10. (13 Ed. 1.) the Liberties of Norwich seized for a great Riot, and burning the Church: The Case is mentioned Roll. Prerogative, fol. 204. The Liberties of Norwich were again seized, 21 H. 6. upon a Presentment of a great Riot taken before Fortescue, and afterwards regranted to them, 27 H. 6. Patt. Roll. Memb. 19. The Case is cited by Mr. Noy, in the Case of the City of London, concerning the Death of Dr. Lamb, Cro. Car. 252.

The Liberties of Oxford were seized, 32 H. 3. for a great Riot committed by the Townsmen, when the King's Brother was there, and killing of his Brother's Baker. The Writ to the Sheriff runs thus; Quod capiat in manus Regis villam de Oxon. ut eam salvam custodiat ad opus Regis, ita quod Major & homines ejusdem nullam inde habeant administrationem; the King in the same Year pardons them, and grants them Restitution, and a Writ to the Sheriff to put them into Possession, 32 H. 3. Memb. 13. Hal. Lib. L. f. 326.

Again the Liberties of Oxford were seized 29 Ed. 3. and Part of their Liberties granted to the University, which are enjoyed by them to this Day, and the Residue restored to the Town; the Seizure was for a Riot committed, Rot. Claus. 29 Ed. 3. M. 21.

20 H. 3. The Liberties of Evesham, for using false Measures, when the King was there, and afterwards, upon Submission of the Abbots and Monks, the King makes Restitution to them, R. Cl. 20 H. 3. M. 8.

18 Ed. 1. The Town of Southampton was seized into the King's Hands, for wounding, even to Death, an Officer in serving the King's Writ: They after submitted to a Fine, and took a new Grant, and raised their Fee-farm Rent to 20l. per Ann. Roll. Prerog. fol. 204.

It would be too great a Trouble to the Court, to cite more Precedents of Seizures for Forfeitures. In all these Instances Restitution was never made by the Court, but by the special Grace of the King, after Submission to him, and upon such Terms as he was pleased to accept; and in some Cases was pleased to restore them to the Whole; in other Cases, but to the Part of the Liberties. That this Liberty of being a Body Politick may be seized into the King's Hands by Quo Warranto, Mr. Recorder in Effect hath admitted it, if the Suit be brought against particular Members, and the Cases produced by him prove it. For in the Case of Cusack, the Curia advisare vult was upon that very Point of being a Body Politick: And the Case of the Virginia Company, the very Liberty of being a Body Politick is by the Judgment seized into the King's Hands.

I will give some Instances where it hath been done, in Cases of Quo Warranto, against them by the incorporate Name.

Fitz. Avoctury 129. In the Iter of Lancaster, a Quo Warranto against the Bailiffs and Commonalty of Lancaster: They appear, and claim by a Charter of King John, whereby the King grants to them all such Franchises, which the Borough of Northampton had; but do not set forth upon Record what Franchises Northampton had; nor do make Title to the Franchise by Prescription: And for that Reason Judgment was given, their Franchise be seized into the King's Hands as forfeited.

In the Case I before cited, a Quo Warranto against the Bailiffs and Aldermen of New Radnor, and Judgment against them by Default, that the Liberty should be taken and seized into the King's Hands, though afterwards it was reversed, because in miseria was entered instead of a Capiatur pro fine; yet it is a Judgment in Point, that a Corporation might be forfeited and seized by Default in Pleading.

The Case of New Malton, Trin. 6. Jac. 1. R. 3. is an express Authority, that this Liberty may be seized by Judgment in a Quo Warranto against the Inhabitants of a Town, by their Corporate Name. It is brought against the Bailiffs and Burgesses of New Malton; and the Form of the Information is the very same with this against the City of London. They plead by their Corporate Name, and intitle themselves to the Liberty by Prescription; and Verdict and Judgment against them by their Corporate Name of Seizure only, that the Liberty be taken and seized into the King's Hands; and which is more, the Capiatur pro fine against them is entered against them by the Corporate Name of Bailivi & Burgenses, though the Corporation by the Seizure was dissolved; and the Reason no doubt was, that that general Name was a sufficient Description of the Persons who were liable to the Fine for their Usurpation. And no Doubt can be made, but that the true Liberty may be forfeited and lost, by insisting upon a wrong Title, as well as by Default, or any other Forfeiture whatsoever. This Town lies under the Weight of that Judgment to this Day; and are no Corporation; and being opposed by the Interest of the Lord Eure, who prosecuted that Quo Warranto, did never obtain any Restitution or Regrant.

A Quo Warranto against the Bailiffs and Burgesses of Mich. 15 Car. 2. Berkhamstead in Com. Hertford: They appeared, and Judgment pro defectu responsi given of Seizure, Pasch. 16.

Car. 2. and they are no Corporation at this Day. In the ancient Eyres, the Justices in Eyre, when upon Claims put in, the Liberties were lost, either upon some Defect in Pleading, or for some small Abuser or Mistake, the Justices were intrusted with the King's Mercy, to admit to a Fine for Redemption, and make Restitution: But Judgment first passed for Seizure. And regularly upon the general Summons of Quo Warranto in Eyre, or special Suit of Quo Warranto, which are all founded in the same Right, no other Judgment can be given, if for the King, but a Capias in manus, or of Ouster; if for the Defendants, a Judgment of Allowance, or Eat sine die. The Capias pro fine is collateral, and for the Usurpation, not for the Cause of Forfeiture or Seizure. It was one of the Articles of Inquiry in Eyre, how they had used their Liberties? If an Abuse was found, though never so small, Judgment of Seizure was given; though afterwards redeemed by Fine upon Submission. Quo Warranto upon a Claim of View of Frank-pledge in Eyre. It was demanded of the Defendant, If he had any Pillory or Tumbrel? He answered, He had not. Judgment was prayed on the Behalf of the King; for that amounted to a Forfeiture; and if that were not sufficient, that then it might be inquired on Behalf of the King, how they had used the Liberty? The Jury find, that the Defendants and their Ancestors had View of Frank-pledge, but find that the Defendants had taken Amerciaments of Offenders against the Assize for Bread and Beer, amounting to two Shillings, in such Cases where the Offenders should have been punished by the Pillory and Tumbrel. Idea consideratum est, quod Visus capiatur in manus Regis. And then they pray they may have their Liberty again upon a Fine, which is granted to them, upon Pledges for well using of their Liberties. And there is no Difference where the Liberty is lost upon a defective Claim or Mispleading, or for a Forfeiture in Quo Warranto; the Judgment is the same of Capias in manus; and it is all one, whether the Cause of Forfeiture be found by a Jury, or confessed upon the Pleadings, in a Quo Warranto.

The next preliminary Point which was moved, is, Whether the Acts of Common Council be the Acts of the Corporation, and do oblige them?

It seems a strange Question, that when to assemble, consult, determine, and to make Orders and By-laws for the Rule and Government incident to every Corporation, without special Clauses of Grant, and that herein only consists the Exercise of the Politick Reason of the whole Body, it should be doubted, Whether what they determine and resolve upon, being so jointly assembled, be a Corporation Act, or may affect the Corporation? Upon the Erection of all Corporations, this Power of assembling, deliberating, and determining for the Corporation, is either intrusted with a few particular Members, whose Continuance in that Trust (both as to the present Members, and the Succession of them) is directed by the several Charters: Or else it is intrusted with the whole Body, and that either expressly in plain Words, or by Implication of Law, when the Charters are altogether silent therein: The Law in such Case lodgeth the Power of assembling, debating, and determining for the Corporation, in all the Members; and the Whole, jointly assembled, (or so many of them as upon Notice shall appear) constitute the Common Council: And such Assembly is not styled the Common Council from being retained and giving of Counsel, as Mr. Recorder would have it, in which Sense he only, and the Common Serjeant, are the Common Council of the City; but they are so called from their joint assembling and consulting for themselves, who constitute the Body Politick. In the same Sense, the Parliaments of England, by many Authorities, are called Communia Regni Concilia. This Power, thus lodged in the Whole, may be the Whole, or the major Part, which always binds the Whole, being lodged or delegated to a certain Number, which may represent the Whole. In such Case, where the Power is transferred, those Members to whom it is transferred constitute the Common Council in the same manner, and their Acts are of the same Obligation, as where all meet, unless the Delegation were not general, but certain Cases reserved for the Determination of the Whole, as hath been done in several Corporations; but in all Cases not excepted, their Acts are the Acts of the whole Body. Where the Common Council is constituted of the whole Body, or of all the Members who will meet upon Notice, there is no room left for Doubt, but their Acts, and the Acts of the whole Corporation are the same. Mr. Recorder seems the only Person that ever doubted it, and is not to be beaten from his Holds:

First, That the Common Council consist only of particular Members, and their Acts bind only the Members; & Actio non egreditur Personam.

Secondly, That no Corporation Act can be without the Common Seal.

Thirdly, That the Acts of the Common Council of London are under the Protection of the Statute or Charter in Parliament of 1 Ed. 3. their Acts are personal, and they but Ministers of the City; and that the Charter provides, that the Liberty of the City shall not be taken into the King's Hands for any personal Trespass of any Minister of the City.

For the first, I have already demonstrated, that there are no Acts of the Corporation, but what are performed by the particular Members; I will not repeat. I have produced many Instances, that in point of Crime the Acts of particular Members do affect the Corporation, touching their Liberty. That they do so in point of Wrong between Subject and Subject, the Cases are infinite; I will only mention the Authorities: 9 H. 6. 36. b. 8 H. 6. 1. a. & 14. b. 45 Ed. 3. 2. b. 15 Ed. 4. 1. b. 5 H. 7. 26. a. 4 H. 7. 13. a. 32 H. 6. 9. a. 7. I shall add one Case more, that absolutely destroys Mr. Recorder's Hypothesis, upon which he relies, That a Corporation cannot do or suffer any Wrong; it is 48 Ed. 3. 17. b. The Mayor and Commonalty of Lincoln bring Covenant against the Mayor and Commonalty of Derby, upon a Deed of Covenants made by the Predecessors of those of Derby to the Predecessors of Lincoln, that those of the Town of Lincoln should be discharged from Toll for their Merchandize brought to Derby. In their Count they assign for Breach, that two of the Burgesses of Derby by Name did exact and take Toll of several of the Burgesses of Lincoln. The Defendants first take Exception to the Count for Variance from the Writ; that the Writ supposeth and alledgeth the Breach to have been committed by the Mayor and Commonalty, and the Count assigns the Breach by two Burgesses: The Exception is over-ruled, and the Court held pursuant to the Writ for the Breach of Covenant, which binds the Whole, and must be made by Members. Then it was insisted upon, in point of Law, That the Act of the two Burgesses did not oblige the Corporation. It was admitted, that the Act of all the Members met together would oblige the Corporation: But it was resolved, that it was a Breach, and obliged the Corporation; and that the taking of Toll by their Officers was a taking of Toll by the Corporation; and the Reason given is, that all the Members of the Corporation cannot, by any common Intendment, be understood to meet together to take Toll. Here is an express Judgment ment, that Crimen egreditur Personam, and shall render the Corporation liable for Wrongs done to a particular Member of another Corporation. Much stronger is the Case of the King upon Breaches of the Condition in Law, as I have shewn, where the Acts of the particular Members, committed against the Kings Officers, are adjudged done against the King, and render the Corporation liable; but when all meet together, and do not act, I may say it was never yet doubted but the Corporation was obliged.

The Case of Warren, which was cited, of the Place of Common Council-Man of Coventry, is nothing to this Purpose; nor the Reason given, That such Place was collateral to a Corporation; which was no more, than that the Court could not ex Officio take Notice of it as a fixed Place or Office, but must take it upon the Return; it being variously used in several Corporations, as I have shewed; and the Custom being returned to choose and remove them ad libitum, the Court could not judge otherwise, as they may of the Freedom of any Member, which is the same in all Corporations. And therefore in the Case of Estwick and Bret, Common Council-men of London, where the Court could take notice, they were chosen for a Time certain, the Court adjudged they could not be removed without Cause, and granted Restitution. That the Members of a Corporation can be punished only in one Capacity, and not in both Capacities, and impeaching them for Treasons and Felonies in their Corporate Capacities, will be licensing them, or at least giving them an Exemption and Encouragement to commit these Crimes impune in their Natural Capacities, is a Strain so much above Ela, that I cannot understand it. Sir James Bagg's Case teacheth other Doctrine, That the punishing of any of the Members criminally for infamous Offences, by Fine, Imprisonment, or Pillory, at the King's Suit, doth not exempt the Criminal from Disfranchisement.

The many Precedents I have produced do prove, that the Rioters or Members, who committed the Cause of Forfeiture, were not discharged by proceeding against their Liberties. In the Case of Norwich, for hanging the Approvers, the Liberty was seized for Misgovernment, and Process issued against the Mayor to answer it at Westminster, criminaliter. And in the Case of Cambridge, the Court told them, they did not then put it upon them to answer criminally, but as to their Liberties. And they themselves knew, that by Seizure of their Liberties they were not discharged of their Crime: And therefore in the Plea of Submission they insert a Saving, that it might be no Conclusion to them, in case they were impeached criminally. Mr. Recorder doth admit, that if all the Members commit Treason, and be executed, the Politick Person is destroyed as well as the Natural Persons, and that justly too for so great an Offence; and therefore the Extent of Forfeitures doth not encourage, but deter Offenders from Commission of the Crimes. And the Citizens, when they know that their Riots, Oppressions, and Libelling of the Government, do not only subject their Persons to Punishment, who are the immediate Actors, but also subject the Constitution and Government of their City to be questioned, will look upon themselves under stricter Bonds for discharging their Duties, than common Subjects are. And therefore the Nobility, who have so great a Share in the Government, for Treasons, do not only forfeit their Lands and Lives, but their Right of Peerage, which is a special Trust for Government; and that was forfeited in Cases where their Lands were not forfeited, but only during their Lives, upon the Condition annexed to that special Trust; as before the Statute of 26 H. 8. if a Nobleman (to him and the Heirs Males of his Body) having entailed Lands, commit Treason, his Lands are not forfeited from his Heir in Tail; but the Dignity is forfeited and extinct, and not supported by the Statute of Donis, by reason of the Condition annexed, Nevil's Case, 7 Co. fo. 34. The Law is the same, where the Dignity is granted in Parliament, or by Act of Parliament, it is no less forfeitable in one Case than in the other; the Condition the Law annexed is still the same. If when the Members of a Corporation, corporally assembled, commit Treason against their Prince, it must certainly be acknowledged to be against their Duty, in whatever Capacity they be considered; especially since the Statute of King James, which makes the Oath of Allegiance to be Part of every Freeman's Oath; and the Corporate Right is held of the King. If the Law allowed no other Way of taking Advantage of Forfeiture of the corporate Right, but by executing of all the Members, the Law itself might be accused of as great Tyranny as ever was practised by the greatest of Tyrants. And to this, and nothing else, the Principle laid down by Mr. Recorder, that Treasons, Murders, and Felonies of the Members do not affect the Corporation in Law, doth directly tend, viz. to introduce Cruelty.

The Objection that no Acts are Corporate Acts, or can affect the Corporation, but what are under the Common Seal, nothing certainly can be more vain than such an Assertion. Then no Mayor, Sheriffs, or other Officers, ever acted legally in their Choice by the Corporation, because not under the Common Seal: Then no By-laws are valid as Corporate Acts, because not under the Common Seal: The same may be said by most of the Corporate Acts in Cities and Towns.

In the Case of Cambridge before the King and Lords, 5 R. 2. Birdfield and other Burgesses appeared on the Behalf of the Commonalty. The Court demanded of them, If they had Authority under the Common Seal of the Town? They answer, the Town had no Common Seal, but that they were chosen at a common Assembly of the Town summoned for that Purpose, which is the Common Council, to appear for the Commonalty, to answer and receive ce queux la ley velt, and the Authority was adjudged sufficient. The Common Council, say they, are but Ministers of the City, and the Liberty of the City hath a special Protection against the personal Acts of their Ministers by their Charter in Parl. 1 E. 3. I have a Copy of that Charter by me from the Records in the Tower. The King's Grant indeed is, de offensu Prælatorum, Comitum, Baronum, & totius Communitatis Regni in instanti Parlamento. The Considerations of the Charter are pro melioratione Civitatis, and for the laudable Services of the Mayor, Aldermen, and Commonalty, performed to the King and his Successors; but the Grant is only Civ. Civitatis prædictæ habendum sibi & successoribus suis. The Words of the Grant are: Quod pro aliqua personalis transgressionem vel judicio personali alicujus ministri ejusdem Civitatis non capiatur libertas illius in manum nostram vel heredum nostrorum, nec custodiam in eadem Civitate ea occasione deputetur; sed hujusmodi Minister, prent qualitas transgressionis requirit, puniatur. These are all the Words in that Charter, which refer to this Matter; and the same were granted to them in some former Charters out of Parliament. This appears by this Charter in Parliament, that Libertas Civitatis, which is the Franchise or Corporation, had been seized, and might be seized, for some personal Miscarriages of the Ministers; for it is merely the King's Grant that exempts them from it for the time to come. I do agree, that every personal Miscarriage of their Ministers was never any Cause of Forfeiture; but it must be Miscarriages of Omission or Commission, which amounted to a Misgovernment within the Corporation. As 20 H. 2. Rot. Cl. memb. 5. The City of London was taken into the King's Hands, for not levying a Hue and Cry upon the Death of Persons who were slain, Hale Lib. L. fo. 269. H. 3. memb. 2. Their Liberty seized for giving of false Judgment in the Hustings, Lib. L. 3. 9. These are sufficient to shew what are the personalis Transgressio, and personale Judicium intended to the Charter; though many the like Instances may be produced. Who are the Ministers intended, partly appears by the Charter; but fuller by other Authorities, viz. Mayor, and Aldermen, and Sheriffs, who are in that Charter expressly mentioned. But this Charter did not prove of any great or long Advantage to the City, in differing them as to this Privilege from other Corporations; for they were met with, either by excessive Fines set upon their Officers for personal Defaults, and false Judgments; or that it excused the City only upon the first Offence; and if again they committed the like Offence, it was no longer personal, but become their Offence, because they did not displace their Officer to provide against his reiterated Crimes. And therefore, as Mr. Solicitor hath shewn, the Liberty of the City of London was after this seized into the King's Hands for Misgovernment; besides the Punishment of their Ministers became difficult, because the Offences being committed in London, the Inquiry of them must be by Men of the same, who favoured these Officers. And thereupon, to settle this Matter, an Act of Parliament was made by the same King, which is in Print. The principal Grounds of the Act, as the Act recites, 28 Ed. 3. c. 10. were that the notorious Errors, Defaults, and Misprisions for Default of good Governance of the Mayor, Sheriffs, and Aldermen of London, could not be enquired of, nor found by Men of the same City. The Act settles the Rule, that for the first Default of the Mayor, Sheriffs, and Aldermen, they shall forfeit 1000 Marks; for the second Offence 2000 Marks; and for the third Default, the Franchise and Liberties of the City shall be taken into the King's Hands, and this for the Defaults of their Ministers; which is a plain Judgment in Parliament, that the Franchise of London may be forfeited; and explains the Charter of the 1st Ed. 3. And to make the Remedy effectual, these Defaults are omitted to be enquired after by the Juries of Foreign Counties; and so shut the Door against all Pretences for the Charter, 1 E. 3. and former Charters. It is enacted, that the Ordinance shall be held firm and stable, notwithstanding any Franchises, Privileges, or Customs. By this Law the Fines of their Ministers for their first and second Offences, in Breach of good Government, are ascertained, which by the former Charters were at Discretion; but for the third Offence of their Ministers, their Franchise might be seized as before 1 E. 3. and their other Charters might, for the Offence of Misgovernment, and from thence till this Statute for the second Offence. But neither the Charter 1 E. 3. or this Law, did extend to any outrageous Acts of their Members, as Breach of their Duty and good Government, but only to the personal Acts of the Mayor, Sheriffs, and Aldermen, in their several Trusts committed to their Managery. Under this Law the City of London stood till 1 H. 4. from which King the City expected greater Favours than ordinary, as having merited them by being the chief Instruments of his Promotion to the Crown; but the manner wherein they were instrumental, I forbear to mention. Yet from that King they could obtain no more, as to the Forfeitures for the personal Offences of their Ministers and Officers, than to be put into equal Condition with other Cities and Boroughs. The Statute, after Recital of 28 Edw. 3. that our Lord the King considered the good and lawful Behaviour of the Mayor, Sheriffs, and Aldermen, and of the Commonalty of London towards him, and therefore willing to ease and mitigate the Penalty aforesaid, by Assent of Lords and Commons hath ordained and established, that the Penalty aforesaid, as well of the 1000 and 2000 Marks, and the Seizure of the Franchise, shall not be limited in a certainty; but the Penalty in the Case shall be by the Advice and Discretion of the Justices, as other Cities and Boroughs be within this Realm; and that the Remnant of the Statutes stand in their Force: So that from 1 H. 4. the City of London never could pretend to any other Exemption from Forfeiture of their Franchise than other Cities and Boroughs may.

Here I crave leave to join some other Records to those produced by Mr. Solicitor, particularly relating to the City of London.

2 Pat. Roll. pars 2. memb. 9. The King appoints John Lord Breat n Custos of the City, with Commission to amerce and punish the Aldermen and others of the City, according to their Demerits.

8 Ed. 2. Memb. 3. doct. A Writ issues for the orderly choosing of the Mayor and Sheriffs, which began then to be tumultuous, and, as the Record saith, Quod quidem populares & plebes, conspiratione inter eas habita, diffidia innumeraque facinora in dicta civitate nocte dieque perpetrantes, conventiculaque clandestina in locis privatis facientes, non vocati & summoniti, hujusmodi Electionibus se immiscerent communicationibus & clamoribus. The Writ recites the Elections to have been per Aldermanos & alios viros discretiores & potentiores; and commands that they be so done, prout in eadem civitate antiquit' fieri consuevit: Otherwise, that the King would not admit them, when presented to him, or his Exchequer.

14 Ed. 2. pars 2. memb. 22. The King grants the Office of Mayor, seized into his Hands at the Iter in the Tower, to Robert Kendall, during beneplacito.

15 Ed. 2. pars 1. memb. 2. The King first replevins to the Aldermen, Sheriffs, and Citizens the Office of Mayor, who present to the King Hamond de Chigwel for the Office, and the King admits him; and then the King grants to the Aldermen, Sheriffs, and Citizens, the Mayoralty to hold at the King's Pleasure.

26 Ed. 2. memb. 5. The King absolutely restores to them the Mayoralty, to choose as before the Seizure into his Hands.

16 R. 2. pars 1. memb. 28. dorfo. A Commission issueth to the Duke of Gloucester, and several Lords and Judges, to inquire of the Defaults of the Mayor, Aldermen, and Sheriffs, upon the Statute of 28 Ed. 3.

16 R. 2. memb. 2. dorfo. The Commissioners sat at Eaton, in Com. Bucks, and the Mayor, Sheriffs, and Aldermen, were convicted of several Miscarriages, and the Liberty of the City (by the Judgment of the Court) seized into the King's Hands; and the King (by the Advice of his Council at Windsor) constituted Baldwyn Badington Mayor in the Room of William Venner, and two other Sheriffs, and 24 Aldermen, to hold during the King's Pleasure; and they all took their Oaths before the King and his Privy Council: And in that Record the Prior of Christ-Church was sworn an Alderman.

16 R. 2. pars 2. memb. 31. In the same Year the King, at the Intercession of the Queen, grants to the Aldermen, Sheriffs, and Citizens, that they might use their Franchises as they did before the Seizure; but with this Clause of Restriction, Quousque aliter ordinaverimus. Upon which the City chose John Hend Mayor, and John Shadworth and Henry Venner Sheriffs, who were removed the same Year by the King, and Henry Dalington appointed Mayor, to hold during the King's Pleasure.

16 R. 2. pars 1. memb. 36. The Record assigns the Cause, Pro minus discreta & insufficienti gubernatione & regimine civitatis nostrae.

20 R. 2. The King makes full Restitution to them of their Liberties; in Print, and in the Charter pleaded.

22 H. 6. memb. 25. dorfo. Elections of Mayor and Sheriff beginning again to be tumultuous, a Writ in the nature of that in Edward the Second's Time issued, commanding the Choice to be per Aldermannos, necnon discretiores dictae civitatis, adhuc specialiter summonitos, according to the ancient Custom: And after, in Edward the Fourth's Time, the Choice was settled upon the Livery-men by Act of Common-council.

So then there can remain no Question, but that the Mayor, Sheriffs, Aldermen, and all the Commons in Council assembled, may commit Acts for which their Franchise may be seized; And though there may be no real Difference where all the Commons assemble, and where only a certain Number elected by the rest; yet I shall not farther discuss that Point at this Time, because that Question doth not arise upon this Record. For the Offences wherewith they are charged are both laid, in the Replication, to be committed by the Mayor, Citizens, and Commonalty of London, by which must be intended the whole Body.

The whole Body plead to it; but in the Rejoinder they do not traverse; and deny they did the Facts: So that as to the Actors, it must be intended they are the same Persons, who are sued and defend upon Record, which are all the Members of the Corporation.

There are two Branches of the first Offence laid in the Replication:

1. That the Mayor, Citizens, and Commonalty in Common Council assembled, did make and publish a Law for levying of Money.
2. That the Mayor, Citizens, and Commonalty, by Colour of that illegal By-law, did exact and levy upon the King's Subjects divers great Sums of Money.

In the Rejoinder they take it by Protestation, that no Act or Fact of the Mayor, Aldermen, and Common Council, is an Act or Fact of the Body Corporate, or Politick; which is Protestatio Juris, non Facti, and is that Error I have endeavoured to refute, that the Acts of all the Members of the Corporation assembled in Common Council, are not the Acts of the Corporation. But yet by this Protestation of Matter of Law they would insinuate a Not Guilty as to making of the Law, and seem afraid to own it, and do not barefacedly own it. But after they have intitled themselves to the Markets, in such a manner as I afterwards consider, then they proceed to number the People, which surely was not done upon any legal Ground to move your Judgments. Then say they, that Time out of Mind there hath been a Common Council not exceeding 250 Persons, elected out of the Freemen; but do not say of what Number it doth consist, nor by whom elected, whether by Citizens or Foreigners, by the Mayor, Aldermen, or by whom chosen, so as the Court may judge of the Matter of law so strongly protested, whether they were the Representatives of the whole Body, or no. Then they say, Sir William Hooker Mayor, and the Aldermen of the City, ac communarii, sive cives de Communi Concilio ejusdem Civitatis; which may as well be intended of Mr. Recorder and the Common Serjeant, who are de Communi Concilio civitatis, as of any other; for the Persons are not named, nor is it said they were elected, nor by whom, nor any Words of Reference to the Custom alledged; but generally, that they met in Communi Concilio secundum consuetudinem civitatis, not referring to the former Custom alledged. But being met, they made the By-law for the several Sums of Money, to be received for the Use of the Mayor, Citizens, and Commonalty. Which Rates, and no other, the Mayor, Citizens, and Commonalty, exegerunt & perceperunt, according to the By-law. Qui quidem Actus sive Ordinatio est eadem Lex supposed, by the Replication, to be made by them the Mayor, Citizens, and Commonalty. And traverse absque hoc, that any Law was made for Monies of Persons coming to the Markets aliter vel alio modo than they had before set forth. I know those learned Gentlemen who signed this Plea, and the other to the Charge of the Petition, if they could have found sufficient Matter of Justification to either, they would not have suffered them to appear upon Record in such uncouth Dresses; and therefore Deficiency of Matter may excuse the Insufficiency of Pleading; for there is Skill shewed in the Contrivance to have drawn on a Demurrer; for nothing was dreaded more than an open Examination of the Facts upon a Publick Trial, which would have fallen very little short in both Cases, as to the Aggravation laid in the Replication.

Upon this Pleading the Mayor, Citizens, and Commonalty have confessed, that the By-law was made for them, and the Monies to be levied for their Use. They have also confessed, that by Force of that By-law they exacted and received the Monies; and their Justification will be considered by-and-by. But as to the making the Law, they neither confess it made by themselves, nor by any deriving Authority under them; neither do they traverse, or deny it. For the Averment, that it is the same Law, and the Traverse, that any Law was made aliter vel alio modo, is no legal Denial, that the whole Corporation (consisting of Mayor, Citizens, and Commonalty) did not make that Law upon which an Issue could be taken. Besides, if Mr. Recorder would have the Court intend, that the Common Council, set forth in the Rejoinder, is a distinct Body of Men from the Politick Body of the whole City, the whole Plea amounts but to the General Issue. What the Consequence thereof will be, I will consider upon the Point of the Crimes set forth; but at present the Court cannot otherwise intend, but that they that made this Law and this Petition, were the same Mayor, Citizens, and Commonalty, who are expressly charged therewith, and in their Pleas they do not traverse or deny it. It is just such another Plea, as where an Information is brought against several Persons for killing and taking away of the King's Deer; the Defendants should plead, that certain Persons (not naming them, nor from whence they come, nor by whom sent) pretended a Custom to kill the King's Deer, and according to that Custom they killed the King's Deer, for the Defendants Use, and the Defendants carried away the Deer. Who (I pray) shall the Court intend killed the Deer, but the Defendants, or some by their Authority?

I now come to the main Point of the Case:

Whether by any thing disclosed upon those Pleadings, there appears a sufficient Title to the King, for the Court to give Judgment of Seizure of the Franchise of the City of London? The Title I insist upon for the King, is for a Forfeiture by Acts done by the Mayor, Citizens, and Commonalty, in Breach of their Duty, and the Publick Trust reposed in them upon their first Erection. It is my part to maintain, that the Causes assigned are sufficient in themselves, and sufficiently disclosed to the Court, for the Court to give Judgment upon. I shall consider them,

First, As they stand upon the Replication, as Crimes laid to their Charge, which will amount to a Forfeiture of the Franchise.

Secondly, How they stand upon the Rejoinder and other Pleadings, whether sufficiently traversed or denied, confessed and avoided, or in the least extenuated?

First, The Crimes laid in the Replication, are two in general:

1. Oppression of the King's Subjects by Colour of Law: And,
2. Stirring up Seditions by Libelling their Prince, and his Government.

These two only are laid in the Replication, but collected out of many sufficient Causes for Seizure of any Franchise. The notorious Riots committed in the Face of Justice, to the Comforting and Abetting of Criminals, and Terror of the Judges; and those not only not suppressed or punished by the Magistrates, but countenanced and encouraged by them. The Tumults of many Thousands, exposing and burning in Effigy several of the King's Protestant Subjects, not suppressed or punished by the Magistrates, but by some encouraged, and by Contributions supported. The Encouragement of Libels and Libellers of the King and Government, by and within the City. These and many more I could enumerate, are common Offences to the City of London, with other Cities, and populous Corporations; but these are such as have been in the Cases produced adjudged Causes of Forfeiture of the Franchises for Misgovernment.

And in these London hath but imitated itself in former Times, and other Cities and Boroughs.

But in the Cases insisted upon, London hath out-done itself, and all other Cities and Boroughs too, by assuming a Power to make Laws for levying of Money upon Foreigners for their own Use; and to deliberate, adjudge and condemn their Prince's publick Actions, and publicly libelling of them to his Subjects. Never did London before now, or any other City or Borough, (in Times of Peace, and not under an actual Rebellion) commit the like Breaches upon the Government, to assume a Power superior to any the King hath in like Cases, to lay Burdens upon his People, and to levy Money, and to invade the King's Prerogative by deliberating and determining of his publick Actions to the Consequences thereof, and publicly libelling them to the rest of his Subjects. And in Execution of such unjust Power, that the Mayor, Citizens, and Commonalty, did make and publish a Law for levying of Money upon the King's Subjects, as well Foreigners, as others, coming to the publick Markets with Provisions. And chargeth several Particulars, and divers other Sums imposed upon all Comers to the Markets, whether they sell or no; and that if any Person refused to pay, he should be put out of the Market.

Again, That the Mayor, Citizens, and Commonalty, by Pretext of this Law, made by themselves, and for their own private Lucre) did exact and levy yearly, of the King's Subjects, Sums of Money amounting to Five thousand Pounds per Annum, and converted and disposed the same to their own Use, in Subversion of the good Government of the City; in Oppression and Depauperating the King's Subjects coming to the Markets; in Raising the Prices of Provisions in Markets, to the Damage of the King's Subjects; to the manifest Disherison of the King and his Crown, contrary to the Trust reposed in them as a Body Politick.

In the first Branch of their levying Money, there is this Crime laid to their Charge: An Abusion of the Liberty of a Body Politick in it's highest Point of Trust, viz. of making Laws for the better Government of its Members, and other the King's Subjects repairing to the City. This is no distinct Liberty from the Body Politick, but incident to it, as hath been shewn; and therefore cannot for any Abuse be singly lost, or severed from their Body Politick, no more than the Body Politick can subsist, or attain the Ends of good Government, without such a Power, which the Law raiseth for a better Discharge of that Trust. But the Law entrusteth no Corporation with a Power to levy Money for their private Profit, be the Colour what it will; nor can such Power be derived from the Crown to any Corporation; neither can any Authority be produced, that gives the least Countenance to such an Authority: The Case of Blackwell-Hall is express against it; that was ruled good, because it was pro bono publico, and not pro privato lucro; it was but a small Reward for the Officer who attended that Business; the City got nothing thereby. Corporations, as well as other Communities not incorporate, are by Law entrusted with Power to raise Money for Uses public to the Community; but such Power is confined to the Precincts of the Community; they cannot lay their Charge upon Foreigners; as for Reparation of Churches, Highways, Bridges, and such-like public Charges. These Crimes, at Common Law, came the nearest Treason of any. Sir Thomas Halley, 20 R. 2. for preferring a scandalous Bill, was adjudged to die as a Traitor; his Life spared at the Instance of the Bishops; and after 1 H. 4. N. 9. upon his Petition, the Judgment was reversed. To lay Impositions upon the King's Subjects was not only an Incroachment on Royal Power, but of the Power of Parliaments. And what Incroachments of Royal Power were Treason, what not, was in the Breast of the Judges, as appears by the Petition in Parliament, 21 Ed. 3. N. 15. and after settled by the Statute, 25 Ed. 3. Certainly that they have an immediate Tendency to a Rebellion, is evident. To alienate the Subjects Affection from their Prince, is a great Step that Way; and for so great a Body of Men (both for Riches and Reputation) to adjudge and publish, that the King, by his Prorogation, hath interrupted the publick Justice of the Kingdom, and the necessary Provisions for his own Safety, and the Preservation of his Protestant Subjects, is in Effect to determine and publish the King unfit for the Government, and by necessary Consequence would alien the Affections of such as should believe them. Add to this the Power they assume, and justify, to levy Money to their own Use, upon Foreigners as well as Citizens, and that to any Sum; which Mr. Recorder pressed as the Force of his Argument, that little or more made no Difference. When those they have persuaded to draw their Affections, shall be assured of such a Legislative Power to assist them with Supplies; what Consequences may be expected, every Man may judge. Especially if one thing more had been effected, as was contrived and endeavoured to be established; that London should become the Assylum of all Malecontents, as Rome was heretofore, who might there vent their Gall against the Government impune, and without Fear of Conviction.

I shall consider the Offences particularly, as they stand upon the Replication, as to the Levying of Money.

1. They are charged, that they in Common Council assembled, respecting only their private Lucre, and in Breach of the Trust reposed in them for good Government, did assume upon them an illegal and unjust Power and Authority to levy Money upon the King's Subjects to their own Use, without any lawful Authority. And the City of London have by several Charters such express Power given them, but it is confined to their own Members; neither the King nor the Law ever gave them any Power over Foreigners, to charge them for the private Profit of this City. Now to assume such a Power is a plain Usurpation by a Body Politick upon the Crown and the Law, and is a manifest Breach of that Trust for good Government, by an open and avowed Oppression of the King's Subjects by Colour of Law, which is the worst of Oppressions; and therefore the Law not only gives a new Name, but layeth heavier Penalties upon Oppressions committed by Persons in public Trust. It is called Extortion, and Oppression, where committed by any Person in public Offices or Trusts. It is not sufficient, that the injured Persons may have their Actions, or that they may be fined at the King's Suit; but the Law gives a Forfeiture of the Places of Trust, and all may be exacted from them, if the King please. The Persons injured may recover their Damages: They may be fined at the King's Suit, and their Offices seized; the Law adjudging all these Penalties but equal to the Crime. The Markets, as they stand upon the Replication, must be intended Free Markets, as the Streets of London, are for all the King's Subjects to have recourse to with their Provisions for Supply of the Inhabitants, without Payment of any Toll. The Sums of Money, for buying whereof the Law is made, as set out in the Replication, cannot be for any Toll of Markets, nor for Picage or Stallage, which may be annexed to Markets; but Imposition upon the Persons or Goods coming and brought thither, whether they sell or not, and whether they have any Stalls or not. And the Process is admirable, that if the Person refuse to pay, he shall be turned out of the Market; as if the Law were, that every Man that walks in the Streets should pay 6d. and if he refuse, he should be turned out of the City. I must confess, the Process is as good as the Law. Thus this Crime stands upon the Replication. How have the Mayor, Citizens, and Commonalty varied it in their Rejoinder? Not one Jot; for as to this Point of Charge, that they usurped such a Power, and did execute it by making a Law for levying of Money in Oppression of the King's Subjects, they give no Answer at all, either by traversing or denying, confessing and avoiding. If they had traversed their making of the Law, the Special Plea had amounted to the General Issue; but as it is, there is no Answer at all given to it. And therefore, if the making of such Law, in the manner set forth in the Replication, be an Abusion of the Franchise, Judgment of Seizure must be given for that Abuse.

The Reasons given by Mr. Recorder, that the making of this Law will not forfeit the Franchise, were these:

(1.) That if the King had made such a By-law in the Charter of Incorporation, that would not have forfeited the Corporation; no more can it, if it be made by the Corporation afterwards.

I do not understand the mystick Inference of this Argument, unless it be to continue the Allegory of resembling Corporations to Kings, that they can do no Wrong, and consequently can forfeit nothing by their Acts, though against Law. Where the King annexeth any Power to any Offices or Corporations, which the Law allows them not to exercise, the Law doth not adjudge the whole Grant void, but only those Powers: But if Officers or Corporations shall assume upon themselves to exercise Powers which the King could not grant, against the End of their Institution, by Extortion and Oppression of the King's Subjects, it is not sufficient, that the Acts are void, because illegal; but the Offenders shall be punished in such manner as the Law provides.

(2.) In all the Suits where By-laws have been adjudged unreasonable and void, it was never held or said, that such By-laws forfeited the Corporation; and if it should, every little Mistake in the By-law should forfeit the Corporation, which would render the State of Corporations very unsteady and uncertain.

I answer, first, That in those Suits between Party and Party, there was no occasion for the Court to declare how far the By-law has intrenched upon the Prerogative, by Breach of the Condition in Law annexed to the Liberty. But I remember, in the Case of the Mayor of Hitchin, Mich. 27 Car. 2. upon Complaint in this Court to my Lord Chief Justice Hales, of his Refusal to sign the Poor's Rates, he publicly declared to him, That if he persisted in his Obstinacy, a Quo Warranto might be brought to seize the Franchise.

2.) There is a plain Difference between By-laws for regulating the Actions of the Members, and others within the Corporation, with a Penalty to enforce Obedience, and a Law directly for levying of Money: In the latter Case, the levying of the Money is the principal End of the Law; and to levy it pro privato lucro, and upon Foreigners, can receive no Palliation from being a Mistake against all the Laws and Authorities that are extant. But in the former Cases they have a Semblance for common Benefit, and possibly might be for the Benefit of all the Members, could the Restriction be made by Law; and the Penalty is but collateral, to enforce Obedience, and will stand and fall as the Law determines of the Principal. And the Law no-where determines all the Cases where the Liberty of any Members (as to Trade) may not, or may be restrained, whereby there is Room left for Mistakes; but against so known and universal a Principle, that no Corporation can levy Money for their private Profit, no Excuse of Mistake can be admitted.

3.) That which shelters all other By-laws from Oppression, is wanting in this; that as to the Recovery of the Penalty, they refer to a Court of Law, whereby they submit their By-law to the Judgment of Law for its Validity, that if they have committed any Mistake, it may be corrected by Law. But here the Remedy is plain Force; if the Person do not pay, he shall be turned out of the Market with his Goods: What was settled by Wrong, shall be recovered by Force. Thus Mr. Recorder's arguing makes the Duty a mere voluntary Payment; it is, Solve, aut abi, he hath his Election to pay, or be gone. I have not met with a more arbitrary Principle asserted or defended in a Court of Law. Should the King lay an Imposition of 12d. on every one that entered Whitehall, with Order to the Porter to turn him out on Refusal of Payment, what a Dust would this make, that the Subjects Rights to have Access to their Prince were invaded? Why it is no more than Solve, aut abi. The Right of all the King's Subjects, to come with the Provisions to publick Markets, is far greater, and as great as of the Lord Mayor, or of any of the Citizens to come there; and the putting such Terms upon their Right is absolutely illegal, in the worst Sense that Word is at any time used. And herein Mr. Recorder was in the right, that more or less are not material, because every Sum imposed in such Case is illegal, and what is illegal, cannot be reasonable; which absolutely precludes the Averment, that the Sums were reasonable; which obtains only in such Cases, where of common Right some Sum may be taken.

4.) In the last Place, the questioning of a Liberty in a Quo Warranto, whether upon the Title, or for a Forfeiture, is upon the Right between the King and the Corporation? In case of Mistakes and common Errors committed, those are not to be justified upon a Question of Right; and if they be, they are no longer Mistakes, but wilful Crimes. And therefore, in all Times such Mistakes, both in making of Laws and Matters of Fact, have been passed by and pardoned by the Charter of Confirmation, etiam si abusi fuerint. And in the Multitudes of Quo Warranto's that have been brought, most ended by Submission before Pleader. But where it shall be insisted upon in point of Right, though in a smaller Point of Oppression, upon such Grounds as may equally intitle them to commit the greatest Oppressions, Magis & Minus, do not affect the Case in point of the Right or Forfeiture; but the Question is, Whether they have broken their Trust? And if so adjudged, Forfeiture is a necessary Consequence.

(3.) The Third Reason Mr. Recorder insisted upon is 19 H. 7. cap. 7. That there had been no need of that Law, if Corporations By-laws would be Cause of Seizure.

1.) I answer, That Statute extends not to the By-laws of Cities and Boroughs incorporated; but to Guilds and special Fraternities.

2.) It extends to good By-laws as well as bad, for greater Caution, that they put no new By-laws in Use till allowed; but the Allowance makes them neither better nor worse, only shelters for the 4th Penalty, as in the Taylors of Ipswich's Case, c. 11. b. f. 54. So that the By-laws are but of the same Force they were before that Statute, &c. If they are good Laws, they may be executed without Allowance; and I have before shewn, that the Addition of another Penalty doth not dispense with the Penalty upon Breach of the Condition given by the Common Law. The other Crime of Oppression they are charged with, is, that they did exact and levy, to their own Use, the several Sums, and others, amounting to 5000l. per Ann in Oppression of the King's Subjects, and raising the Prices in the Markets for their own private Lucre.

Secondly, In their Rejoinder, taking by Protestation they are not of that Value, the Mayor, Citizens, and Commonalty acknowledge the exacting and receiving the Monies to their own private Use, but say not of what Value they are; but be they of what Value they will, attempt a Justification. It must be admitted, that if the Justification be insufficient, the Court cannot otherwise judge of the Crime than as it is laid in the Replication; where it appears to be as great Extortion and Oppression of the King's Subjects, and continued for many Years together, by Colour of an Authority usurped by them, as ever was practised by any Subjects upon their fellow Subjects; which cannot be denied to be an apparent Breach of that Trust committed to them, for the better Administration of the Laws and Justice to the King's Subjects.

The Parts of their Justification are these:

(1.) A Custom, that Time out of Mind, there have been publick Markets within the City.

(2.) They make Title to these public Markets by Prescription, but claim not any Toll of common Right belonging to these Markets.

So that both upon the Custom alledged, and Prescription made, the Court cannot otherwise intend but they were free Markets, as in truth they were. Then they alledge a Custom, that Time out of Mind, they used at their Charge to provide Places where the Markets were held, and

Stalls

Stalls and Stations, and other Accommodations for the Market-people, and Surveyors, and other Officers, for the better Government of the Market-people; and did cleanse, and were bound to cleanse, the Market-places. And for defraying of their Charges for all the time aforesaid, they had and used to have diversa rationabilia Tolneta, Ratas, five denariorum summas, of all Persons coming to the Market, for Stalls, Stations, and other Accommodations for the selling of their Provisions. Although they received Monies Time out of Mind, and until the By-laws, they cannot tell what these Sums were, nor what to call them, whether Tolls, Rates, or Sums of Money. Tolls they could not be, that is admitted of all Hands, because against common Right, and to be paid upon Entry into the Market, whether sold, or not. They do not intitle themselves so much as to Piccage or Stallage; for they make no Title to the Land where the Markets have been, or are held. And we all know, that before the Act of Parliament provided at the publick Charge fit Places, and settled them upon a publick Trust for Market-people, what Provision was made of Places by the City, viz. in the publick Streets, where there ever was a Free Market for Provisions, as would have been made evident, had the City tendered a sufficient Issue. Besides, the Sums charged in the Replication can neither be of Piccage or Stallage; but laid upon Goods brought within the Market, whether the Vender made use of any Stall, or Breaking of the Ground, or no. Neither is it averred in this Plea, or by any Words of Reference can it be inferred, that the Sums in the Replication are the same with those they claim; they claim only by Custom rationabilia Tolneta, Rata, five denariorum Summas.

(3.) Mr. Recorder would justify this Plea, that such a general Claim, with an Averment that they are reasonable, is a sufficient Justification of particular Charges, which are against common Right; and insisted upon the Claim of the City of London of the Water-Bailiff's Office, with the Fees thereto belonging; and the Case of Maidenhead in Palmer's Reports, of the Market, with the Toll thereto belonging. These Precedents answer themselves, there was no particular Charge for the Toll or Fees, but what is charged particularly is answered; besides, the Toll and Fees are claimed of common Right, as belonging to the Market and Office. In Maidenhead's Case, the Judges agreed, that Toll according to common Right might be granted by General Words; but Toll against common Right could not, nor be prescribed for but in Certainty. In that Case reported by my Lord Hales, Franchise pl. 11. the Difference is expressly taken; and the Authorities cited of 9 H. 6. 45. 11 H. 6. 14. Fit Avoary 126. That Demands against common Right ought to be prescribed for in Certainty; and the Authorities produced by Mr. Recorder in the Lord Cobham's Case, 1 Len. 218. Hickman's Case, 2 Roll. Abridg. 125. and Roll. 2. Abridg. 265. The Case of Dublin for Keyage or Crannage, for the Case of Hill and Hawks, and the Bell-man of Litchfield, prove it. No Man questions but Cities and Boroughs, upon good Consideration, may prescribe for Sums of Money against common Right; and may prescribe for an apt Remedy for Recovery of such Sums; but all the Authorities prove it must be prescribed for in Certainty, that the Court may judge of the Reasonableness of it. And whoever claims against common Right, must make out his Demand, both in Certainty, and that it is reasonable; it is otherwise, where according to common Right, as in Fines for Copyhold Estates, it is incumbent on the Tenant to shew if unreasonable. Besides, this Custom is void, because they do not intitle themselves to any Remedy for these uncertain Sums.

(4.) The next part of the Justification is, that Time out of Mind, within the City there hath been a Common Council; the Imperfection whereof I have already observed.

(5.) They set forth a Custom for this Common Council to make Laws for the better Government of the Markets, and appointing convenient Places and Times for the Markets. Et ex Affessione & in certitudinem reductione of reasonable Tolls, Rates, or Sums of Money to be paid by Persons coming to the Market, pro Stallis, Stationibus, & aliis Accommodationibus; so as these Laws be profitable to the King and his People, and not contrary to the Laws of the Land. For the first Part of the special Custom, for the better Government of the Markets, and appointing convenient Places and Times, it needed not; for it is incident of common Right to every Lord of a Market, and the Grantee of every Market, without special Clauses, hath the same Power and Trust. And yet it is ushered in with great Solemnity, a Confirmation by Magna Charta, a Charter in Parliament, 1 Ed. 3. & 7 R. 2. to make good a Custom, which is but the Common Law. Unless they set up this Custom to divert themselves, who have pleaded themselves Lords of the Markets, and so to fix it in others who are no Lords of the Markets; and thence to infer, that the Custom having intrusted others than the Mayor, Citizens, and Commonalty, with the Government of the Market, they the Lords of the Market ought not to suffer for the Misgovernment of those other Members. The second Part of the Custom is insensible. To make Laws and Orders ex Affessione & in certitudinem reductione of reasonable Tolls, Rates, or Sums of Money, to be paid by all Persons coming to the Markets, for Stalls, Stations, and all other Accommodations. What is meant by Affessione without an Anglice, I cannot imagine: it is no Law Term; in its proper Signification, it signifieth Sitting together; whence our Sessions quarterly, and Sessions of Parliament have their Name. The general Rates set by the Parliament upon the several Counties are sometimes called Affessments, and those entrusted with equally dividing the Rates in the several Parishes upon the Inhabitants, are called Affessors. In which of these Senses, or what Sense the City's Counsel apply this Word, I cannot resolve; for Mr. Recorder did not resolve it. It seems by the subsequent Words to be explained in certitudinem ponere, and to have some Resemblance to the Parochial Affessments, where the Duty before is imposed by Law, but the Ascertainings of every Man's Proportion is done by the Affessors: And this Mr. Recorder inclined to in his Endeavours to support the Custom, generally for reasonable Rates. And in this Sense too the City seems to understand it, by waving of the Affessment in the Rebutter. In our Surrejoinder we traverse the Prescription of taking of the Rates mentioned to be by the By-law affessed, and reduced into Certainty; which Issue they waive, and insist only upon their Prescription generally alleged. Now, if taken in this Sense, the Clause is wholly insensible and uncertain, because the Tolls, Rates, or Sums of Money to be paid, are not referred to any former Law that imposed them; they do not so much as refer to the Prescription, and the Sums claimed thereby; but the Clause is independent and absolute of itself. Neither can the Court now intend it to refer to those Sums claimed, because we would have so intended it; and therefore took an apt Traverse; but the City waived it in their Rebutter; and they do lie under this Dilemma, that either it must be so intended, and then being traversed and waived by them, the Issue must be taken against them; or it cannot be so intended, and then the Custom is uncertain and insensible. And it cannot be intended by the Court for levying of Money by a new Imposition for the private Advantage of the City; that (as I have shewn) would be against Law, and is contrary to the Prescription they have made, and would vitiate their Plea, by claiming the Thing by Prescription, and by a new Law.

(6.) They set forth a By-law, which imports a new Imposition throughout, of several Sums to be paid to the Mayor, Citizens, and Commonalty; and they provide a new Remedy, that the Refuser should be removed out of the Market. They aver, indeed, the Sums are reasonable; but set out no Fact upon which the Court may any ways judge they are so; which are incumbent upon him that will claim any thing against the common Right. They do not so much as aver, that the Mayor, Citizens, and Commonalty laid out one Penny out of their Revenue, for providing the Markets and Stalls, or what other Stations or Accommodations they furnished the Market-people with, so as to give the least Support to this extraordinary By-law.

And this Averment was industriously left out, lest Issue might be taken upon it; and sufficiently proved, that both the Places, Stalls, and Conveniences, were provided for out of the public Monies granted by Parliament, in Trust for all the King's Subjects coming to the Market, as we have set out in our Surrejoinder. Then it would have evidently appeared, that this By-law was not only in Breach of the Common Law Trust reposed in them for good Government; but in Breach of that Trust reposed in them by act of Parliament. For all the King's Subjects, and these public Monies received and laid out upon that Trust, are made the Consideration to ground the Subjects Oppressions upon by this By-law. Though they laid out not one Penny, as appears to the Court, yet they acknowledge to have received all the Money to their own Use; and their Justification failing, it must be intended, they did it in such manner as is set out in the Replication, which chargeth the highest Oppression that can be possibly committed by Subjects upon Subjects, and is destructive of common Justice and good Government. It is likewise as great an Usurpation upon the Crown, to lay Taxes upon the King's Subjects without his Authority, and openly and avowedly to justify it. How much superior this Offence is to those, whereupon Instances of Seizure have been given, I leave to the Observation of the Court. Their Reply, that the Toll only can be forfeited, or at most the Markets, can weigh little. That the Markets cannot be forfeited, Mr. Recorder admits upon the Authority of the Case of Maidenhead, that Toll is not incident to a Market. This Imposition is wholly foreign to the Markets, which must be intended Free-Markets, wherein all the King's Subjects have Right to sell and buy, discharged of Toll, which shall be intended to have its Commencement by Erection, not by Grant to any Person, which the King may do in Cases of Fairs and Markets. Or if they be granted to any Person, if without Tolls, such Grants are upon Trust, for Benefit of the King's Subjects to buy and sell in; and the Grantee entrusted with the Rule and good Government thereof, for the Benefit of others. Besides, the seizing of the Markets is no punishment of the Corporation, but of all the King's Subjects, who are the Persons oppressed, and whose Rights are invaded by this Imposition. The Oppression is by the Corporation, and by an Authority they claim over the King's Subjects, to lay an Imposition upon their Goods, and to levy it by Force; which is an Abuse of the Power the Law hath entrusted them with, and a Misuser of the Franchise to Oppression. To forfeit the Sums exacted and levied is idle, and no Punishment; for they never had Right to them, and so no Right can be forfeited. In the Case of Maidenhead, where a reasonable Toll was granted, they had a Right to Toll, which may be forfeited by Abuser, in taking an unreasonable Toll; but where there is no Right to take any thing, there is no Right to be forfeited, but that Right by Colour whereof the Extortion or Oppression is committed. If an Officer, by Colour of his Office, oppresses, the Office is forfeited, or the Officer may be fined; the Cases were cited by Mr. Solicitor. R. Quo War. The Levying of two Shillings for the Penalty of breaking Ranto 1. the Assize, forfeited the View of Frankpledge. Using of false Weights and Measures forfeited the Franchise of Evesham. And generally, whatever is an apparent Breach of good Government, where-with every Franchise is intrusted, will, in Point of Right between the King and the Franchise, amount to a Forfeiture; because it is a Breach of publick Trust reposed in them by Law.

2. I shall conclude with the last Branch of their Crimes laid to their Charge:

For invading the King's Prerogative, and publicly libelling of him, and his publick Acts, to the People.

The Replication chargeth the several Facts thus:

(1.) That the Mayor, Citizens, and Commonalty, in Common Council assembled, maliciously, advisedly, and seditiously, and without any lawful Authority, took upon them to censure the King, and the Prorogation of Parliament made by the King.

(2.) That they gave their Suffrages, and ordered a Petition should be presented to the King, in the Name of the Mayor, Aldermen, and Commonalty, containing the scandalous Matter alleged.

(3.) That they maliciously, advisedly, and seditiously, and to the Intent the said Petition should be dispersed and made publick, to persuade them, that the King by the Prorogation had obstructed the publick Justice of the Kingdom, and to stir them up to a Dislike of the King's Person and Government, and to disturb the Peace of the Kingdom; did order the said Petition (containing the said scandalous Matter) to be printed.

(4.) The

(4.) They afterwards maliciously, advisedly, and seditiously, and to the Intent that the Petition should be dispersed and published among the King's Subjects, to aliene and withdraw their Affections from the King and his Government, did print, and cause to be printed and published the said Petition, in Contempt and Scandal of the King and his Government, and to the promoting and exciting of Sedition and Disturbance of the Peace within this Kingdom.

The Crimes, at Common Law, were contra Pacem, and punishable by Fine and Imprisonment in particular Subjects; where committed by Persons in publick Office, or intrusted with Government and Preservation of the Peace, they are of a deeper Dye. In the Title of the Statute, 13 Car. 2. cap. 1. for Preservation of the King's Person and Government, they are called seditious Practices and Attempts; for Prevention whereof that Law provides, That if any Person or Persons shall maliciously and advisedly (by Writing or Printing) express, publish, or declare any Words, Sentence, or Thing, to incite or stir up the People to Hatred or Dislike of the Person of his Majesty, or the established Government; such Person is made incapable of any Office or Place of Trust, and to be further punished, according to the Common Law and Statutes in such Cases.

This Law takes Notice, they were Crimes at Common Law, and punishable as seditious Practices. Sir James Bagg's Case allows Conspiracies and ignominious Crimes to be Causes of Disfranchisement; much more a Conspiracy of all the Members, to libel the Government, and alienate the Affections of the People from their Prince.

Now, What Answer do they give to these Charges in either Rejoinder?

To the first and last they give none at all; they shew no Authority for them in Common Council to debate, deliberate upon, and to determine of Prorogations of Parliaments by the King, or the Consequences thereof, which are inter ardua Regni, and not to be treated of but by the King's Writ: They are not of the King's and Kingdom's Common Council, but intrusted to advise in Affairs of the City, and ne futor ultra crepidam. They are charged to have done this advisedly, seditiously, and without any Authority; and it is charged precedent to the Petition.

To the fourth, for printing and publishing of it, to the Intent that it should be dispersed amongst the King's Subjects, to aliene and withdraw their Affections from the King, laid to be 13 Jan. 32 Car. 2. they say it was printed by Samuel Roycroft, by the Mayor's Appointment; Quæ quidem Petitiõ & Impressio sunt eadem Petitiõ, Impressio, & Publicatio, in the Replication mentioned: And traverse, Abque hoc quod aliqua Petitiõ concern' Prorogationem præd' fact', ordinat', publicat', sic impress' fuit aliter, vel alio modo quam; but do not add vel alio tempore. In which respect this Plea is stronger than the former, to involve the City in the Guilt.

Then they own, the Petition was voted and ordered to be preferred and printed nemine contradicente, to be sure to leave not one Citizen out of the Guilt; but they do aver, the Printing was to undeceive their fellow Citizens, whereas the Charge is, that it was to deceive them. The whole Plea amounts but to the general Issue, admitting the Petition itself were justifiable, and the making of the Petition lawful. Many Things in themselves are lawful, yet if done with an evil Intent, and for an evil Purpose, become unlawful and criminal, and upon Not Guilty, Proof must be made of the evil Intent; where the Thing itself is lawful, there needs no other Proof. To lie under an Hedge on Shuter's-Hill is lawful; but to lie there in Wait to kill or rob a Man, is unlawful, and imports Scandal. To lay Wool near the Sea-side is lawful; but laying it there with an Intent to export it, is criminal, and forfeits the Wool. And it is not good in Pleading to answer such Intent with contrary averments; but where the Intent is Substance, it must be traversed or denied specially, otherwise the Plea amounts to but the general Issue. This Manner of Defence, or Shadow of Justification, proves one especial Ingredient of the Charge; that it was done advisedly. The City say, it was done upon weighty Considerations, and many Occurrences deliberated upon, and relate to them, all upon Record, that the Court may judge, whether they had not good Reason for what they did. And if they could judge, that their whole History taken together are no sufficient Considerations for any Subjects to agree or order any Petition to be preferred and printed, to stir up the Subjects to a Dislike of the King's Person and Government, which is charged upon them, and not answered; the Court must adjudge the Fact to be done maliciously, and seditiously. But the Words of the Petition are in themselves scandalous to the King and Government. Petitioning is lawful, and the City of London have often petitioned the King with good Acceptation, and observed a good Decorum becoming Subjects, both in the Matter and Manner of their Petitions; they used not to advise or meddle in Matters of State, but when sent for to advise, they confined themselves to the Affairs of the City. They never before, as I have met with, charged the King's Acts of State as Interruptions of the Prosecution of publick Justice.

The Words of the Petition are, Your Petitioners were extremely surprised at the late Prorogation, whereby the Prosecution of the publick Justice of the Kingdom, and the making the Provisions necessary for the Preservation of your Majesty, and your Protestant Subjects, hath received an Interruption. To delay, interrupt, or deny Justice, spoken of any Person intrusted with the Administration of Justice, and spoken of him in point of his Trust, always imports Scandal; in the Case of the common Magistrates, they do necessarily import Breach of Duty; neither in common Parlance amongst the Vulgar, nor any History or Author, that I have met with, were they ever used in any Sense of Credit or Reputation to the Person of whom they were spoken or published. Interruption of Justice is a greater Imputation than Delay barely, because the one may be a mere Omission, but Interruption imports some Act, whereby Justice is stopped; but both are temporary Denials of Justice, as Denial is an absolute Stop of Justice. Nulli negamus aut differemus Justitiam, are not only the Words, but the Duty of every King. To say or publish of or to a King, in the Point of the Exercise of his kingly Office, and a Point of as high Trust as any is, that of the Prorogation of Parliaments, that he hath interrupted the Prosecution of the publick Justice of the Kingdom, imports the greatest Scandal imaginable: For it was more of the King's Duty than of either Houses of Parliament, to promote the Prosecution of publick Justice, especially in the Cases set forth, which so nearly concerned his Person; and therefore the Charging of the King with the Interruption of that Justice, is of greater Imputation to the King; and the more Instances they give, it is an Aggravation of their Crime, by charging the King with interrupting the publick Justice in all these Instances. And there is as much Venom concealed in as few Words, as ever I met with. Tacitus did never outdo the Penner of that Petition, whereby all the principal Attributes the Law makes necessary for Princes, are impeached at once, both the Judgment, Mercy and Wisdom of the King. The Interruption of the publick Justice reflects upon his Justice in a high Manner. The Interruption of the Means of his own Preservation, besides his Justice, reflects upon his Wisdom; that the King should not take Care thereof, or did not foresee the Danger he put himself into, by the Prorogation. The Interruption of the Means for the Preservation of his Protestant Subjects, impeacheth his Mercy too, and chargeth the King with Cruelty to his Subjects, in taking no better care for their Preservation, when under such imminent Dangers; with a secret Insinuation, that as he had stopped Justice against his Popish Subjects, so he was regardless of the Preservation of his Protestant Subjects. What greater Malice could be inclosed in a Nut-shell? If Words were dubious, and of a double Signification, and might be taken in a good Sense as well as bad, they ought not to be published by Subjects of their Prince; and when charged to be spoken or published in the worst Sense, to withdraw the Subjects Affections from their Prince, the Court cannot intend them spoken in any other Sense; that must appear upon the Evidence, which cannot be in this Case, because they have not pleaded the general Issue, nor traversed that Point. But here the Words can bear no other Sense, but a direct Scandal to the King and his Government, in the Point of Prorogation of Parliaments. That the City so understood them, is evident by the Petition, in that very Clause, where they say, they were extremely surprised at the late Prorogation. Why should they be surprised? If the King had done nothing thereby, but what was just and good for his People, they had often tasted of his Goodness, and could not be surprised at that. It must then be some very ill Thing in the Prorogation, that so extremely surprised them, and filled them with such Terrors, as throughout the Petition they express. And they discover their Minds plainly, that the Effects of the Prorogation were the Causes of their Surprisal, viz. The Interruption of the Prosecution of the publick Justice of the Kingdom, and of making the necessary Provisions for the Preservation of the King and his Protestant Subjects; and in the next Paragraph they explain themselves further, and call that a Delay, which before they called an Interruption; that they were even impatient of the least Delay, of the long-hoped-for Security, whilst they see the King's Life invaded, and the true Religion undermined, and their Families and innocent Posterity likely to be subjected to Blood, Confusion, and Ruin. The panick Fear, and dismal Consequences, are charged upon the Prorogation. And to what other Purpose do they publish this severe Sentence upon the Prorogation, with their dismal Fears, but to affrighten the King's Subjects, and beget the like Fears in them? The natural Consequence whereof is, to withdraw their Affection: Oderunt quem metuerunt Populi.

Mr. Recorder, though he could not produce one Authority, that To interrupt publick Justice, was ever used in a good or justifiable Sense; yet endeavours to evade the Scandal of the Words by proper Answers.

That these Words are not spoken of the King, but of the Prorogation, as Consequences of it. Is not this Quibbling? The Prorogation is only the King's Act of proroguing the High Court of Parliament. And to charge the Acts of a King, or other subordinate Magistrate in Execution of his Office, with Injustice, Folly, or Infamy, is the same Thing as to charge the Persons themselves.

No, saith Mr. Recorder, unless the Action had been charged to have been done with such Intention; but they do not charge the King: And that it is so explained in another Part of the Petition, by saying, But that which supports them against Despair, is the Hopes they derive from your Majesty's Goodness, that your Intention was, by this Prorogation, to make way for your better Concurrence with the Counsel of your Parliament. Evil Intention may make an Act, otherwise good, to be bad and against Law, by Intendment of Law; the Intention is evil, and the Person answerable for all the Consequences thereof. If a Man throw a great Stone over the Wall, and a Person is killed, the Law adjudgeth it Murder: He cannot justify it by averring he had another Intention. So in the Matter of Scandal, if an unlawful Act or Crime, which purports Scandal, be charged upon a Person, it is no Justification, or Excuse, to aver he did not charge the Person, nor his Acts, with doing it with an evil Intent; but as the Law supplies Malice in the Criminal, where the Act is unlawful, so it intends Malice in the Libeller, in a Matter which in itself imports Scandal. Several Cases may be put to this Purpose. To charge the Wife with poisoning her Husband, is actionable, though not alledged Roll. Ab. 71. done voluntarily, or with an Intent to kill; the Law intends it. In this Case, they charge that the King by his Prorogation interrupted the publick Justice of the Kingdom, and with the dismal Consequences, which in their Judgment would follow thereupon, and publish this to affrighten the whole Kingdom; and that they were near despairing of their Safety, but hoped his Majesty did likewise intend by the Prorogation to make Way for his better Concurrence with the Counsel of his Parliament. A pretty Compliment for so infamous a Charge! And if it import any thing, it is a further Reflection upon the King, that he had not before concurred with the Counsel of his Parliament. But to fix the Matter home, Mr. Recorder, in the last place, justifies this Libel from the Truth of the Fact, that the publick Justice of the Kingdom, and finding out Means for Preservation of the King and his Subjects, had received an Interruption by the Prorogation. This toucheth to the Quick, and is more than the City have averred in all their Pleadings; they have nakedly represented their several Facts, precedent to the Petition; and leave it to the Court to judge whether whether there be sufficient to justify them, to make and publish such a Petition. But to aver it to be true, is to equal the Crime of the Petition, in charging the Prorogation with the Interruption of the publick Justice. But I hope, upon better Consideration, he will change his Opinion, and likewise upon the Inference he made, that if true, it is no Scandal to print and publish it to the King's Subjects; for in both Points he is apparently mistaken. It is admitted there was a Plot, and such Proceedings as are set forth against Delinquents; and that the King by his Proclamation and in his Speech expressed his Sense of the Plot, and pressed the Parliament to proceed to Trial of the Lords in the Tower committed for the Plot, and that there are many such Bills depending in Parliament. And it shall be admitted, that upon the Prorogation all these Proceedings were stayed, and, if Mr. Recorder please, received an Interruption; and to say so is true. But in this Case, if the City had been of an Opinion, that the Parliament, upon the King's Signification of his Pleasure they should proceed to the Trial of the Lords, did not make such Haste to try them, as the City judged was necessary for the Preservation of their Lives and Fortunes; and thereupon the City should have petitioned the Parliament to proceed to the immediate Trial of the Lords in the Tower, and thereby charge them, that they had delayed them the publick Justice of the Kingdom, by not proceeding sooner to the Trial of them, according to the King's Desire; Mr. Recorder would not have averred the Matter of Delay of Justice to be true, and therefore no Scandal to the Parliament; but he would then have found out the Difference between staying of Suits and Proceedings in Courts by the proper Judges, and the Delays and Interruptions of Common Justice; the latter are unlawful and criminal, and against the Duty of the Judges, but the former upon just Grounds are lawful, and many times in Prosecution of common Justice; and many times to proceed in such Cases, would be great Injustice either to the Criminal or the Publick, where the Witnesses on either Side are not ready, or for some other good Cause the Judges put off Causes till another Time, or adjourn a Court before all the Causes be tried. No Lawyer can truly say, that by the putting off the Cause, the Prosecution of Justice hath been interrupted; or will it be any just Justification for him for such Scandal, that there were Causes depending before the Adjournment. The Acts of inferior Magistrates are not to be examined, censured, and adjudged, much less scandalized by those, that are under their Magistracy; That would let in Confusion, and tend to the Overthrow of all Government. To say of a Justice of the Peace, You have perverted Justice, is actionable; Seignior De la Ware and Pawlet, Trin. 37 El. More 409.

Mich. 1 Car. 1. Cro. 14. Sir John Isham versus Yorke; I have been with Sir John Isham for Justice, but could never yet get any at his Hands but Injustice.

Trin. 7 Car. Cro. 223. W. Marsham versus Briggs; Sir William Marsham is but an half-eared Justice, he will hear but one Side.

Mich. 8 Eliz. Rot. 1. Walsh was indicted for scandalizing one Sir Robert Catline, Chief Justice, and this Court, by saying, My Lord Chief Justice is incensed against me: I cannot have Justice, nor can I be heard; for it is made a Court of Conscience. He was afterwards discharged upon the general Pardon, 8 Eliz.

They may be judged by Superiors, but not by Inferiors. Where the Common Law alloweth or authorizeth the Staying of Proceedings by Adjournment, or otherwise; to say the Act is done to delay or interrupt the publick Justice of the Kingdom, or that thereby the publick Justice of the Kingdom hath received Interruption, is not only highly scandalous, but absolutely untrue: For it is according to the Rules of Common Law, and the publick Justice of the Kingdom, and may be the promoting of common Justice, and for the Benefit of the Publick, and ought to be so intended, when done according to Law. For the Reasons of such Acts, much less the secret Intentions of the Judges, or of the Persons whom the Law hath entrusted with such Powers, are not to be examined, censured, or condemned by any Subjects, by any Corporation whatsoever. Petitions may be rejected by either House of Parliament, and so may Bills too, though they have the greatest Semblance of common Benefit; yet this is no Denial of Justice, nor to be scandalized under any such Notion: They may defer the Consideration thereof, or enter upon other Business; that is no Delay or Interruption of Common Justice.

The King may do the like; he may reject the Bills passed by both Houses, or he may advise upon them by these Acts, which the Law allows to be no Interruption of publick Justice: The King may adjourn or prorogue the Court of Parliament. Anciently those Words were used and taken promiscuously, though now from the different Effects they are differently used. And Mr. Recorder owns, that the King is by Law intrusted with this Power, and it is happy for the Subjects he is so intrusted, it being for their Benefit; which is a flat Contradiction to his Position, that it is true, that the publick Justice of the Kingdom is interrupted, or hath received an Interruption, by the Prorogation: Because what is just and lawful, secundum legem terræ, cannot be unjust or unlawful, which every Interruption of publick Justice is; and if the Act be not unlawful, it is no Delay or Interruption of Justice. And if the Subjects cannot examine into or censure these lawful Actions of their Princes, but must intend them to be upon just Grounds, and for their Benefit, and in order to their common Safety; to charge their Prince's Actions with the Interrupting of publick Justice, and of the Means for his own and his People's Preservation; and to publish this to all his Subjects, is, in Judgment of Law, a false, scandalous, and malicious Libel; and if not sufficiently punished, where will it end? To publish a Libel is in no Case lawful, be the Matter never so true, nay, though the Party who is libelled be dead; and the Degrees of the Crime, where against a private Person, and where against a publick Person, appear in the Case cited by Mr. Solicitor in the Reports, fol. 125. And that it is against all Laws both of God and Man, and the Mischief there represented. In the Case of all Common Pleas, the Offender shall be fined, and by the Statute of 13 Car. 2. all natural Persons are for the future disabled, and incapable of any Office or Place of Trust, where the Libel is against the King. But where the Matter is false, and the Libel published against the King, to withdraw his People's Affections from him, and that by the joint Counsels of a Corporation, there can little Room for a Question remain, but they have broken their original Trust for good Government, and misused their Liberty to Licentiousness. How criminal is it for private Subjects to deliberate of, and determine, and publickly to censure the Counsels and Actions of their Princes, will appear by the Case of Stubbs, Mich. 21 & 22 Eliz. Rot. 3. where the Case was, that a Treaty of Marriage being on Foot between the Queen and Duke of Anjou, John Stubbs published a Book called, The Discovery of a gaping Gulph, whereinto England is like to fall by another French Marriage, containing a Disfluasive against the Marriage: And therein amongst other things chargeth, That this Marriage hath Sin in itself, and of itself only, for being against the Law of God. And in another Place, That it opens all the Ports of Foreign Enemies, with several bad Reflections upon the Duke. This Book was delivered by Stubbs to Hugh Singleton, a Stationer, to print, who caused it to be printed and published. They were both indicted for it in this Court, and the Indictment laid to be, with Intent to hinder the lawful Purpose of the Queen, and the Duke to marry, and to animate and stir up the Queen's Subjects to Rebellion, and to raise Discord between the Queen and her Subjects, and to subvert the good Government of the Kingdom. Upon Not Guilty pleaded (for they had not the Confidence to justify) they were found Guilty, and Judgment given for cutting off their right Hands upon the Statute 1 Eliz. cap. 6. for libelling the Queen. In this Case the Censuring of the Queen's lawful Purposes, in a more private Matter than the Administration of her Regal Office, by common Subjects not called to advise, is a Subversion of good Government within the Kingdom; and the Publishing the Effects and Consequences thereof to be sinful and dangerous to the Kingdom, is a Libelling of the Queen and her Government within the Statute. The Censuring of the Exercise of the King's lawful Prorogation, and charging it with the Interruption of publick Justice, is of a more dangerous Nature. Every natural Person convicted of this Offence, is by the Statute of 13 Car. 2. disabled for any publick Trust; the Proceeding against the natural Person could not be for Want of Proof, it being transacted in their Council. In this Process against the Whole, they have confessed it with the Aggravations laid. If the King pass not a Bill which the City of London have a Mind to, this Rejection of such Bill shall in Print be published to all his Subjects to be a Denial of Justice. If the King reprieve a Malefactor, it shall be a Delay or Interruption of publick Justice. To pardon a Malefactor shall be a Denial of publick Justice of the Kingdom. So that the Tenure whereby the City of London hold their Franchise, and all their Liberties, will be quite changed and altered, without the Aid of Act of Parliament. The City will no longer hold all their Liberties from the Crown quandiu se bene gesserint, which was their ancient Tenure, reserved by the Crown and the Laws of the Land upon their first Erection, but will gain absolutum Dominium. And the King shall exercise no just Prerogative, but at their good Pleasure; otherwise they will blast him to his People, and aliene their Affections from him. I have done with the Case. I have nothing more to offer. I have at large proved, that the Corporation of London is a great Franchise and Liberty. I have proved that Point of Forfeiture, and their Demeanours towards the Crown: They stand in the same Level with other Cities and Boroughs, which be forfeited and seized. I have presented to the Court two superlative Offences, both against their Prince and their Fellow Subjects, as well can be; wherein they have exceeded all other Cities and Boroughs, and themselves too in any former Age. The Manner of their Pleading, and Defence at the Bar, argue the Disease to be dangerous and infectious to other Cities and Boroughs, and of the Nature of the King's Evil incurable without the King's Hands. I have this Day brought them in Judgment before the Court, in order to their Cure. Nothing remains for effecting of the Cure, but the Judgment of the Court for Seizure of the Franchise of London into the King's Hands; which I demand for the King.

Mr. Attorney General having taken up so much Time, the Court put off the Hearing the Counsel for the City till another Day, when Mr. Pollexfen argued as follows:

Mr. Pollexfen. IN this Case, when I consider the Greatness and Consequence of it, That it affects the King, the Parliament, the Laws, the very Government under which we have lived, this great City of London, and all other Corporations and People of England, and their Posterities, for ever, I cannot but be troubled, that I should be the Man to whose Lot it should fall to argue it; but that which comforts me is, that your Lordship, and the Court, upon whom the Judgment of this great Case depends, will help out my Defects, and according to what is required in the great Places you bear, take care and provide, that by your Judgment the ancient Government and Laws of this Kingdom receive no Damage or Alteration. The King's Counsel have on their Side only some general Words out of old Records of Forfeitures and Seizures of Liberties which are of uncertain and doubtful Sense; but there is not on their Side produced any one Precedent, Judgment, or Opinion to maintain the Point in Question, viz. That a Corporation, or Body Politick, ever was determined, or dissolved, or taken away for a Forfeiture: No, not in the maddest of Times, in the Times of Edward the 2d. and Richard the 2d. when the Tumults and Disorders were so great, that they not only seized and took away the Liberties and Franchises, but the Lives of Princes, Nobles, Judges, Lawyers, and all that stood in their Way: In those Times, though they have hunted and searched with all Diligence, not one Instance of a Corporation taken away, or dissolved by a Forfeiture, is cited. So that from hence I hope I may safely conclude, that I argue in this Case for the old and known Laws, as they have been ever practised through all Ages, and against that which never hath been practised or known; which is a great Encouragement to me. The Pleadings being very long, I shall only repeat so much of them as I use, when I come in order to speak of them.

I. The first thing proper to be spoken to is the Information itself, and therein I make this Question: Whether as to that Part thereof, that chargeth the Corporation with usurping upon themselves the Being of a Corporation, whether that be properly brought against the Body Politick, as this is, or ought to have been brought against the particular Persons? I do agree, that as to the other Things mentioned in the Information, the having Sheriffs, Justices, &c. the Information is properly brought against the Corporation: And I do also agree, that it may be good as to those Things, though bad and insufficient as to the Charging the Corporation with Usurpation of their Being, without lawful Warrant or Authority. And, that I may come singly to this Question, I do put out all the other Franchises in the Information, and take only what concerns this Point; and then the Information, as to this Point, chargeth, That the Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens of London, by the Space of a Month last past, before the Information, did use, and claim to have and use, without any Warrant or Regal Concession, within the City of London, the Liberty and Franchise following, viz. to be a Body Politick, Re, Facto, & Nomine, by Name of Mayor, and Commonalty, and Citizens, and by that Name to plead and be impleaded; which Liberty, Privilege, and Franchise, the same Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens, upon the King, by the Time aforesaid, have, and yet do usurp. This is the Substance of the Information as to this Point; and, Whether this Information thus brought as to this Matter be sufficient in the Law, upon which a Judgment can be given, or ought to have been brought against particular Persons, is the Question. I conceive it ought to have been brought against particular Persons, and is insufficient as it is, and that no Judgment can be given upon it, supposing the Defendants had demurred, or pleaded nothing to it. To make out the Insufficiencies, I desire to consider what it imports.

1. The very Bringing the Writ, and exhibiting the Information against the Corporation, imports and admits the Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens, to be a Body Politick, capable to be sued and impleaded, respondere & responderi; otherwise there is no Defendant, no Person in Court, against whom the Suit is brought. It is not enough, that the Person sued be a Person by Supposition, or a pretended Person, but none in Reality. If a Writ or Information be brought against a Baron and Feme, this must admit, that they are Baron and Feme really and truly; and if there be any thing after in the Writ or Information, that shews, that they are not truly and really Baron and Feme, but that they do wrongfully and unduly take upon them to be Baron and Feme, when in Truth they are not, this would be contrariant and repugnant, and abate the Writ or Information. The like is supposed by the Bringing the Writ or Information against the Body Politick; it supposeth and affirmeth them really and truly to be such, and the subsequent Affirmation, that they usurped so to be, and are not so really, is contrariant and repugnant.

2. When in the Information it is alledged, that the Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens, the Liberty, Privilege, and Franchise of being a Body Politick, Re, Facto & Nomine, and to be sued and impleaded upon the King, have and yet do usurp; to usurp or do any Act of Necessity imports and admits a precedent Existence of the Person that doth usurp, or do the Act to the Act done. Particular Persons may usurp, and take upon themselves, that which they have no Right unto: The Persons, that did the Act, did before exist, and had a Being. And when a Corporation is said to usurp, it of Necessity must be supposed to have a precedent Being. The Sense of Usurpation in a Quo Warranto is the Subject's taking upon him Franchises without Warrant.

My Lord Coke saith, That Usurpation in the Common Law hath two Significations: Inst. 1. 277. b.

1.) The one, when a Stranger presents to a Benefice, and his Clerk instituted and inducted, he gains the Advowson by Usurpation.

2.) The other, when any Subject without lawful Warrant doth use any Royal Franchises, he is said then to usurp upon the King.

So that an Usurpation supposeth of Necessity a Subject or a Person precedently in esse, that useth the Franchise, or that doth usurp. That which is not in esse, that hath no Existence, cannot use any Franchise, cannot usurp. The very alledging that they usurp, doth admit of Necessity an Existence precedent in the Corporation, such as can usurp, or act, and therefore this Information is inconsistent with itself.

3. But another Reason to prove, that it ought to be against particular Persons, and cannot be against the Body Politick, is drawn from the Judgment, that must be given upon this Information, if Judgment for the King. The Judgment must have two Things in it:

1.) To damn the Corporation, Quod penitus extinguatur & excludatur from being a Corporation for the future; for being wrongfully usurped, it cannot be continued: A Judgment to continue Wrong and Usurpation can never be a right Judgment.

2.) A Fine to the King, for the usurping it for the Time past. This Judgment may and ought to be given, where the Information is against particular Persons, for usurping upon themselves to be a Corporation, and they shall be fined and imprisoned; but this cannot be where the Information is against the Body Politick; for by the Judgment the Body Politick is extinguished and dissolved, and no Fine can be imposed upon that which is not: So that hereby the King must lose his Fine, which the particular Persons usurping ought to pay, and the Law is agreeable always to itself, and the Means answerable to the End. I suppose no Man will affirm, that where a Suit or Judgment is against a Corporation, that the Fine or Execution shall be against all, or any particular Member.

For the Precedents and Authorities in this Point,

(1.) I do agree, that there be Precedents in the Crown-Office of Quo Warranto's brought against Corporations in such Manner as this is brought, for usurping to be a Corporation, and to claim divers other Liberties.

Quo Warranto against the Bailiffs and Burgeses of Stratford, for claiming to be a Corporation, and to have divers Liberties and Franchises; thereupon a Plea put in, and a Confession of their Claim by the King's Attorney. P. 2 El. r. 1.

The like against the Corporation of Reading, the like Plea and Confession, the very next Term after the Information filed. M. 3 & 4 El. r. 4.

Against the Corporation of Horsham, a Plea and Confession by the Attorney. H. 14. Jac. r. 37.

The like against the Corporation of Dover; but nothing done upon it besides Plea put in. H. 19 Jac. r. 26.

The like against Bath, a Claim put in, and confessed. H. 20 Jac.

The like against Brackley, and a Noli prosequi. H. 20 Jac. r. 58.

The like against Boston, a Claim put in, and confessed. T. 3 C. 1. r. 22.

The like against New Sarum, Imparlance, and nothing more upon it. T. 2 C. 1. r. 47.

The like against Bridgeport, Claim and Confession. T. 6 Car. 1. r. 43.

The like against Biddeford, a Claim and Noli prosequi. M. 2. C. 1. r. 36.

The like against Wicomb; they plead themselves a Corporation by another Name, and traverse the Name in the Information; nothing more on the Roll. M. 8 C. 1. r. 42.

And it is probable, there may be more like these; but if of any Authority, they are for me, and not against me.

1.) For that they all being for claiming other Liberties, as well as to be a Corporation, and being good and sufficient as to the other Liberties and Privileges, that the Corporation claims; though insufficient for this of claiming to be a Corporation, they must be proceeded upon, if the Attorney pleaseth. But is any to be found where only the Claiming to be a Body Politick, and nothing else? or if other Things questioned, yet only proceeded in as to this Particular of claiming to be a Body Politick, as in this Case? That will be like.

2.) In all these nothing is done; a Claim or Plea put in, and that confessed, or Non prof. or not proceeded upon to Judgment. Perhaps not proceeded in, because insufficient; and so are Authorities for me: For there being so many of these, which are either Non prof. or not proceeded in, perhaps the Reason might be, because insufficient in the Law, as to the Corporation, and so are Authorities for me in this Case. But one there is found.

Quo Warranto vers. Bailiffs and Burgeses of New Malton in Yorkshire; T. 6 Jac. r. 3. Quo Warranto they claim divers Liberties, as Courts, Markets, and others, and amongst the rest to be a Body Politick. They put in a Plea, and make their Claim by Prescription; Issue is joined, and tried by Nisi Prius at York, and found against the Corporation, and a Judgment entered, Quod Libertat' & Franchises prædictæ in manus domini Regis capiuntur & sequeantur, & quod Ballivi & Burgeses capiunt' ad satisfaciend' Dom' Reg' pro Fine suo pro Usurpation' Libertat' & Franchises prædictæ.

There is no mention of this Case in any Book or Report, as far as I can learn; so that this passed sub silentio. Next, how can this Judgment be good?

[1.] How can that be a right and lawful Judgment, which shall be given for the Continuing a Thing, that is by the very Judgment adjudged to be unlawfully usurped, and a Fine for it? It is directly oppositum in objecto.

[2.] How can the Corporation be seized into the King's Hands? Extinguatur & excludatur is proper; the Corporation cannot be in the King.

[3.] How could the Bailiffs and Burgeses be fined? When they are vanished and gone, there is no Corporation in Being; that which is laid upon a Corporation cannot be levied upon the particular Members.

I have made Inquiry after this Borough of New Malton: It is a small Borough, within the Manor of the Ancestors of my Lord Eure; it did anciently send Burgeses to Parliament, but from the Time of King Ed. 1. to the Beginning of the Long Parliament, 1640, it sent none then; upon Petition a Writ was ordered, and they then and ever since have chosen Burgeses: My Lord Eure being Lord of the Manor, and offended with them, did prosecute this Quo Warranto, and they having neither Lands, Revenues, or Estates, to defend themselves, he easily prevailed, they never in Truth being incorporate, nor having any Charter. But that which I give for Answer to these Precedents is,

1.] They are all, where not only the Being of the Corporation, but also divers other Liberties were in Question; so that the Informations were good in part, and not worth the while to question whether good as to that Part of their being a Corporation. The Fine upon them for usurping the other Liberties, would have been more than they could bear or pay.

2.] That this is but one Judgment, and in a Case of a small Borough, and that Judgment, as entered, not agreeable, but inconsistent with the Rules of Law or Reason. The Body Politick could not be seized into the King's Hands; but whenever a Judgment is given for the King, for Liberty which is usurped, or extinct in the Crown, the Judgment must be quod extinguatur, and that the Person that claimed them deinceps Libertat' & Franchises prædictæ nullatenus intromittat', sed ab usu earund' amodo omnino cessat; quodque the Person that used them, pro usurpacion' Libertat' & Franch. prædictæ super Dominum Regem capiat' ad respondendum dict' Dom' Reg' de Fine suo pro Usurpacione Libertat' & Franch. prædictæ. That this is the Form, C. En. 559. a. 537. 527. b.

3.] That this Judgment of New Malton passed sub silentio; for there is no Mention of it in any Book, nor doth it appear that ever the Question was moved or debated. And for Precedents in Matters of Practice and Process, they are of Authority; but in point of Law, unless they have been upon Debate, are of little Authority to prove what the Law is. Rep. 4. 94. Slade's Case, L. 5. E. 4. 110.

But on the contrary, all the Precedents that are in any printed Books of Informations, were brought to question, Whether Body Politick, or not, are against particular Persons by Name:

Against Christopher Helden, and others, C. En. 527. Pal. 9. f.

Quo Warranto against Cusack, and others, Rel. 2. r. 113. 115.

Quo Warranto against the Virginia Company was brought against Nic Farder, and others, Quo Warranto they claimed to be a Corporation. Rel. 2. 455.

Some of them pleaded insufficiently, upon which there was a Demur, and a Question, How the Judgment should be entered? for that the Master and Chief of the Company were left out of the Quo Warranto. By which it appears, that it ought to be brought against the Master, and particular Members by Name.

Next, for the express Authorities in this Case, to prove it cannot be against against the Corporation, Rel. Rep. 15. is express, That if a Quo Warranto be brought to dissolve a Corporation, the Writ ought to be brought against the particular Persons; for the Writ supposeth, that it is no Corporation.

The Difference there taken, when the Attorney General supposeth the Defendant to be a Corporation, otherwise when he questions them as Inhabitants of a Vill, then they ought to enable themselves, they must then shew themselves a Corporation, also prove it.

My Lord Hales in his Common-place Book, in Lincoln's Inn Library, fol. 168, saith thus: Nota, sc. Quo Warranto soit port pur usurper de une Corporation serra port vers particular Persons, quia in disaffirmance del Corporation, & Judgment serra donne que serra ouste; mes si le Quo Warranto soit port pur Liberties claim. per Corporation, serra port vers la Corporation. This is positive.

This, if it were only my Lord Hales's Judgment, were of no little Authority; but I think it is a Report taken upon the Case of the Quo Warranto against Cusack and others. But Mr. Attorney finding, as I believe, all the Precedents to be against him, (for in them all there are either non Prof. or no Proceeding to Judgment, the Causes whereof, or at least some of them, probably might be the Insufficiencies of these Informations) and finding also the Authorities in Print, which have been cited to be all against him, and none for him, endeavoured to maintain the Information as brought not against the Corporation, but against the Citizens or Inhabitants of the City in their natural Capacities; and to that Purpose cited the Case, C. En. 537. of a Quo Warranto against the Inhabitants of a Village. Quo Warranto they claimed to be a Body Politick; and argued, That a Quo Warranto lies against the Cives of such a City, or Burghes, or Tenants. This seems to be rather a sudden Conceit, and altogether undigested, and not well considered. But in Answer thereunto, and to prove, that this Writ is brought against the Defendants as a Corporation, and cannot legally be taken in any other Case; if a Mayor and Commonalty plead, that they are seized in Fee, they need not say in Right of their Corporation, the Name shews them to be a Corporation, it need not be alledged. Leo. 1. 153. An Action there brought by the Guardians and Fellowship of Weavers; the Book saith, That they need not set themselves out to be incorporate, the Name shews it; so of Cities, saith the Book, Hob. 211. So then, when the Writ is brought against a Mayor and Commonalty, or Mayor, Commonalty and Citizens, the Law takes Notice of them to be a Corporation; and the Writ against them as such; the Name shews it. But against Inhabitants of a Village, a Writ brought by that Name, that cannot be taken to be other than Inhabitants, the Name shews it; and in such Case, some of the Inhabitants, by Name (viz.) A. and B. appear in Person, in their own, and Names of the rest of the Inhabitants, and plead, and are Defendants, Co. En. 537. So did they, as appears in that Precedent. No Appearance ever was of Inhabitants in other manner. But in this Case here are no Persons that do appear by Name, but the Corporation appear, and make an Attorney under their Common Seal. The Corporation, and no particular Persons, are the Defendants before you, or else you have no Defendants before you; for there is none appearing in Person, here is no Defendant, nor none against whom you can give Judgment; but all the whole Proceedings vain and against nobody. So that if we should admit, as Mr. Attorney argues, That this Information is not brought against the Corporation; then there can be no Judgment for want of Defendants appearing in their natural Capacities; you must have it against the Corporation, or nobody. A Mayor cannot be but where there is a Corporation; therefore this Notion is impossible, as I conceive. So that if there were nothing else in the Case, if the Information be ill brought, they can have no Judgment against us.

II. But admit, that the Information as to this Point be sufficient, then I proceed to consider the other Parts of this Case; the Plea: That contains the Defendants Title, (viz.) That she is a Corporation Time out of mind, and many Confirmations by Acts of Parliament and Charters. It is not denied, but that the Title made by the Plea is good.

But next the Replication, that contains,

1. An Issue upon the Prescription (viz.) That the Citizens of London have not been Time out of Mind a Corporation by Name of Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens, &c.

2. A Pleading over, That the Mayor, and Commonalty, and Citizens taking upon them (assumentes super se) to be a Body Politick, and to have Power to make By-laws,

1.) Colore inde, but for their private Gain, & contra fiduciam per Dominum Regem & Leges hujus Regni in them reposed, took upon them to raise Money upon the King's Subjects, by Colour of an Ordinance by them de facto made; and in Prosecution of this usurped Power, the Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens, in their Common Council assembled, published a Law for levying Money upon the King's Subjects, that came to the Markets within the City, 17 Septem. 26 Car. 2. (viz.) De qualibet Persona, for every Horse-load of Provisions brought into any publick Market within the City to be sold, 2d. a Day; for every Dorser of Provision, 1d. a Day; for every Cart-load drawn with not more than three Horses, 4d. a Day; if with more, 6d. a Day; that if any refused to pay, he should be removed from his Place in the Market: That, by Colour of this By-law, the Mayor, and Commonalty, and Citizens have extorted great Sums of Money for their own private Gain, amounting to Five thousand Pounds per Annum.

2.) And farther, That whereas there was a Session of Parliament holden 21 Octob. 32 C. 2. and continued till the 10th of Jan. 82. and then by the King prorogued to the 20th of that instant January; the Mayor, Commonalty and Citizens, Jan. 13. in their Common Council assembled, malitiose, advise, & seditiose, absque legali Autoritate, in se assumpserunt ad censendum & judicandum dicti Domi Regem nunc, & Prorogationem Parliamenti, by the King prorogued; and in the same Common Council, Vota & Suffragia sua dederunt & ordinarunt, That a Petition sub nomine the Mayor, Aldermen, and Commons of the City of London, in Common Council assembled, to the King should be exhibited: In which Petition it was contained, That by that Prorogation the Prosecution of the publick Justice of this Kingdom, and the making necessary Provision for the Preservation of the King, and his Protestant Subjects, had received Interruption. And that the Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens, in the same Common Council, did unlawfully, malitiose, advise, & seditiose, with intent that the same Petition might be published and dispersed among the King's Subjects, to induce in them an Opinion, that the King had by that Prorogation obstructed the publick Justice, and to incite Hatred against the King's Person and Government, and to disturb the Peace, did order that Petition, containing the said scandalous Matter, to be printed; and thereupon, to those ill Ends and Purposes, they caused it to be printed and published: By which the Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens, the afore-said Liberty and Franchise of being a Body Politick forisfecerunt, and after, by the Time in the Information, have and yet do usurp it.

Before I come to the Matter, I would speak to the Pleading herein, and in the subsequent Surrejoinder: And for the Pleading in it, I think it is as singular and unprecedented as the Matter of it is. This Replication, supposing the Matter had been the Act of the Body Politick, and good and sufficient, yet as pleaded, is insufficient, and not warrantable by any Law or Practice ever known. It contains,

1. An Issue, viz. no Corporation Time out of Mind.

2. Two Causes of Forfeiture of the Corporation, admitting they once were a Corporation.

So that, though the Point in Question be but one, viz. Whether we are lawfully a Corporation or no Corporation, though the Plea is single, that we are a Corporation by Prescription Time out of Mind; yet here is, to try this Point,

1. An Issue.

2. A double Plea, alledging two Causes to avoid it for a Forfeiture.

This I conceive cannot legally be done, though in the King's Case, I do agree, the King hath great Prerogatives in Pleadings; and as far as ever they have been allowed or enjoyed, let them be so still; but that the King can to the same Matter both take Issue, and also plead over at the same time, That I deny. It is most reasonable, that the Law should be careful to preserve the King's Rights; but on the other Side, I think it is not reasonable, that the Law should admit or allow as legal, any way of Proceeding that should destroy or render the Subject's Right indefensible, be his Right as good as it may be. If so be that Mr. Attorney may both take Issue upon the Fact, and also plead over, I would, by your leave, ask, How many Issues, and how many Pleas over, the King's Attorney may have? Suppose the King bring a Quare impedit, or Writ of Right, or any other Action, the Defendant makes his Title, which is usually done, by many Grants and Conveyances from one to another, to bring it to himself. May the King's Attorney now take as many Issues as Facts issuable, plead as many Pleas as he pleaseth, and all this simul & semel? It is true, that in this Case Mr. Attorney hath assigned only two Breaches, or Causes of Forfeiture; but he might, if he had pleased, by the same Reason, have assigned two hundred. If this may be, are we not all at Mr. Attorney's Mercy? If this may not be, then how many Pleas? Is it in Law defined? In favorem Vitae a Man may plead a special Plea, and plead also Not Guilty, but not several special Pleas; but that there is any such Prerogative for Mr. Attorney, in Suits betwixt the King and his Subjects, I can find no Instance or Authority for it: For though it be true, as I have said, that the King hath great Prerogatives in Pleadings, yet it is as true, that this is not boundless; but that if in the King's Writs there be Mistakes, or his Writ or his Action misconceived, he shall be bound by it in like Manner as Subjects are or shall.

Partridge against Strange, Com. 84. a. 236. a. and in the same Book, in my Lord Berkeley's Case, it is expressly said, That though the King hath many Prerogatives concerning his Person, Debts, and Duties; yet the Common Law hath so admeasured his Prerogative, that it shall not take away, or prejudice the Inheritance of any.

The King hath a Prerogative, that he may waive his Demurrer, and take Issue; or waive his Issue, and demur upon the Plea: But, saith the same Book, fol. 236. he must do it the same Term, not in any other Term; for then he may do it in infinitum, without End, and the Party hereby may lose his Inheritance; and for that the Common Law will not suffer the King to have such a Prerogative. These are the Words of the Book. And in the Point, that this Prerogative must be made use of the same Term, and that the King's Attorney cannot vary in another Term, and waive his Issue, is 13 E. 4. 8. Bro. Prer. 69. 28 Hen. 8. 2. So in making Title to a Quare impedit, he at the End of the Term waived his first Title, and made another. But it is true also, that as to the Point of waiving Demurrers, and taking Issue in another Term, there is Authority, that he may so do; Rex vers. Bagshaw, Cr. 1. 347. But whether it may be done or not in another Term, is not material to our Case: But the Use I make of these Cases is to prove, that the King's Attorney should not have both together simul & semel, as in this Case he hath done; he must waive one before he can have another Plea. For those Debates about his varying his Plea, by waiving his Issue and Demurring, or waiving his Demurrer, and taking Issue, signify nothing, if he may in one Plea, and at the same time take Issue and demur, or plead over to the same Matter or Point, as is done in this Case; therefore those Books strongly prove, that the Prerogative, that the King hath, is by waiving or relinquishing one, and choosing the other; and therefore not to have or use altogether and at once, as is done in this Case.

The King shall be bound by one Issue, he shall not have divers, 9 H. 4. 5. So that as this Replication is at the same time simul & semel to the same Matter, to take Issue, that we were not a Corporation time out of Mind, and to plead two Matters of Fact for Forfeiture, is the first Attempt that ever was of this Kind, and in its Consequence confounding the Right of the Subject, and leaves him perhaps only but a Colour of Law, but most difficult, if not impossible by it to be defended, let his Right be what it will, if Issues and Pleas without-Number may be by the King's Attorney joined and pleaded, and the Subject must answer. The very Charge besides will undo the Subject, and wrest him out of his Estate by the Law, that should preserve him. This Point, if I mistake not, will deserve Consideration, if it be new, and the first Project (for so I beg leave to call it) of its Kind; for I know no Book or Instance of the like, unwarrantable by old Laws and Rules of Pleading. The old Laws

Laws and Ways are good and safe: Eventus varios res nova semper habet. Perhaps the Consequence and Mischief attending this way of joining Issue, and at the same Time pleading over as many Pleas as Mr. Attorney pleaseth, are as great as any other in this Case, and not less to be minded or regarded. As of the one Side, great are the King's Prerogatives, and most necessary to be preserved and maintained; so it cannot be denied, but that the Law hath set Limits and Bounds, which must be kept and observed in pleading, which is the Method and Mean of preserving and determining Rights, without which no Man can be preserved by the Law. But supposing that several Causes of Forfeitures may be assigned, yet they must be all Facts done at the same Time, or they confound one the other; for if the first Fact was a Forfeiture, thereby the Corporation was determined, and at an End, and the subsequent could not be the Act of the true lawful Corporation; for that was forfeited, determined, and gone, by the precedent Forfeiture: and if so, that it was forfeited and gone by the precedent Act, viz. the making the Ordinance Septemb. 17. 26 C. 2. then how could it act and forfeit itself six Years after, in the Year Thirty-two? This seems impossible. But to avoid this, Mr. Attorney in his Argument, doth hold, That though the Act be a Forfeiture, yet till there be a Judgment, or something on Record, to determine the Corporation, (and in this Case the Judgment to be given shall do that Work) till such Judgment, the Corporation remains: Then taking it as Mr. Attorney will have it, and as the Truth is, supposing a Forfeiture, until that Forfeiture appear on Record, or that there be some Office or Inquisition that finds it, and that returned, and on Record, were it of any Estate in Lands, Tenements, Hereditaments, or Offices, it is not determined or vested in the King, but continues. This is quite contrary and contradictory to all that you have done, and the very Foundation of this Quo Warranto; for if you admit, as then you do, that the Forfeiture ipso facto did not determine, but that it must be this Quo Warranto, or Judgment upon it, that must determine the Corporation; and that the Corporation, notwithstanding such Act, was or is in Being; then they have not usurped upon the King: They are the same Corporation they were; they have the same Power to act they had; they have the same Warrant and Right they had, only subject to a Judgment against them, that may be given hereafter for a Fact, already past: For since that an Usurpation is a fortious and wrongful using a Liberty or Franchise upon the King, without lawful Authority; then, supposing such an Act of Forfeiture doth not ipso facto determine or dissolve, but a Judgment, or some other Act of Record must first be had before such Dissolution; then till such Judgment, or Act of Record, they are lawfully a Corporation in Being, and their lawful Warrant remains, and they did not, nor could so long usurp their Being, and then hereby is your own Information destroyed and abated: For there you say, that they did by the Space of a Month, without any Warrant, use and usurp the Liberty to be a Corporation. But hereby you grant, that it was not used unlawfully, nor usurped; but notwithstanding the Forfeiture the Corporation lawfully continued, unless there had been some Judgment, or other Act, on Record, to determine it. This I rest upon as impossible to be avoided. Is it possible, that a Corporation or Body Politick can at the same Time be lawfully and rightfully such, and not lawfully and rightfully such? Can Right and Wrong be the same? Can the same Thing rightfully be, or have its Being, and at the same time not rightfully be, or have its Being? Can we possibly be at the same Time, viz. the Time mentioned in the Information, a lawful Corporation, and yet an usurped or unlawful Corporation? Could we then have a lawful and rightful Authority to be a Corporation, and at the same Time have no lawful or rightful Authority to be so? These seem to be Contradictions; and if so, are the most difficult of all things to be believed or imposed; therefore to be plain in this Matter, either tell us, that we are yet till Judgment a Corporation or Body Politick lawfully and rightfully, or not. If you say we are, then as yet we are no unlawful Corporation, nor have usurped to be one, as in your Information and Replication you have alledged. We have not then unlawfully taken upon us to be a Corporation, and therefore cannot have Judgment against us; or be fined for having or being that which we lawfully have or be, as you now admit we are; consequently, you must go some other way, you have destroyed your own Information, and can have no Judgment upon it. But perhaps this Concession of Mr. Attorney, that the old and lawful Corporation and Body Politick is still in Being, and shall so continue, till by Judgment or Matter on Record determined, may only be some sudden Thoughts; for not only the Matter, but the whole Proceedings in this Suit, being at least unexperienced, and perhaps much out of Practice, it might easily happen, that in an hasty Proceeding, all things might not be thought on, nor all the Objections nor Inconveniencies foreseen, and perhaps the Consequence of the Position, that a Miscarriage, or doing an unlawful Act, should ipso facto forfeit the Body Politick or Corporation, might make a Man start, and cast about how to avoid it, and flying from one Danger run into another. These are things ordinarily happening, and perhaps have in this Case happened, and were the Cause of this Concession, that the old and lawful Corporation is yet in Being, which is contrary to the whole Frame and Scope of both the Information and Replication, and probably never thought on or intended when the Information or Replication was made, being quite contrary and inconsistent with the Frame and Foundation of them both. If it be holden, according to this Concession, that the old and lawful Corporation was not by the supposed Acts of Forfeiture dissolved and determined ipso facto, but remained and continued lawfully a Corporation, and yet is so; then we have not usurped, but are a lawful Corporation during the Time in the Information, and not as therein supposed by Usurpation, and without lawful Authority; and thereby the Information confounded and abated.

But supposing, according to what the Information and Replication suppose, that the Acts of Forfeiture did ipso facto dissolve and determine the Corporation; for they will at last, I doubt, come to that again: for this present Thought, that it shall be forfeit, but not dissolved or determined till Judgment, will be subject to almost all the same Inconveniencies; for when Judgment is given, the Forfeiture must relate to the Time of Offence, and to avoid all mean Acts, as in other Cases it doth: But to pass this over.

III. Supposing the Information good, the Replication good, and the Matters alledged for Forfeiture to be as in the Replication alledged: The next thing I pray Leave to speak unto, is, Whether the Matter alledged in the Rejoinder be not sufficient to justify or excuse the two Facts alledged for Cause of Forfeiture? I conceive they are. The Pleadings here must first be stated.

I. As to the Ordinance or By-laws for the Toll in the Markets. As to that, the Defendants in their Rejoinder have alledged, That the City of London is, and was always, the Capital and most populous City of the Kingdom; that there are and always have been great publick Markets within the said City; that the Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens are, and always have been, seized of those Markets in their Demesne as of Fee, and at their own proper Charges provided Market-places, Stalls, Standings, and other Accommodations for Persons coming to those Markets, and Overseers and Officers for better Regulation, and keeping good Order, and cleansing the same; that for defraying those Charges, they have, and always had and received, divers reasonable Tolls, Rates, or Sums of Money, of all Persons to those Markets coming, for Stalls, Standings, and other Accommodations by them had, for exposing to Sale their Victuals and Provisions in those Markets; that the Freemen of the City of London are numerous, above fifty thousand; that there hath been, Time out of Mind, a Common Council, consisting of the Mayor, Aldermen, and certain Freemen annually elected, not exceeding the Number of two hundred and fifty, called the Commons; that there is a Custom within the City, that the Common Council make By-laws and Ordinances for the better Regulation and Government of the publick Markets, and for the appointing convenient Places and Times when and where, within the City, the Markets shall be kept, and for the assessing and reducing to Certainty reasonable Tolls, Rates, or Sums of Money, to be paid by Persons coming to the same Markets, for their Stalls, Stations, and other Accommodations by them had, for exposing to Sale their Victuals as often as, and when to them should be thought expedient, so as their Ordinance be useful to the King and his People, consonant to Reason, and not contrary to the Laws of the Land; that this Custom is confined by Mag. Char. Stat. 1 E. 3. Stat. 7. R. 2. that after the burning and rebuilding London, and the Alterations thereby made, Controversies, did arise within the City concerning the Markets and Tolls; that thereupon Sir William Hooker, then Mayor, and the Aldermen, and Commons in Common Council assembled, did make an Ordinance, intituled, An Act for the Settlement and well-ordering the several publick Markets within the City: By which reciting, that whereas for Accommodation of Market-people with Stalls and Necessaries for their Standings, for cleansing and paving the same, for defraying incident Charges about the same, reasonable Rates had always been paid. To the end the Rates to be paid might be ascertained, that the Market-people might know what to pay, and the Officers what to take, to avoid Extortion, it was ordered, there should be paid by the Market-people for their Stalls, Standings, and Accommodations in the Markets, For every Horse-load of Provision under publick Shelter 2d. a Day, for every Doffler 1d. a Day, for every Cart-load drawn with not above three Horses 3d. a Day, with more Horses, 4d. a Day, and upon Refusal to pay, to be removed: Then they aver, that these Rates are reasonable; that they are all the Rates that are paid by such Market-people to the Use of the City; that these Rates they have received since the making these Ordinances; that there is no other Ordinance for raising Moneys for such Provisions exposed to Sale in their Markets in any Manner made.

To this Rejoinder Mr. Attorney hath sur-rejoined, and taken it by Protestation, That the City were not seized of the Markets, nor at their own Costs provided Stalls and other Accommodations; and that the Rates by the Ordinance appointed were not reasonable. For Plea sets forth an Act of Parliament made 22 Car. 2. enacting, That to the end apt and convenient Places within the City should be put out for Buildings, and keeping the Markets; and that the Royal-Exchange, Old-Bailey, and common Gaols and Prisons within the City, should be made more commodious; for the enabling the City to do these things, they should have a Duty out of Coals imported betwixt May 1670. and Mich. 1687. into the Port of London, 12d. per Chaldron; which Duty they have accordingly received, amounting to a great Sum; and notwithstanding that Duty, without Title or Right, the Defendants made the By-law, for their private Gain, absq; hoc, that the Mayor, and Commonalty, and Citizens, have Time out of Mind had, or accustomed to have, Tolneta, ratas, five denariorum summas per ipsos Majorem, Communitatem, ac Cives Civitatis prædictæ superius suppositæ fore per præfatam legem five ordinationem prædictam assess' & in certitudinem reduci' prout per placitum superius rejungend' supponitur.

The Defendants they rebut, and say, that they have always had reasonable Tolls, Rates, or Sums of Money of all Persons coming to their Markets to sell their Provisions, for their Stalls and Accommodations: Et de hoc ponit se super patriam: The Attorney demurs. Upon his pleadings, the Questions are, Whether the Matters alledged by the Defendants, in Justification of the Ordinance, or By-law, be a good Justification in Law, or not? If it be, Mr. Attorney in his Sur-rejoinder hath given no Answer to it at all; he hath neither confessed it, nor denied it. The Rejoinder saith, that the Defendants are, and always have been, seized of the Markets in Fee; that they at their Charge provided Market-places, Stalls, Standings, and Officers for the Accommodations of the Markets, and cleansing them; that for defraying those Charges, they have always had divers reasonable Tolls and Rates for Standings, and other Accommodations; that the Common Council have, as often as expedient, always made Ordinances for regulating those Markets, and for assessing and reducing to Certainty reasonable Tolls, Rates, and Sums of Money to be paid by the Market-people for their Accommodations; that according to this Custom, they made the Ordinance and By-law. Mr.

Attorney

Attorney in his Sur-rejoinder hath not denied any Part of this; but offers a Traverse to that which is no-where alledged or supposed. It is never pretended, that the City have had, Time out of Mind, the very Tolls and Sums of Money for Toll assessed by the Ordinance. There is not a Word in the Rejoinder to that Purpose, but to the contrary; (viz.) That they, in their Rejoinder, claim a Power by Ordinance of Common Council to assess and set the Rates of these Tolls and Payments as often as and when to them shall seem expedient. It is admitted in the Rejoinder, that these Sums were not Time out of Mind, only they had Power to set, assess, and ascertain, as often as expedient: Therefore when Mr. Attorney traverseth our having, Time out of Mind, the Tolls, Rates, and Sums of Money by the Ordinance assessed, and in certitudo reduced this is plain, besides any thing claimed or pretended unto, if he had intended to traverse what we have alledged, that we have had Time out of Mind divers reasonable Tolls and Sums of Money for Stalls and Accommodations: Or if he would have traversed the Instance alledged for the Common Council assessing those Tolls, as often as expedient, that was plain and easy to do; but that he hath not done: He hath only traversed whether the Tolls, Rates, and Sums of Money, by the Ordinance assessed, and reduced into Certainty, have been Time out of Mind. This is the proper Sense of his Traverse; but if doubtful in its Sense, his Traverse is nought for that Cause; for dubious Words can make no Issue for the Jury to try, else Men should be tricked and ensnared by doubtful Words to pervert Right: So that if the Matter alledged in the Record be sufficient in Law to justify the making this Ordinance or By-law, then what is done therein by the Act of Common Council is lawfully and rightfully done, and no Forfeiture. I do agree, that for a Lord of a Market to prescribe to have a Toll uncertain, and as often as expedient, to ascertain it, is no good Prescription. But that is not our Case; I do distinguish betwixt that and this Case: Where there is by Custom, confirmed by Acts of Parliament, (for I shall shew that they are Acts of Parliament, notwithstanding what hath been objected against them) a Power and Authority vested in the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Common Council, to regulate and order the People Trades, and Markets in the City, and the Places, and Conveniences, and Officers, from time to time, and consequently to regulate and ascertain the Tolls or Rates to be paid by the Market-people, to prevent Extortion and Disorders; that such Custom is legal. The Chamberlain of London's Case: An Ordinance that no Broad Cloth shall be sold in the City, before it be brought to Blackwell-Hall to be searched, and a Penny for every Cloth to be paid for Hallage, under pain of forfeiting 6s. 8d. a Cloth, to be recovered in the City Courts, Rep. 5. 69. Though objected that this was an Imposition of Payment of Money upon the King's Subjects, yet adjudged good, and a Procedendo granted.

An Ordinance that no Unfreeman shall use a Trade in London, adjudged good, City of London's Case, Rep. 8. fol. 1. A Multitude of Ordinances they have for regulating all manner of Trades, and of Rates and Prices; and as much Reason there is to object against them, as this Ordinance, or the Custom in this Case: But the City of London have a Government and Power of making Ordinances for governing and regulating Trades, buying and selling within the City, placed in the Common Council, and confirmed by Act of Parliament; and therefore not like the Case of any private Lord of a Market. But it is true, their Ordinances must be unreasonable. The Payments that are imposed by this Ordinance, are only imposed upon those that are under Shelter. It is Reason a Recompence should be paid; and there is no Unreasonableness or Injustice appears in the Ordinance, but a reasonable Recompence. But the Custom or Power of the Common Council is not denied, as I take it: For they have not denied the Power to regulate and ascertain the Tolls or Sums of Money alledged to be in the Common Council; if they had, that must have been tried: Nor have they denied the Rates set to be reasonable. So that I think, as to this Matter, we have well-intituled ourselves, and justified our making our By-law, and taking the Tolls or Rates thereby appointed; and nothing in the Sur-rejoinder against us to the contrary is objected.

But for confirming and making good our Customs, in the Plea, there are three Acts of Parliament pleaded:

1. Magna Charta.

2. Stat. 1. E. 3.

3. Stat. 7. R. 2.

The King's Counsel have not denied Magna Charta to be a Statute, but have denied the other two to be Statutes, or Acts of Parliament; and the Reasons given by them are:

Because not in Print, nor Roll of it to be found; or because nobody knows where to find it.

As to the first, Private Acts of Parliament do not use to be printed, few are.

As to the second, Suppose there were no Roll to be found. Doth this after so long a time conclude there was none such? especially since Mr. Solicitor was pleased to acknowledge, that there are no Parliament Rolls of E. 3. till 4 E. 3. It is true, that almost all the Parliament Rolls of H. 3. E. 1. E. 2. and till 4 E. 3. are indeed lost. But besides, in those Days publick Acts were not only entred upon the Parliament Rolls, but from thence transcribed, and sent under the Great Seal to be published by the Sheriffs of the Counties, in the Cities and Boroughs, and also by Writ to the Courts in Westminster-Hall, to be there entered and recorded, of which there are many found, especially in the Exchequer; and hence came the Rule in Law, that Judges, ex Officio, are bound to take Notice of general Acts of Parliament: But for private Acts, they were put under the Great Seal, and the Parties interested had the same to produce: But that these in this Case should be questioned to be Acts, is strange.

But to prove them Acts: As to the Act, 1 E. 3.

(1.) We have pleaded it under the Great Seal of King E. 3. that made it with a Profert hic in Cur', and shewn it with our Plea as we ought; and this is Evidence sufficient of itself. If the same, produced under the Great Seal put to it when made, be not sufficient Evidence to satisfy, what can be?

(2.) But in this Case it is intolled upon Record also, Inter placita Curie penes Camerarios in Scaccario; it is enrolled there, Trin. 1. E. 3. r. 61, 62.

But perhaps it may be objected also, That this was no Act of Parliament, but only a Grant or Patent in Parliament; because it is that the King de assensu Prælator' Comitū Baron' ac totius Communitat' regni in presenti Parlamento.

I answer, that Acts of Parliament observe not any certain Form. In the Case of the Earldom of Oxford expressly, Jones 103. that there was Variety in penning Acts of Parliament in ancient time, Dominus Rex per Concilium fidelium subditor' suor' statuit, and other Forms there, are yet good Acts. But that they were anciently in Form of Patents or Grants in Parliament, Magna Charta, C. 1. is in Form of a Charter or Grant. The Form of the Act of Parliament, 11 E. 3. Prince's Case, R. 8. fol. 8. for creating the Prince of Wales, Edwardus Dei Gratia, &c. in Form of Patent, and is De communi assensu & consilio Prælator' Comitū, Baron' & aliorum de concilio nostro in presenti Parlamento, and adjudged a good Act of Parliament; and the Authorities and Reasons to prove it an Act of Parliament are fol. 18, 19, 20, 60 full, that it might be thought that this Objection would never have been made: And that this is in the same Form that all the rest of the Acts of this very Parliament of the 1 E. 3. Mem. 17. are, appears by the Patent Roll of the same Parliament. A Charter granted by the King de assensu Prælator' Comitū, Baron' Communit' Regni in Parlamento apud Westm' to enable the City to apprehend Felons in Southwark. An Act in the same Form, for the annulling the Conviction of Treason that was against Roger Mortimer, in the Time of E. 2. Rot. Claus. 1 E. 3. An Exemplification then entered of an Act made in the same Form in the same Parliament, for the annulling the Attainder of Thomas Earl of Lancaster, attained tempore E. 2. Rot. Pat. 2 E. 3. P. S. 1. M. 17. Divers other Acts of Parliament in the same Form made 1 E. 3. for annulling divers other Attainders that were tempore E. 2. So that as to this Act of Parliament 1 E. 3. I think the Objections are answered, and that it is an Act, as pleaded, Rot. Pat. 2 E. 3. P. S. 2. M. 11. Inst. 2. 527. 639.

And as to the other Act 7 R. 2. that that is no Act of Parliament, only a Prayer of the Commons, that there might be a Patent granted to the City, confirming their Liberties, licet usi vel abusi fuerint; and the Answer was, Le Roy le veult.

They object for Reasons against that being an Act of Parliament, First, That it wants the Assent of the Lords.

Secondly, It is only a Prayer of the Commons to have their Liberties confirmed, and the King's Answer Le Roy le veult, but nothing done to confirm it.

As to the first Objection, supposing it true that there is no mention made of the Assent of the Lords, yet the Act is a good Act.

1. It appears to be in Parliament ad instantiam & requisitionem Communitat' Regni nostri in presenti Parlamento.

2.) The Answer in Parliament, that is given by the King to the making all Laws, is given to this, Le Roy le veult.

3.) And next, it is admitted to be upon the Parliament Roll, 7 R. 2. Num. 27. I have before said, that Acts of Parliament are not in any certain form; sometimes entered as Charters or Grants, sometimes as Articles, sometimes and frequently as Petitions; the Books I have already cited proved it. But according to the Course of Parliaments, let it be in what Form it will, let it begin in which House it will, yet it must go through both the Houses of Parliament, before it can come to the King for his Royal Assent. If either House rejects or refuseth, there it ends, it comes not to the King; nor is the Royal Assent in these great operative Words, Le Roy le veult, in Parliament given to any thing, but what the whole Parliament have assented and agreed unto: So that this is an Objection grounded upon a Reason contrary to all the Course of Parliaments, which shews, that the Lords Assent was to it, though not mentioned. Selden's Mare Claus. 249. gives a full Resolution herein: Carissimum est, saith he, that according to Custom no Answer is given, either by the King, or in the King's Name, to any Parliamentary Bills, before that the Bill, whether it be brought in first by the Lords, or by the Commons, hath passed both Houses, as it is known to all that are versed in the Affairs and Records of Parliament. And in the Prince's Case before cited, there the Act is said to be de assensu & consilio of the Lords, but doth not name the Commons; And this answers the other Reason also, viz. That it should only be a Prayer and Petition also, to have a Charter of Confirmation granted: For since the Forms are in manner of Petitions, since the Royal Assent or Words, Le Roy le veult, is never put to any Bills in Parliament, but such as are thereby made and passed into Laws, the giving the Royal Assent is sufficient in this Case to prove it a Law. But for further Evidence, we have it under the great Seal of King R. 2. thus penned: Ad instantiam & requisitionem Communit' Regni nostri Angl' in presenti Parlamento nostro, pro majori Quiet' & Pace inter Legeos nostros fovendis, & pro bono publico de assensu Prælatorum, Dominor' Procerum, & Magnat' nobis in eodem Parlamento assistentium, &c. So that hereby it is fully proved, and shewn, that though the Assent of the Lords be not mentioned in the Copy, yet that it was had, and under the great Seal of R. 2. it so appears. We have also, in our Book of the Acts of that Time in the City, the Proclamation made upon the first promulgating this Act, in the Time of Sir Nicholas Brember, Lord Mayor, Lib. E. f. 169. a & b. and therein it is also entered in the same Words, as before, under the great Seal of R. 2. de assensu Prælator', &c. Next our Books and continual Practice ever since. It is true, that in the 7 Hen. 6. fol. 1. when it is said, that the Customs of London were confirmed by Statute, Quare, what Statute! but it is no there made a Quare, whether this were a Statute? Instit. 4. 250. Rep. 5. 63. Rep. 8. 162. all say, that the Customs of London are confirmed by Parliament, 7 R. 2. Justice Jones 283. hath it verbatim out of the Parliament Roll. The constant Course of Pleading the Customs of London, is to plead a Confirmation of them by this Act of Parliament: So that as to this Point there is not any one Book or Opinion before this Day, in favour of what is affirmed, that these are not Acts of Parliament; and our Plea stands good in Law, and the Ordinance.

dinance, and By-law, and Custom is good, and then no Forfeiture thereby.

But suppose, and admit, that this By-law be the Act of the Corporation, and not good and sufficient in Law, nor in Law justifiable, Quid sequitur? Then it is void in Law. Then if it be void in Law, how can it make a Forfeiture? Suppose a Lessee for Years, or for Life, makes a Feoffment, but it is not duly executed for want of Livery and Seisin, by which it is void in Law, can this make a Forfeiture of the Estate of the Lessee? Suppose a Corporation Tenant per auter vie makes a Feoffment which is void for want of Livery duly made, will this forfeit their Estate? A void Act shall not destroy or forfeit a precedent Estate. A Parson, that hath a former Benefice, accepts a second Benefice incompatible, was instituted and inducted, but did not read the Articles, his first Benefice was not forfeit or void hereby, because by the Statute the not reading his Articles had made his Institution and Induction void. Dyer 377 b. So that then whether this By-law or Ordinance were good and void in Law, perhaps is not much material; it cannot make any Forfeiture of the Corporation, it can have no such Effect; for if it be a good and lawful By-law, no Forfeiture can be for doing a good and lawful Act. If the Ordinance be not warrantable by Law, then it is void in Law; if void in Law, a void Act can make no Forfeiture.

But you received, say they, and exacted from the King's Subjects Sums of Money by this Ordinance.

I answer, Suppose we did, and that we had no Right to have this Money; if an Officer, by Colour of his Office, receive more than is due, it is Extortion, and a Crime punishable: But if a Person, that is no Officer, take Money that is not due, or more than is his Due, the Parties injured have their Remedies by Action; but this is no Crime for which any Forfeiture or Penalty is incurred by the Person that so takes or receives the Money. Suppose a Lord of a Manor exact or take greater Fines or Sums of Money from his Copyholders or Tenants than he ought, they have their Remedies by Actions against those that receive; so if a Corporation receive or take Money supposed to be due, but in Truth is not, how can this forfeit any thing?

But you took upon you, say they, a Power and Authority to tax the King's People, and to take and receive the Money so taxed.

I answer, This is but the same thing, only put into greater Words. It is still but the making of an unlawful By-law, and thereby appointing Money to be paid which ought not, or more than should be; and as to the turning of it, or expressing it in stately Words, of taking upon you, or usurping Authority to impose upon, and tax the King's People; whosoever doth any Act or Thing, he takes upon him, and doth also execute the Power and Authority of doing that Act or Thing, which is comprehended in the Thing done. The making a By-law, or Ordinance, whereby more is ordered to be paid than ought, or Money appointed to be paid where none is due, is still all the Fact and Thing done; and if that make no Forfeiture of the Corporation, or Crime punishable by Indictment or Information, except only as the Statute 19 H. 7. c. 7. which I shall hereafter mention, hath appointed for Forfeiture of 40s. the taking or usurping the Power to do it, cannot be more, or effect more, than the doing the thing which comprehends it.

2. As to the other Cause alledged in the Replication for Forfeiture, the Petition printing, and publishing it; in the Replication 'tis alledged, That the Parliament the 10th of January was prorogued to the 20th of January; that the 13th of January the Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens of London, in their Common Council assembled, malitiose, adu'sate & seditiose, took upon them ad iudicand' & censend' the King, and the Prorogation of the Parliament by the King so made; and that the Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens of London, so in the said Common Council assembled, did give their Votes and Order that a Petition, in the Name of the Mayor, Aldermen, and Commons of the City of London, in Common Council assembled, should be exhibited to the King: In which Petition it was contained, that by that Prorogation the Prosecution of the publick Justice of the Kingdom, and the making necessary Provisions for the Preservation of the King, and his Protestant Subjects, had received Interruption; and that the Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens of London, in Common Council, as aforesaid, assembled, maliciously and seditiously, to the Intent the same should be dispersed among the King's Subjects, and to cause an Opinion that the King obstructed the publick Justice, and to stir up Hatred and Dislike against the King's Person and Government, did order the said Petition to be printed; and afterwards they did print it, and caused it to be published.

The Defendants in their Rejoinder to this Breach set forth and alledge, That there was a Plot against the Life of the King, the Government, and the Protestant Religion; and set forth all the Proceedings upon it, the Attainders and Impeachments of the Lords in the Tower in Parliament depending, the Proclamations declaring the Dangers by this Plot, that they could not otherwise in human Reason be prevented, but by the Blessing of God upon the Consultations and Endeavours of that great Council the Parliament, and commanding a general Fast to be kept in London the 22d of December, and that it was kept accordingly; the Proceedings in the Parliament towards the Trial of the Lords, and preparing Bills to be enacted into Laws, for Preservation of the King and his Subjects against these Plots and Conspiracies: that divers of the Citizens, loyal Subjects, being much affrighted, and troubled in their Minds, with the Apprehension of these Dangers, did exhibit their Petition to Sir Patience Ward, then Lord Mayor, and the Aldermen, and Commons in Common Council then assembled, containing their Fears and Apprehensions and Expectations from the King and that Parliament; did petition, that the Common Council would petition for the sitting of that Parliament, at that time prorogued. And thereupon the Mayor and Aldermen, (naming them) and Commons in Common Council assembled from their Hearts truly loyal to the King, and for the Satisfaction of the Citizens, who had exhibited that Petition, and of Intent to preserve the Person of the King, and his Government, did give their Votes, and order a Petition should be exhibited to the King in the Name of the Mayor, Aldermen, and Commons in Common Council assembled, and set forth the Petition in the Name of the Mayor, Aldermen, and Commons in Common Council assembled in hac verba: Wherein among other things it is contained, That they were extremely surpris'd at the late Prorogation, whereby the Prosecution of the Public Justice of the Kingdom, and the making Provisions necessary for preserving the King's Person, and his Protestant Subjects, received Interruption. And did farther agree and order that that Petition, after it had been presented, should be printed, which was so ordered with Intent, that false Reports concerning the Petition might be prevented; the Enemies of the King and the Conspirators, from proceeding in the Conspiracy, deterred the Troubles in the Minds of the Citizens alleviated, and the Citizens know what had been done upon their Petition; that the Petition was delivered to the King, and afterwards printed; that this is the same Petition and Printing in the Replication mentioned absq; hoc, that any Petition of or concerning the Prorogation of the Parliament was made, ordered, published, or printed in any other manner than they have alledged, as the Attorney General supposeth. To this Part of the Rejoinder Mr. Attorney hath demurred generally by the Demurrer, the Fact alledged in the Replication is admitted to be true. And it is true, that there are no Words, that are written or spoken, but are subject to various Constructions: But I take it, that no Words, whether written or spoken, ought to be taken in an ill Sense, if they may reasonably be taken in a better; Nemo presumitur esse malus; and therefore the Words must stand as they are penn'd: And having first expressed their Fears, and next their Hopes, from the King and Parliament's Proceedings in Trial of those that were impeached, and making Laws for their Security, and how they were surpris'd at the Prorogation; then they say, That by that Prorogation, the Prosecution of the publick Justice of this Kingdom, and the making necessary Provisions for the Preservation of the King and his Protestant Subjects, had received Interruption. It is mentioned only as a Consequence of the Prorogation, it is not said or expressed, that the King did interrupt; for I think there is great Difference betwixt the one sort of Expression and the other. An ill Consequence may attend a good, and commendable, and most necessary Act; but no Consequences can make an ill Act good; and therefore the expressing the Consequence doth not necessarily condemn or declare the Act to be an ill Act. Suppose, that in the Time of the great Plague a Man had had a Suit in Westminster-Hall, wherein all his Estate had been concerned, and had said or writ, that by the Adjournment of the Terms by the King, the Proceedings of the Courts of Justice in his Suit had received an Interruption, had these Words been punishable? The Adjournment was then the most necessary and commendable Act that could be for the Preservation of the King's Subjects in that raging Pestilence; and the Act itself being so good and necessary, though there were such Consequence as to that particular Suit, the writing or saying, that it had such a Consequence, such an Interruption, did not, I conceive, condemn, judge, declare or express the Act to be ill. Suppose a Man had had a Bill depending in that Parliament, to be enacted for the enabling him to sell his Land to pay his Debts, to free him from a Gaol: Or, suppose that some one of the Lords impeached in that Parliament had made a Petition for the Sitting of the Parliament, and had therein expressed as a Reason and Ground of his Petition, the like Words as in this Petition: What would the Court have judg'd of it? Are not the Cases much the same? If they are, there will be no Distinction of Persons in Judgment; I am sure there ought not. Perhaps when this Petition was made, there might be too much Heat in the Minds of Men; and it is true that Heat increaseth Heat, and Fire kindles Fire; it is time for all sorts to grow cool and temperate, and to weigh and consider we are, or should be, considering Men. This Petition was made Nemine contradicente, and undoubtedly among such a Number as the Common Council, there must be Men of Variety of Tempers and Dispositions: But for the greatest Number of the Aldermen, and Common Council, think of them; we know the Men, many of them; can we imagine, that they had either the least ill thought or Meaning towards the King, his Person or Government, in this Petition, or the printing it? And as for the printing it, that, my Lord, stands upon the same Reasons and Grounds: For if there be nothing ill or unlawful in it contained, then the printing and publishing of that which contains nothing ill or unlawful, is not, as I conceive, ill or unlawful. Printing is but a more expeditious way of writing, and is good or bad as the Matter printed is good or bad. The Defendants in their Rejoinder have set forth their whole Cause, the Reasons and Grounds of what the Common Council did, and the Manner and Intent of their doing it; all which Fact cannot be denied to be true, but is now confessed by the Demurrer. It hath not, nor can be said, but it is well pleaded, and might have been traversed and denied if not true: But it is confessed by the Demurrer to be true, and therefore that must be taken to be the Fact, and not as alledged in the Replication, and then so taken, I submit it to your Judgment.

3. But the next thing considerable is, Whether, supposing and admitting that if done by the Body Politick, it hath been a Miscarriage or a Crime? Whether not being done by the Body Politick, nor under the Common Seal, but by Common Council, whether thereby the Being of the Corporation shall be forfeit?

A Common Council in Corporations is generally a select Number of the Body Corporate, constituted to advise and assist the Corporation in their ordinary Affairs and Business. There is no certain Rule nor Measure of their Power wherein all the Common Councils agree. In some Corporations the Common Council have greater Authority, in some less, according to the several Authorities by their respective Charters, where the Corporations are by Charters; or by Custom or Usage, where the Corporations are by Prescription: But in all they are a subservient Number of Men, constituted and authorized for particular Ends and Purposes: And in this Case I think the Court can take Notice of the Common Council no otherwise than upon the Record they appear to be. The Replication doth not say what they are, but would go in the Dark, by Intention and Presumption, the best Way and Method to arbitrary Determination. The Rejoinder saith, that the Citizens and Freemen are a great Number, fifty thousand, and more. That there hath been

Time

Time out of Mind a Common Council, consisting of the Mayor and Aldermen for the Time being, and of certain Freemen, not exceeding two hundred and fifty, annually elected to serve as Common Council Men, and are called the Common Council the City; that Time out of Mind there hath been a Custom, that the Mayor, Aldermen, and such Citizens, so elected to be of the Common Council, according to Custom, have been accustomed to make By-laws and Ordinances, for the better Regulation of the publick Markets, for appointing Times and Places, and assessing and reducing into Certainty reasonable Tolls, Rates, and Sums of Mooney, payable for Stalls and Standings in the Market: For any thing appears upon the Record, this is all they have Power to do: Non constat to the Court, that they have any other Power or Authority over Lands, Estates, or any thing else. Next, if this which in the Rejoinder is alledged, of the Being and Power, be true, and so admitted, then what they did in making the Ordinance, was done by good and lawful Power and Authority, and then can be no Offence: But if to make the Ordinance be an Offence, and an unlawful Act, you deny the Custom to be good, and say, the Custom is void, and against Law, and for that Reason the Ordinance illegal. Then non constat, that they had any Power at all to do any thing, and then a Common Council to advise without Power to do any Act; and if so, How can a Parcel or Part of a Corporation, not authorized to do any Act, do an Act that shall forfeit? Suppose a particular Company, as the Mercers, had done this, could this be a Forfeiture? But if to avoid this you will say, that the Court shall take Notice of the Common Council of London, to have the Management of the Business of the Corporation belonging to them; this I think the Court cannot do, and I cannot see how possibly they can, as a Court, judicially take notice hereof. Suppose our Question had been concerning another Corporation, could the Court then, as a Court, judicially have taken notice of the Power or Authority of their Common Council? Mr. Solicitor in his Argument held, that there was no Difference betwixt London and another Corporation, except that London was the biggest. Then put the Case of any other Corporation, could the Court judicially have taken notice of their Power or Interest, without having it specially set forth? Is it possible the Court can, since they differ one from the other, as much as their Charters or Constitutions do differ, of which there are hardly to be found two in England that do agree in their Powers? If it had been of another Corporation, of Necessity the Constitution of the Common Council must have been set forth. If you are upon a By-law, made by any other than the Body Politick itself, must not the Power and Authority of those that made it be shewn, and set forth in Pleading, in any Case where there is Occasion to use it? How otherwise could the Court judge or determine of it? So that taking the Law to be as the other Side saith, that London differs not from any other Corporation; it is no-where alledged in the Pleading, that they have Power to make By-laws, for the ordering and governing the City, or that they can bind all the Corporation in Sale or Disposition of their Lands, or have the Power of the Common Seal: Therefore when the King's Counsel argue from these Powers, their Power of forfeiting, they argue quite out of the Record; they have no-where alledged or pleaded what they are, or what Power they have, as they should have done, if they had so intended. So as to this Particular, here is nothing before the Court, nothing upon Record, to shew how or which way the Body Politick should be concerned in these Acts of about two hundred and fifty of their Members, called the Common Council. Wherefoever any By-laws or Ordinances are pleaded, the Power to make these By-laws or Ordinances is pleaded, and so are all particular and derived Authorities, whenever Occasion to plead them, and necessary they should be so: For it is Fact, that the other Side may and ought to be at Liberty to deny it, if he see Cause; and therefore if they will heve it, that the Common Council have abused some Power or Authority they have, thereby to forfeit the Corporation, they ought to have shewn it; to say that Notice shall be taken, or it shall be intended or presumed, is in Truth a Presumption upon the Court, as if the Court should take notice of, intend, or presume, what the King's Counsel would have, which the Court cannot, nor will do, more in this than in other Cases. But supposing the Court will take more notice of London than any other Corporation, and will take notice of the Common Council there, and of their Power and Authority; and I will suppose, as the other Side do, that they have the Power of making By-laws, of leasing, granting, and managing the City-lands and Revenues, and of sealing with the Common Seal, and that this they have by Custom; then surely, say the other Side, they have the Power of surrendering and forfeiting the Corporation. If I should answer, Surely and without doubt they have not, this would not argue they have not; but the Argument should come of the other Side, to prove they have; they have not, nor can produce any Case or Opinion to prove it; and the very Thought, that they could, is so new, that I believe none can be found like it. But let us consider the Nature of this thing a little particularly: Though general Discourses are most easy and florid, yet perhaps a particular Inquiry may best discover. Admit, that they have the Power the other Side say they have; yet they are not the Corporation, but a Part constituted for these particular Ends and Purposes, for which they are impowered. Corporations had their Creations by Charter; that gives them their Being, and the Form, Method, and Power of Action. Suppose, that the first Charter of Incorporation that was granted to London did grant, that the Citizens should be incorporate, and a Body Politick, by the Name of Mayor, and Commonalty, and Citizens: that there should be a Mayor, so many Aldermen, and so many of the Citizens annually elected, that should be a Common Council; and that they should have Power to make By-laws, to demise or grant their Lands, under the Common Seal, in the Name of the Corporation. If they do any Act not within their Commission, is not that void? Suppose a Grant made to the Common Council, would not that be void? Suppose a Grant made by the Common Council, in the Name of the Common Council under Seal, or in the Name of the Corporation, but not under Common Seal, is not all this void? This I only instance, to shew that their Charter and Authority is, their Power and Warrant they are to act by: Did ever any Man hear of, or see a Charter giving the Common Council Power to surrender the Corporation? Or was it ever thought of before these Days? If there be no such Power by the Charter be given, if they cannot do it without Power given them, shew me their Power, or else I think I may conclude, sure they cannot surrender the Corporation without Power. But the Common Council in London, that is by Custom, and their Power is by Custom. Then if the Question be, What is their Power? It is answered, What they have used and accustomed to do, that they may do; what they have not used or accustomed to do, that they cannot do; for if Custom and Usage be the Authority, that Authority can go no farther than their Custom and Usage goes. Then put the Question, Have the Common Council used to surrender or forfeit the Charter? Nobody can say it. What Reason then is there for any Man to say they can do it? It is probable, that the Common Council in London had first their Institution from some By-law or Ordinance, though now not to be produced, but consumed by Time. But be it that, or any other imagined Commencement, can it be imagined, that those that gave them their original Authority, gave them Power to surrender the Corporation or forfeit it? Suppose that the Power given them did authorize them not only to make By-laws and Ordinances for the good Order and Government of the Corporation, to grant or demise their Lands and Revenues, but had some general Words in it to act and manage the Matters of the Corporation: Is it not against all Sense to suppose, that that which is deputed and constituted for the well-ordering and managing of the Corporation, should have Power to surrender it? Then as the Counsel of the other Side argue, that because they may surrender, they may forfeit. By the same Reason, I hope, I may argue, if they cannot surrender or dispose of the Corporation, they cannot forfeit. Next, those Acts of the Common Council are not done neither in the Name, nor as the Acts of the Corporation, nor under any Seal; but do import in themselves only to be the Acts of the Common Council: The Ordinance, that is made by the Mayor, Aldermen, and Commons, in Common Council assembled. The Petition is the Petition of the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Commons, in Council assembled: Their Leases or Grants are in the Names of the Corporation, and under the Common Seal; and the Common Council only ministerial to the Corporation in ordering, managing, and disposing all for the Benefit and Advantage of the Corporation, to avoid the Inconveniency of assembling the numerous Body. But that anything, that hath but a ministerial Power, for the Service and Benefit of their Principal, should have Power to dispose of, sell, convey, or surrender, and destroy their Principal, is no Consequence in Law or Reason. No Deputy, Assistant, or Bailiff, hath such Power; if he exceed his Authority, his Act is void. Is it not so with all Authorities and derived Powers? What they do beyond their Authority cannot bind those from whom they derive it. It cannot be the Act of the Corporation; for a Corporation cannot make a Petition, no more than they can make a Deed, or subscribe a Writing, except under the Common Seal. Corporations cannot make a Lease at Will, license a Man to enter upon their Lands, or do any like Act, but under their Common Seal; nor can they commit a Trespass or Disseisin but by Command precedent, or Assent subsequent, under their Common Seal. How then can this be their Act? There is nothing in it that imports it should be theirs, nor ever intended to be theirs; it is not done by them, nor in their Names, but by the Common Council, and in the Name of the Common Council. If we may take notice of what is out of the Record, we know that they have in London a greater Assembly than the Common Council, viz. the Common Hall, wherein the Common Council are no more than others. Can the Petition of the Mayor, or Mayor and Aldermen, in their Names, be taken to be the Act of the Corporation? If that cannot be, why should the Petition of the Common Council in their own Names be any other than their own Petition, as their Ordinance and By-law are theirs, and not the Corporation's? 12 H. 7. 25, 26. 9 E. 4. 39.

The Case of Corporations takes notice of their Power, as Common Councils, to exclude the Commonalty, and the rest of the Corporation. The Act allows the Common Council's ordering Petitions. But where it is to be found, that it was ever said or thought on before, that they could forfeit or dissolve the Corporation? Rep. 4. 77. 13 C. 2. cap. 5.

4. But supposing all that I have said against me; and supposing the Acts of the Common Council to be the Acts of the Corporation, and supposing those Acts, viz. the making the Ordinance and Petition not justifiable or excusable; then the great Point will be, whether they or either of them are such Mis-carriages or Offences in Law, for which the Charter, that is, the very Being of the Corporation, shall be forfeit? This I call the great Point; for I think it to be as great in Consequence as ever any at this Bar, as if Magna Charta were at stake? for in my Apprehension, not only London, but all the Corporations of England, and the Government of England, will be deeply concerned in the Question. For let us but consider what a vast Part of England is concerned in the Corporations of England.

(1.) Ecclesiastical, or mixt, as Archbishops, Bishops, Dean and Chapters, Parsons, Vicars, Universities, Colleges, Hospitals of all sorts.

(2.) All the Cities and considerable Towns and Boroughs in England.

(3.) The very Frame of our Government is concerned; for one of the Estates of the Kingdom, viz. The Commons in Parliament, consists of Knights, Citizens, and Burgesses; the Citizens and Burgesses are usually chosen by them that are free of the respective Cities and Corporations; and where not chosen by them, yet the Elections are generally under their Power and Influence, and the Return made by them.

Perhaps also a Peerage is a sort of Corporation. Perhaps the World itself, at least this little World, will no longer be able to subsist in Health than the due Order and just Temperament of the several Parts and Powers therein are preserved, and contain themselves within their own Bounds. The taking away or infeebling any principal Part brings a Lameness and Deformity, Pain and Disorder upon, and at length confounds the Whole. The Laws answer their Ends, whereof the principal is the Preservation of the Government, which preserves the Laws, they cannot subsist without the other; therefore whatsoever it is that tends to the Subversion or leaving at Will and Pleasure, that which is so considerable in our Government as Corporations are, ought to be thoroughly considered.

The better to examine and consider this great Point: In the first Place, the Reasons given on the other Side are,

First, That if Corporations be not forfeitable for their Miscalriages, they will attempt and do extravagant Acts, raise Sedition or Rebellion, and there will be no adequate Punishment to their Miscalriages.

In Answer to this Reason, I say, that there is no illegal Act that they can attempt or commit, but that they are under the same Severities and Corrections of Law, as any other the King's Subjects, not incorporate, are. Though it be true, that the Corporation itself is only a Body Politick, an invisible Body, yet the Members of it, they are visible. If they as Members of that Corporation commit or do any unlawful Act, they are punishable for it in their own private Capacities: If they make any Ordinance or By-law to raise Money unlawfully upon any of their Members, or others, the By-law or Ordinance is void: If they receive or collect any Money by it, the Receivers and Collectors are to answer it, they are to be sued as any other Subject. Suppose a Lord of a Manor or Market make an unlawful Order to collect or take Money from his Tenants or Copyholders, or unreasonable Tolls in his Markets; this Order is void in Law, and those that collect or receive any Money by it are answerable for it, and the Parties grieved have their proper Actions and Remedies, and perhaps the Markets, or at least the Tolls may be seized, or forfeit for this Miscalriage. This is the Provision that by Law is made against such Exactions, and this is just, and adequate, and reasonable. And if a Corporation made such Ordinance, By-law, or Order, and thereby there is the same Receipt or Exaction, the Subject hath the same Remedy, and there is the same Forfeiture of Toll or Market, as in case of any natural Person, or Lord of a Manor; and the Provisions by Law made are just, and reasonable, and adequate, in this Case of the Corporation, as of the other. The like for any Offence that can be committed, it must be done by particular Members, and they must answer for it. And this is no new Opinion; 21 E. 4. 14. is express, that a Mayor, and Commonalty, or other Body Politick, cannot commit Treason, although all the Commonalty do commit Treason; every of them is a Traitor in his own Person. I might cite other Authorities to this Purpose, but they have been already cited by Mr. Recorder in his Argument; and though the Counsel for the King would make these Books to be but some slight Opinions, yet unless they could shew some Authority, Book or Case to the contrary, their despising or little valuing what they can find no Answer for, will not render the Authority and constant Opinions of our Books of less Esteem than they ought to be. It is no Excuse, if they do an unlawful Act, that they are Members of a Corporation, or did it as a Corporation. Nobody can say this will excuse them; so that, notwithstanding their being a Corporation, they are as subject to the Law, be the Offence Treason, Sedition, or any other Crime or Offence, as any other the King's Subjects are; every particular Member, that acted or committed that Offence, is answerable to the Law for it. The particular Members that commit the unlawful Act, and all that act under their Authority, are subject to the same Law as all other the King's Subjects. And therefore this Reason, that else there will be no Punishment upon them adequate to the Offence, and consequently a Mischief and Inconvenience, is but a Shadow, and nothing proportionable to the Mischief and Inconveniences attending the Position of a Forfeiture of the other Side. But consider the Injustice that would be of the other Side, if this should be so: We know Assemblies determine their Acts by the Major Vote, and great Struggling there is, as we too frequently see in their Debates and Resolutions, and carried by Majority of one or two Votes, sometimes by Surprizes and undue Management, sometimes by Fear and Terror: Suppose an evil Act so carried or managed, is it Reason that all the whole Corporation should be thereby forfeit; and thereby all other Men, to whom they owe any Debts, must lose them, and the many Interests and Livelihoods depending upon the Corporation, the Customs, Courts, Offices, and Privileges belonging to it, endless to enumerate, shall all be undone and destroyed?

Secondly, The next Reason that hath been given is, that it is a general Rule in Law, That the abusing or misusing of a Franchise is a Forfeiture of the Franchise.

In answer, This is true in the Sense that the Books do say it; for if a Man misuse or abuse a particular Franchise, he shall forfeit that particular Franchise; but he shall not forfeit any other, except it be depending upon, and incident to it. And the Cases cited prove nothing farther: That when a Man hath divers Franchises not depending one upon another, and misuseth one Franchise, he shall not thereby forfeit the rest, but only that which he misuseth. 22 Aff. p. 34. Br. Fran. 34. And therefore the Cases cited, where the Abbot of Crowland, and the Abbot of St. Albans, had Franchises of Custodies of Gaols; one would not be at the Cost of a Commission of Gaol-delivery, the other did detain in Prison after legal Discharge, and Fees paid, 8 H. 4. 18. Rep. 9. q. 6. b. 24 E. 4. b. Inst. 2. 43. This was a Misuser of those Franchises and Forfeitures. So also perhaps if there be a Franchise that hath Incidents to it; as Pypowders to a Fair, Pillory to a Leet: An Abuser of the Incident, as the Court of Pypowders, or the not having a Pillory, may forfeit the Market or the Leet. If the Lord of a Market take outrageous Toll, he shall forfeit the Market, Stat. West. 1. cap. 31. Inst. 2. 219. But doth this prove, that if a Corporation have Fairs, Markets, Gaols, or Leets, and misuseth any of them, that the Body Politick, the Corporation, shall be forfeit? If this be so, the Abbots, they being Corporations, in the Cases of the Abbots of St. Albans and Crowland, should have forfeited not only the Liberties of having Gaols, but the very Corporations or Bodies Politick, of being Abbots; a conceit never yet imagined. Can you say the City of London is either dependant or incident to the Markets; or on the contrary, that the Markets are so incident or dependant upon the Corporation, that they cannot be one without the other? Can this be said? If this cannot be said with Reason, how can then the taking these Tolls admit they were outrageous, and a Forfeiture of the Market, forfeit the Corporation?

VOL. III.

The making the Ordinance, supposing they made it, is but the Means by which they took it. Your Books only prove the Abuse of a Franchise, a Forfeiture of that Franchise, or Incidents to it, and no other: But the Inference in this Case is not the Forfeiture of that particular Franchise, but of the Being of the Corporation that owned the Franchise; which is a plain non sequitur, unless you say the Corporation is incident to the Market. Arguments from general Rules are the most fallible, especially in Law; and that this is such, I hope most plainly to shew in the distinguishing the different Nature of Franchises; which I shall do presently, only taking in my Way their next Reason that they offer, and answer both together; which is,

Thirdly, That a Corporation is a Franchise; that it commenceth by Grant, and therefore is forfeitable and surrenderable, as other Franchises are; and if they be surrenderable, then also are they forfeitable.

I do agree, that Franchise is a large Word, it is of the like Sense of Liberty or Privilege. Therefore in Quo Warranto, Franchises, Liberties, and Privileges, seem to be of the same Sense. To be a Subject born, and to have Liberty and Privilege of a Freeman, and no Villain, is a great Franchise; and therefore in Law, when a Villain is made free, we say he is enfranchised, he hath the Franchise, Liberty, and Privilege of being a Freeman. An Alien, he is made Denizen by Letters Patents; a Person attained is pardoned by Letters Patents, and a Restitution in Blood granted, and made a new Creature. By these Grants the Alien and the Person restored have such Franchises, Liberties, and Privileges granted them, that though before they were not capable to take, hold, or enjoy, or act as natural-born Subjects or Freemen; yet hereby they have such Capacity granted. Next, I think it will be granted, that this Franchise, Liberty, Privilege, or Capacity, is not surrenderable or forfeitable, except only in Cases of Treason or Felony, where they forfeit their Lives; by these Instances this is proved, that it is no true Position, that whatsoever is grantable is surrenderable; and if surrenderable, forfeitable; which is one of the Reasons given by the King's Counsel, why a Corporation is forfeitable; for these Franchises or Privileges are by Grant, and yet not surrenderable or forfeitable; and this also shews, that Arguments general, and from general Rules, are most fallible, and fit only to take weak Apprehensions. But next, consider what it is to be a Body Politick or Corporation. A Body Politick is framed and constituted in similitude or likeness of a natural Body, with Capacity to take, hold, and enjoy, and act as a natural Body, and can no more surrender or forfeit his Being, while the Members of that Body are subsisting, than a natural Body can while alive. It is only a Capacity framed and created in a Multitude to be and act as one Person; they are incorporate and made one Body Politick, that have Power, and Capacity, or Franchise of acting, taking, holding, and granting; this is their Franchise, admit it so, but differs from others. Franchises and Liberties of all other Natures are Estates and Inheritances grantable and conveyable from one to another, as other Estates are; this is no such thing, grantable, or transferrable; other Franchises and Liberties affect the King's Subjects, and are Privileges claimed, wherein the King and the rest of his Subjects, not claiming the Franchise, are more concerned than in this of being a Body Politick; for other Franchises either convey some Profit from the King, as Fells Goods, Waifs, Estrays, Wrecks, or the like; or affect his Subjects, as Courts, Gaols, Returns of Writs, Fairs, Markets, and the like: But this of being a Body Politick is only a Capacity to be a Person capable of having and holding what may be granted unto it, and of granting and acting as a natural Body, and affects the King, or other his Subjects, no otherwise, than giving Capacity to take, hold, and enjoy what they can get, as other Persons capacitated may. Other Franchises, Liberties, and Privileges are distinct and separate Estates, and if any one be forfeit, as it may for Misuser, the rest are not; except Incidents and Appurtenances. But if the Being of a Corporation be forfeited, all their Estates, Lands, Goods and Chattels are gone at once: So that though you admit and call this a Liberty or Franchise, it is nothing like in its Nature to those Things generally known and understood by the Name of Franchises or Liberties; and general Sayings are generally to be understood of such Things as are generally so taken and called. If then there be such great and apparent Difference betwixt this of the being a Body Politick, supposing it being, in a general and large Sense, a Franchise, Liberty, or Privilege, and other particular Franchises, admitting that which is said, that the Misuser of a Franchise is a Forfeiture, holds generally true, yet it is not in every Particular true; where there is such apparent Difference and Reason to distinguish, as betwixt the Being of a Corporation or a Body Politick, which is only a Capacity, and other particular Franchises, which are Estates; there is also apparent Reason to distinguish betwixt one and the other, they being so much differing one from the other in Nature and Reality. But next, that this was never taken in Law to be such a Franchise, Liberty, or Privilege, as was comprehended under the general Meaning of Franchise or Liberty: by Stat. of Glouc. 6 E. 1. Inst. 2. 278. Writs were to go to all Sheriffs forty Days before the Eire, of general Summons, for all to come in at the Eire to claim their Privileges; and the second Day of the Sitting of the Justices in Eire a Proclamation made to the same purpose. In the Comment upon that Statute it appears, Inst. 2. 281, 282. that if the Party did not appear, his Franchises were seized into the King's Hands, Nomine districtionis; and if not replevied, sitting the Eire, they were forfeit or lost for ever. If the Party did appear, and did not claim, then they were lost for ever. In all the Proceedings in Eire there is no such Thing can be found, that the Corporations did come in and make Claims to their being Corporations or Bodies Politick, or that ever any were seized, if it be seizable, into the King's Hands, or was forfeit for not claiming. Fulcher and Heyward's C. Palm. 491. It appears, that the Dean and Chapter there surrendered their Charter, and all their Manors, Lands, Possessions, Privileges, Franchises, and Hereditaments, Spiritual and Temporal, and this with Intent to surrender, that there might be a new Corporation erected; as is recited in the Letters patents of new Erection.

In

In this Case, Rep. 3. 75. And. 2. 120. Jones 163. resolved, That by this Surrender the old Corporation was not surrendered. This Judgment doth conclude, and must be given, either because by the Word Franchise, and the other general Words, the Franchise of being a Corporation was not comprehended; or if the Word is sufficient, and did comprise it, that it could not by Law be surrendered. This I think sufficiently shews, that Corporations were in Law as Persons natural are, and in like manner claimed; and that the being a Body Politick, or Corporation, was not to be claimed, comprised, or meant within the general Word Franchises, no more than the Liberty or Franchise of Denizen, or Manumission. Next, no Instance can be given of any Seizure of any Corporation, or Body Politick, for any Forfeiture: Seizure of their Liberties, or putting Officers upon them, is quite another Thing, as I shall shew presently: So that these general Sayings in Law Books, that Misuser of a Franchise forfeits the Franchise, neither in Law or Reason extends to the Being of a Body Politick or Corporation, but is applicable only to particular Franchises of other Natures; and the other Reason, that that which is grantable is forfeitable, is as fallacious, as before appears.

3. As for the Records cited to prove, that the Corporation or Body Politick may be forfeited, I will state those that are most effective, and do them Right therein.

Johannes Dennis, Mayor of Sandwich, P. 9. E. 1. and three more, were attached to answer Domino Regi de placito transgr' & unde Robertus de Stokbo, Sheriff of Kent, qui sequitur pro ipso Rege, complains, that he had sent his Bailiffs (naming them) to make Execution of the King's Writ, in Villa de Stanore, quæ est Baronia domini Regis, and that the Defendants, with Swords drawn, took away the King's Writ, and trod it under their Feet, and would not suffer it to be executed; unde dicit quod deterioratus est, & damnum habet ad Valentiam 2000 Marks. The Mayor appears, and pleads to the Jurisdiction, that he ought not to answer this Matter, except in the Court of Shipway. The Sheriff replies, that Stanore is the King's Barony, belonging to the Barony of St. Austins, and relies upon a Record before Justices in Eire, where an Amerciament upon that Ville was formerly set. The Mayor refuseth to plead over. Then a Day is given over, then it is entred thus: Postea; coram Domino Rege, & ejus Concilio, quia Barones de l' Cinq; Ports, nec aliqui alii in Regno nostro possint clamare talem libertatem, quod non responderent Domino Regi de contemptu sibi facti, ubi Dominus Rex eas adjuvare voluerit; et quia prædicti Barones non protulerunt aliquas Chartas a Regibus concessas, in quibus non fuit excepta Regia Dignitas, consideratum est quod respondeant; & quia le Defendants would not answer any otherwhere than in Shipway, consideratum est quod habeantur in defensionem, pro convictis de prædicti Transgr' & Contempt'. Et quia the said John Dennis is convicted of the said Offence, and the Fact of the Mayor, in those things, which touch the Commonalty, is the Fact of the Commonalty, consideratum est quod Communitas de Sandwich amittat Libertatem suam, &c. Then follows Postea, in præsentia of the Bishop of Bath and Wells, then Chancellor, and others, cum Assensu Regis, an Agreement betwixt the Abbot of St. Austins, the Men of Stanore and Sandwich, de omnibus contentionibus. And then goes a long Agreement betwixt the Abbot and the Men of Sandwich and Stanore, concerning their Jurisdictions and Courts: Et si aliqua pars contra concordantiam illam ire vel facere, alia pars habeat suam recuperare per breve Domini Regis de Judio exente de isto Recordo. Et pro hac prædicti homines vadant prædicti Abbati 100 Marks, which the Abbot remits for 10 dolis Vini, pretii 30 Marks, to be paid at the Feast of St. John the Baptist. This is the Record at large; and for the Extract in the Collections at Lincoln's Inn, whether it be of this Record, or any Execution that went out upon it, non constat: But that I think it could not be upon this Record; for the Record is not 30 Marks annuatim, as the Abstract is, and the Entry of the videtur at the Conclusion, quod Judio extendit contra Barones quinque Portuum, & eorum Libertates, ut mihi videtur, that is not my Lord Hales's Note, nor doth it appear whose it was. Out of this Record how can a Man infer, that a Corporation shall be forfeit for the Mis carriage of the Mayor or Officer? How doth it appear from hence, that they should lose or forfeit their being a Corporation? By amittat Libertatem all that is meant thereby is their Liberty in Stanore, or the Liberty they claimed to be impleaded in the Court of Shipway; and the Note in the Extract, videtur quod Judio extendit versus Barones, must be, I think, taken to be as to their Liberty in Stanore, or to be sued only in the Court of Shipway. I have taken the more Notice of this Record, because it hath Countenance of a judicial Proceeding; but as to all the other Records cited,

A Writ to the Sheriff of Gloucester, reciting, that the King, for Injuries and Contempts done by the Mayor and Commonalty of Bristol, the Liberty of that Ville by Bartholomew de Baddlesmere, Custos of that Ville, into his Hands had seized. 6 E. 2. R. Cl. m. 5. The Writ commands the Sheriff, that the Custos should have the Execution of Writs as the Mayor and Bailiffs used to have. And in the Times of Henry the Third, Edward the First, Edward the Second, and Richard the Second, there were frequent Seizures of the Office of Mayor; and the Kings did put in a Custos in the Place of Mayor, or made a Mayor, and these are called Seizures of Liberties.

King Henry the Third put in a Custos over London, which continued till the 54th of his Reign, and then was taken off, and the City restored to its Election. 49 H. 3.

Edward the First put in a Custos, and continued so to do till the 24th Year of his Reign, and then was taken off. 15 E. 1.

The 14th of Edward the Second a Seizure of the Office of Mayor by Henry de Staunton, and his Fellows, Justices in Eire in the Tower, and Mayors put in by the King till the 20th of Edward the Second, and then restored: But for that of Richard the Second, give me leave to digress, and give you the State of it out of the City Registers, which are more full than these cited.

A Writ from the King to the Mayor, Sheriffs, and Aldermen, commanding them to come with twenty-four principal Citizens, before the King and his Council at Nottingham, in crastino Sancti Johannis Baptistæ tunc proximi, and to bring sufficient Authority from the Commonalty to answer such things as should be objected. 16 R. 2. July 22. Lib. H. fol.

269. b. City Reg. They appeared, and had a Letter of Attorney, ubi pro diversis defectionibus in Commissione sua sub communi Sigillo, & aliis de causis, the Mayor and Sheriffs were discharged of their Offices, and committed diversis Prisonis; and afterwards, the first of July, Sir Edward Dallinggrigg made Custos by the King, came to the Guildhall, and his Commission being read, he was sworn before the Aldermen, secundum quod Majores ante jurare solebant; the King also made the Sheriffs, and they were also sworn. This is also entered in the City Register, Lib. H. fol. 270. b.

It appears that the King first swore the Custos, and the Sheriffs, to be true to him, and also turned out the Aldermen. And that the Proceedings were before the Duke of Gloucester, and other Lords, by a Commission to inquire of all Defaults in the Mayor and Sheriffs, in the well-governing of the City, awarded upon the Statute made by the King's Grandfather; and that they were convicted by their own Confession, and thereupon the Liberty of the City seized.

The Pardon and Restitution entered, and thereby it is recited, that the Proceedings were upon the Statute, and the Judgment was, That for the first Offence they should forfeit One Thousand Marks; for the second, Two thousand Marks; and for the third Offence, that the Liberty should be seized 19 Sept. 16. R. 2. Lib. H. fol. 272. a. ubi supra.

The Statute 28 E. 3. cap. 10. enacted, That the Mayor, Sheriffs, and Aldermen of London, which have the Governance of the same, shall cause the Errors, Defaults, and Misprisions in and about the same, to be corrected and redressed from time to time, upon Pain, that is to say, to forfeit to the King for the first Default, One thousand Marks; for the second Default, Two thousand Marks; and for the third Default, the Franchises and Liberties of the City shall be seized into the King's Hands. And that the Trial of these Defaults shall be by Inquests of foreign Countries, and the Pains levied upon the Mayor, Sheriffs, and Aldermen. Upon this Statute were the Proceedings of R. 2. grounded.

The other Side have likewise much relied upon another Seizure made of the Liberties of the City of Cambridge.

A great Riot committed by the Town upon the University, heard in Parliament by way of Petition, and Form of Articles exhibited by the Scholars against the Mayor and Bailiffs. Upon reading of which it was demanded of them, What they could say, why their Liberties should not be seized? After many Shifts they submitted themselves to the King's Mercy. The King thereupon, by common Consent in Parliament, seized the same Liberties into his Hands, as aforesaid, and then granted divers Liberties to the Universities, and certain Liberties the King granted to the said Mayor and Bailiffs, and increased their former. These are the most substantial; it would be too tedious to repeat all, for there have been in those Days, but not since, many like Seizures of Liberties, as these; only general, but nothing particular to our Purpose, and though not cited, I shall also mention those in Crook. 5 R. 2. Rot. Par. N. 45. Inst. 4. 228.

Certiorari to the Mayor of Fish; they disobeyed the Writ, and gave scurvy Words Cr. 1. 252. Tyndal's Case; and thereupon Mr. Noy cited two Cases of Seizures of Liberties. The Bishop of Durham had contemned the King's Process, and imprisoned the Messenger. An Information exhibited against him, the Offence proved; adjudged he should pay a Fine, & quod capiatur, and should lose his Liberties for his time; because justum est quod in eo quod peccat in eo puniatur. 33 E. 1. Rot. 101. Another in Banco Com', a Prohibition awarded to the Bishop of Norwich; and he excommunicated the Party that brought the Writ; 21 E. 3. Rot. 46. the Party brought his Action, adjudged against the Bishop, that his Temporalities should be seized till he absolved the Party, and satisfied the King for his Contempt, and that the Party should recover 10,000l. Damages. I answer to them,

(1.) That they were all above three hundred Years ago, except that of 16 R. 2. which is above two hundred and ninety, and no such thing ever was done since; what Strefs or Weight can be given to such Proceedings? To what Rules of Law, since known or practised, can we bring these Proceedings? Are they now legal Precedents for the like things to be done. The Writs out of old Records for the Ship money, and the Knighthood-money, had as good Records to warrant them, and much more plain to the Purpose than these. The Precedents of Edward the Second, and Richard the Second, either of their Lives, or of their Deaths, or of the Lives or Deaths of some of the Judges of those Days, ought, as I conceive, to be no examples. And for H. 3. E. 1. E. 2. and R. 2. and those Times, they were Times of great Troubles and Disorders; and what was then done is no Rule or Precedent for this Court, or any other Court of Justice to go by, unless by latter Times allowed or approved. No Law-book or Report of any judicial Proceedings, either of E. 2. or of E. 3. or any latter Book of Law, that I have yet heard of, or met with, (and I doubt not but if there had been any, the King's Council would have made use of them) hath ever given so much Credit or Countenance to these Proceedings, as to take any notice of them. To make use of old Records or Precedents, the Grounds or Reasons whereof cannot now be known, to subvert any Law or Government established, is neither advisable nor commendable. But for further Answer to them:

(2.) As to that of 16 R. 2. that you see is grounded upon the Statute 28 E. 3. c. 10. and can signify nothing to the present Purpose; for there, according to that Statute, they condemn the Mayor, Sheriffs, and Aldermen, upon their Confession, that they had misgoverned the City. The Mayor and Sheriffs being committed to Prison, and this done before Dukes and Earls, by special Commission to that Purpose appointed, and convicted by their Confession, for the first, second, third Offence, all at once, is this of good Authority in Law? And for the others, that of E. 2. was before Justices in Eire at the Tower, the Office of Mayoralty seized into the King's Hands, and replevied from Year to Year. And that Seizure that was made by King E. 1. for what Reasons or Grounds, or by what sort of Proceedings, doth not appear; all that doth appear of it is, that de facto Custodes and Mayors were put upon the City; but quo jure, who can tell? We know these Times were Times of Trouble, in the Barons Wars. The Barons, Simon Mountford, Earl of Leicester, being their General, fought a Battle with the King at Lewes, and took the King and Prince Edward the First, both Prisoners. 48 H. 3. The Barons differing among themselves, and the Earl of Gloucester joined with the Prince, who got out of Prison; another Battle was fought at Evesham, and the great Earl Mountford slain; 49 H. 3. and then at Winchester by Parliament all his Party, and the Liberties of the City of London seized; and in such Times as these, and which followed in E. 1. E. 2. and R. 2. it is not to be marvelled if there were many Seizures and Custodes put on the City; it is more a Marvel they were not destroyed. The Statutes made in these Times shew not only the Disorders, but that the Liberties were greatly infringed, or else there would not have been Statutes to confirm them; whether the infringing or seizing were the Cause or Effect, is hard to know; but just before in those Times there were undoubtedly many extravagant Acts of all Sides, which produced Magna Charta, made the 9 H. 3. for confirming of the Liberties and Privileges not only of London, but of all other Towns; and after these Times, in the three Reigns of the three succeeding Kings, how many other Statutes for confirming the Liberties and Privileges of the Cities and Towns were made, 1 H. 4. cap. 15? The Penalties and Forfeitures imposed by the Statute 28 E. 3. cap. 10. upon the City of London, put into the same Condition with other Cities and Boroughs, as to Penalties and Seizures. A Statute confirming to all the Cities and Boroughs the Liberties and Franchises, which they by former Grants or Confirmations had, viz. 4 H. 4. cap. 1. confirmed in like manner by 7 H. 4. cap. 1. Again confirmed in like manner by 3 H. 5. cap. 1. Again confirmed by Statute of 2 H. 6. cap. 1. By which it appears what a Sense and Memory they had of the Seizures that had been of their Liberties and Privileges, that they never thought them sufficiently confirmed; but they were sufficiently confirmed; for from the Time of R. 2. to this Day, we do not find any Seizure of any Liberties or Franchises, or Custos made or put upon them. That which was in those Days of Violence done, shew them the worst of Times, but are no Precedents for the best. But next,

Supposing and admitting these Records of these Times of good Authority, and as authentick Precedents as can be, they are so far from proving against me, that I hope to make it most plainly to appear, that they are strong and plain Authorities and Evidence against them, and for me. It is ordinary in disputing or arguing to lose the Point disputed or argued. That I may not commit so great an Error, but may evince and make plain what I have affirmed, give me leave to look back to the Information and Replication, and from thence to make the Points that we argue, single, clear, and open. The Information that saith, that we usurped upon the King to be a Corporation and Body Politick, but in Truth are none. The Bar sets forth the Title to be a Corporation by Prescription, Time out of Mind. The Replication, that endeavours to avoid the Bar, by allowing that we were once a Corporation lawfully; but that by our Mis-carriages we have forfeited our being a Corporation, and thereby became none, and after that usurp'd to be one. So that, that which the other Side maintains, is, That by our Mis-feasances we have committed a Forfeiture of our old lawful and rightful Corporation. This I deny; the Affirmation is upon them to prove, and they producing no Record that expresses any such Forfeiture of a Corporation, but only Records generally saying, that the Liberties should be forfeited or seized, the Question is, What the Meaning is in these old Records of forfeiting and seizing Liberties? Mr. Attorney was pleased to take it, and so did Mr. Solicitor, as I think, that forfeiting and seizing were much one. I shall not dispute that; but whether in any of those Records the Corporation or Body Politick were by these Words taken to be forfeited? Mr. Attorney was so careful to avoid the Consequences of a Forfeiture of a Corporation, which are so great and destructive, that he would not by a Judgment in a Quo Warranto against a Corporation have the Corporation determined, no more than he would by the Forfeiture ipso facto have it determined, but that there should be some Seizure into the King's Hands; but what that is, or how to be understood, I cannot imagine. For if the Corporation be not to be dissolved and determined, in whom should it rest or remain after such Forfeitures, or during such Seizure? Shall it after Forfeiture remain in the same Persons that it was in? Shall it subsist, live, and act as before? or shall it be in Limbo patrum, or in Nubibus? Is a Corporation transferrable to any other Person or Persons? Can a Corporation be conveyed or transferred? That is impossible; and so it appears in the Dean and Chapter of Norwich Case, and Fulcher and Heyward, and 1 Inst. in the Case of the Homage Ancestral before cited. That a Corporation is not transferrable from one Body of Men to another; therefore the King cannot possibly have it, nor can he grant it. Ay, but saith Mr. Attorney, it shall be seized, and in the King's Hands; what is meant by these Words? How can it be in the King's Hands, if not transferrable? Next, What shall the King do with it, shall he grant it to others? No, that is impossible; by the Cases cited, it so appears the King may make a new, but he cannot grant an old Corporation, because not transferrable. Then if he cannot grant, if it be not transferrable, if a Corporation or Body Politick be by Law framed in Similitude of a natural Body, then it is no more transferrable than a natural Body is. The Body Politick cannot be taken out of the Hands of the Persons incorporate. From hence then, if this be so, it will follow of Necessity, that the Corporation, if it cannot be transferred to the King, or by the King's Grant, out of the Persons in whom it is, to others, it must remain where it is, or be dissolved. Next, that which I shall shew is,

That by the Words forfeiting and seizing Liberties in those old Records, it cannot be meant forfeiting and seizing a Corporation or Body Politick; they still continued. But that which is the true Sense of these Words, forfeiting and seizing Liberties in those Records was, if the Abuse or Misuse were of a particular Franchise, as of Courts, Prisons, Markets, or the like, the King had them forfeited to him. If the Abuse were by a Corporation, they acted by their active Parts, by their Mayors, Bailiffs, Sheriffs, Coroners, or the like; the King seized these Offices, turned the Corporation-officers out, and put others into their Places. This was the Course in the Eires, where these Seizures in those Days usually were: But for seizing Corporations as forfeit, there hath been no Instance of it in any Time; but the contrary is most evident. For the Corporations, notwithstanding the supposed Forfeitures or Seizures, remained still in Being; and this is evident even to Sense. The Seizures, that have been mentioned, have been of London, Bristol, Gloucester, Cambridge, and Cinque-Ports, Ipswich, and Winchester.

I offer to your Consideration, whether these Cities of London and Bristol, Gloucester, Cambridge, and also the Cinque-Ports, ever since, have not continually in all Pleadings, Claims, and Titles, made themselves a Title by Prescription? Are they not by Prescription to this Day? Do they not claim their Markets, Tolls, and all their Privileges by Prescription? Do not the Acts of Parliament that immediately follow these Seizures made by H. 4. H. 5. H. 6. in the Times succeeding, all confirm their Privileges? Not a word of granting new Privileges, but confirming the old; which shews plainly, that in those Days the Corporations were not thought or imagined to be determined or dissolved. By these Seizures, or supposed Forfeitures, the Enjoyment or Possession, for the Space of three hundred Years, is Evidence sufficient of their remaining and being Bodies Politick by Prescription, which they could not be if they were forfeited, as pretended. For by Forfeiture they must mean the losing their Corporation, or being divested; no other Sense can be, or ever was, of Forfeiture. Could they forfeit them, and yet keep them? Could they lose them, and yet have them? If they could not, then it is plain, that since they always have had them, they never forfeited or lost them. But for farther Evidence hereof, I shall make it most plainly to appear, that during the very Times of these Seizures the Corporations remained and acted as Corporations; and that at that Time it was never thought or imagined, that during the Seizures the Corporations were forfeit; all that was done was, that the Election of their Mayor, or of their Sheriff, was de facto taken from them, and either a Custos, or a Mayor, by the King put over them, and continued till those Kings Displeasures were over, and then they chose their own Officers again: But no Thought then of forfeiting the Corporation. By the City Books, as well as Records, this is most evident. The putting a Custos by King E. 1. continued for the Space of eleven Years, from the 15 E. 1. to the 26 E. 1. and then they chose their Mayor again. By the City Books it appears that their Court of Hustings all along continued, as at other Times, Aldermen all along. Lib. A. fol. 50, 51. 135.

Radulphus de Sandwyco Custos Civitatis London, Henricus le Walleys, and others, Aldermen, (naming them) & universalis Communitas ejusdem Civitatis, make a Conveyance of a House to John de Bangwell, 18 E. 1.

With the King's Remembrancer in the Exchequer, Cives London venerunt coram Baronibus, & presentaverunt Johannem de Canluar & Willielmum de Betoyn ad respondend' pro Civitate predicta & Com' Middlesex, de his que ad Officiu Vicecomitis pertinent, & ad hoc faciend' presterunt Sacramentum, 16 E. 1. Ro. 1.

Another like Suit against an Un-freeman. Lib. C. fol. 7. b.

A Writ of Right in the Hustings, brought by the Corporation. Communitas Civitatis London per Radulphum Pecoys Attornatum suum petit versus Hugonem Episcopum de Bedlam unum Messuagium, &c. 22 E. 1.

All the Aldermen, and twelve Citizens, were called before the King and his Council, and the King restored them the Election of their Mayor, and they chose Henry de Gabrys Mayor. And on Monday following comes the King's Writ, whereby the King, for good Services, reddidimus & restitimus Civibus London Civitatem, una cum Majoritate & Libertatibus suis, quas certis de causis dudum capi fecimus in manum nostram. So that hereby it most evidently appears, the Corporation was not forfeit, lost, or dissolved, only a Custos put over them, which acted in the Place of Mayor; and when removed, they chose their Mayor again, 26 E. 1. Lib. B. fol. 38.

The Liberties not forfeit, only seized into the King's Hands; so saith the Writ dudum capi fecimus in manum nostram. The Record of Cambridge I have looked upon; it plainly appears in it, that the Corporation was not forfeited and dissolved, as you suppose: For it appears, that when they submitted to the King to do with their Franchises what he pleased; yet it was subito to the Mayor and Bailiffs, their Response to all other Matters. And afterwards, at the same Time, the King grants to the same Mayor and Bailiffs divers Liberties; by which it appears, that the Corporation was not forfeit, but still in Being, notwithstanding the Seizure and Forfeiture.

The Seizure that was by King Edward the Second was in no sort any Forfeiture or Determination of their Corporation; but either under a Custos, or under a Mayor put in by the King.

The Custos, Aldermen, and Commonalty, appeared, and turned out some of their Aldermen. Lib. E. fol. 11. b.

They chose and swore their Sheriffs, and by this Time they had a Mayor again; but the Office of Mayoralty, granted them by the King. Lib. D. fol. 6.

The King grants to Nicolas de Farrington the Office of Mayor, quandiu nobis placuerit. 16 E. 2. Lib. E. fol. 146.

They had a Writ restoring to them the Office of their Mayor again, 20 E. 2.

Then for the Seizure of 16 R. 2. that continued but from the 22d of July unto the 19th of September following; and the Form or Colour of Law that they had for that, was the Statute of 28 E. 3. and the Custos put in sworn at Guildhall, and took the Oath of the Mayor, as appears in the Book which I cited; where it is mentioned to be upon that Statute. Lib. H. 269. b. 16 R. 2.

But for farther Evidence; in the Treasurer's Remembrancer's Office in the Exchequer, 4 E. 3. Rot. 2. in Bago de Quo Warranto in Itinere Northampton & Bedford, Quo Warranto versus Villam de Bedford; in that Record are these Things: First, that the Village of Bedford had not at the last preceding Eire made Claim of divers Liberties, and thereupon in that Eire adjudged, quod omnes Libertates non elamat' capt' fuissent in manus

Domini

Domini Regis, and had not been replevied, but the Corporation not seized. Thereupon the Corporation offer a Fine of eight Marks to the King, pro licentia clamandi their Liberties, and admitted to a Fine: But then it appeared, that the Mayor and the Coroners had sat in Judgment, and condemned Men for Felonies committed out of the Jurisdiction; and thereupon Consideratum est, quod prædictæ Libertas de Infangtheife, & Officia Major, Ballivorum, & Coronatorum ejusdem Villæ capiantur in manus Domini Regis. Sed quia cæteræ Libertates & consuetudines Villæ prædictæ abique Ministris pro communi utilitate Populi ibidem nequeant conservari, the Court puts Johannem de Tound Custos, Johannem Wymound and Richardum Rounds Bailiffs, and Nicolas Astwood and William de Knight Coroners, who were all sworn to execute those Offices, and to answer the King the Profits. Hereby it appears, that the Course was not to forfeit or dissolve the Corporation: they never were so unreasonable; for hereby all their Lands and Goods, and all the Debts owing by them, or to them, would all be lost: All they did was, they put in Officers to preserve the Corporations. So that I think there is nothing more plain, that though the Liberties were seized, and that Officers, Custos, or Mayors, were put upon them; yet the Corporations, or Bodies Politick, or their Liberties, were not forfeit or determined. If they had been either forfeited or determined, could the Writs of Restitution have set them up again? The old could never be restored or set up again, but by Act of Parliament; they might have had new Charters, and have been made new Corporations; but the old could never have been restored, if once forfeited, as now imagined. So that the Point betwixt us is, Whether the Records of E. 1. E. 2. and R. 2. of Forfeitures and Seizures of Liberties, supposing the Causes or Offences for which they were seized were very great and provoking, as in all Probability they were, do prove that thereby the Corporations were forfeit, dissolved, or determined? It appears they were not forfeit. You can never avoid it. If abusing the Franchise or Liberty of being a Corporation be a Forfeiture, as you affirm, and that they were seized for being forfeit; then the Offences that were committed by these Corporations in those Princes times, were Forfeitures, and consequently the Seizures dissolved the Corporations. They could not forfeit and lose their Corporations, and yet keep them. And that they still had their Being, is most evident by the Records of those Times, shewing, that they acted, and enjoyed their Corporations under those Seizures, only a Custos instead of a Mayor, all other Things the same; that they have in all Ages ever since been allowed to be Corporations by Prescription, never denied or questioned; that the Acts of Parliament immediately following, confirming their Privileges, never questioned their having them. Never any Thoughts of making void any Forfeitures by these Acts, or any new Grants, but always pleaded by Prescription. These Things plainly shew, that the Offences committed in those Times did not forfeit the Corporation; and all that dark Authority they have out of those Records is directly against them, proves only that these Abuses gave only Cause of Seizure of some Offices, but no Forfeiture of the Corporation, that still continued.

Having thus answered those old Records, and shewn that they are of Authority for me against them; and since it hath been stirred in this Case, whether a Corporation or Body Politick be surrenderable or not, and insisted upon, by the other Side, that it is, and from thence an Argument drawn to prove, that if surrenderable, it is forfeitable: Whether it be surrenderable, or not, perhaps is also doubtful, so that I think a Man cannot argue from it any thing. First, I am sure there is no great Reason why it should be; for since that Men that are of the Corporation take, upon their coming to be made Free, an Oath to preserve the Rights, Liberties, and Privileges of it; and since the active Members are intrusted for all the other Members that elect and choose them, and also for their Successors; I cannot see how a Man can satisfy himself in so doing.

Sir James Bagg's Case, Rep. 11. 98. they forfeit their Freedom by doing contrary to their Oath and Trust. If every Freeman by his Oath and Trust be obliged to seek the Benefit of the Corporation, to surrender is against the Oath. The Law seems to have a Care of preserving Corporations; and therefore provides, that the taking any new Charter, though there be many Alterations in Offices and Names, yet doth not surrender the old. But were it of any other Franchise, the taking anew of the same thing is a Surrender of the old.

Dean and Chapter of Norwich's Case, Rep. 3. 73.

Fulcher and Heyward's Case seems a strong one to prove it nor surrenderable, Jones 266. And though the Bishop did not in that Case join in the Surrender, that cannot hinder; because the Bishop is no Part of the Corporation, and therefore cannot hinder them to surrender, if they will.

A Vill incorporate by the Name of Bailiffs, 4 H. 26. 22. b. The King de novo incorporates them by the Name of Sheriffs: Are their Privileges that they before had, gone? No, Dieu defend, saith the Book. But this being not my Question, I intend not to debate it thoroughly, but to keep to the Point of a Forfeiture of a Body Politick or Corporation, and farther to examine the Reasonableness and Justice of this Doctrine of Forfeiture, and see how adequate and just it is; for that is the thing, I perceive, desired.

First, Their Position is, That a Corporation, or Being of a Body Politick, is a Liberty or Franchise; and if abused or misused, is forfeited, determined, and dissolved.

That I may a little understand this Position and consider of Abuse and Misuse, and of the Extents and Consequences of it: By Abuse or Misuse, every Act that a Corporation doth, that is not justifiable by Law, is, as I take it, an Abuser or Misuser. If a Corporation receive any Money that is not due to them, if it be by Virtue of any By-law, that is a Forfeiture, though it be but a Groat. What if they by their Common Seal Command their Servant to enter into such Lands, or distrain such a Man's Cattle for Rent not due; is not this a taking upon them to oppress the King's Subjects, and to extort from them their Lands or Moneys where not due? This is a Misuser. A Body Politick, as I have said, is but a Person created in Resemblance of a natural Person, to have a Capacity to take, hold, and enjoy to particular Ends and Purposes. And hold or enjoy is not possible, without acting; and all that act must of Necessity be subject to Errors sometimes, in their Actions, as natural Persons are. And must it be so penal to them, that every Error, Misuser, or Abuser, must be a Forfeiture? Can it be reasonable or just in Law, that this can be? Laws are made for Preservation, not for Destruction; if every Abuser or Misuser forfeit, be it a small Transgression, is it either reasonable or probable, that any Law shall punish it with Destruction of the Body? The greatest Offence, be it Treason or Rebellion, or the least illegal Act, Offence, or Misdemeanour, must have the same Measure of Punishment by this Rule; and the Law then doth not distinguish. If a natural Body, or Person, hath a Market, and orders his Servants to take such Tolls, and he takes them; what would this Crime be besides Forfeiture of his Market? Why should a Corporation then, not only in such Case, or for any Offence or Misdemeanour to the Value of a Penny, forfeit and lose, as in the Case of High Treason, his Life or Being, Lands, Goods, and All? This cannot be agreeable to any Rules or Reason of our Law; and therefore I take it, it cannot be the Law. The next thing I design to insist upon is,

Secondly, The Mischiefs and Inconveniencies that must attend this Doctrine or Law of forfeiting and surrendering, if the Law be so.

Let us then consider, whether this at one Stroke do not make all the Corporations in England, of all sorts, forfeit at once, and perhaps many Years since. Is there any Corporation in England that hath not offended or transgressed? All manner of Corporations fall under this Rule. If they have transgressed or done any such Act as makes a Forfeiture (as every Misdemeanour, for any thing I can see to the contrary, doth) whether the Corporation be ipso facto dissolved by the Offence committed, or else by the Judgment which must relate to the Offence, to avoid all mean Acts done by the Corporation; all that they have done since such Misdemeanour, they have done without Right; and all that they think they have a Title to as a Corporation, they are mistaken in, they have none. Perhaps if a Parliament should be called, those forfeited Corporations can lawfully send no Burgesses. I do not know whether I am mistaken, or not, I only offer this to Consideration amongst others: As (give me leave to venture a little farther upon these Considerations of Surrenders and Forfeitures of Corporations) can a Bishop, Dean and Chapter, Prebendary, Parson, &c. surrender his Corporation or Body Politick? If they can, most of them, perhaps, are of the Foundation of the Crown, and had their Lands from thence. We have many Statutes made to restrain their Alienations: Those of Queen Elizabeth did not extend to hinder their Alienations to the Crown; but perhaps, out of Hope of Preferment, they aliened to the Crown, till the Statute of 1 Jacobi, cap. 3. took away that Power also of conveying to the Crown: Can these forfeit the Corporations? Perhaps we are Sinners all, or at least, as the Balance at some time or other may beholden may be found too light: We are upon a Point that goes to Posterity; Fear and Favour, what may it do, and what may it not do? If they may surrender or forfeit, what Effects may this have upon the whole Ecclesiastical Estate? If this had been known in the Days of King Henry the Eighth, perhaps there would have been no great need of Acts of Parliament to make him Head of the Church, or to have dissolved the Monasteries. Suppose that Colleges, Hospitals, and other Corporations founded for Charity, can surrender or forfeit; the present Masters and Fellows, and the Heirs of the Donors, may truck; what Effect may this have upon them? what Ways may they find out? Also Cities and Boroughs; what Divisions and Contentions hath it already produced, some for surrendering, others for defending, what Animosities are about it? The End of the Law is to preserve Peace and Quiet. Divisions and Dissensions frequently end in the Destruction of both Parties. The Citizens and Burgesses are, I think, three Parts of four of the House of Commons. It is considerable what Effects this may have in Parliaments, our Laws and Posterity perhaps not a little concerned herein; and if so, surely this is a great Case. But if only the City of London, give me leave to see what the ill Consequences and Mischiefs will be. Arguments from Mischiefs and Inconveniencies are forcible Arguments in Law: So saith Littleton, and my Lord Cook upon Littleton. And Men must be desperate and sensual, that despise future Mischiefs and Inconveniencies. And many other Places there cited, Inst. 1. 11. 60.

1. All their Lands will be gone, and revert to the Donors, and their Heirs. By Dissolutions of Corporations all their Privileges are gone, and their Lands revert to their Donors, or Lords, of whom they were holden. Jones 190. F. N. B. 33. k. Inst. 113. b.

2. All their Markets, Tolls, and Duties, that they claim by Prescription; whereby the Government and the Honour of the City, the publick Halls, Gates, Prisons, Bridges, and other Edifices, are in a great measure maintained.

3. All the Debts owing to the City, and all their personal Estate, by the Death or Dissolution of the Corporation, will be gone; but who shall have them? Perhaps non definitur in jure.

4. All the Liberties, and customary Privileges, that the Freemen of the City, their Wives and Children claim, viz. to have customary Shares in their Husbands or Fathers Estates; to be exempt from Tolls in other Towns, Ports, and Markets; to exclude Foreigners and Unfreemen from using their Trades in London, and many others.

5. All the Acts of Parliament that give particular Powers and Authorities to the Lord Mayor and Aldermen, or Common Council, or Corporation, respecting either the Government or Justice of the City; as about Ministers, and Payment of their Dues, Buildings, Paving of Streets, Sewers, Insurance Office, and many others.

6. What shall become of the Orphans, and all the Moneys and Debts the City owes, and all the Charities in the City? We have seen the City burnt, and may remember what a Swarm were unhived thereby; but we never yet saw it dissolved, nor are the Consequences measurable. And though it please his Majesty, upon the Dissolution of this, to grant a new Charter, yet it will be impossible any of these Things can be preserved: Their Lands, Estates, Debts, Privileges, Customs, are all Personal, and annexed to the Corporation, and must live and die with it; the said Acts of Parliament are all fixed to this Corporation, and so are the Charities, and cannot, as I conceive, be ever transferred to any other to be new created. A new Corporation can be in no Succession or Privy with the old. If a Body Politick be once dissolved, though a new one be founded of the same Name, that can have no Succession to the old, nor come in Privy to it: Therefore it is, that in the Dean and Chapter of Norwich's, Case, and in Fulcher and Heyward's Case, the Preservation of the old Corporation is insisted on. Inst. 1. 102. b. If every Abuser committed by a Corporation be a Forfeiture, Determination, or Dissolution, is there any one in England not forfeited and dissolved? Abuse is a Word of a wonderful large Sense: When the Law speaks of a Franchise abused or misused, it is applicable to a particular Franchise, as to a Market, Court, or the like; and if that Franchise be misused, or abused, in Oppression or Misuse, contrary to the Ends of it, some Certainty there is in it: But the Abuse of a Corporation extends to all its Acts, and all Estates of the Corporation; and all the Privileges of all the particular Persons, and all that are concerned in them are Sufferers for every Abuse, or Misuse, or Misact, or Trespass, how small soever. Who can tell in the Actions of a Person what may be taken to be ill or illegally done, or an Abuse? Who will trust a Corporation, if its Duration and Existence be so fickle and infirm, that every Abuser or Misuser shall forfeit it? There will be no need of Officers to be moved, thereby to determine this Corporation at Will and Pleasure, this Position contains enough to do all. These great Consequences, attending this Doctrine of Forfeiture, are Reasons to prove the Law otherwise.

But saith Mr. Attorney, (if I understand him) We do not intend to destroy the Corporation, though we say in our Pleading, That you have forfeited your old Corporation, that you have, without any lawful Authority, usurped upon the King, and pray in our Replication, that de Libertate, Privilegio, & Franchesia illa (viz. the being a Corporation) abundantur & excludantur. These are but Words of Form, we only will lay the King's Hands gently upon it, and seize it; but the Corporation shall not be destroyed or dissolved.

I answer, This is wonderful, and a great Compliment to the City, as I take it; let us not flatter or deceive one another. We are not now in the irregular Days in the Records mentioned, nor in such sort of Proceedings as in those distracted Times. Let us not go by blind Conjectures out of old Records, and bring in unknown Ways. We are now in a Quo Warranto, which, as Mr. Attorney truly saith, is in the Nature of a Writ of Right; and a Writ of Right is the highest Writ that is in the Law; and the Judgment therein, and in this Quo Warranto must be conclusive to all Parties. If given against the Defendants, it must conclude them for ever, and dissolve their Corporation; and if given against the King, he shall never hereafter bring it in Question for any Cause precedent. Rep. 9. 28. Inst. 2. 282. 495. Cook's Entries 527. D. hath a Precedent of it. Consideratum est, quod the Defendant de & in Libertatibus, Privilegiis, & Franchesiis prædictis, in Informatione prædicta specificat nullo modo se intromittat, sed ab illis penitus excludatur. The like against Ferrers, and the Virginia Company, and many others may be found, M. 21. fac. 1. r. 9. The Court cannot alter the Judgment, it will be erroneous if they do. And to talk of a Judgment of a Seizure, what is the Meaning of it, or such Judgment? Is it final, or not final? The Court must give a final Judgment, that the Party, if he think fit, may have his Writ of Error. The Court will not take any of your old Records to go by, if any such are to be found, that would warrant any other Judgment: Therefore a Seizure, without such a Judgment, that determines the Corporation, cannot be any way brought to pass, as I believe, nor can I understand in whom, by your Seizure, you would have the old Corporation to subsist. Transferred from the Persons, in whom it now subsists, I think is impossible, but dissolved by your Judgment it may be: And I hope your Lordship will not be induced by singular unwarrantable Things, that a Judgment should be given, that shall neither dissolve the Corporation, nor continue it, that shall neither be for Plaintiff or Defendant, that shall leave the Corporation neither alive nor dead, but in Transitu, or Limbo Patrum: A Judgment, quod capiantur, or quod Libertates & Franchesiæ prædictæ seisciantur in manus Domini Regis. Was there ever any the like? What shall be understood by it? Shall we be afterwards a Corporation? Shall our Magistrates continue? Shall we have our Lands, Markets, Tolls, Customs, or Franchises, or not? Or shall we be none, and yet not dissolved? I must confess, I am confounded in these Notions.

Next, as to the Authorities in Law for me:

1. I take it to be a great Authority for me, that there is no Precedent or Judgment, or Book-case produced or found, that ever a Corporation was forfeited. It lies upon the other Side to produce it, or shew it; and no doubt they would, if there had been any, but there is none by the Authorities they cite; you may easily perceive, any sort would not be omitted.

2. The Nature of a Corporation, as our Books do describe it, shews it not forfeitable. I take it plain out of the Case of Sutton's Hospital, and the other Books there cited. Rep. 10. 92. b. 21 E. 4. 72. A Corporation aggregate is invisible, immortal, and rests only in Intendment and Consideration of Law, cannot commit Treason or Felony, be out-lawed, excommunicate, hath no Soul, cannot appear in Person, cannot do Fealty, cannot be imprisoned, not subject to Imbecillity or Death. Br. Corp.

34. They cannot commit any actual Trespas or Disseisin, except under their Common Seal, by Command precedent, or Assent subsequent: When our Books say, that they are a Body Politick, and rest or have their Being in Intendment or Consideration of Law, thereby is meant, that they are by Law enabled to act to particular Ends and Intents answerable to their Ends and Creations. Their Ends or Creations are only to be subservient to the publick Good, and Government, and Preservation of the City or Town incorporate, and of the Members thereof. And there be any Act done by the Members, that are the active Part of such Corporation, to any other Intent, End, or Purpose, this is not the Act of the Corporation, but of the particular Members, and they only are answerable for it. And as to particular Offences and Miscarriages in this Case alledged, it cannot be denied, but that the particular Members are answerable for it; and if they, then according to all Books, they ought not to be doubly chargeable or answerable in both Capacities. And the Argument cited out of Bagg's Case, of a Freeman convict of Perjury, and thereupon disfranchised, doth not prove, that they shall be punished in a double Capacity; for the Corporation is not thereby punished, but preserved. The Being of a Body Politick is only a Capacity, and in resemblance of a natural Body, and no more forfeitable than a natural Body. It is seizing and forfeiting of Liberties, that we meet with; that is such as are generally spoken of; as Markets, Courts, Jurisdictions, and the like: And in the old Records, by seizing the Liberties of a Corporation is meant the taking from them their Officers, and putting in others upon them for a Time. But a Forfeiting, Dissolving, and determining the Body Politick, never was yet done or known, nor, as reasonable to believe, ever entered into any Man's Thoughts till now; for I have already shewn, that Offences and Miscarriages, that were committed by the Corporations in those troublesome Times of E. 1. E. 2. and R. 2. for which their Liberties were seized, were not Forfeitures and Determinations of those Corporations; they all remain Corporations by Prescription to this Day: And I have also taken Notice, that the Acts of Parliament, that were made in the succeeding Kings Reigns, of H. 4. H. 5. and H. 6. are only Acts of Confirmation to the Cities and Boroughs of their Liberties and Privileges. From that Time till within these three Years, I believe it never entered into any Man's Thoughts, that a Corporation was forfeitable; for farther Proof whereof divers other Statutes, and the whole Series of Matter is Argument.

The Statute 15 Hen. 6. cap. 6. that provides against Abuses and Exactions made by Societies incorporate, by their By-laws and Ordinances, and appoints a Forfeiture of Ten Pounds, and of their Power to make By-laws: To what End should this be, if the Corporations themselves were forfeited, or thought so to be?

The Statute of 19 H. 7. cap. 7. recites the Statute of H. 6. and the Exactions and Abuses by Fellowships, by their By-laws and Ordinances; and appoints a Penalty of Forty Pounds, if they exact Money by an unlawful and unwarranted By-law, not examined and signed by the Chancellor and Chief Justice.

The Statute of 12 H. 7. c. 6. sets forth grievous Exactions by the Fellowship of Merchant Adventurers by their By-laws, and imposeth a Penalty for the future.

The Statutes 22 H. 8. 4. 28 H. 8. 5. shew like Exactions by Corporations upon Apprentices by their Ordinances and By-laws, provides Remedy, and enacts Penalty. If in those Times it had been thought or imagined, that a Corporation had been forfeitable, every of these Offences forfeited it, what need farther Remedy? In the Case of Heddy and Wheehouse, of excessive Toll by the Town of Northampton, Moore 474. 39 Eliz. In the Quo Warranto against a Corporation, though the Question was concerning their taking Toll, and whether they had forfeited their Market, or only their Toll; no Thought of forfeiting their Corporation was ever mentioned. So that I think I may conclude with the tumultuous Times of Edw. 1. Edw. 2. and Richard 2. what was then done, doth plainly shew the Corporations were not forfeit or dissolved: That by all the Acts of Parliament, and Proceedings in almost all the Reigns of any Length or Duration, from that Time to this very Case, the Opinions and Thoughts of Men were otherwise; as by the Statutes and Transactions appear: Not one Opinion, Book, or Authority, produced, or to be found. The great Concern not only of this great City, but of all other Cities, Towns, and Corporations, Ecclesiastical and Temporal, all depend upon it. And which is more than all, the very Government by Law established will be in great Danger of Alteration by it.

I have argued long, and tried your Lordship's Patience; the Weight and Length of the Case, and Rareness of the Matter, there never having been the like before in any Age; will, I hope, excuse me. But besides the whole Frame and Foundation, that the other Side have laid, being all built upon general undigested Notions, as I take it, viz. that Abuser and Misuser of Liberties forfeits them, without distinguishing betwixt one Thing and another; that the Words Forfeiting and Seizing Liberties, found in old Records, should be Authorities to prove Forfeiting Corporations or Beings of the Body Politick, though no such Thing then, or at any time since, till very lately, was ever thought on or imagined: It was necessary for me to open and set forth these general Notions, and to explain and distinguish; which, I hope I have done, that it may appear what the Sense of them is, how far they agree with Law and Justice, and how far not. And if, in the Doing hereof, or in the setting out the repugnant or inconsistent Matters or Opinions arising in this Case, to maintain this Quo Warranto, I have expressed myself in any other manner than became me, I humbly beg Pardon for it; and that it may not reflect upon the Cause, nor prejudice it.

Upon the whole Matter, if this Information brought against the Body Politick for usurping to be a Body Politick, ought to have been brought against the particular Persons; if it be repugnant or contradictory, that a Corporation can usurp to be a Corporation; that a Body Politick or Being can usurp to be a Body Politick or Being, before it had a Being, or to be that same Body Politick or Being, which it was when it did usurp; if forfeiting a Franchise, or Liberty, or other Estate, cannot determine or vest that Franchise or Estate in the King, till the Forfeiture appear on Record; then the old Corporation supposed to be forfeited, if it were so, did notwithstanding, and yet doth continue in Being, there being no Record to determine it; and consequently that, which is pretended a new one by Usurpation, is impossible. If by Seizure into the King's Hands (as pretended) the Continuance of the Corporation be intended, how inconsistent is it with Law or Justice to continue any thing in the King, that is wrongfully usurped, and the Parties to be punished, fined, and committed for usurping? If Mr. Attorney's Replication, taking Issue upon our Prescription to be a Corporation, and going over, and alledging several distinct Causes of Forfeitures, cannot by Law be maintained, and in the Example doth introduce a Way to bring all Men's Estates subject to Mr. Attorney's Will and Pleasure, (for, let any Man's Right be as good as can be, it will be scarce possible to defend it, if such Pleadings as in his Replication be allowable by Law) then be the Matter in Law as much against us as possible; yet Mr. Attorney can have no Judgment for him upon this Information. Next, Supposing the Information all good in Law; yet, if the Judgments, Records, and Authority, that have been cited by them for Seizures, do plainly shew, that Seizures and Forfeitures are very different in their Natures; that the Corporations all continued notwithstanding the Seizures; and the Seizure was only the King's putting in Mayors and Officers to act in them; instead of others elected or constituted by the Corporation, and they remain Corporations by Prescription to this Day, and never were forfeited, dissolved or determined by such Seizures; if the general Authorities in Books, that the Misusing or Abusing a Franchise be truly applicable to Franchises, (that are Estates and Interests grantable or conveyable from Man to Man) and never were intended of such a Thing, as is rather a Capacity or Being than a Franchise; if there be no Case, or Precedent, or Opinion to be found for it; if, on the contrary, the particular Cases cited prove, that where the Corporations have by Miscarriages forfeited particular Franchises, they do not forfeit their Corporations; if there be scarce any Corporation in England, that have not at some Time or other done something they should not, or omitted to do something they should, and thereby forfeited their Corporation, and consequently all are Usurpers, and their corporate Acts since done, all void: If the Corporation here hath done nothing, but that the Mayor, Aldermen, and Common Council, are only Delegates, Deputies, or Ministers of the Corporation for particular Purposes; if Servants, Deputies, or Delegates do that which they have no Authority to do, they must answer for it in their own Persons; but their Masters, or those that deputed or delegated them for another Purpose, they are innocent; they shall not suffer by it, though no Acts of Parliament had been in the Case; if the Acts of Parliament against seizing the Liberties of the City, for or by reason of any Miscarriage of their Officers or Ministers, extend to these Acts of the Mayor, Aldermen, and Common Council; if so be that these Acts were the Acts of the Corporation; yet, with Submission, if they have shewn a good and legal Right, by their Custom and Title, to make By-laws for regulating and settling the Markets and Tolls, and that which they have done be, as pleaded, reasonable, and that there was reasonable Ground at that Time for their Petition, which they have set forth; if all these Particulars that I have now summed up be against me, then Judgment must be against me; though I know not what that Judgment can be. But if any one of these Particulars, thus repeated be for me, and against Mr. Attorney; then Mr. Attorney can have no Judgment against the City; but Judgment must be for them; which I humbly pray.

THE next Term, viz. Trinit. 35 Car. 2. (Chief Justice Saunders dying the Day of the Judgment given, or the next Day after) Mr. Justice Jones, Justice Raymond, and Justice Withens, being in Court, Justice Jones pronounced the Judgment of the Court, and Justice Raymond and Justice Withens affirmed, that Chief Justice Saunders was of the same Opinion with them, and that they all agreed,

1. That a Corporation aggregate might be seized. That the Statute 28 E. 3. cap. 10. is express, that the Franchises and Liberties of the City, upon such Defaults, should be taken into the King's Hands. And that Bodies Politick may offend, and be pardoned, appears by the general Article of Pardon, 12 Car. 2. whereby Corporations are pardoned all Crimes and Offences. And the Act for regulating Corporations, 13 Car. 2. which provides that no Corporation shall be avoided for any thing by them misdone or omitted to be done, shews also that their Charters may be avoided for Things by them misdone, or omitted to be done.

2. That exacting and taking Money by the pretended By-law, was Extortion, and a Forfeiture of the Franchise of being a Corporation.

3. That the Petition was scandalous and libellous, and the making it and publishing it a Forfeiture.

4. That the Act of the Common Council was the Act of the Corporation.

5. That the Matter set forth in the Record did not excuse or avoid those Forfeitures set forth in the Replication.

6. That the Information was well founded (a).

And gave Judgment, That the Franchise should be seized into the King's Hands, but the Entry thereof respited till the King's Pleasure was known in it. Justice Raymond and Justice Withens declare, that they were of the same Opinion in omnibus.

And accordingly, after Entry made by Mr. Attorney, That as to the Issue joined to be tried by the Country; as to the Claiming to have and constitute Sheriffs; as to the having the Mayor and Aldermen to be Justices of the Peace, and to hold Sessions, quod ipse pro Domino Rege ulterius non vult prosequi; Judgment is entered:

*Ideo consideratum est, quod præfat' Major & Communitas ac Cives Civitatis Lond' as to the Issue aforesaid, betwixt our Lord the King and them joined, and as to the Liberties and Franchises aforesaid by them claimed, to have and elect Sheriffs, and to have their Mayor and Aldermen to be Justices of the Peace, and hold Sessions, eant inde sine die, salvo jure Dom' Regis, si al', &c. Thus was the Metropolis of the Kingdom deprived of its Charter and Magistrates, till the Year 1688, when King James, terrified at the News of the Prince of Orange's intended Invasion, thought fit to restore it, October the 6th, and ordered Lord Chancellor Jefferies to carry it back himself; whereupon Sir George Treby was restored to his Place of Recorder, and the rest of the Magistrates, according to the ancient Constitution of the City.

P O S T S C R I P T.

THE Question concerning the Surrender of the Corporations, or Bodies Politick, not being directly in the Case, but in the Arguments on both Sides insisted on, it may not be unnecessary to state that Point, and collect what hath been in the Debates or Arguments alledged on either side, that the easier View and Judgment may be made of it. By Surrender in this Question is, by both sides, meant and intended some Deed or Instrument in Writing, whereby a Body Corporate or Politick can surrender and dissolve itself. It is agreed that a Body Politick may be dissolved, either by the Death of the Persons incorporate, or their Refusal to act, nominate, or elect Officers or Ministers, so as there remain not sufficient, authorized or enabled by their Charter or Constitution, to preserve their Being: This is admitted to be a Cesser, or Dissolution of the Corporation, and such a sort of yielding up, or Surrender, is admitted possible. But whether by any Deed or Instrument in Writing it can be done, that is the Question intended. For the Surrender, it hath been alledged,

1. That the Being of a Body Politick is a Liberty, Privilege, and Franchise, that had its Commencement by the King's Charter, or by Prescription, which supposes a Charter; and if it have its Beginning and Creation by Charter, which is the King's Deed that grants it; by Deed again it may be regranted and surrendered: And it is a Maxim in Law, Unumquodque dissolvi potest eod' modo quo ligatur. And instances in Fairs, Markets, Leets, and such-like Franchises, granted by Charter, which, say they, may be surrendered by Deed, or Regrant.

2. That it is necessary that it should be dissolvable by Surrender. Perhaps a Town may come to decay, and not be able to defray the Charge that the Support and Maintenance of the Corporation may require; for every one sees that Ornaments and Officers must be, and these cannot be bought or maintain'd without Estates; and poor Men are not able, without Ruin to their Families, to bear the Magistracies and Offices; and therefore it is necessary there should be a Power in them to surrender.

3. That the Books and Cases in Law do prove, that a Corporation, or Body Politick, may surrender itself, and thereby be dissolved.

Dy. 273. There the Case is thus stated: The Deanry of the Cathedral Church of Wells was dissolved by the Surrender of Fitz-Williams, tempore H. 8. And the Prebend of Currey, in the same Church, was also surrendered by Goodman, Prebendary there, 1 E. 6. And in this Year the Dissolution of the Deanry was confirmed, and the Deanry extinct by Act of Parliament, and a new Dean erected and created; to which new Deanry, the Lands and Possessions of the old were annexed, amongst other Possessions, and the Nomination of the new Dean and Successors given by that Act to the King; and that he should have the same Power in Chor' & Capitulo, as the old Dean had; saving to all Strangers, other than the Bishop of Bath and Wells, the old Dean, and the old Prebendary, and their Successors. In this Case it is admitted, and taken for granted, that the Deanry, and also the Prebend, were surrendered.

Dy. 284. There the Archbishop of Dublin had two Chapters, viz. the Dean and Chapter of St. Patrick, and the Dean and Chapter of Christ Church, and both these used to confirm the Bishop's Leases. The Dean and Chapter of St. Patrick, by Deed under their Common Seal, gave and surrendered all their Church, Houses, Lands and Possessions to the King, without Licence or Consent of their Bishop, being their Ordinary, and Patron of the most Part of the Prebends. After this Surrender their Church was used as the Common Hall, for the four Courts in the Term there; and a Lease is made by the Archbishop, confirmed by the Dean and Chapter of Christ Church only; and whether the Successor of the Archbishop were bound by this Lease was the Question. The Judges in Ireland were divided in Opinion, and thereupon the Case was sent over for the Opinion of the Judges here: And the Opinions and Resolutions of five Justices, viz. Catlyn, Dyer, Saunders, Welsh, and Curus, certified to the Lord Deputy of Ireland, under their Hands, were, Quod non fuit aliud Capitulum in esse tempore confirmationis Dimission' præfat' nisi Christi-Church tantum, quia Corporatio & Capitulum Sancti Patrick fuit per donum & sursum reddition' Decani & Capituli præfat' legitime dissolutum absque consensu Archiepiscopi.

Jones 168. The Opinion of Justice Jones there, that a Corporation may be dissolved by an Act proper, viz. by Resignation.

On the other side, it hath been answered,

1. Admitting it to be true, That to be a Body Politick, is a Liberty, Privilege, and Franchise, created by Charter, which is the King's Deed; yet it doth not follow, that it may be surrendered by Deed: For the Charters that incorporate the Citizens, or Inhabitants of such a City, Town, or Place, and make them a Body capable of taking and having Lands, Goods, or Chattels, to sue and to be sued, and to have a Common Seal, and to act according to the Powers, Ends and Purposes, in the Charters contained, only give them a Capacity for those Ends. The Liberty, Privilege and Franchise that they have, goes no farther. They cannot transfer this Privilege, or Franchise, to any other Persons. They are only personal Franchises or Capacities, fixed in the Persons to whom they are granted, like to Patents of Denization granted to Aliens, whereby a Capacity is granted to have, hold, and act, as a natural-born Subject; Grants of enfranchising a Villain; these are Grants that cannot be surrendered; these are Franchises and Capacities like this; these are Exceptions to the general Rule, Unumquodque dissolvitur eodem modo, &c. So also of Fairs, Markets, Courts, &c. they are created by Charter, they may be granted over, or granted to the King, but if they be regranted to the King, they are not extinct, but remain in the King.

(a) See the Petition of the Mayor, and Aldermen, and Lord Keeper North's Speech to them, in State Trials, Vol. VIII. p. 446—447

Abbot of Strata Marcella's Case, Rep. 9. 25. b. shews the Difference thus: When the King grants Franchises, that were in the Crown before the Grant, as Bona Feloniam, Deodands, Wreck, &c. and these come again to the Crown, they are merged in the Crown, and the King is seized of them jure Corona; but when a Privilege, Liberty, Franchise, or Jurisdiction, was at first erected or ordained by the King, there, by the coming of it again to the Crown, they are not extinct; and instanceth in Fairs, Markets, Hundreds, Leets, & similia. They are not dissolved or gone, for thereby Subjects would be prejudiced: For if the Court should be so granted, and thereby dissolved, the Subjects Judgments and Suits in those Courts would be all lost. These are other Exceptions to that general Rule, Unumquodque, &c.

2. That the Reason given for the Surrenders of Corporations from the Poverty that may happen, for the Conveniency of some Corporation, is answerable; for that doth not very frequently happen: But when it doth happen, if they are weary of it, they may let it alone, and not act, or choose Officers; it will cease of itself, they need not be at the Charge or Trouble of a Surrender: But on the other Side, the Inconveniencies are very great, and are some of them before specified. The Establishment of the Church is all in Corporations, Bishops, Deans, Chapters, Prebends, Parsons, Vicars; if these be surrenderable, as by the Cases cited, without Consent of Bishops (a Prebend is, as to his Being, but as a Parson, or a Vicar) the Universities, Colleges, Hospitals all the Cities, considerable Towns, Trades, and Mysteries, are Corporations; if these be surrenderable, it affects our old Government.

3. As for the Books and Authorities, Dy. 273. the Dissolution of the Corporation thereby surrendered is only mentioned in putting the Case, it is not debated, nor was it material in the Case: For the Act of Parliament there settled the new Dean and Chapter; and the Prebendary, and the Matter of the Case ariseth upon the Deprivation of Dean Goodman, and the Appeal, and Reversion of that Sentence, there is not as much as any Opinion in the Case concerning the Dissolution or Surrender, whether good or bad. But what may reasonably be inferred from that Case is, that the Surrender and Dissolution thereby was not good in Law; for if it had, what needed the having an Act of Parliament to secure against the old Dean and Prebendary? which yet appears in the Case was had.

And, Co. Rep. 3. 75. b. in the Case of the Dean and Chapter of Norwich this Case of Dyer is cited, and there it is expressly said, that that Surrender was not thought good, till confirmed by Act of Parliament.

And as for the other Case, Dyer 282. of the Surrender of the Dean and Chapter of St. Patrick, the Opinion of the Judges there given is, by all the Judges, 3 Car. 1. in the Case of Hayward and Fulcher, in Jones 168. denied to be Law, and said to be a private Resolution. So that these two Cases in Dyer having been by those latter Authorities denied, remain no Authorities. And as for the other Authority, viz. The Opinion of Justice Jones 168. that a Corporation may be dissolved by a proper Act, viz. by Resignation, that is true, taken in the Sense he speaks it: It is spoken of a Dean and Chapter resigning to the Ordinary, viz. the Dean resigning his Place of Dean, and the Prebendaries of the Chapter resigning their Prebends to the Ordinary, whereby their Churches and Prebends became void, and to be supplied by the respective Patron, collating or presenting, as in Cases of Resignation, by any Parson or Vicar to his Ordinary. But this is nothing of a Surrender of the Body Politick to the King, and thereby dissolving the Corporation, and destroying all Supply, by new Presentments or Collations. And this appears by the very Words of Justice Jones there; for when he saith, they may be dissolved by a proper Act, viz. by Resignation; the next Words are, or by Death of the whole Corporation, and the King being Patron, it is in his Election whether he will collate de novo, or not, and till he collates the Corporation is in suspense; but if the Bishop be Patron, then the Bishop, upon the Resignation, hath Power to collate, and thereby to continue the Corporation: So that it is very plain, that the Resignation he speaks of is not meant for any Surrender to the King, or any thing that determines the Corporation, except the Patron will not collate, and thereby suffer the Corporation to cease; but on the contrary, that a Corporation cannot be dissolved by any Surrender.

The Suppression and Dissolution of the Abbeyes, Priories and Monasteries, by H. 8. was no Dissolution of their Bodies Politick. Br. Extinguishment, 75. Br. Corporation, 78. Davies, Rep. 1. Moore's Rep. 282. Though their Houses and all the Possessions were gone, and the Persons either discharged of their Orders, or sent into other Houses; yet resolved, that the Corporations remained. And it can scarce be imagined, but in some of those Cases it would have been practised, or at least something said about surrendering their Body Politick, if it had been then thought surrenderable. But the Case of the Dean and Chapter of Norwich, Rep. 3. 41 Eliz. before-cited, and the Case of Hayward and Fulcher before-mentioned in 3 Car. 1. Jones, 168. Palm. Rep. 500, 501. Anderf. 2. 120. have been cited as Judgments against Surrenders by all the Judges of the King's Bench. The Case was, That the Dean and Chapter of Norwich, 3 Junii, 1 E. 6. surrendered to the King their Cathedral Church, and all their Manors, Lands, Tenements, Hereditaments, Franchises, and Liberties, Spiritual and Temporal, by whatsoever Names they are known, or which they have or ought to have in the Right of their Church. And by the Case 41 Eliz. Co. Rep. 3. 74. and the Opinion of all the Judges of the King's Bench, 3 Car. 1. adjudged, that this was no Surrender of the Corporation.

They object, That the Words of the Surrender do not shew any Intent to surrender the Corporation, but only the Possessions.

I answer, The Being of a Corporation is a Franchise or Liberty; and there is an express Surrender of all Franchises and Liberties, Spiritual and Temporal, by what Name soever known, which they have in the Right of their Church: And this was a Spiritual Franchise, which they had in Right of their Church.

Next, this Surrender was made with Intent to dissolve the Corporation, and to have a new one erected: This appears by the new Charter of Erection, made in November following; which recites the Surrender made to that Intent. It is not any-where in the many Arguments of that Case alledged, that there wanted Words in the Surrender to do it, which would have been, if that had been the Ground of their Judgment.

In the Case cited out of Dyer 282. there the Words of the Surrender were, that they surrendered their Church, Houses, Lands, and Possessions, which are not half so large and ample Words as in this Surrender are contained; and the other Side cite that as an Authority, to prove a Corporation surrendered, and admit the Words there sufficient, and deny them to be sufficient here, though much more large, express, and general. The arguing there in Palmer 501. that it is against the Nature and Constitution of Corporations, that by the Words put in their Charters, by their very Constitution, are to have perpetual Succession, perpetuis Temporibus duratur, and which by their Oaths they are sworn to preserve, or they should be Felo de se. And the express Words of the Judges reported in these Books shew their Opinion, that the Corporation could not be surrendered. Jones 168. Dodderidge Justice, there saith, that the Dean and Chapter cannot surrender their Corporation. Palm. 501. Whitlock Inst. there saith, For that the Dean and Chapter are Counsel to the Bishop instituted to that Purpose, they cannot dissolve themselves; for the Publick Corporation is the Soul to the Body, that cannot be granted or severed; though the King can create a Corporation, he cannot dissolve it. And Jones Inst. there 502. saith, that the Dean and Chapter were Counsel to the Bishop, and cannot destroy themselves; if they could, great Inconvenience thereby will ensue to the Church.

THE INFORMATION.

London ff. BE it remember'd, that Robert Sawyer, Knight, Attorney-General of our Lord the King, who for our said Lord the King in this behalf prosecuteth, cometh into Court in his proper Person on Friday next after fifteen Days of the Holy Trinity, in this same Term, and for our said Lord the King doth give the Court here to understand and be informed, that the Four-and-twentieth Day of June, in the Four-and-thirtieth Year of his now Majesty's Reign, at the Guild-hall of the City of London, a certain Court for assembling the Citizens and Freemen of the City of London, called a Common-hall, being summoned and called by Sir John Moore, Knight, then and yet Mayor of the City of London, was in a lawful Manner held before the said Sir John Moore, Knight, Mayor of the City aforesaid, as well for the due Election of Sheriffs of the City aforesaid, for the Execution of the Office of Sheriff of the said City for one whole Year, next following after the Vigil of the Feast of St. Michael then and yet next coming, as for the Election of divers other Officers of the said City: And that then and there in the said Court it was begun to take the Poll of the Electors then and there present, for the making known of the Election of the Persons to serve in the Office of Sheriffs of the said City, for the Year aforesaid. And that the said Sir John Moore, Knight, Mayor of the said City, afterwards the said 24th Day of June, in the 24th Year aforesaid, at Guild-hall of the said City of London, (to wit) in the Parish of St. Michael Bassishaw, London, in a lawful Manner did make and cause to be made Proclamation for the Adjourning of the said Court so as aforesaid held, and then and there did adjourn the said Court until Tuesday then next following, to be held at the Guild-hall of the said City of London; and then and there after the said Adjournment, so as aforesaid made, the said Sir John Moore, Knight, Mayor of the said City of London, did make and cause to be made publick Proclamation for the Departure of all Persons upon the said Occasion there assembled: And further the said Attorney-General doth give the Court to understand and be informed, That Thomas Pilkington, late of London, Esq; and Samuel Shute, late of London, Esq; then Sheriffs of the said City of London, and Henry Cornish, late of London, Esq; Ford Grey of Werk, &c. the said Premises sufficiently knowing, but being ill disposed Persons, and devising and intending to disquiet, molest and trouble the Peace of our said Lord the King, and the common Tranquillity of this Kingdom of England, they the said Thomas Pilkington and Samuel Shute, under Colour of the Office of Sheriffs of the said City of London, and the said Henry Cornish, Ford Lord Grey, and others afterwards, and after the Adjournment aforesaid, (to wit) the said 24th Day of June, in the 34th Year aforesaid, at the Parish of St. Michael Bassishaw, London, aforesaid, in the said Guild-hall, there with Force and Arms, riotously, routously, unlawfully, and seditiously, did assemble, congregate, and unite themselves with very many other ill-disposed Persons, and Breakers of the Peace of our said Lord the King, to the Number of One Thousand Persons, to the said Attorney-General of our said Lord the King as yet unknown, to disturb the Peace of our said Lord the King; and being so assembled, congregated, and united, then and there with Force and Arms, &c. riotously, routously, and unlawfully, in and upon the said Sir John Moore, Knight, Mayor of the City aforesaid, in the Peace of God, and our said Lord the King, then and there being, did make an Assault and Affray, and him the said Sir John Moore, Knight, then and there did beat, wound, and evil-intreat, so that of his Life it was greatly despaired; and after the Adjournment aforesaid, and Proclamation so as aforesaid made by the said Sir John Moore, Knight, Mayor of the said City, they the said Thomas Pilkington and Samuel Shute, then and there by Colour of their Office of Sheriffs of the said City of London, and the said Henry Cornish, Ford Lord Grey, &c. with divers other Persons to the said Attorney-General of our said Lord the King as yet unknown, unlawfully and seditiously aiding and assisting the said Thomas Pilkington and Samuel Shute with Force and Arms, &c. riotously, routously, and unlawfully, did there continue to take the Poll of the Persons so then and there unlawfully assembled, as if the said Persons had been lawfully assembled for the Election of Sheriffs of the said City; and that the said Thomas Pilkington, Samuel Shute, Henry Cornish, &c. then and there unlawfully, tumultuously, and seditiously, did affirm, and every one of them did affirm, say, and with a loud Voice to the said ill-disposed Persons affirm, that the said Sir John Moore, Knight, Mayor of the said City of London, did unlawfully and unjustly assume upon himself the Liberty to adjourn the said Court, which did not belong to him: And that the said Thomas Pilkington, Samuel Shute, Henry Cornish, &c. then and there, the said unlawful and ill-disposed Persons, so as aforesaid, assembled and congregated with Force and Arms, riotously, routously, unlawfully, and seditiously, by the Space of three Hours, to disturb the Peace of our said Lord the King, and to commit the Riot aforesaid, did stir up, move, persuade, procure, and then and there by the whole Time aforesaid in Guild-hall, London, aforesaid, in the Parish aforesaid, great Rumours, Cries, Hollowings, and terrible and unwonted Noises, with Force and Arms, &c. riotously, routously, unlawfully, tumultuously and seditiously, did make and cause to be made, and did stir up, in Contempt of our said Lord the King, and the manifest Disturbance and Violation of his Laws and his Peace, to the great Danger of stirring up and moving of a Tumult, and the Spilling of much Blood there, to the great Terror, Trouble, and Fear of all his Majesty's Liege-people, Subjects of our said Lord the King, to the ill Example of all others in the like Case offending; and against the Peace of our said Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, &c. Whereupon the said Attorney-General of our said Lord the King, for our said Lord the King, prayeth the Advice of the Court in the Premises, and due Process of Law against the said Thomas Pilkington, Samuel Shute, Henry Cornish, Ford Lord Grey, &c. in this Behalf to be made to answer our said Lord the King, of and in the Premises, &c.

To this Information the Defendants had pleaded Not Guilty.

Cryer. YOU Good Men of Nisi-Prius, summoned to appear here this Day, between our Sovereign Lord the King, and Thomas Pilkington, and others, Defendants; Answer to your Names, and save your Issues.

The Jury appeared.

Mr. Sommers. My Lord, I am to challenge the Array.

Mr. Thompson. My Lord, I desire this Challenge may be read.

The Challenge read in French.

L. C. J. * Gentlemen, I am sorry you should have so bad an Opinion of me, as to be so little a Lawyer not to know this is but a Trifle, and nothing in't. Pray, Gentlemen, don't put these things upon me.

Mr. Thompson. I desire it may be read, my Lord.

L. C. J. You would not have done this before another Judge: You would not have done it, if Sir Matthew Hale had been here.

Mr. Thompson. My Lord, I believe if there had been nothing in it, it would not have been signed.

† Sir Robert Sawyer. Mr. Att. Gen. † Very few but Mr. Thompson would urge it.

Mr. Thompson. I don't know whether you think so, or not, Mr. Attorney; but I have a great deal to offer, if you please to answer it. We offer our Challenge in point of Law.

L. C. J. There is no Law in it.

Mr. Thompson. We desire it may be read in English.

L. C. J. Why? Do you think I don't understand it? This is only to tickle the People.

The Challenge read by the Clerk accordingly.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Here's a Tale of a Tub, indeed!

L. C. J. Ay, it is nothing else; and I wonder Lawyers would put such a Thing upon me.

Mr. Thompson. My Lord, we desire this Challenge may be allowed.

L. C. J. No, indeed won't I, there is no Colour for it; and I am apt to think, there are not many Lawyers in England would have put such a Thing upon me: Because I am willing to hear any thing, and where there is any Colour of Law, I am not willing to do amiss: Therefore you think I am now become so very weak, you may put any thing upon me; without you think I was always so, and therefore may be so at this Time. For, pray now consider, if so be the King's Counsel should come and plead this Challenge, what would be the Consequence of it? I thought you would have said, that the Sheriffs had been a-kin to the King, but you have made it worse. You do come with a long Tale here of the whole Merits of the Cause, and more than yet doth appear; and by this you would have the Challenge to be allowed: In such a Case a Man may come and tell a Tale of the Merits of the Cause, and then it must be tried by the Challenge. If the Sheriffs do return an Inquest for the King, and the Sheriffs do hold of the King a Fee-farm, or have a Pension or an Annuity from the King, the Book doth say, that in some Cases it is a Challenge; for though they cannot be challenged as being favourable for the King, yet for those Reasons they may be challenged. But what is here? Here you tell a long Process concerning a Difference between the Mayor and the Sheriffs, and all this Matter is wrapp'd up all together; and if all this were true, it is no Challenge at all.

Mr. Thompson. We shall speak with all Submission to your Judgment, my Lord.—Good, Mr. Attorney, give me Leave.

Mr. Attorney General. I move for you.

Mr. Thompson. If you please, you may move for yourself; I don't need you to move for me. My Lord, with Submission, the Information is not good: My Lord, it is an Information that doth set forth, that my Lord Mayor had Right of Adjourning the Poll, when an Election is to be for Sheriffs. My Lord, if he had not that Right, it can be no Riot according to this Information. My Lord, upon his Adjourning, Mr. Sheriff North was chosen: My Lord, if that Adjournment was not according to Law, Mr. Sheriff North never was Sheriff of London; then, my Lord, here is the Case in this Question of Title, for Mr. North doth come in Question, Whether he be a legal Sheriff of London?

L. C. J. Prove to me now that of Sheriff North; Pray what Annuity, Pension, or Fee-farm hath he as Sheriff of London, whereby he is concerned?

Mr. Thompson. My Lord, there are other Reasons which I shall shew to you; and the first Reason, my Lord, in this Case, is this; it will appear the Election of Mr. North is interested in this Matter; and Sir John Moore had not an Opportunity to adjourn the Poll, Mr. North was not chosen duly Sheriff; now, if the Sheriff's Choice come in Question in point of Right, it is a good Challenge.

L. C. J. In point of Profit it might be so, and not in all Cases neither; for he that holds Lands in Capite of the King, cannot be challenged for all that.

Mr. Thompson. I think, my Lord, this is a common Case in our Books, That if in case a Sheriff be concerned in point of Title, this is a principal Challenge, because that he is interested in that Title, he is no Person by Law to return a Jury. I don't doubt but your Lordship will do that which is right, and according to Law. My Lord, I say, where a Sheriff is interested in point of Title, he is no Person by Law to return a Jury, and this Question will appear plainly upon this Information; for if in case this was not a lawful Adjournment by Sir John Moore, this is not a lawful Return—Gentlemen, my Lord, I know, will hear me, if you have but Patience; I always speak and stand up for my Clients as I ought to do. If you please to let me have Liberty, I have my Lord's. If a Sheriff be concerned in point of Title, it is a principal Challenge, and the Sheriff ought not to return the Jury, but the Coroner: And, my Lord, much more in this Case; for that the very Title to the Office of Sheriff is here in Question, and therefore he is no Person fit to return this Jury, my Lord. We desire your Lordship's Opinion.

L. C. J. Mr. Thompson, Methinks you have found out an Invention, that the King should never have Power to try it even so long as the World stands. Say you, Sheriff North is not a right Sheriff, Who should have been? Why, say you, Dubois and Papillon, or one, or both of them. Now the King he hath brought his Suit for a Riot.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. And an Assault and Battery upon Sir John Moore.

Mr. Thompson. That is a Fiction.

L. C. J. The King hath brought his Suit, and brought it to an Issue. Why now, if so be this Challenge should have any thing in it, then the King must have challenged North, and what must he have done then? Why, for Papillon and Dubois, they are not Sheriffs in actu, then, say you, the Coroner. Pray, Mr. Thompson, if so be the King had made the Venire either to Papillon or Dubois, or to the Coroner: Whether or no had not the Cause been found against the King, before one Word had been said actually for him? You say the Question is, Whether he be a Sheriff or not? If the King had challenged him, and made the Venire to the Coroner, for God's sake, Had not that made an End of the Question?

Mr. Thompson. No, my Lord, not at all.

L. C. J. Now? Then I understand nothing.

Mr. Thompson. My Lord, if the Sheriff appear to be concern'd, it doth not determine the Cause.

L. C. J. But it does by your own Opening now. You say the Question is, for which you do now challenge the Array, because it is returned by Sir Dudley North, supposed to be one of the Sheriffs, and tell the whole Process, how that in Truth it is a Question whether he be a Sheriff or not; and therefore, say you, or you say nothing, that the Venire should not go to North.

Mr. Thompson. No, my Lord, I pray, good my Lord—

L. C. J. Should it have gone to Dudley North, and then have been challenged for him?

Mr. Thompson. No, I beseech your Lordship, we do not say so. My Lord, we say, That whereas they do charge in the Information, that there was an Assembly for the Election of Sheriffs, and that Sir John Moore being then Mayor, did lawfully, according to Law, adjourn this Assembly; and that afterwards the Defendants, Pilkington and Shute, did continue this Assembly, and took a Poll, and so they would make this a Riot in the Continuance of it: My Lord, we do say this, That the Election of Mr. North upon this Point doth come in Question; and my Lord, we do say, That if that be not a legal Adjournment, then Mr. North is not legally chosen.

L. C. J. Right, now you have told it in more Words.

Mr. Thompson. We say, If the Election be interested, they are all Parties by Law.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Who would you have the Process go to?

Mr. Thompson. To the Coroner.

L. C. J. Very well, upon my Word. If he were Sheriff, it cannot go to the Coroner, you know, and therefore if he were challenged, to go to the Coroner—

Mr. Thompson

Mr. Thompson. Sub judice lis est, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. We desire for the King, that the Challenge may be over-ruled.

L. C. J. Ay, ay.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. I desire the Jury may be sworn.

Mr. Williams. Certainly if they be impanelled by Persons that are not Sheriffs, that is a good Challenge, that is admitted by every body; now we have made a Challenge, and that is a good Cause of Challenge certainly, if that were the Cause. But now, my Lord, I must confess what your Lordship says, it is a difficult Matter to challenge any Array, because they are arrayed by a Person that hath an Interest, or some such thing that is a Challenge of the Array, but that is not the Matter in this Case. It cannot be denied, if these Persons were not Sheriffs of London, that that is a good Cause. I take the Result of the Challenge to be this: Say we, the principal Question of this Information, the Riot, will depend upon this Question, Whether there were a regular Adjournment or not? There, say we, begins the Question of the Riot. If so be that my Lord Mayor of London that was, had Power to adjourn the Court, and it be admitted a regular Adjournment, certainly the Riot would follow, and what follows then? Then comes on a Question, and it is immediately consequent upon it, That these Gentlemen be actual Sheriffs of London, they being actually chosen upon this Adjournment, they are actually Sheriffs: But if really my Lord Mayor had no Power to adjourn, and that Power was in the Sheriffs, that they were actually taking the Poll, and the Poll was for Mr. Dubois and Mr. Papillon: Then the Question is, if so be the Adjournment by my Lord Mayor were not a good Adjournment, then the Poll was a regular Poll taken by the Sheriffs, then consequently those that were elected upon that were truly chosen, and then it is a right Challenge. These Gentlemen, I must confess, they are Sheriffs de facto; but we know very well there may be Sheriffs de facto, and there may be other Sheriffs de jure, these Things are very consistent. If so be that Mr. Papillon and Dubois be duly elected, they are Sheriffs de jure, but they want the Formality, for they are not sworn, and cannot return a Jury. On the other side, the Sheriffs are Sheriffs de facto, but not legally chosen, and the Riot will depend upon that Question, of the other Persons that are Sheriffs de facto and not de jure. This we suggest in this, Whether your Lordship will receive this challenge, or whether your Lordship will proceed first to the Trial of the Cause, and let this follow. My Lord, Might not there have been something in this Case upon the Roll at Westminster? Might there not have been a Surmise to this Purpose, because there is such a Question upon the Roll? For it appears, that the Common Hall was for the Election of Sheriffs, and that it was adjourn'd by the Mayor: And what follow'd? Might there not be such a Surmise, that the Venire facias should not go to the Sheriffs, but to the Coroner? Might there not have been such a thing?

L. C. J. My Speech is but bad: Let me know what Objection is made, and if I can but retain it in my Memory, I don't question but to give you Satisfaction. If the King had brought an Information against Mr. Sheriff North, and charged him with a Crime, there is no manner of Question, that the King should have challenged as he was a Sheriff, and sent the Venire to the Coroner, or other Officer; here he is not accused, nor to be acquitted, of any Crime. Gentlemen, I put you upon this, if so be that the Sheriff of London should get a great deal of Money, (but I never understood, that he got by it) if you prove, that he hath got any considerable Matter by the Office, it would be something in the Case, that he should be greedy of the Office. But look ye, on the other Side, if there be nothing in it one way or another, that there is Profit accruing to him by the Office, what can the Law say? But here was the Question between, indeed and in truth as you do open it, between the Mayor, Sir John Moore, I think, and the Sheriffs that then were, that was the Question between them. Now what is this in point of Law, that the Sheriffs must be challenged? They must be challenged, because it is return'd by these Sheriffs: You can't say the Sheriffs do favour—the King.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we trouble your Lordship about a Question very unnecessary: The Sheriff is not concerned in this Question, neither can the Consequences affect the Sheriff any way.

Sir Fr. Winn. My Lord, if I don't shew that he is concern'd, notwithstanding what Mr. Solicitor says, it is another matter. If this had been upon a common Riot, and not related to the Election of Sheriffs, it would have been harder against us. I only offer a Word or two, and submit to your Lordship. This Information doth take notice of the Election of Sheriffs, and of an Irregularity in disturbing the late Lord Mayor about adjourning the Poll; I do believe, my Lord, it will not be deny'd, but that in this Cause a Riot or no Riot will depend upon the Poll, or the Mayor's adjourning. If that be so, that which your Lordship is pleas'd to urge, That the Sheriff gets nothing, yet that he hath assumed the Office de facto, appears by the Return, that is very plain, my Lord, he hath assumed it, and did exercise it. If it appear to be legal or illegal upon the Adjournment by the Mayor, then it must have one of these two Consequences. My Lord, I humbly conceive, till the Sheriffalty had been agreed, it would have done very well for Mr. Attorney to let this Riot alone, unless he would have made it a common Riot; if he would have been pleas'd to stay till the Law had determin'd who had been the right Sheriffs, then Process would have gone for the King. And, my Lord, there is another Thing under Favour: If Mr. Attorney had been pleas'd to prosecute for the King, then surely, my Lord, there was a Way to lay it so that the Process should be returned by Persons uninterested, and not by the Sheriff whose Election is in Controversy: I don't argue out of the Record, but by the Record itself. If in case it doth appear still to be under Consideration; if that be so, I do humbly conceive, because that Right of Election of Sheriffs is undetermined, that therefore he might have made the Process to the Coroner, if he would have made it before; but it should not be heard before the Election of the Sheriffs, because it will be a Riot, or not a Riot, upon that.

L. C. J. Good now, Sir Francis, you mistake, it could not be to the Coroner.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, it is but wearying your Lordship to no Purpose.

Mr. Wallop. If he be not Sheriff, that Title of his depending upon my Lord Mayor's Adjournment, which is reasonably set forth, it is concerning the Consequence of the Cause.

Mr. Att. Gen. If you please, my Lord, I will answer what hath been said: Mr. Thompson did first urge according to the Rules of Law, if the Matter that appears upon the Record be the Thing in Question; that if the Sheriff be interested in that Matter, that that is a good Cause of Challenge. That is a good Rule, and the Law is so; but that is nothing to this Purpose; my Lord, here upon the Record there is nothing in question but a Fine for the King, nothing to be recovered: Where Lands are in question, as in an Ejectment, if the Sheriff be interested in that Land, in that case that is a good Challenge; but here appears nothing by the Record, here is nothing in question but a Fine for the King; so that certainly that Case, in point of Law, is nothing to the Purpose. Then they say it appears in the Record by Recital, and in the Information, for that is the Substance of all they say: It doth appear there, as it is said, that the Mayor did adjourn the Court, and so the Question of the Riot will very much stand upon the Validity of that Adjournment. But it doth not wholly stand upon that; for there are many outrageous Actions, Assaults of the Mayor, throwing off his Hat, great Clamours; thrusting and pressing many of the Aldermen; nay, bruising them; so that this Riot, notwithstanding the Adjournment, be that as it will, will appear, in the Uphold of the Cause, to be a Riot, notwithstanding that Question. But in the second Place, the Question of Mr. North's being a Sheriff, or not a Sheriff, no ways depends upon this Adjournment, no Pretence of the Title depends upon that; so, my Lord, they have suggested a Thing that is foreign to the Record; it depends purely that, upon a Custom of the City for my Lord Mayor to elect, not upon the Power of my Lord Mayor's Adjournment; for after that they proceeded on with the former Choice of Mr. Papillon and Mr. Dubois; so that whether that Adjournment be a good Adjournment, or no good Adjournment, his Title will depend upon that, whether at the second Meeting or no Mr. Papillon and the other Gentleman be well chosen, and Mr. North not well chosen; so that his Title doth not depend upon this Question one way or other. But, my Lord, that which makes this as frivolous a Thing as ever was urged in a Court of Law, my Lord, that it should have been upon Rule before any Direction to the Sheriff or Coroner, if they would have had Process; they have suggested Matter of Fact wholly out of the Record, Matters have been suggested, that it might have been tried before it came to Direction; now there appears nothing in the Record to bring a Challenge to try the Matter; nay, as they themselves say, it is to try the Merits of the whole Information, that the Information depends upon that Question, Whether the Mayor may adjourn? It is a great Usurpation upon the Government of this City, as they have done in other Things to the King. My Lord Mayor is the Supreme Magistrate here, and the Sheriffs have nothing to do in this Point, and therefore I pray it may be over-ruled, and that the Jury may be sworn.

Mr. Thompson. We would have, my Lord, the Benefit of a Bill of Exceptions.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Swear the Jury, swear the Jury.

Mr. Thompson. I have another Challenge.

L. C. J. I tell you plainly, I see nothing in it for a Bill of Exceptions.

Mr. Thompson. We desire we may have the Benefit of a Bill of Exceptions. My Lord, if this be the Case of trying a Riot, we must take what Advantage we can in point of Law.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. We come to counsel the King, as we ought to do, by Law.

Mr. Thompson. My Lord, I challenge, on the behalf of my Lord Grey, this Jury.

[Challenge read.]

Seignior Grey.

Mr. Att. Gen. They call that a Newgate Challenge.

Mr. Wallop. That was a Challenge taken at the Old Bailey.

Mr. Thompson. And over-ruled.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. And I pray it may be so here.

L. C. J. I think your Challenge is, that they are not Sheriffs?

Mr. Thompson. My Lord, Is the Fact true or false? I desire of these Gentlemen, if it be insufficient in point of Law, let them demur.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Pray tell me, Robin Hood upon Greendale flood; and therefore you must not demur to it.

Mr. Thompson. If the Challenge be not good, there must be a Defect in it either in point of Law, or in point of Fact. I desire, on the Behalf of my Lord Grey, this Challenge may be allowed.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. And I pray for the King, that it may be over-ruled.

L. C. J. I think you have owned them to be Sheriffs already.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. My Lord Grey did own it in his Challenge, because there were no Knights.

L. C. J. We try a great many Nisi-Prius here sometimes, two or three Days after the Term, every Defendant, that thinks it goes hard with him, we must have a Trial still, whether the Sheriffs be Sheriffs, or no? This that you have done now, may be done in every Cause that we may be trying. Upon your Evidence if you can prove them none, you go a great way.

Mr. Thompson. My Lord, we desire the Challenge may be allowed, or otherwise a Bill of Exceptions. My Lord, we pray a Bill of Exceptions.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. This Discourse is only for Discourse sake; I pray the Jury may be sworn.

L. C. J. Ay, ay, swear the Jury.

Sir Benjamin Newland, &c. sworn.

Mr. Thompson. We challenge Mr. Fensil; he hath given Evidence in this Cause at the Council-Table.

L. C. J. What then?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, they shall have all fair.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney says he won't stand upon it.

Mr. Thompson. My Lord, we pray a Bill of Exceptions.

L. C. J. I think many would not have offer'd it besides you. Shall I go and sign a Bill of Exceptions, to let all the World know this is so, and so all the World must try whether they be Sheriffs of London?

Mr. Thompson. My Lord, don't say so; for I think all the Counsel in the Court would.

L. C. J. If it doth fall out, that in truth they don't happen to be Sheriffs, surely you shall have all the Advantage that can be for you; but pray don't think, that I will put off a Trial upon every Suggestion that the Sheriffs are not Sheriffs. You shall have all that is Law by the Grace of God, and I am not afraid, that you or any Man should say, I don't do Justice; I am not bound to gratify every Man's Humour; I am to do according to my Conscience, and the best of my Knowledge, and according to my Oath; and I will do that, and gratify no Man.

Cryer, O yes, O yes, O yes, If any Man can inform my Lord the King's Justice, the King's Serjeant, or the King's Attorney, or this Inquest now to be taken, &c.

Mr. Dolbin. May it please your Lordship, and you, Gentlemen of the Jury, this is an Information brought by the King against Thomas Pilkington, &c.

Gentlemen, the Information sets forth, That upon the 24th of June last, in Guildhall, there was a Common Hall summon'd by Sir John Moore, Knight, and thereupon held for the Election of Sheriffs for the Year then ensuing the Feast of St. Michael: And that on the same 24th of June, Sir John Moore, then Mayor, adjourn'd the Court till the Tuesday following by Proclamation. That after the said Adjournment, my Lord Mayor made Proclamation for all Persons to depart; and that the Defendants, intending to disturb the Peace of the King after the Adjournment aforesaid, did unlawfully, with many Persons unknown, meet together, and riotously assault the Lord Mayor. And after the Adjournment by Proclamation, two of the Defendants, Pilkington and Shute, by Colour of their Office as Sheriffs of this City, and the rest of the Defendants, did continue the Poll, and unlawfully affirm to the People, That Sir John Moore had no Power to adjourn them. And that they continued this great Tumult three Hours, to the Terror of the King's Subjects, and the evil Example of others, and against the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King. To this the Defendants have pleaded Not Guilty, &c.

Mr. Att. Gen. This Information, my Lord, is brought for settling the Peace in this City, and to shew before you all, who is the Supreme Magistrate under the King in this City; for that, Gentlemen, you see, is grown a great Question, Whether my Lord Mayor is not only in the Hall, but in his Chair, the Supreme Magistrate?

Gentlemen, I must acquaint you, that my Lord Mayor in all Times, even before the City had the Election of him, was the King's Lieutenant, and the Supreme Magistrate in the City, and no publick Assemblies could ever meet together without his Summons; he was the great and chief Director, and this I believe in all your Observations that are of the Jury, I can make it evident, that this hath been the constant Frame of this Government in the City: For the Sheriffs, Gentlemen, they are no Corporation Officers, they are County Officers, as in all the Counties of England, and they are the King's Officers for the Execution of the King's Writs, and the Preservation of the King's Peace; but the Government of the Corporation is in the Mayor, and not in the Sheriffs. Gentlemen, the Question now arising here, is about the Election of Sheriffs; it's true there were very disorderly tumultuous Proceedings; my Lord Mayor he comes and doth appoint another Day for them, and discharges them at that Time. We will make appear to you, that it was always his Right in all Times, both to summon a Common Hall, and dissipate it, and appoint them another Day, or to dissolve them, as the Mayor did see Cause. The Mayor having, according to the ancient Manner, adjourned this Court, the Sheriffs they proceed; do not only refuse to obey, but they proceed, and make Proclamation, that it is not in the Power of the Mayor, taking upon them that which never any Sheriffs did in any Time; they make Proclamation contrary to what the Mayor had done, and continue the Poll, and proceed and proclaim the Mayor had usurped that Power which was their's, tho' afterwards they transferr'd the Supreme Power to the Liverymen; but I think no Age will suffer, that the Supreme Power should be in the Liverymen, that are expressly appointed to act by a Common Council, which is indeed the Representative of the whole City. But this, Gentlemen, being done by the Sheriffs having usurped the Power of the Mayor, they did proceed in a riotous Manner; when the Mayor attempted to go out of the Hall, they struck him, struck his Hat off, and pressed several of the Aldermen; the Evidence will make out in what an outrageous Manner it was carried on. If the others had made Opposition, how soon had all been in Confusion upon this Usurpation, that the Sheriffs had set up for themselves, that they are the Delegates of the People, and must appear to be the Supreme Magistrates of the City of London! I think the Citizens themselves will never endure, that those that are but County Officers, should ever invade the Government of the Corporation. Gentlemen, we will shew you the Particulars of this, and you have nothing to inquire after, but whether they are Guilty of the Riot or no?

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we will call our Witnesses, and prove our Case by these Steps. For the Question, That whether or no the Defendants in the Information were guilty of a Riot, in continuing the Assembly after my Lord Mayor had adjourn'd them, we will prove it by these Steps, that it is in the Power of the Lord Mayor to call a Common Hall, and adjourn the Common Hall; That, my Lord, when the Common Hall was assembled for the Purpose of electing Sheriffs, that he did adjourn the Common Hall; and that contrary to his Adjournment the Sheriffs continued it, declaring my Lord Mayor had no Right so to do; and that afterwards my Lord Mayor commanded them to depart, and they continued their Assembly there in a very riotous Manner; and as my Lord Mayor came down, they offer'd Insolencies to his Person, and they continued the Assembly there in a riotous Manner, and commanded the Sheriffs that did assert their Right, following them in a riotous Manner into Cheapside, crying out in a factious Manner, God bless the Protestant Sheriffs.

Mr. Serj. Jeffries. My Lord, we would begin with our Witnesses; but for the Gentlemen of the Jury, which I think are Men that belong to the City, and that the thing may be very intelligible, I beg Leave to acquaint your Lordship with the Methods that have always been proceeded in, in Choices of this Nature. My Lord, we will make it appear, and I think it will not be doubted by any Man that knows the City of London, that Common Halls are always summon'd to appear by the Intimation of the Mayor, of the Mayor himself, at any Time when he finds an Occasion, either for the assembling of a Common Council, or the assembling of a Common Hall, &c. Precepts are issued; they are Words that you, Gentlemen, do understand very well, to summon a Common Hall from time to time. It is very true, tho' they do usually make Summons for Midsummer-Day, yet Midsummer-Day being a publick and notorious Day for the Choice of some particular Persons, they are not so continually exact in Summons; for they do presume, that every body takes Notice of the Day. But I am to give your Lordship an Account: Whereas in the Record there is only Notice taken concerning the Sheriffs on Midsummer-Day, it is notoriously known to all Gentlemen that are Inhabitants in London, there is a Choice of Chamberlain, and Auditors of the Bridge-house and Chamber-accounts, down to Ale-conners; and that the Sheriffs of London, qua Sheriffs of London, are no more in the Case than any private Man is. I do take Notice of this, to give you an Account, that as soon as these Officers are dispatched, I myself had the Honour to serve the City some Time, and know it very well; therefore I take the Liberty to explain it to some of these Gentlemen that are Foreigners. My Lord, as soon as ever this is done, (as it was frequent before People were so ambitious to come into the Office of Sheriffs, as they have been within two or three Years; for it was not known, till of late, that People were fond of the Office; there is a Term they use, To go a Blding, as they call it, they did not seek for the Office, as they have done of late) when there was any Person came off from serving, that is, paid a Fine of 400 l. for coming off; then the usual Method was to call another Common Hall; for they never made Application to Mr. Sheriff, Good Mr. Sheriff, let us have a Common Hall: But the common way, was in time of Vacation, (for in August, there are no such things as Courts of Aldermen held; Courts are not then held, except the Sheriffs Court) then to go to my Lord Mayor's House, and he appoints them to come to a Common Hall, a Meeting for to choose such and such: He orders the Sword-bearer, or other Officer that is Attendant upon his Person in his House, to send forth Summons, in order to such a Thing as the assembling a Common Hall, and there may be sometimes but one Sheriff there; nay, I have known it sometimes when there hath been never a Sheriff, and yet they have not thought they have wanted a Judge of that Assembly: But, my Lord, when all the Matter is over, and Persons are declared to be chosen into this or that, or the other Office in the Common Hall, then an Officer in the City, not an Officer of the Sheriffs, but an Officer which is called by the Name of the Common Cryer, he makes Proclamation upon the Hufings, where my Lord Mayor is Judge, for all Gentlemen to depart for that Time, and to give their Attendance there to another Summons. And now, my Lord, to make the thing a little more intelligible, there is a Difference between the Choice of the County Officers and the Corporation Officers; for at the Election of City Officers, the Common Serjeant, the Common Cryer, and Town Clerk, are the Officers that attend and manage the Common Hall, where my Lord Mayor is looked upon to be the Superintendent; but at the Election of Parliament-men, the Writ is directed to the Sheriffs, and they interpose in all the Management; and then the Common Serjeant and Common Cryer have nothing to do; but at such times, the Secondaries of the Compter, which are Deputies to the Sheriffs, they come and manage the whole Affair. This I tell you, because I have been pretty well acquainted with the Methods of the City. I do very well remember I had the Honour to serve the City of London, at that Time Sir Robert Clayton was Lord Mayor; and there was a great Occasion to try a Person about the Assassination of Mr. Arnold; and the Question was, Whether they should proceed to a Poll or not? because they were to go to the Sessions-House in the Old-Baily, in order to the trying of that Person. That worthy Gentleman being then in the Chair, I had the Honour to sit by him; ordered the Court to be adjourned for a Day or two, because they were to go to the Sessions. There was no asking the Sheriffs Opinion when Sir Robert Clayton was Lord Mayor, nor there was no such thing then; but now the Case was altered, for Sir John Moore was Lord Mayor. Now, my Lord, Sir John Moore, like a good Magistrate, endeavouring to preserve the Privileges of the Chair, there happened a Controversy amongst the Members of the Common Hall, whereby the publick Peace of the Kingdom might have been very much injured, as well as the Peace of the City much disturbed. To prevent which, Sir John Moore, with the Advice of his worthy Brethren the Aldermen, came upon the Hufings, and found they were all in an Uproar, and not cool enough for any Debate; for they were wound up to that Height of Fury or Madness, that they had not a good Word to bestow upon their Magistrates, nor upon him whom their chief Magistrate did represent. For we must tell you, when they cried, Pray God bless the King, as is usual for the Officer upon such Occasions; many cried, No, God bless the Sheriffs, the Protestant Sheriffs. Whereupon my Lord Mayor, for Preservation of the Peace, adjourned the Common Hall, and required the Members to depart and come down off the Hufings: The Rabble, (for by the way, a great many of these Persons in this Information, as Mr. Goodenough, and the rest of them, were not Liverymen, nor concerned in the Election one way or other; but came there on purpose to foment and to raise up the Spirits and malignant Dispositions of a sort of People that are Enemies to the Government; they came to foment Quarrels, and not maintain Peace) my Lord, when my Lord Mayor came off the Hufings, they came upon him, had him down upon his knees, and his Hat off; and if some Gentlemen had not come in, they had trod him under Feet; such an Indignity was then done to the Lord Mayor of London, who, I think I may say, deserved as well from the Government of this City, as any Gentleman that ever presided in that Office, that before had not been heard. My Lord, we will call our Witnesses, to prove the Manner of the Elections to be as I have opened it, and to prove the Matter in the Information.—Call the Common Serjeant and Mr. Lightfoot, the Common Cryer, and the Sword-bearer.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Lightfoot, pray give an Account to the Jury and the Court, of the Manner of Election, and choosing of a Common Hall, and the Manner of it.

Mr. Lightfoot. My Lord, I have been almost 25 Years an Attorney; I always took it, that the Serjeant of the Chamber had Order to go down to the Clerks or Beadles of the Companies, to summon a Common Hall by such a Day.

Mr. Att. Gen. By whose Command?

Mr. Lightfoot. By my Lord Mayor's.

Mr. Att. Gen. In all your Time, did the Sheriffs ever summons any?

Mr. Lightfoot. O, No.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Pray Mr. Lightfoot, thus: When they were met, what was the usual Method?

Mr. Lightfoot. Before the Lord Mayor and Aldermen were set, the People walked up and down the Hall till the Lord Mayor did come; but as soon as my Lord Mayor came, the Common Cryer made Proclamation, O you good Men of the Livery, summoned such a Day for Election, and so draw near, and give your Attendance.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whose officer was the Common Cryer?

Mr. Lightfoot. My Lord Mayor's Officer.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. A Corporation Officer.

Mr. Att. Gen. Now for the dissolving them.

Mr. Lightfoot. When they have done the Business, Mr. Town Clerk, as I take it, takes his Direction from the Lord Mayor, and he bids the Officer make Proclamation; You good Men of the Livery, depart hence for this Time, and appear at a new Summons.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did the Sheriffs ever dissolve them?

Mr. Lightfoot. Never.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did the Common Hall do it?

Mr. Lightfoot. No, there was no such thing.

Mr. Jones. Mr. Lightfoot, after my Lord Mayor had dismiss'd the Hall, did you ever hear the Sheriffs keep them together?

Mr. Lightfoot. All the People went away till within this three or four Years.

Mr. Jones. Since when?

Mr. Lightfoot. Since Mr. Bethel, about that Time.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Ay, in Bethel and Cornish's Time, then began the Bustle.

Mr. Williams. You say you have been an Attorney 25 Years; I would ask you, In all that Time, Mr. Lightfoot, in all that Time, did you ever know the Lord Mayor adjourn the Common Hall to a certain Day?

Mr. Lightfoot. There was never any Occasion.

Mr. Thompson. Answer my Question.

Mr. Lightfoot. I never did.

Sir Fr. Winn. I would ask you another Question, Mr. Lightfoot: Did you ever know, before the Election was over, when the Electors were choosing Sheriffs, or polling, or debating it, did you ever know in the Middle of it, the Mayor, against the Will of the Sheriffs, adjourn it?

Mr. Lightfoot. No, no.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did ever the Sheriffs undertake to keep them together before these late Times?—Mr. Lightfoot. No, never.

Mr. Thompson. Pray, Sir, this: Though it is usual, after the Sheriffs have taken the Poll, to acquaint my Lord Mayor, Did you ever know, that the Sheriffs have adjourn'd the Common Hall without acquainting my Lord Mayor?—Mr. Lightfoot. No.

Mr. Thompson. I ask you one Question more: Do you remember when there was a Poll between Sir Thomas Stamp and another?

Mr. Lightfoot. No, I do not charge my Memory with it.

Mr. Thompson. Do you remember when there was a Poll between Sir Robert Clayton and Mr. Kyffen?—Mr. Lightfoot. I was about the Hall.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Do you remember when there was a Poll between Sir Simon Lewis and Mr. Jenks? Who did manage that Poll?

Mr. Com. Serj. I did.

Mr. Williams. Are you upon your Oath?—Mr. Com. Serj. Yes, I am.

Mr. Lightfoot. When they were gone to the Poll, I went out of the Hall?

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ever look upon it, that the Sheriffs had any thing more to do than others?—Mr. Lightfoot. No.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who were induced to take the Poll? Was it by the Sheriffs, or the Lord Mayor?

Mr. Lightfoot. I have been appointed by my Lord Mayor. I do know, that the Sheriffs have taken upon them to appoint a Poll, and then my Lord appointed his Clerks in the House to be assistant to the Common Serjeant, and the Town Clerk: I never was but in two Polls, one for Mr. Box, and another for my Lord Mayor. One went on with the Poll in one Place, and the other in another.

Mr. Att. Gen. But before that Time, Sir?—Mr. Lightfoot. I know nothing of that, Sir, I was never concerned before.

Mr. Holt. Pray, Sir, who used to manage the Poll before this Time?

Sir Fr. Winn. Mr. Lightfoot, I would ask you a Question: Who managed the Poll before?

Mr. Lightfoot. I have been in a Common Hall when they have been choosing Sheriffs, when several have fined. And it hath been upon the Question, when the Hall hath divided, and they have polled in the Hall.

Sir Fr. Winn. Who polled then?—Mr. Lightfoot. The Sheriffs and the Officers stood and saw them go out, and this is within these few Years.

Sir Fr. Winn. Mr. Lightfoot, I ask you thus: Now in all your Observations, when there was any Contest, who was Sheriff upon the Election, and the Divisions during the Time of Election, and before it, were at an End, who did manage it, the Sheriffs, or the Lord Mayor?

Mr. Lightfoot. When the Court had been proclaimed, and the Recorder had spoken to them, my Lord Mayor and the Aldermen withdrew from the Hustings, and the Sheriffs and other Officers stood there with them; then the Commons proposed who they would have put in Nomination, and they were put up; then the Sheriffs have turned back to the Gentlemen upon the Hustings to ask their Opinions, How are your Opinions concerning the Hands? We do think it goes so; then it hath been declared.

Sir Fr. Winn. By whom?—Mr. Lightfoot. The Common Cryer, or the Common Serjeant.

Sir Fr. Winn. You say, as soon as my Lord Mayor withdrew, during the Time of Election, the two Sheriffs managed the Hall.

Mr. Lightfoot. In that manner with others.

Sir Fr. Winn. Mr. Lightfoot, do you remember who adjourned the Hall, when Mr. Bethel and Mr. Cornish were chosen?—Mr. Lightfoot. I can't tell.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Mr. Common Serjeant, are you sworn?

Mr. Com. Serj. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Pray will you tell my Lord and the Jury what you have observed in particular, because I mentioned it, in the Time of Sir Robert Clayton? Mention how that was.

Mr. Com. Serj. My Lord, when the Common Crier hath made Proclamation, the Lord Mayor and Court of Aldermen being set upon the Hustings, Mr. Recorder makes a Speech; as soon as that is done, my Lord Mayor and the Aldermen retire into this Court, leaving the Sheriffs and me, and the rest of the Officers, upon the Hustings, and I there manage the Election; and when the Election is made, I go up to the Court of Aldermen, and make Report of what hath been done in the Hall. I declare the Election, and I manage the Election, and do it as the Duty of my Place.

Mr. Williams. Who manages the Election?

Mr. Com. Serj. I manage the Election; I declare what is my Opinion of the Election in the Hall; and I come and make Report to my Lord Mayor in this Court; then my Lord Mayor, and the Aldermen, and the Recorder, come down again. I remember particularly when Sir Robert Clayton was Lord Mayor, it was about the Choice of Mr. Bethel and Alderman Cornish, and there was a great Disturbance in the Hall; then I came into the Court, and after I had made my Report, I offer'd to give the Paper to the Recorder that then was, Sir George Jefferies. He told me, That the People would not hear him, and therefore he would not take the Paper. Upon that Sir Robert Clayton said to me, Pr'ythee, do thou speak to them; they will hear thee, if they will hear any body; for the Hall was in a great Uproar, and they call'd to throw me off the Hustings, and then I made Answer to Sir Robert Clayton; Sir, it is not the Duty of my Office, and when I do any thing that is not my Office, I shall expect particular Directions. Then, faith he, you must tell them, I must adjourn them till Monday, because I go to the Old Bailey to try the Assassins of Arnold. Thereupon the Hall was adjourned, and Proclamation made to depart; and my Lord Mayor attempting to go, was beat back twice or thrice, but at last they let him and the Aldermen go, and kept the Sheriffs and me till Evening. At last Mr. Papillon came up to me; Mr. Papillon, says I, I am glad to see you, you will hear Reason. Says he, Why do not you go on with the Poll? I told him, my Lord Mayor had adjourned the Hall. Says he, I did not hear it before; but now you tell me so, I will go out of the Hall. Says I, Sir, you will do very well to tell the Hall so; which he did, and some went away; and further Adjournments were made by the Direction of my Lord Mayor.

Mr. Att. Gen. I would ask you a Question or two: Who do you look upon to be the Chief Magistrate of the City?

Mr. Com. Serj. My Lord Mayor, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, in all your Time till this, was there no Uproar? Did ever any Sheriff undertake to controul the Mayor in the Business of putting Questions, or taking Votes?

Mr. Com. Serj. Sir, there was never any Dispute till Mr. Sheriff Bethel was upon the Hustings, and then there was.

Mr. Att. Gen. As whose Officer did you do it?—Mr. Com. Serj. My Lord Mayor's, and the City of London's; I have nothing to do with the Sheriffs; for when there is a Writ comes for the Choice of Parliament-men, directed to the Sheriffs, I never do it, but Mr. Secondary.

Mr. Att. Gen. I speak of latter Disturbances.

Mr. Com. Serj. The first Dispute about Sheriffs, since I was Common Serjeant, was about Mr. Jenks, and that Poll was taken by the Direction of the Lord Mayor, by the Town Clerk, and myself; and our Books say, If there be a Dispute in the Common Hall, it must be decided as in the Common Council. It is in Liber albus.

Mr. Att. Gen. Liber niger.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. No, Liber albus.

Mr. Att. Gen. Liber albus? It is Liber niger, they turn the white Book into a black Book now.

Sir Fr. Winn. At that Time, Sir, when my Lord Mayor was willing to go to the Old Bailey, Did the Sheriffs do any thing farther?

Mr. Com. Serj. The Sheriffs did not meddle in the Matter.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Mr. King, pray give my Lord and the Jury an Account of what you know of this Matter.

Mr. Peter King. I have been at a Court of Common Hall 28 Years, my Lord, and have been concerned; I never looked upon the Sheriffs to have any Concern there. And I do very well remember Sir George Jefferies; I do remember and know, they did always in ancient Times take Advice of the Officers by, and they never did esteem themselves in those Days, to be any more concerned than as the best Officers to be preferred before the rest: When my Lord says, Come up, they come in Order, the Masters and Wardens of the Companies.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who did do the Business upon the Hustings?

Mr. King. All of them, Sir, all together.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there never any Difference about the Votes?

Mr. King. Sometimes they have stood upon it.

Mr. Att. Gen. When there was a Question made to know who had the most, who decided it?—Mr. King. They generally asked one another, What do you think, and what do you think? I speak for twenty Years together since the King came in.

Mr. Att. Gen. I hope in God there hath been a King in England for twenty Years, tho' perhaps some of the Sheriffs that were then in Debate, would have had none.

Mr. Thompson. Mr. King, I only desire to know this of you, because I know you know Questions; I desire, my Lord, to know whether he speaks it to be a Matter of Right, or his Opinion; for we know Mr. King's Opinion will go a great way in this Matter. Do you speak it as a Thing of Right, or as your Conceptions?

Mr. King. Sir, it would be a thing very confident in me to determine of the Right, but only as I always esteem'd it.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Mr. King, I would ask you this Question; Pray do you tell your Belief upon the Observation that you have made from time to time of the Practice there?—Mr. King. An hundred and a hundred Common Halls I believe I have been at.

Mr. Thompson. That's good Store.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. That may be when there are many Fines; when I was Common Serjeant, there were 5000 Pounds Fines one Year.

Sir Fr. Winn. I desire you to give your Opinion; you say they are all equal that are there.

Mr. King.

Mr. King. Every Officer in his Degree: for if twenty Men go together, he that is best speaks first.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were the Sheriffs allowed to be there, or no?

Mr. King. The Sheriffs are always bound to attend my Lord Mayor by their Oaths, unless they have lawful Excuse.

Mr. Jones. Mr. King, did the Sheriffs ever continue the Assembly after it was dissolved?—Mr. King. No, Sir.

Mr. Jones. Or could they do it?—Mr. King. I can't say that.

Mr. Thompson. Did you ever know my Lord Mayor adjourn the Court till the Hall had done?—Mr. King. I can't tell.

Mr. Thompson. I tell you, Sir, Sir Samuel Starling did.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. But the Sheriffs could not do it.

Mr. Thompson. Nor he neither; for he paid for it.

Mr. Holt. Mr. King, I ask this Question; Who declares the Poll in the Hall?—Mr. King. The Common Serjeant.

Mr. Holt. Whodirects him usually?—Mr. King. His Office directs itself.

Mr. Holt. I ask, if the Sheriffs don't agree, who is elected before the Common Serjeant make Proclamation.

Mr. King. They always agree, unless it be very clear; I have known the Common Serjeant do it several times without disputing.

Mr. Com. Serj. When Persons are put in Nomination, and the Hands are held up; I generally ask the People about me, who have most, and particularly the Sheriffs, and so make Declaration.

L. C. J. The Officers ask one another, who they think has most? That doth not give them the Jurisdiction, that they choose Officers without the Lord Mayor or Sheriffs: But, for aught that I see, these Officers have had more to do about the Choice than the Sheriffs have. These Officers consult one with another commonly, and conclude which Side have most; and then report it to my Lord Mayor.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. First of all, when they put any Question for any Officer in the Common Hall, the usual way of putting the Question is, As many of you as would have such a Man to be such an Officer, hold up your Hands: And if the Election be clear, Proclamation is made presently: If not, the Common Serjeant asks, Who they think hath the Majority? Which being declared, they acquiesce. But since Mr. Bethel came in, there have been very hot Disputes in the World; but before his Time there were Attempts made to keep Sheriffs off, but never before to get Sheriffs on. And after the Election is declared below, immediately they go to my Lord Mayor, and report it to him: And then comes down the Mayor and Aldermen to the Hustings, and the Recorder says, We are informed, that such and such Persons have been put in Nomination, and the Election passed upon such and such. And then the Lord Mayor commands the Assembly to be dissolved.

Mr. Wells. When the Common Hall is first met together, are not the Lord Mayor and Aldermen generally present?

Mr. Com. Cryer. At the first Meeting.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. When they are there set, give an Account what Proclamation is there made.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long have you known it?

Mr. Com. Cryer. I have been in this Place almost seventeen Years; I always come with my Lord Mayor; I do make Proclamation by Order of my Lord Mayor, dictated by the Town-Clerk; and I take the Words from the Town-Clerk; and his Words I say; You good Men of the Livery, summoned to appear here this Day, for the Confirmation of such a one chosen by my Lord Mayor, and another fit and able Person, to be Sheriffs of the City of London, and County of Middlesex for the Year ensuing, draw near, and give your Attendance. I never adjourned the Court in my Life, but by Order from my Lord Mayor; nor never dissolved the Court, but by Order from my Lord Mayor.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Mr. Com. Cryer, I would fain know this; When my Lord Mayor is gone, and the Aldermen, during the Election, do you ever dismiss the Court before my Lord comes down again; and do not you take the very Words of Dissolution from the Town-Clerk?

Mr. Com. Cryer. I do so.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. And what is usual in your Time when Sheriffs have fined off; who gives Directions for a Common Hall?

Mr. Com. Cryer. My Lord Mayor, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who is it puts the Question, the Common Serjeant or the Cryer?

Mr. Com. Cryer. The Common Serjeant dictates the Words to me; and I never take them from any other; I have taken the Paper into my own Hands, but never but one Year neither, when they were in a Confusion; the Time when Mr. Bethel was chosen there was some Difference, I did read the Names that Time, and never but that one Time. I always take the Words from the Common Serjeant; I never put any Vote, but what I have from the Common Serjeant.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do the Sheriffs put any Vote?

Mr. Com. Cryer. Never, Sir.

L. C. J. I do not understand him; I think he did mean, when Bethel was chosen, he put the Question by somebody else.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. No, no, he took the Paper in his Hand. Before he used to take Dictates from the Common Serjeant; but there was a Confusion when Bethel was chosen, and then he took the Paper from the Common Serjeant and read it.

Mr. Com. Cryer. He gave the Paper into my Hand.

Mr. Com. Serj. My Lord, they made such a Noise, that he could not hear me.

Mr. Williams. Mr. Wells, How long have you been Common Cryer?

Mr. Com. Cryer. About seventeen Years.

Mr. Williams. In all that Time did you ever hear the Lord Mayor adjourn the Court to a certain Day?—Mr. Com. Cryer. Yes.

Mr. Williams. To a certain Day?—Mr. Com. Cryer. My Lord Mayor adjourn'd this Common Hall to a certain Day.

Mr. Williams. I ask you upon your Oath again, Did you ever know the Lord Mayor adjourn a Common Hall to a Day certain?

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Do you remember that of Sir Robert Clayton's?

L. C. J. If to be they be adjourned, to meet upon a new Summons, if there be Occasion, no Question but he may to a certain Day.

Mr. Williams. Now we are upon Matter of Fact.

Sir Fr. Winn. Did you ever know my Lord Mayor adjourn them before the Election of Sheriffs was over? Here is my Question, observe it. When after once my Lord Mayor is gone out of the Hall, when the Election begins, did you ever know my Lord come and disturb the Election, or adjourn it before it was done?

Mr. Com. Cryer. I never knew any thing of it before now.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Wells, Do you remember that Instance in Sir Robert Clayton's Time?—Mr. Com. Cryer. No, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Have not you known my Lord Mayor dissolve the Court before the Business hath been done; take up his Sword and be gone?

Mr. Com. Cryer. When he hath a mind to adjourn the Court, and declare it, I adjourn it by his Order.

Mr. Att. Gen. But have you not known him take up his Sword, and be gone before the Election is over?

Mr. Com. Cryer. Sir Robert Clayton did do that before the Business was done.

Mr. Thompson. Mr. Wells, Do not you remember, in Sir Samuel Starling's Case, that he did adjourn the Hall?

Mr. Com. Cryer. He dissolved the Hall.

Mr. Thompson. Very well.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. He did dissolve the Hall, and so hath every Lord Mayor since. My Lord, if your Lordship please, I perceive this Gentleman makes a Question, Whether ever there was an Adjournment of a Common Hall before such a time as the Election of Sheriffs was over. I will give you an Answer to that Question, and a very fair one, and a plain one: I say, till the Time of Bethel, in Sir Robert Clayton's Mayoralty, there was never such a Thing as a Poll for Sheriffs.

L. C. J. Silence, that we may hear.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, we only ask a Question, we ask a Question, and take our Answer.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Will you give us Leave to go on, Sir?

Mr. Att. Gen. Sir William Hooker, Pray how long is it since your were Sheriff of London?—Sir William Hooker. About Sixteen or Seventeen Years ago.

Mr. Att. Gen. You have been Sheriff and Lord Mayor of London: I would only know, Whether you looked upon it as your Right when you were Sheriff?

Sir William Hooker. No, nor ever durst presume to think it: In those Days it was not thought upon.

Mr. Att. Gen. When you were Lord Mayor, did you order Summons for Common Halls?—Sir William Hooker. Always.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ever use to consult with your Sheriffs when to call a Common Hall?

Sir William Hooker. Never; and I think no such Thing was ever heard of under the Sun, till of late.

Mr. Thompson. Sir William Hooker, did you ever adjourn the Court before the Business was done?—Sir William Hooker. I never saw any such Occasion; Rebellion was not ripe then.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sir William, Pray thus; Have you ever in a Common Council, or Common Hall, known my Lord Mayor rise before the Business was done, and take his Sword?

Sir William Hooker. I confess I must own it, that when Things grew to a greater Height, I was forced once in this Place to cause the Sword to be taken up and go out, and the Court was dissolved, and durst not go on after I was gone.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Now, my Lord, if your Lordship please, I desire to call the Sword-bearer.

Mr. Williams. Sir William Hooker, if I may, without Offence, ask you, How old are you?—Sir William Hooker. Seventy Years of Age, Sir.

Mr. Williams. You say, you never knew Rebellion ripe?

Sir William Hooker. Good Sir, I perceive you are very apt to mistake; I lived in 41 and 42.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sir William, Can you remember the Meeting in 48?

Sir William Hooker. Ay, very well.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then they usurped the very same Power, and an Act of Parliament to confirm it.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. My Lord, I desire Mr. Sword-bearer may be sworn.

Sir Fr. Winn. Pray, Sir, in all the Time that you have been acquainted with the Customs of London, did you ever know when there was an Election for Sheriffs, that the Lord Mayor did interpose or meddle till the Election was over?

Sir William Hooker. Sir, of late Years I have not appeared, because of an Infirmary, I cannot be long in London; but in all that Time I used to appear, I never did observe any such Thing.

Sir Fr. Winn. That the Mayor ever meddled?

Sir William Hooker. Nay, Sir, that the Sheriffs ever meddled. When I was Sheriff of London, I durst not presume to meddle, but left the whole to my Lord Mayor.

Sir Fr. Winn. Did you ever know, when the Election of Sheriffs was in a Common Hall, that the Lord Mayor offered to disturb them till the Election was over?

Sir William Hooker. Truly I do not remember any such Thing. Sir Fr. Winnington, I would give you a full Answer; I do tell you, as it hath been declared, my Lord Mayor and Aldermen come into the Court, and a Report is made; when this is done, they leave the Management of the Affair to others; we come and sit down till it is done.

Sir Fr. Winn. To whom do you leave the Concernment?

Sir William Hooker. To the Officers that it belongs to.

Sir Fr. Winn. Who are those Officers?—Sir W. Hooker. I never heard it disputed till just now.

Mr. Jones. Sir W. Hooker, you have been an ancient Citizen: Do you remember, that ever the Sheriffs presumed to hold this Court?

Sir William Hooker. No, never in my Life.—You may confound any Man at this Rate.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Sir, in your Time was there a Poll for Sheriffs in London?—Sir William Hooker. Truly not as I remember.

Mr. Williams. Do you remember any Poll in your Time? If you don't remember a Poll, you can't remember who took it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir William Hooker, do you ever remember the Sheriffs appointed the Common Serjeant to take the Poll?

Sir William Hooker. Never in my Life.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Mr. Sword-bearer, I won't ask you how old you are; I desire to know how long you have been an Officer in this City?

Mr. Sword-bearer. Three-and-twenty Years.

Mr. Serj.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. I desire to know in all your Time, who ordered Common Halls? Who gave Direction for the summoning Common Halls?

Mr. Sword-bearer. My Lord Mayor always.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did my Lord Mayor use to send for the Sheriffs, to know of them when they would be pleased to have a Common Hall?

Mr. Sword-bearer. I never knew that the Sheriffs did interpose in calling a Common Hall in my Life.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Mr. Sword-bearer, at such time as the Business was done, when the Common Cryer had Directions for dissolving the Common Hall, pray who used to give these Directions all along?

Mr. Sword-bearer. It was done by the Town Clerk, and my Lord Mayor's Officers.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did ever the Sheriffs continue the Hall after my Lord Mayor had adjourned it?

Mr. Sword-bearer. Truly I know no such thing.

Mr. Thompson. Mr. Sword-bearer, I would ask you one Question: If in Case the Common Serjeant, or the Common Cryer, or any other Officers do put a Question that the Commons would not have put, who orders them to put the right Question?

Mr. Sword-bearer. I can't say any thing to that.

Mr. Att. Gen. After the Common Serjeant comes up and reports what is done, then what doth my Lord Mayor do?

Mr. Sword-bearer. My Lord Mayor and the Aldermen go down to the Hustings, and it is declared by the Recorder, or the Common Serjeant, by the Order of my Lord Mayor.—I think my Lord Mayor went once down to give them some Satisfaction upon a Dispute.

Sir Fra. Winn. Mr. Man, during the Election did you ever hear them adjourn'd before it was over?

Mr. Sword-bearer. No, Sir; nor never heard any Occasion for it.

Mr. Williams. The Common Serjeant affirms himself to be a Servant to the Commons, and not to the Lord Mayor and Aldermen; have you known a Common Serjeant say, he was a Servant to the Commons, and not to the Lord Mayor and Aldermen?

Mr. Sword-bearer. I never was in a Common Hall upon any such Dispute, I am with my Lord Mayor.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. I have known a Recorder reprehended by a very learned Lawyer, for saying, My Masters the Aldermen.

Sir Fra. Winn. I ask you who hath the Management of the Common Hall in the Absence of the Mayor.

Mr. Sword-bearer. I am always here waiting upon my Lord Mayor.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. My Lord, if your Lordship please, we will rest here as to Point of Right. Now, my Lord, in the next place we will come to that which is a more immediate Question before you, and we will prove the manner of it, and the Persons that are guilty; for that is the next Step we are to go.—Mr. Bancroft.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, they have laid in the Information, That the Sheriffs are duly Elected, for one Year next following, from the Eve of St. Michael; now prove your Election to be for that Year you have laid in your Information.

Mr. Thompson. My Lord, they have certainly in Fact mistaken their Information. My Lord, they do declare that the Common Hall was held, according to Custom, for the Election of Sheriffs, to hold that Office from the Eve of St. Michael, for the Year next ensuing: Now, my Lord, that is not so in Fact, nor never was, for the Election is for a Year to commence on Michaelmas Day. They take on the Eve the Office upon them, but they do absolutely exercise the Office for a Year from that Time, from the Eve. Now, my Lord, we say, that Day is excluded; we are sure it is a Common Case, it is known very well; as in a Lease, the Habendum from any Date, the Day of the Date is no part of that Lease, it is exclusive and no part of the Term, and therefore, my Lord, if they do not prove it as they have laid it, we hope they will be nonsuited.

Mr. Sol. Gen. That is another piece of Law.

Mr. Holt. The Eve of Michaelmas Day, we make this Objection, and put you to prove it.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Give us Leave to go on: Gentlemen, let us prove what we think fit; and if we have not made it out, then make your Exceptions.

Mr. Holt. Mr. Serjeant, I think it is proper to put it now, for if there be no such Election, there can be no such Riot; for they have made it a Riot in a special manner.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Mr. Holt, under your Favour, it is not a Time now.

Mr. Att. Gen. This is the oddest way; these Gentlemen take upon them so: I will not prove it; and pray be quiet till I come to my time.
